
And Now—Profit in Farming Without the Drudgery

FORDSON power makes more productive seed beds. The tractor does its work so rapidly and does so much of the heavy work of farming, that farm drudgery is passing. Expenses are reduced. Better crops are grown.

In the bringing about of this new era, the Oliver No. 7 Plow has been the working partner of the Fordson. It is so light running and so scientifically designed that its work has made it a reputation enjoyed by no other tractor plow.

It is extremely easy to handle. Depth is adjusted by moving a lever that operates a jack. So easy is this done that most drivers do not stop or slow down to make a change in the plowing depth.

The power lift is tripped by simply touching a rod which is so convieniently placed that the driver need not turn his head to operate it. There is no side draft because the plow is in perfect alignment with the tractor.

To farm the Fordson way means so small an investment that it is within easy reach of every farmer. Come in and see the Oliver No. 7 gang and you, too, will decide to farm the Fordson way.

FORD RETAIL SALES MAKE NEW RECORD

Retil sales of Ford cars, trucks and tractors established a new high record during June, when, according to a statement issued from Detroit, an average of 5,709 machines were sold daily.

Ford sales have been showing a constant increase each month this year; June being the highest in the history of the company with a total of 148,439 cars, trucks and tractors. Of this number, 6,054 were sold by the Ford company of Canada and 9,435 by the various European Ford companies and South American branches, reaching purchasers in practically every civilized country in the world.

With the closing of business for June, the records show the fact that total sales for the first six months of 1922 were well over the half-million mark, the exact figures being 652,261. This is also a new high record as it is considerably in advance of any previous half-year period.

July Ford sales are expected to equal, and probably eclipse, June. The estimated output of cars, trucks and tractors has been placed at 151,767, altho dealers have requistioned more than 200,000.

Ford officials state that every attempt has been made to supply their dealers with sufficient cars to fill their orders, but that for the past three months, prompt deliveries have been impossible with some of the types. The demand for Ford enclosed cars has been especially hard to meet, due to the ever-increasing popularity of the Coupe and Sedan for all year-round use.

A reflection of general business conditions is seen in the record of Ford truck sales, which now show an increase of 84 per cent over last year. Merchants and farmers alike have come to recognize the utility of the motor truck in cutting transportation costs and speeding up deliveries, and the fact that they are buying nearly twice as many now as a year ago clearly points to better business conditions. At the present time 75,000 men are employed in the Detroit plant.

NO CAR TIEUPS AT FAIR

Street car tieups will not handicap State Fair visitors in Des Moines this year. Fair officials have received assurances from the city railway company in Des Moines that a one minute service will be provided to and from the fair grounds thruout the rush hours. This will be sufficient to care for the largest crowds, they say.

FORD BUILDS OWN WINDSHIELD GLASS

The Ford Motor Company, Detroit, has begun to manufacture its own plate glass, and already has in operation the first modern glass house ever equipped especially to make glass for automobiles.

As is customary when taking over the manufacture of a new product, Ford has applied his own principles of production, and, as a consequence, the methods and machinery used in making Ford glass are a radical departure from established practice. The Ford continuous conveyor system features the operations so that from the time the glass leaves the furnace until it becomes a polished windshield, it is always moving.

Glass making, when viewed in the Ford plant, looks to be very simple. The raw materials are introduced into the furnace where they become a molten mass. Drawn from the furnace in a semi-liquid state, the glass passes under a roller, which gives it width and thickness, and on to a moving conveyor. This carries it for 464 feet thru a gradually cooling furnace. At the end, it is cut and placed on another conveyor which carries it thru the grinding and polishing, after which it is ready for use.

This adds a new link to the fast growing chain of Ford industries which are being established and expanded from time to time in line with the Ford policy to achieve complete independence of outside material sources in manufacturing Ford products, and at the same time are the means by which Ford is enabled to use in the production of motor cars, trucks and tractors material of unusually high quality and sell them at the famous Ford prices.

BEES REGULATE TRAFFIC

The Eagle Grove Eagle tells of a swarm of bees that went on a "sympathy strike" in that town recently, and leaving their native hive one afternoon made a visit thru the business section of the town and finally settle down on the "Keep-to-the-right" sign in the center of the business street. There was no need of a traffic officer while they were on the job; autos and pedestrians were law-abiding to a degree. The Marshal joined the "strike" and declared he wasn't employed to handle entire armies single handed. One of the citizens, wise in bee lore, finally volunteered to rescue the town from the enemy, and placing an empty beehive under the post, shook the bees off and into the box. In a hour or so there was one more happy home of honey makers.

LACKED PROMPTNESS

"The man who wins," she said, "is the man who is prompt in embracing an opportunity."

"Well," he whispered after he had slipped his arm around her, "how do I strike you as a winner?"

"Only fair," she answered. "This could have happened a month ago."—Boston Transcript.

About the time that the state fair opens the street car companies in Des Moines will have a tie-up, and maybe higher fares therefor. Just like, if you've ever noticed, the apple crop is hurt early in the season by frost.

OLD CITIZEN OF GOODELL GOES TO REWARD

Last Thursday evening about 8:00 o'clock Theodore Robbins breathed his last. Several weeks ago he was taken to the hospital at Hampton, where he was operated on for cancer. Since the operation he had been confined to his bed. He was a patient sufferer. Since the death of his wife in 1894 he had made his home most of the time with his brother, Wick Robbins, of Goodell.

Theodore Robbins was born in Buchanan county, Iowa, near Independence, on Feb. 19, 1856, and died at Goodell on July the 27, 1922, age 66 years, five months and eight days. He came to Hancock county with his parents about 50 years ago. In 1881 he was united in marriage to Margaret Elizabeth Long, who died in 1894. There are six children, Earl Albert of Tacoma, Wash., Ira Otis, of Saskatchewan, Canada, Hallie May Robbins Roddy, of Havelock, Ia., lives in Liberty township, Hancock county, Ima Iva Robbins Fuller of Clear Lake, and Kenneth Robbins, who was killed in action while in France in 1918.

Five children, six grandchildren, one sister and one brother mourn his departure, besides many friends. The funeral was conducted from the United Brethern church in Goodell, and he was buried in the Goodell cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Henning Sandberg, of Iowa Falls spent Thursday night in Goodell with his parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, of Clear Lake were in town Saturday to attend the funeral of her uncle, Theodore Robbins.

Mr. and Mrs. Monroe Graeber visited friends in Kanawha on Sunday.

Miss Maude Griggs and her father spent Sunday in Goodell. They returned to Ventura on Monday.

Mr and Mrs. Sandberg and their daughter Edith, with Mr. and Mrs. O. Nelson autoed to Lake Cornelia on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ellsworth and daughter Mrs. McCray of Oklahoma City returned Sunday from an extended trip thru southern Minnesota and South Dakota. They report a fine trip.

Mr. Wm. Nelson of Belmond was in Goodell, Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Suurballe of Garner passed thru Goodell, Sunday, on their way to Eagle Grove. Miss Louisa Ahrenkeil accompanied them from Goodell.

Last week the Chronicle contained a news item to the effect that baby boys had been born to Mr. and Mrs. Herman Muhlenbruch, southwest of town. The item was mailed to this office with the supposed name of the writer signed to it, but it has turned out that Mr. and Mrs. Muhlenbruch had no babies at their home at all. This is a dirty piece of business, and it is surprising that any person in his right mind would ever consider it a joke.—Hampton Chronicle.

Cave Man Stuff

Back near the beginning of things, our prehistoric forbears would have perished from the earth if they had not understood the science of reading advertising.

The cave men didn't know much about underwear, hair tonic or phonographs, but they did have to eat. The one who could follow the track of the game he hunted, or read the meaning of a twisted leaf or broken twig, was best off in life.

Then, as now, the most consistent reader of advertising was best dressed, best fed and most contented. There has been something of an evolution in advertising in the last few thousands of years, but the principle is just the same.

The consistent reader of the advertisements is invariably best informed on what to eat and where to get it; what to wear and how much to pay for it. He's up on the most important things in life.

Throughout the ages, advertising has done much to make life livable and pleasant. We owe it much.

Let's make the most of it.

A Newspaper's TWO Sources of Revenue

Subscriptions and Advertising Are the Only Sources of Revenue a Newspaper Has and Often the Subscriptions Do Not Pay for the Cost of White Paper

Advertising today, especially in newspapers, is the greatest business getter there is. This is acknowledged by men who know. People read advertisements in newspapers. They have been educated to do so. Every merchant in our town ought to advertise. You remember the story about John Wanamaker? The first day he was in business his receipts were $24.64. He kept the 64 cents and spent the $24 the next day in advertising. We all can't duplicate this feat, but according to the best statistics available three per cent of the gross sales should be put aside for advertising.

Possibly you will say, "I don't need to advertise. I've been in this town thirty years and everybody knows me."

Probably they do, but did you ever stop to think of the sales you lose because your fellow competitor advertises? He may advertise the same goods you have in your stock, but the people don't know you have them. The other fellow gets the sale because he advertises. And, then, how much more business you would do if you did advertise?

We know of one merchant who advertised a lot of goods at 19 cents a yard. They cost him 27 cents. He took a clean loss, but while the sale was going on he could buy new goods at 12 cents. He put them in with the other goods and the result was that he cleaned his shelves of the old goods and he broke even on the deal. Advertising and good buying liquidated his stock without a loss.

We can't all be John Wanamakers, but we all can advertise in proportion to our business. Results will be sure if you advertise honestly and give service. A newspaper can bring people to your store, but it can't make people buy your goods. Your clerks must do that, and it depends on the service you give as to how successful your business will be.

What is done in the big cities can be done right here in this town if you will show the pep, give the service and advertise. Make business good. You can do it through this newspaper.

TWO FARM BARNS NEAR HAMPTON BURNED

Hampton Recorder: A disasterous fire of unknown origin occured Monday afternoon on the D. W. Mott farm, a mile from town and northeast of Harriman park, two barns being destroyed together with contents.

One of the structures was a new building, 32x50, valued at $2,500 and insured for $1,500. The other was an old barn 50x60, valued at $750 and insured for $500. The contents of the old barn consisted of over fifty tons of hay. In the new barn was stored two or three tons of hayand some corn and oats. The loss will aggregate probably $200.

The farm is owned by D. W. Mott, who spends considerable time overseeing the place and has employed Earl Jamison as caretaker. Jamison was working in a field a long ways from the buildings when the fire started. The blaze was first discovered at about 4 o'clock by some tourists who were passing the place in an auto and gave the alarm. Neighbors rushed to the scene and a phone call was sent to town for fire apparatus. The fire engine was dispatched out by the time of its arrival flames had completely enveloped the building and all the firemen could do was to keep them from spreading to nearby structures, which was done by pumping water from Spring creek thru 300 feet of hose. The two barns were completely gutted. The loss sustained by Mr. Mott will probably reach $2,500 over and above the insurance.

In the good old days when we were good we were called pet names. When bad we were called to the woodshed.

All men may be born equal, but there is a wide variance by the time they kick off.

IN SUNDAY CLOSING FIGHT

Sibley, Osceola county, has been having considerable agitation over the Sunday amusement question, wherein baseball and movies were an issue, with the result that a town ordinance was invoked to prevent them on that day. And now it is announced that the Redpath-Vawter Chautauqua system was fined $50 at Sibley for violating a town ordinance in conducting a chautauqua on Sunday for gain. The chautauqua gave two performances on Sunday in which the performers were the All College Glee club and Miss Edna Means. Attendants were admitted on paid tickets. —Exchange.

RADIO

From out the air around me I hear strange voices come; such miracles confound me, and I am stricken dumb. Some orator is speiling, a thousand miles away, and in my humble sheiling I plainly hear him bray. Some gifted modern Dante recites an ode in Maine, and in my western shanty I hear his noble strain. Some world famed singer's yelling afar in Boston town, and in my mortgaged dwelling, the stovepipes tumble down. No swaying wires are bringing these wondrous sounds to hand the speaking and the singing, the crashing of the band. Along the waves of ether, Dame Science sends her breath old legends crushed beneath her, traditions done to death. The scoffers once were tireless, they used to sigh and swear, when people talked of "wireless," of messages by air. And I with them was scoffing, and wore a jeering grin; but now my lid I'm doffing to Science and her kin. I see the airships sailing along the heavens blue, I hear strange dirges wailing from Crete and Timbuctoo; each day some thing of wonder is hatched beneath the sun; I ask you, who in thunder will say things can't be done?—Walt Mason.

THE EDITOR

George Fitch once wrote an essay on "The Editor." Fitch began his newspaper career as a reporter at $6 a week.

"An editor is a tired, nervous man who decides what shall go into a newspaper and explains why it got in afterwards.

"The editor works at an antique desk entirely surrounded by old papers and noise, and produces the results which enable the business manager to sit in a room fitted with mahogony furniture and Persian rugs and to respond to toasts at great banquets in solemn state and a dress suit.

"It is the editor's duty to feel the pulse of the world and hold the stethescope to business; to assist at the birth of history, to translate the present, refute the past and arrange the future; to illuminate ignorance, reward merit, put the spotlight on villainy and the pulmotor on reform; to make statesmen and dessicate demagogues, to elect presidents, crown heroes and secure bigger salaries for baseball pitchers; to act as an alarm clock for public opinion, as an elevator for political candidates, and as a goat for every man who says something in a careless moment and who repents too late by declaring that he was misquoted; to embalm truth, annihilate error, to bring the national tear for great misfortune and the national laugh at great foolishness.

"An editor can lower a tarrif, head off wars, harness the wrath of the whole people and raise a million dollars for food suffers. And some editors are so powerfu that they can raise their own salaries $10 a week."

Peter Bohlen and sons Carl and Clarence Bohlen, and Norman Bohlen were callers at Mason City on Saturday.

Mrs. Mary Kausian of Ackley visited with relatives at this place several days last week.

Miss Edna Arends was a Belmond caller last Saturday.

Miss Emma Eickmeyer of Sheffield was a Sunday visitor with friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. John Arends and children Sylvia, Robert and Leonard and Miss Clare Arends visited at the Rev. Sherman Arends home at Hayfield, Minnesota, last Thursday and Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Vern Finkle and daughter Leona of Hampton, were at this place Sunday evening.

Arthur and Louie Peters and Chas. Winwood were business callers at Eagle Grove last Wednesday.

Miss Wilma Foughty is the guest of relatives at Minneapolis, Minnesoto, this week.

Art Thomas of Iowa Falls was a business caller in town Wednesday of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dunn and two children were callers at Mason City last Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jake Ammerman and son and Jerry DeFries visited with relatives at Woden last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Latham are at Northwood, North Dakota, where s. Latham went for medical treatment.

Theodore Jensen returned home last Friday from the Albert Lea hospital, Where he was confined for several days as the result of an accident.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Markum are the proud parents of a baby boy, born Saturday, July 29.

SAY!

Where is our street commissioner, city council, or Mayor? Gone fishin'? Naw! Haven't ja got any? Yep—gone to tha movies. Say kid, tell 'em I was in town Saturday and it looks like somebody ought to clean the crossings, anyway that one over the M. & St. L. tracks, just on the south side. If I hadn't a been longlegged I'd had to got my hip boots to cross it. Weeds grown over the edge of the walk and a large hole in the concrete walk. No use, Bud; sumpins gotta be did, and you tell 'em so. No excuse just because it's the M. & St. L., go after 'em and keep after 'em 'till you get results. And better yet while you are at it get them to fix up that old cow path from the depot, or next spring they will be goin' to and from in a row boat. No excuse to put it off 'till next spring. Do it now! If you people at Alexander have no commissioner, I will import a wooden one.

M. E. CHURCH SERVICES

Preaching at 9:30.

Sunday school at 10:30.

All are invited to attend these services. The pastor, Rev. Wilkinson, has been at Lincoln, Nebraska, the past two weeks, where he has been attending an Epworth League convention. He will be with us next Sunday again. We had no preaching last Sabbath, as the man who was to fill the pulpit failed to get here thru the mud. Dr. Bushnell preached for us on the 23rd, his subject being The Rainbow.

The ladies of the Dorcas society spent a very enjoyable afternoon on Wednesday, July 26, at the home of Mrs. Lewis Bell, when they invited for their guests the old members of the society, besides several other of their friends. A nice program was given and all took part in singing songs. Those present from out of town were Mrs. Will Azeltine and Mrs. Ed. Azeltine, both of Rowan, Mrs. Ole Houg of Dows, Mrs. Albert Yaw and Mrs. George Yaw of Iowa Falls, Mrs. Alta Barker of Hampton, and Mrs. Will Waddington of Geneva. Mrs. Harry Hardy, of Hampton, and two children, Miss Della Houg of Dows, and Miss Lillian Azeltine of Rowan, Mrs. Pierce Marble of Waterloo, Mrs. Mary Kusian of Ackley, and Miss Esther Long of Iowa Falls. Next Wednesday afternoon the Dorcas society will meet at the home of Mrs. Fred Greenfield. A full attendance is desired.

APPLY THE FOURTH SPRAY

That the fall and winter apples may be kept free from worms and diseases it is very important that they be sprayed about the first week in August. This spray is especially important for the second brood of coddling moths, the worms of which generally enter the sides of the apple. Numerous cases occur every year where the apples are kept clear of the early attack of the pests, but because of failure to put on the fourth and final spray, 80 per cent or more of the late varieties and best apples are wormy at picking time. Do not lose the results of previous work by not finishing the job.

The material to use in this spray is 4 quarts of liquid or 3 1-2 pounds of powdered lime sulfur to 50 gallons of water. To this add a good full pound of arsenate of lead, first mixing in a small amount of water.

The Wealthy apples and all later varieties should receive this spray. Pay special attention to coating the fruit with the spray material. Unless web worms or tent caterpillars are present non-bearing trees need not be sprayed. Sprayed winter apples which are free from diseases and worms, will be in heavy demand and should bring an excellent return to the grower. There is not near the supply of fruit in the state or country that early reports would lead one to believe.

Fruit always makes a fine exhibit and all growers should plan to show it at their county fairs, and those that can, at the Iowa State Fair, In November, America's best Horticultural show this year will be held in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Premium lists may be obtained from Secretary of the Horticultural Society, State House Des Moines.

OVER 400 BABY BEEVES ENTERED AT STATE FAIR

Iowa farm boys and girls have entered over 400 baby beeves in the Junior department of the Iowa State Fair, to be held August 23 to Sept. 1. This is the largest list of entries of this kind ever recorded in the mid west, officials say. They forecast the biggest showing by farm boys and girls that has ever been made at any state fair in the country. Over $8,900 in prizes is offered in the junior department this year.

AS AN OLD, OLD MAN— DIES AT AGE OF 134

Kentucky recently lost a citizen who claimed the world's championship as the oldest man. He claimed to be 134 years of age. He rofessed to remember the grief and weeping that went with George Washington's funeral, and said he was too old to get into the Mexican war. He professed to have seen many changes in the country, and if he was as old as he declared he was, he certainly did.

The INDIAN DRUM

He did not; and her pulses, which had halted, leaped with relief. He moved on again, descending the steep side of a little ravine, and she followed. One of his snowshoes caught in a protruding root and, instead of stowing to free it with care, he pulled it violently out, and she heard the dry, seasoned wood crack. He looked down, swore; saw that the wood was not broken through and went on; but as he reached the bottom of the slope, she leaped downward from a little height behind him and crashed down upon his trailing snowshoe just behind the heel. The rending snap of the wood came beneath her feet. Had she broken through his shoe or snapped her own? She sprang back, as he cried out and swung in an attempt to grasp her; he lunged to follow her, and she ran a few steps away and stopped. At his next step his foot entangled in the mesh of the broken snowshoe, and he stooped, cursing, to strip it off and hurl it from him; then he tore off the one from the other foot, and threw it away, and lurched after her again; but now he sank above his knees and floundered in the snow. She stood for a moment while the half-mad, half-drunken figure struggled toward her along the side of the ravine; then she ran to where the tree trunks hid her from him. He gained the top of the slope and turned in the direction she had gone; assured then, apparently, that she had flown in fear of him, he started back more swiftly toward the beach. She followed, keeping out of his sight among the trees.

To twenty-six, he had counted—to twenty-six, each time! That told that he knew one was living among those who had been upon the ferry! What one? It could only be one of two to dismay him so; there had been only two on the ferry whose rescue he had feared; only two who, living, he would have let lie upon this beach which he had chosen and set aside for his patrol, while he waited for him to die!

She forced herself on, unsparingly, as she saw Henry gain the shore and as, believing himself alone, he hurried northward. She could not rest; she could not let herself be exhausted. Merciless minute after minute she raced him thus— A dark shape—a figure lay stretched upon the ice ahead! Beyond and still farther out, something which seemed the fragments of a lifeboat tossed up and down where the waves thundered and gleamed at the edge of the floe.

Henry's pace quickened; hers quickened desperately, too. She left the shelter of the trees and scrambled down the steep pitch of the bluff, shouting, crying aloud. Henry turned about and saw her; he halted, and she passed him with a rush and got between him and the form upon the ice, before she turned and faced him.

Defeat—defeat of whatever purpose he had had—was his now that she was there to witness what he might do; and in his realization of that, he burst out in oaths against her— He advanced; she stood, confronting—he swayed slightly in his walk and swung past her and away; he went past those things on the beach and kept on along the ice hummocks toward the north.

She ran to the huddled figure of the man in mackinaw and cap; his face was hidden partly by the position in which he lay and partly by the drifting snow; but, before she swept the snow away and turned him to her, she knew that he was Alan.

She cried to him and, when he did not answer, she shook him to get him awake; but she could not rouse him. Praying in wild whispers to herself, she opened his jacket and felt within his clothes; he was warm—at least he was not frozen within! No; and there seemed some stir of his heart! She tried to lift him, to carry him; then to drag him. But she could not; he fell from her arms into the snow again, and she sat down, pulling him upon her lap and clasping him to her.

She must have aid, she must get him to some house, she must take him out of the terrible cold; but dared she leave him? Might Henry return, if she went away? She arose and looked about. Far up the shore she saw his figure rising and falling with his flight over the rough ice. A sound came to her, too, the low, deep reverberation of the Drum beating once more along the shore and in the woods and out upon the lake; and it seemed to her that Henry's figure, in the stumbling steps of his flight, was keeping time to the wild rhythm of that sound. And she stooped to Alan and covered him with her coat, before leaving him; for she feared no longer Henry's return.

CHAPTER XX

The Fate of the Miwaka.

"So this isn't your house, Judah?"

"No, Alan; this is an Indian's house, but it is not mine. It is Adam Enos' house. He and his wife went somewhere else when you needed this."

"He helped to bring me here, then?"

"No, Alan. They were alone, here—she and Adam's wife. When she found you, they brought you here—more than a mile along the beach. Two women!"

Alan choked as he put down the little porcupine quill box which had started this line of inquiry. Whatever questions he had asked Judah or Sherrill these last few days had brought him very quickly back to her. Moved by some intuitive certainty regarding Spearman, she had come north; she had not thought of peril to herself; she had struggled alone across dangerous ice in storm—a girl brought up as she had been! She had found him—Alan—with life almost extinct—upon the beach; she and the Indian woman, Wassaquam had just said—had brought him along the shore. How had they managed that, he wondered. His throat closed up, and his eyes filled as he thought of this.

In the week during which he had been cared for here, Alan had not seen Constance; but there had been a peculiar and exciting alteration in Sherrill's manner toward him, he had felt; it was something more than merely liking for him that Sherrill had showed, and Sherrill had spoken of her to him as Constance, not, as he had called her always before, "Miss Sherrill," or "my daughter." Alan had had dreams which had seemed impossible of fulfillment, of dedicating his life and all that he could make of it to her; now Sherrill's manner had brought to him something like awe, as of something quite incredible.

He turned to the Indian.

"Has anything more been heard of Spearman, Judah?"

"Only this, Alan; he crossed the straits the next day upon the ferry there. In Mackinaw City he bought liquor at a bar and took it with him; he asked there about trains into the northwest. He has gone, leaving all he had. What else could he do?"

Alan crossed the little cabin and looked out the window over the snow-covered slope, where the bright sun was shining. Snow had covered any tracks that there had been upon the beach where those who had been in the boat with him had been found dead. He had known that this must be; he had believed them beyond aid when he had tried for the shore to summon help for them and for himself. The other boat, which had carried survivors of the wreck, blown farther to the south, had been able to gain the shore of North Fox island; and as these men had not been so long exposed before they were brought to shelter, four men lived. Sherrill had told him their names; they were the mate, the assistant engineer, a deckhand and Father Perron, the priest who had been a passenger but who had stayed with the crew till the last. Benjamin Corvet had perished in the wreckage of the cars.

As Alan went back to his chair, the Indian watched him and seemed not displeased.

"You feel good, now, Alan?" Wassaquam asked.

"Almost like myself, Judah."

"That is right, then. It was thought you would be like that today. A sled is coming soon, now."

"We're going to leave here, Judah?"

"Yes, Alan."

Was he going to see her, then? Excitement stirred him, and he turned to Wassaquam to ask that; but suddenly he hesitated and did not inquire.

Wassaquam brought the mackinaw and cap which Alan had worn on Number 25; he took from the bed the new blankets which had been furnished by Sherrill. They waited until a farmer appeared driving a team hitched to a low, wide-runnered sled. The Indian settled Alan on the sled, and they drove off.

They traveled south along the shore, rounded into Little Traverse bay, and the houses of Harbor Point appeared among their pines. The sled proceeded across the edge of the bay to the little city; even before leaving the bay ice, Alan saw Constance and her father; they were walking at the water front near the railway station, and they came out on the ice as they recognized the occupants of the sled.

Alan felt himself alternately weak and roused to strength as he saw her. Their eyes encountered, and hers looked away; a sudden shyness, which sent his heart leaping, had come over her. He wanted to speak to her, to make some recognition to her of what she had done, but he did not dare to trust his voice; and she seemed to understand that. He turned to Sherrill instead. An engine and tender coupled to a single car stood at the railway station.

"We're going to Chicago?" he inquired of Sherrill.

"Not yet, Alan—to St. Ignace. Father Perron—the priest, you know—went to St. Ignace as soon as he recovered from his exposure. He sent word to me that he wished to see me at my convenience; I told him that we would go to him as soon as you were able."

"He sent no other word than that?"

"Only that he had a very grave communication to make to us."

Alan did not ask more; at mention of Father Perron he had seemed to feel himself once more among the crashing, charging freight cars on the ferry and to see Benjamin Corvet, pinned amid the wreckage and speaking into the ear of the priest.

* * * * * * * * *

It was not merely a confessional which Father Perron had taken from the lips of the dying man on Number 25; it was an accusation of crime against another man as well; and the confession and accusation both had been made, not only to gain forgiveness from God, but to right terrible wrongs. If the confession left some things unexplained, it did not lack confirmation; the priest had learned enough to be certain that it was no hallucination of madness. He had been charged definitely to repeat what had been told him to the persons he was now going to meet; so he watched expectantly upon the railway station platform at St. Ignace. A tall, handsome man whom Father Perron thought must be the Mr. Sherrill with whom he had communicated appeared upon the car platform; the young man from Number 25 followed him, and the two helped down a young and beautiful girl.

They recognized the priest by his dress and came toward him at once.

"Mr. Sherrill?" Father Perron inquired.

Sherrill assented, taking the priest's hand and introducing his daughter.

"I am glad to see you safe, Mr. Stafford." The priest had turned to Alan. "We have thanks to offer up for that, you and I!"

"I am his son, then! I thought that must be so."

Alan trembled at the priest's sign of confirmation. There was no shock of surprise in this; he had suspected ever since August, when Captain Stafford's watch and the wedding ring had so strangely come to Constance, that he might be Stafford's son. He looked at Constance, as they followed the priest to the motor which was waiting to take them to the house of old Father Benitot, whose guest Father Perron was; she was very quiet. What would that grave statement which Father Perron was to make to them mean to him—to Alan? Would further knowledge about that father whom he had not known, but whose blood was his and whose name he now must bear, bring pride or shame to him?

A bell was tolling somewhere, as they followed the priest into Father Benitot's small, bare room which had been prepared for their interview. Father Perron went to a desk and took therefrom some notes which he had made.

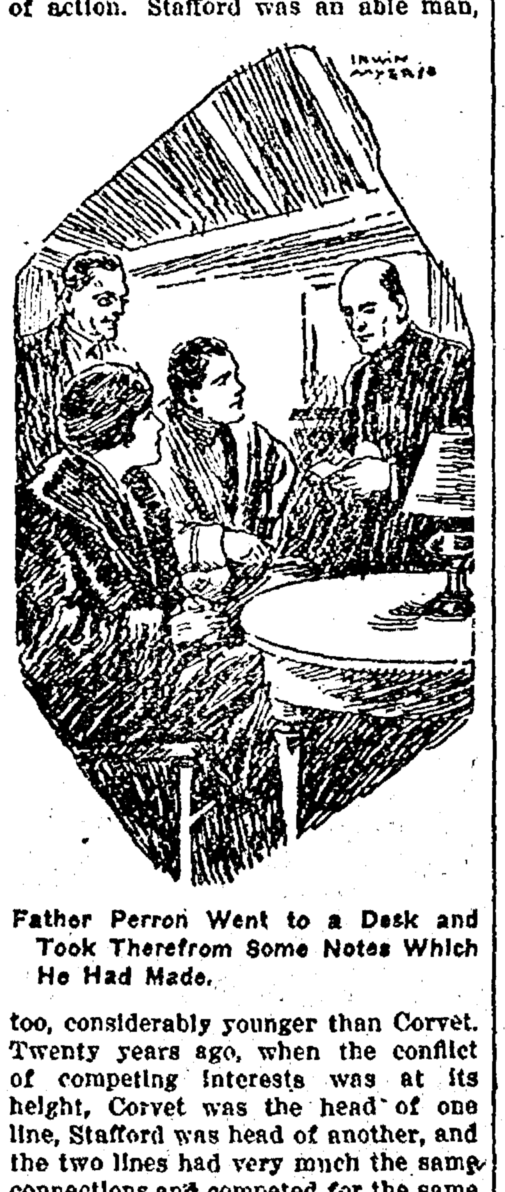
"What I have," he said, speaking more particularly to Sherrill, "is the terrible, not fully coherent statement of a dying man. It has given me names—also it has given me facts. But isolated. It does not give what came before or what came after; therefore, it does not make plain. I hope that, as Benjamin Corvet's partner, you can furnish what I lack."

"What is it you want to know?" Sherrill asked.

"What were the relations between Benjamin Corvet and Captain Stafford?"

Sherrill thought a moment.

"Corvet," he replied, "was a very able man; he had insight and mental grasp—and he had the fault which sometimes goes with those, a hesitancy of action. Stafford was an able man, too, considerably younger than Corvet. Twenty years ago, when the conflict of competing interests was at its height, Corvet was the head of one line, Stafford was head of another, and the two lines had very much the same connections and competed for the same cargoes."



Father Perron Went to a Desk and Took Therefrom Some Notes Which He Had Made.

"I begin to see!" Father Perron exclaimed. "Please go on."

"In the early nineties both lines still were young; Stafford had, I believe, two ships; Corvet had three."

"So few? Yes; it grows plainer!"

"In 1894, Stafford managed a stroke which, if fate had not intervened, must have assured the ultimate extinction of Corvet's line or its absorption into Stafford's. Stafford gained as his partner Franklin Ramsdell, a wealthy man whom he had convinced that the lake traffic offered chances of great profit; and this connection supplied him with the capital whose lack had been hampering him, as it was still hampering Corvet. The new firm—Stafford and Ramsdell—projected the construction, with Ramsdell's money, of a number of great steel freighters. The first of these—the Miwaka, a test ship whose experience was to guide them in the construction of the rest—was launched in the fall of 1895, and was lost on its maiden trip with both Stafford and Ramsdell aboard. The Stafford and Ramsdell interests could not survive the death of both owners and disappeared from the lakes. Is this what you wanted to know?"

The priest nodded. Alan leaned tensely forward, watching; what he had heard seemed to have increased and deepened the priest's feeling over what he had to tell and to have aided his comprehension of it.

"His name was Caleb Stafford," Father Perron began. "(This is what Benjamin Corvet told to me when he was dying under the wreckage on the ferry.) 'He was as fair and able a man as the lakes ever knew. I had my will of most men in the lake trade in those days; but I could not have my will of him. With all the lakes to trade in, he had to pick out for his that traffic which I already had chosen for my own. But I fought him fair, Father—I fought him fair, and I would have continued to do that to the end.

"'I was at Manistee, Father, in the end of the season—December fifth of 1895. The ice had begun to form very early that year and was already bad; there was cold and a high gale. I had laid up one of my ships at Manistee, and I was crossing that night upon a tug to Manitowoc, where another was to be laid up. I had still a third one loading up on the northern peninsula at Manistique for a last trip which, if it could be made, would mean a good profit from a season which so far, because of Stafford's competition, had been only fair. After leaving Manistee, it grew still more cold, and I was afraid the ice would close in on her and keep her where she was, so I determined to go north that night and see that she got out. None knew, Father, except those aboard the tug, that I had made that change.

"'At midnight, Father, to westward of the Foxes, we heard the four blasts of a steamer in distress—the four long blasts which have sounded in my soul ever since! We turned toward where we saw the steamer's lights; we went nearer and, Father, it was his great ship—the Miwaka! We had heard two days before that she had passed the Soo; we had not known more than that of where she was. She had broken her new shaft, Father, and was intact except for that, but helpless in the rising sea . . .'"

The priest broke off. "The Miwaka! I did not understand all that that had meant to him until just now—the new ship of the rival line, whose building meant for him failure and defeat!

"There is no higher duty than the rescue of those in peril at sea. He—Benjamin Corvet, who told me this—swore to me that, at the beginning none upon the tug had any thought except to give aid. A small line was drifted down to the tug and to this a hawser was attached which they hauled aboard. There happened then the first of those events which led those upon the tug into doing a great wrong. He—Benjamin Corvet—had taken charge of the wheel of the tug; three men were handling the hawser in ice and washing water at the stern. The whistle accidentally blew, which those on the Miwaka understood to mean that the hawser had been secured, so they drew in the slack; the hawser, tightened unexpectedly by the pitching of the sea, caught and crushed the captain and deckhand of the tug and threw them into the sea.

"Because they were short-handed now upon the tug, and also because consultation was necessary over what was to be done, the young owner of the Miwaka, Captain Stafford, came down the hawser onto the tug after the line had been put straight. He came to the wheelhouse, where Benjamin Corvet was, and they consulted. Then Benjamin Corvet learned that the other owner was aboard the new ship as well—Ramsdell—the man whose money you have just told me had built this and was soon to build other ships. I did not understand before why learning that affected him so much.

"'Stafford wanted us' (this is what Benjamin Corvet said) 'to tow him up the lake; I would not do that, but I agreed to tow him to Manistique. The night was dark, Father—no snow, but frightful wind which had been increasing until it now sent the waves washing clear across the tug. We had gone north an hour when, low upon the water to my right, I saw a light, and there came to me the whistling of a buoy which told me that we were passing nearer than I would have wished, even in daytime, to windward of Boulder reef. There are, Father, no people on that reef; its sides of ragged rock go straight down forty fathoms into the lake.

"'I looked at the man with me in the wheelhouse—at Stafford—and hated him! I put my head out at the wheelhouse door and looked back at the lights, at the new, great steamer, following safe and straight at the end of its towline. I thought of my two men upon the tug who had been crushed by clumsiness of those on board that ship; and how my own ships had had a name for never losing a man and that name would be lost now because of the carelessness of Stafford's men! And the sound of the shoal brought the evil thought to me. Suppose I had not happened across his ship; would it have gone upon some reef like this and been lost? I thought that if now the hawser should break, I would be rid of that ship and perhaps of the owner who was on board as well. We could not pick up the tow line again in so close to the reef. The steamer would drift down upon the rocks—'"

Father Perron hesitated an instant. "I bear witness," he said solemnly, "that Benjamin Corvet assured me—his priest—that it was only a thought; the evil act which it suggested was something which he would not do or even think of doing. But he spoke something of what was in his mind to Stafford, for he said:

"'I must look like a fool to you to keep on towing your ship!'

"'They stared, he told me, into one another's eyes, and Stafford grew uneasy.

"'We'd have been all right,' he answered, 'until we had got help, if you'd left us where we were!' He, too, listened to the sound of the buoy and of the water dashing on the shoal. 'You are taking us too close,' he said—'too close!' He went aft then to look at the tow line."

Father Perron's voice ceased; what he had to tell now made his face whiten as he arranged it in his memory. Alan leaned forward a little and then, with an effort, sat straight. Constance turned and gazed at him; but he dared not look at her. He felt her hand warm upon his; it rested there a moment and moved away.

"There was a third man in the wheelhouse when these things were spoken," Father Perron said, "the mate of the ship which had been laid up at Manistique."

"Henry Spearman," Sherrill supplied.

"That is the name. Benjamin Corvet told me of that man that he was young, determined, brutal and set upon getting position and wealth for himself by any means. He watched Corvet and Stafford while they were speaking, and he, too, listened to the shoal until Stafford had come back; then he went aft.

"'I looked at him, Father,' Benjamin Corvet said to me, 'and I let him go—not knowing. He came back and looked at me once more, and went again to the stern; Stafford had been watching him as well as I, and sprang away from me now and scrambled after him. The tug leaped suddenly; there was no longer any tow holding it back, for the hawser had parted; and I knew, Father, the reason was that Spearman had cut it!

"'I rang for the engine to be slowed, and I left the wheel and went aft; some struggle was going on at the stern of the tug; a flash came from there and the cracking of a shot. Suddenly all was light about me as, aware of the breaking of the hawser and alarmed by the shot, the searchlight of the Miwaka turned upon the tug. The cut end of the hawser was still upon the tug, and Spearman had been trying to clear this when Stafford attacked him; they fought, and Stafford struck Spearman down. He turned and cried out against me—accusing me of having ordered Spearman to cut the line. He held up the cut end toward Ramsdell on the Miwaka and cried out to him and showed by pointing that it had been cut. Blood was running from the hand with which he pointed, for he had been shot by Spearman; and now again and a second and a third time, from where he lay upon the deck, Spearman fired. The second of those shots killed the engineer, who had rushed out where I was on the deck; the third shot went through Stafford's head. The Miwaka was drifting down upon the reef; her whistle sounded again and again the four long blasts. The fireman, who had followed the engineer up from below, fawned on me! I was safe for all him, he said; I could trust Luke—Luke would not tell! He too thought I had ordered the doing of that thing!

"'From the Miwaka, Ramsdell yelled curses at me, threatening me for what he thought that I had done! I looked at Spearman as he got up from the deck, and I read the thought that had been in him; he had believed that he could cut the hawser in the dark, none seeing, and that our word that it had been broken would have as much strength as any accusation Stafford could make. He had known that to share a secret such as that with me would "make" him on the lakes; for the loss of the Miwaka would cripple Stafford and Ramsdell and strengthen me; and he could make me share with him whatever I made. But Stafford had surprised him at the hawser and had seen.

"'I moved to denounce him, Father, as I realized this; I moved—but stopped. He had made himself safe against accusation by me! None—none ever would believe that he had done this except by my order, if he should claim that; and he made plain that he was going to claim that. He called me a fool and defied me. Luke—even my own man, the only one left on the tug with us—believed it! And there was murder in it now, with Stafford dying there upon the deck and with the certainty that all those on the Miwaka could not be saved. I felt the noose as if it had been already tied about my neck! And I had done no wrong, Father! I had only thought wrong!

"'So long as one lived among those on the Miwaka who had seen what was done, I knew I would be hanged; yet I would have saved them if I could. But, in my comprehension of what this meant, I only stared at Stafford where he lay and then at Spearman, and I let him get control of the tug. The tug, whose wheel I had lashed, heading her into the waves, had been moving slowly. Spearman pushed me aside and went to the wheelhouse; he sent Luke to the engines, and from that moment Luke was his. He turned the tug about to where we still saw the lights of the Miwaka. The steamer had struck upon the reef; she hung there for a time; and Spearman—he had the wheel and Luke, at his orders, was at the engine—held the tug off and we beat slowly to and fro until the Miwaka slipped off and sank. Some had gone down with her, no doubt; but two boats had got off, carrying lights. They saw the tug approaching and cried out and stretched their hands to us; but Spearman stopped the tug. They rowed toward us then, but when they got near, Spearman moved the tug away from them, and then again stopped. They cried out again and rowed toward us; again he moved the tug away, and then they understood and stopped rowing and cried curses at us. One boat soon drifted far away; we knew of its capsizing by the extinguishing of its light. The other capsized near to where we were. Those in it who had no lifebelts and could not swim, sank first. Some could swim and, for a while they fought the waves.'"

Alan, as he listened, ceased consciously to separate the priest's voice from the sensations running through him. His father was Stafford, dying at Corvet's feet while Corvet watched the death of the crew of the Miwaka; Alan himself, a child, was floating with a lifebelt among those struggling in the water whom Spearman and Corvet were watching die. Memory; was it that which now had come to him? No; rather it was a realization of all the truths which the priest's words were bringing together and arranging rightly for him.

Alan's father died in the morning. All day they stayed out in the storm, avoiding vessels. They dared not throw Stafford's body overboard or that of the engineer, because, if found, the bullet holes would have aroused inquiry. When night came again, they had taken the two ashore at some wild spot and buried them; to make identification harder, they had taken the things that they had with them and buried them somewhere else. The child—Alan—Corvet had smuggled ashore and sent away; he had told Spearman later that the child had died.

"Peace—rest!" Father Perron said in a deep voice. "Peace to the dead!"

But for the living there had been no peace. Spearman had forced Corvet to make him his partner; Corvet had tried to take up his life again, but had not been able. His wife, aware that something was wrong with him, had learned enough so that she had left him. Luke had come and come and come again for blackmail, and Corvet had paid him. Corvet grew rich; those connected with him prospered; but with Corvet lived always the ghosts of those he had watched die with the Miwaka—of those who would have prospered with Stafford except for what had been done. Corvet had secretly sought and followed the fate of the kin of those people who had been murdered to benefit him; he found some of their families destroyed; he found almost all poor and struggling. And though Corvet paid Luke to keep the crime from disclosure, yet Corvet swore to himself to confess it all and make such restitution as he could. But each time that the day he had appointed with himself arrived, he put it off and off and paid Luke again and again. Spearman knew of his intention and sometimes kept him from it. But Corvet had made one close friend; and when that friend's daughter, for whom Corvet cared now most of all in the world, had been about to marry Spearman, Corvet defied the cost to himself, and he gained strength to oppose Spearman. So he had written to Stafford's son to come; he had prepared for confession and restitution; but, after he had done this and while he waited, something had seemed to break in his brain; too long preyed upon by terrible memories, and the ghosts of those who had gone, and by the echo of their voices crying to him from the water, Corvet had wandered away; he had come back, under the name of one of those whom he had wronged, to the lake life from which he had sprung. Only now and then, for a few hours, he had intervals when he remembered all; in one of these he had dug up the watch and the ring and other things which he had taken from Captain Stafford's pockets and written to himself directions of what to do with them, when his mind again failed.

And for Spearman, strong against all that assailed Corvet, there had been always the terror of the Indian Drum—the Drum which had beat short for the Miwaka, the Drum which had known that one was saved! That story came from some hint which Luke had spread, Corvet thought; but Spearman, born near by the Drum, believed that the Drum had known and that the Drum had tried to tell; all through the years Spearman had dreaded the Drum which had tried to betray him. So it was by the Drum that, in the end, Spearman was broken.

The priest's voice had stopped, as Alan slowly realized; he heard Sherrill's voice speaking to him.

"It was a trust that he left you, Alan; I thought it must be that—a trust for those who suffered by the loss of your father's ship. I don't know yet how it can be fulfilled; and we must think of that."

"That's how I understand it," Alan said.

Through the tumult in his soul he became aware of physical feelings again, and of Sherrill's hand put upon his shoulder in a cordial, friendly grasp. Then another hand, small and firm, touched his, and he felt its warm tightening grasp upon his fingers; he looked up, and his eyes filled and hers, he saw, were brimming too.

They walked together, later in the day, up the hill to the small, white house which had been Caleb Stafford's. The woman who had come to the door was willing to show them through the

EVERY COUNTY ENTERED IN FAIR BABY CONTEST

Every county in Iowa has already registered entries in the annual Iowa Baby Health contest to be held at the State Fair, August 23 to Sept. 1, according to word issued by Sec. Corey. More than 500 babies from all parts of the state will be entered in this contest this year to select the prize baby of Iowa.

Vinton, July 22.—As the result of the coal shortage, due to the strike situation, the city of Vinton has curtailed water and light service until the coal situation loosens up a little. The municipal water and light plant is closed down at 11:00 p. m. and the fires are banked until 5:00 a. m. and this makes a saving of from two to three tons of coal.

The city has about a thirty day supply of coal on hand. The only way to get more is to go into the open market and pay what is asked. Coal that was costing around $7.00 a ton before the strike is now quoted at $10., and nothing sure about it at that. With the amount of coal used at the city plant, a price of $10 per ton runs into money quite fast.—Evening Gazette, July 22nd.

The last coal billed to the Iowa Railway and Light Co. from the Kentucy non-union fields where all coal is now obtained, costs $6.45 with a freight rate of $3.07, making a cost of $9.52 delivered.

Mr. C. O. Ingersoll, coal purchasing agent for the Iowa Falls Electric Co, is now in the Kentucky fields, and we have just received a telephone call from him that today's bid for coal at the mine is $11 per ton, and we wish to inform the patrons that we have contracted for enough coal to keep us going, coal or no strike, and whether it is $10 per ton or any old price. The only hitch may be that our coal will be stolen by the railroads or that the railway strike may stop transportation.

We started into this coal strike with five months supply on hand and will use every effort to give all our patrons service all the time, no matter what the cost may be.

BIG DOIN'S GETTING READY FOR AUGUST 23

Alexander Youth Has Serious Accident

While Rendering Assistance To Stalled Auto Is Struck By Speeding Car

HAPPENS SUNDAY NIGHT

Ray Meyer, a young man residing near Alexander, was badly injured in a car accident Sunday evening, and is now at the Steele hospital here. With a lady friend, he was taking a spin on the road leading south from Belmond, and on the other side of the hill about five and one-half miles south, he met another car which was stalled at the right side of the road. Meyer stopped to render assistance, and was going to tow the car out. He had backed his car up in front of the stalled auto, and was between the two hitching the tow line.
who lives at Eagle Grove and whose initials we were unable to learn, came up over the hill at a high speed, said to have been 50 miles an hour. He was driving a big car, and the girl in Meyer's auto, seeing him coming, called to the Alexander youth who jumped out to the right side of his own car, expecting Cole to pass on the left side. Instead, Cole swerved to the right to pass, and struck Meyer, throwing him about 25 feet. Cole is said to have had at least 15 feet clearance to pass on the left side.

Myer suffered one leg broken in two places below the knee, both bones being broken. He was rushed to the hospital here and given attention and the doctor reports that he will eventually recover, altho an operation to remove some spinters of bone from the leg may be necessary.

According to all reports, Meyer was entrely in the right, being on the right side of the road with plenty of space for another car to pass.

GARNER MAN BUYS HOTEL

The Hotel Case has been sold by Mr. Bettin, the proprietor, to a Mr. Shipley of Garner, the new owner to take possession about the 21st of the month. Mr. Shipley is said to be an experienced hotel manager, and he will give the patrons the same good service which has been rendered by Mr. Bettin. We are not informed of Mr. Bettin's future plans.

AUXILIARY TO ENTERTAIN

The Legion Auxiliary will entertain the members of the American Legion and their families to a picnic supper today, at the Tyrrell Park, at six o'clock.

FJETLAND—JACOBS

Miss Dora Jacobs was united in marriage Tuesday, August 8, at Clarion, the Rev. Walker of the Methodist church performing the ceremony. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Dan Fjetland. Following the ceremony they returned to Belmond, and after a day or two spent at the home of relatives, left today for Humboldt, where the groom is employed in a store, and where they will make their future home.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claus Jacobs residing north of town, prominent farmers of this vicinity. She is among this vicinity's best known young ladies, and for several years has taught school.

Mr. Fjetland's parents are both dead. He is well known in this vicinity, and is an earnest, capable man who will make his bride a worthy home.

Their many friends, with whom the Independent takes pleasure in joining, unite in extending congratulations and best wishes.

LIGHTNING STRIKES WHITE HOUSE WEDNESDAY

Just at the beginning of the short thunder storm this city experienced yesterday noon, lightning struck the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. White, without, however inflicting any damage. Joe was just stepping on the porch when the bolt struck. He was dazed for a moment, and sufficient electricity entered his jaws to make them ache for some time afterwards. Mrs. White and the baby were on the east side of the house and were not injured. The dog, however, lying inside near the telephone, was shocked considerably and it was an hour or more before he was able to normally wag his tail. The lightning during the storm, which did not last over half an hour, was very strong.

MRS. ANDREW LARSEN DIES

Just as we go to press we learn of the death of Mrs. Andrew Larsen, residing west of town. Death occured late Tuesday evening. At this writing no arrangements for funeral services have been made.

PIERCE-BURKE

A pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, August 2, at St. Peter's church, when Miss Lyna Pierce, of Belmond, Iowa, was united in marriage to Mr. John F. Burke, of this city, the Rev. A. S. Kluthe officiating. They were attended by Miss Mae Clark, a life-long friend of the bride. The bride was attired in white organdy over white satin, a picture hat of white chepe-de-chine, and a corsage boquet of pink roses. The groom wore the conventional blue.

Miss Pierce is a graduate nurse of the Iowa Congregational hospital at Des Moines, and at present has a position with the Immanuel hospital at this city.

Mr. Burke is a veteran of the World War, being a member of the 1st Division, and saw two years service overseas. He has been employed for the past two years at the Schneider Electric works. The young couple will be at home to their friends at 4514 No. 34th St., Omaha.

The foregoing from an Omaha paper comes as a surprise to the bride's Belmond friends, who, however, unite in extending their best wishes and congratulations, with whom the Independent takes pleasure in joining.

CONGREGATIONAL NOTES

A social and business meeting of the Ladies Aid will be held Thursday afternoon at 2:30. All are invited to attend.

Regular services will be held next Sunday, August 13.

BELMOND VS. DOWS SUNDAY

The local base ball teeam meets the fast aggregation from Dows on the Belmond diamond next Sunday afternoon, August 13, the game being called at 3:00 o'clock. The Dows team it is understood has defeated the Hampton team, and as the latter are cleaning up everything in sight they ought to give a good battle. Belmond has been playing real base ball, and the game between the two should be a good one.

Mr. McGarth, son of the Eagle Grove attorney by that name, was in town Monday on business matters. He is engaged in the insurance line.

Howard Wolle, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wolle, is the chief electrician at the sugar factory now, assuming his new duties the first of the week. Howard, who has made a splendid success in the electrical line, has been chief electrician with the Sioux City Telephone Company, and last year was with the Dyer people on a sugar factory in Central America. He is very well qualified for the place and the Iowa Valley Sugar Co. has an able employee in him.

CLARION MAN HELD FOR STEALING AUTO

Grant Bishop, arrested near Clarion last week for the theft of an automobile from a Webster City man, failed to establish the alibi he said he would prove in Iowa Falls, when he was taken to that city by Webster City authorities, and was held to answer to the charge of theft.

Bishop originally claimed to have bought the car from parties in Iowa Falls, paying $105 for it. He could not satisfactorily account for his possession of $105, which he claimed to have paid for the car, and could not locate the men from whom heclaimed to have bought the car when taken to Iowa Falls.

The stolen car was found in Bishop's possession at Dows, but he insisted that he purchased it from a man employed at Swift's plant in Iowa Falls for the sum of $105. The car was a Ford. Bishop said he bought the car on Sunday, which is apparant ly the day after the car was stolen.

When questioned by the officers there it was discovered that his story did not hang together well. He said that he was employed as a ditch digger near Blairsburg about the time he bought the car, but he could not give a satisfactory account of where he got the money to purchase the car, nor why with that much money in his pocket he was roaming around the country. An investigation at Swift's plant did not reveal anyone who corresponded to the person who had sold him the car.

The stolen car belonged to a man at Webster City and it was taken from the main street of that city. The discovery of the missing car was made when Bishop's car met with an accident near Dows, and the officers at that place found the number to correspond with that of a car which had been stolen a short time previously. —News.

Belmond people were grieved last Thursday when they received the news of Mrs. Wm. Harbison's death. Her demise had been expected for several days, as no hopes had been held for her recovery. Mrs. Harbison was loved by all who knew her; she was one of the finest characters it has ever been the writer's privilege to meet; and the husband and children have the most sincere sympathy of all in their loss.

BELMOND TRIMS CORNELIA IN RAGGED GAME

Rough Grounds Produce Errors By The Bushel And Runs By The Dozen

The local ball team met the noted Cornelia tossers in a stubble field, or near to it, Sunday, at Cornelia, and came home with the long end of a 10 to 7 result. It was an uneven, uninteresting ragged game, lousy with errors on both sides. Anything in the cornfield went for two bases; all that dropped in the weeds was good for what you could get until the ball was found. Otis Nelson ambled 'round for a homer on a hit that should have been a single, while the fielder was endeavoring to locate the ball in the grass. Frank Champlin of Holmes pitched for the enemy, and Chapman for Belmond. John was off however, and Madsen finished the game, holding the home-run kings of the Lake City down in pretty good fashion. Some beautiful boners were exhibited on both sides, some wonderful (?) pitching the same, and these along with some beautiful and brilliant baserunning kept the crowd in agony for two hours. It was a great game—in it's way.

SOME OF THE NEW OWNERS OF FORD CARS

The Belmond Auto company reports the following sales of cars, tractors and trucks, delivery of which was made during the past week:

Earl Sellers, Rowan, Touring.
W. A. Duffy, Rowan, Touring.
P. J. Griggs, Goodell, Touring.
H. T Tyrrell, Belmond, Sedan.
C. P. Luick, Belmond, Sedan.

Pearl Nelson, Belmond, Coupe.
Engel Ruitere, Meservey, Coupe.
Heiko Jannsen, Thornton, Truck.
Rowan Grain & Lumber Co., Truck.
Earl Sellers, Rowan, Tractor.

A big demand for cars and tractors is reported.

T. B. WALLACE

T. B. Wallace died at the home of his son, in Goldfield, Tuesday afternoon at 1:30. Death was due to a complication of diseases. Mr. Wallace, who was a resident of Belmond for some time, sold his jewelry store here last fall, and in December moved to Corwith, where he engaged in the jewelry business. He had been at Corwith but two week when he was taken ill, and was taken to the home of his son in Goldfield. Since the first of the year he has been confined to his bed. Funeral serevices will be held at Goldfield today, Thursday. Deceased was close to 70 years of age, and besides other relatives leaves his wife, residing in this city, to mourn his passing.

ADVISES USE OF NEW AUTO SIGNALS NOW

News: "Are your driving signals understood by the motorist behind you? Do you know what the driver ahead of you is going to do, even when you see his signals?"

These questions are asked in a communication from Colliers Weekly to the Commercial club office here in advocating the adoption of a set of hand signals suggested at the request of the magazine by Dr. John A. Harris, traffic commissioner of New York City.

These signals have been tested in the greatest traffic congestion in this country, Fifth avenue, New York They worked.

It is the hope that this system may secure country-wide adoption as a simple first step in standardized traffic regulation thruout the United States. They have already been adopted in several cities.

The five signals suggested by Dr. Harris are:

1. To signal your intention to turn to the left—Extend the left arm and point the first finger to the left.
2. To signal your intention to turn to the right—Flex the left arm upward at the elbow and point the first finger to the right.
3. To signal your intention to stop—Extend the arm with the back of the hand to the rear of the car.
4. To signal your intention to back up—Extend the arm with the palm of the hand to the rear of the car, and motion in a backward direction.
5. To signal your intention to turn completely around—Circle the arm and hand three times forward to indicate a turn to be made to the right and circle three tmes backward to indicate an intention to turn to the left.

There is no need to include a "come forward and pass me" signal, Mr. Harris says. This is universally made by motioning the hand in a forward direction from the elbow and wrist.

It is a gesture that everyone learns in the nursery and is plainly understood all over the country.

Collier's reports that in many cities these signals are being adopted by ordinance, and predicts their use will make automobiling much safer. The signals are easily learned and their use cannot help but prove beneficial.

GOODELL MAN INJURED BADLY BY AUTO

Steps Out Of Way Of One Car Only To Be Struck By Another One

Fred Bachman, who lives northeast of town, met with an accident last Saturday night while at Klemme. Mr. Baschman was crossing the street and in trying to get out of the way of one car was hit by another. The car that ran over him was driven by a stranger. They were unable to get the number of the car, and so there is no way of knowing who ran over him. Mr. Bachman is hurt so badly that is is necessary to employ some one to do his work.

The McGuire road Construction Co. left the first of August for Stanhope, where they will build another section of public highway.

Lee Robbins, Donald Estle and Frank Quigley, Jr., went with the MeGuire company as teamsters.

Last Wednesday S. S. Matson and family and Miss Ina Ahrenkeil were at West Bend to see the grotto. The grotto is very interesting and many are going to see it.

The past week Mrs. Wesenberg and two daughters were visiting at her father's home at Kingsley.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Allaben drove to Charles City, Saturday afternoon, to spend Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Hall. They returned on Sunday evening.

Mrs. O. Nelson left Thursday night for Decorah for a visit with her parents.

On Saturday evening Mrs. Matson received the sad news that her niece who lived in Chicago was killed in an automobile accident. Mrs. Matson and Miss Alva went to Chicago on Saturday night.

Charles Weatherford and Theodore Suurballe of Ames drove down to Goodell on Saturday and returned on Sunday night.

Howard Ruka and Charles Weatherford visited friends in Garner on Sunday.

Miss Mary Benson of Gladbrook is visiting her sister, Mrs. H. T. Miller.

Mrs. Dan Miller, Mrs. Frank Clark and Mrs. E. P. Hubbard who are in the hospital at Hampton are reported as getting along nicely.

Mr. and Mrs. Beier and Mr. and Mrs. Graeber were up to Garner on Sunday.

About 50 people attended the Women's Missionery picnic at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Schneider on Friday. A good program was rendered and a substantial and appetizing lunch was served. Everyone present enjoyed the afternoon.

WOMEN'S CLUBS TO MEET AT DOWS AUG. 14

The Wright County Federation of Women's clubs will hold the last regular meeting for the year at Dows on Monday, August 14, in the M. E. church, at 10 a. m.

This is an important meeting, all members and friends are urged to be present.

Election of officers for the following year will be held during the morning session.

A splendid program has been arranged. Mrs. E.F. Armstrong from Fort Dodge, state president of Women's clubs, will give an interesting report of the general federation of women's clubs, biennial convention, held at Chautauqua, N. Y.

Mrs. Lewis Rose of Hartford, Conn., will give us an address in the afternoon. Mrs. Rose is one of the leading women in the Women's Voting League work, Connecticut's state chairman of the Disarmament committee, is popular on the Chautauqua platform and has just returned from an extensive tour of Europe, where she was investigating the condition of women and women's work, and no woman interested in home and national affairs can afford to miss the opportunity of hearing Mrs. Rose.

Bring sandwiches and cake for two. Fine graveled roads all the way.

The horse shoe pitchers are practicing daily and nightly at the corner by the hotel, and some of the tossers are becoming quite expert at the art of placing 'em where they count. We understand that one of the features on the Creamery Day program is to be a horse shoe pitching contest between the townships of Belmond, Pleasant, Grant and Iowa. This ought to be worth seeing. The Rowan team in Iowa township has some classy players and are expecting to carry home the bacon. There may be some others who will give them a battle for the honors and prize.

MRS. WM. HARBISON

Christy Ryan as born near Ellston, Ringgold county, Iowa, September 1, 1893, and passed away at her home in Belmond, Iowa, August 3rd, 1922, aged 28 years, 11 months and two days.

She was graduated from the Ellston high school in 1910, and from the Western Normal College and Business Institute at Shenandoah in 1912.

She was married to William Harbison, September 21st, 1915. For a time they lived at Whittemore, moving from there to Rulbow, then back to Whittemore, from where they moved to Algona in 1918, where Mr. Harbison worked in the Anderson Bros. Meat Market.

While in Algona she united with the Baptist church and was active in the church and Sunday school, having a fine class of girls at the time they left Algona to make their home in Belmond some two years ago. Here Mr. Harbison purchased an interest in the City Meat Market, and the family worshiped at the Methodist church.

Something over a year ago she was taken ill and underwent several operations at Belmond and Rochester. Last June she went to Rochester for a personal consultation with Dr. Will Mayo, and everything possible was done for her recovery.

A few weeks ago she realized that the end was approaching, and made most of the arrangements for her "Long Journey," as she loved to call it. Her brother, Larry, has been her almost constant attendant. They have been pals since childhood, sharing each other's joys and sorrows, and it was Larry that she wanted to be with her in her distress, and to take her messages of love to friends and relatives.

She could not bear to have them, nor her little ones, witness her suffering, so kind friends took care of the girls until their grandmother Harbison took them back to her home in Missouri.

Services were held at the home on Friday afternoon, by Rev. Webster of the Baptist church of Algona, assisted by Rev. Wilkinson of the local M. E. church. The remains were taken to the old home at Ellston.

Those left to mourn her untimely death are the husband and three little girls, Elna Rose, five, Enola Verl, three, and Lorena Alice, one year of age, her aged father, three sisters and six brothers, besides many nieces and nephews and a host of friends.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our kind friends who responded so readily with their deeds of kindness and beautiful flowers in our time of great sorrow and bereavement. Also the ladies of the Methodist Aid society for their deeds of kindness to our little girls, and to everyone who lent us their assistance in every way.

Wm. Harbison and Children.

FREDERICK C. FELTON

Frederick C. Felton was born April 22, 1853, near Mokena, in Will county, Ill. At the age of 17 he moved with his parents to Iowa, living in Butler county for some time. On December 24, 1877 he was united in marriage with Mary Rebecca Garrison, who preceeded him to that better land March 1, 1903. To this union was born four children, two sons and two daughters, Wm. Henry, Harlan Wayne, Erma Ethel, and Oril Mae. One son preceedeed him Aug. 21, 1912. In April 1881 he moved to Belmond, Iowa, where he has made his home up to the present time. When a boy of 17 he was confirmed in the Evangelical church at Mokena, Will county, Ill.

He leaves to mourn his loss the one son and two daughters, and two sisters, Mrs. Lizzie Longly of Missoula, Mont., and Mrs. Minnie Fiest of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Mr. Felton had been in poor health the past year or two, but not seriously until last winter. In March he went to Rochester, Minn., and there learned he was suffering with tuberculosis. Since then he had failed fast. He died July 31, 1922, at 4:10 p. m.

The funeral services were held on the lawn at his home Thursday, Aug. 3. Rev. Wilkinson of the Methodist church preached the sermon. The Odd Fellow lodge had charge of the services at the cemetery.

Out of town relatives who were present at the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Howe and Mrs. Minnie Fiest of Cedar Falls and Miss Minnie Rabe of Finchford, Iowa.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank those who so kindly helped us during the illness and death of our father, Mr. Felton. Also for the beautiful flowers that were sent after his death. We wish to thank the town officers for blocking the streets and also the Rock Island engineers for muffling their whistle during his sickness. Those things help at such a time.

The Children.

Geraldine and Jack Sharon returned home the last of the week from a visit with relatives at Belmond and Fort Dodge —Buffalo Center Items Forest City Summit.

Garner Band To Furnish Day's Music

Arrangements For Big Day Are Being Completed And Fine Time Assured

GARNER BAND TO PLAY

While the arrangements for the Creamery Day program are not yet completed, enough has been accomplished to give an idea of the events that are to take place. Some novel and unusual features will be on the program, among which will be a chorus lead by Rev. A. H. Waalkes, of the Immanuel church. The committee on speakers have secured W. A. Wentworth of Des Moines, Secretary of the Iowa Creamery and Managers Association, for one. Mr. Wentworth is one of the strongest men in his line in the state and will have a message well worth hearing. Another speaker will be G. H. Tellier of Cedar Rapids. Mr. Tellier has traveled extensively in several states in the interests of dairying and knows the business from feed to butter.

Eagle Grove will meet Belmond in another fierce game of base ball. Their last contest went 15 innings, 5 to 4, and the Creamery Day game Aug. 23 should be a regular stem-winder.

The Garner band furnishes the music. This band is rated one of the best in northern Iowa and will play thruout the day, with an evening concert in addition.

In addition to the Garner band, the famous Luick orchestra will be on the job with numerous selections. Everybody knows this orchestra, and that they are well worth hearing any time.

Various concessions and free attractions are being secured, and with a program of street sports and numerous other attractions the 23rd will be a big day truly. Plan to spend that day in Belmond, for you will miss a treat and a good time if you don't.

The full program is to be announced next week. Watch the papers for it, the time of the events and where they will take place.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Harry Hibberts, who was placed in the county jail on July 26 to serve a light sentence for intoxication, imposed by Mayor Baker of Eagle Grove, was brought before the insane commissioners Friday. He was ordered taken to Cherokee for treatment, whither he was taken by Deputy Denger Sunday. Mr. Hibbits, who had been employed as janitor at a bank, is about 60 years of age. His appetite for liquor is said to be largely responsible for his present condition.

The members of the Wright county board of supervisors plan a trip to Ames on Friday on highway business.

Sheriff Lang and County Attorney Rogers were at Eagle Grove Saturday in consultation with citizens and officials over trouble arising between one of the marshals and a striker in Northwestern yards. The latter was taken to Sioux City to answer to the charge of violation of the injunction order issued by Judge Scott. He has since been released on bond.

The county treasurer's office is busy these days sending out delinquent personal tax notices for the year 1921 and subsequent years. The law provides a penalty of one per cent from April 1st and a five per cent additional penalty if not paid by December 1st. From $6000 to $8000 has been collected in past years and Treasurer Allen reports the amount delinquent this year fully up to the average.

Frank Bishop of Wall Lake township, charged with having stoleon a Ford touring car at Webster City was confined in the Hamilton county jail several days last week because he was unable to prove ownership of the car. On Saturday he filed a $1000 appearance bond and was released until the October term of court. Deputy Denger arrested Bishop at Dows two weeks ago.

The following marriage licenses were issued the past week: Otto Leonard Larson and Hazel Josephine Larson, Clarence Winifred Clark and Hilda Elizabeth May Black, William H. Nail and Mrs. Martha A. Daughten.

Four Eagle Grove men, said to be strikers, are in jail at Fort Dodge, charged with an attempt to burn a strike breaker's home in that city on Monday night. They first went to his home to induce him to leave under some pretense or other and upon his refusal left. Later they returned with a can of kerosene and attempted to burn his home. The owner discharged a shot gun in the air and soon after deputy marshals arrived and captured all four men. It is hard to believe such a serious offense could be committed by Wright county citizens, but our source of information is troroughly reliable.

CLIPPINGS

Miss Carrie Baxter of Belmond, one of the former popular teachers, in the Hampton public schools, was here last week for a visit with Miss Edna Burres, and with her many other friends in this city. She has been teaching during the past two years in the public schools in Milwaukee.—Chronicle.

Last Friday, the day of our great Community picnic, was an especially fine day. About one o'clock people from far and near began to gather and by three o'clock there were a goodly number over two thousand in the park. The park had been put in excellent condition, not only for this occasion but for the coming Chautauqua, and for the numerous tourists who visit our city.

Mrs. Edith Blackwell of Mason City is out for aprize. This morning she passed thru Garner with eleven women in a Jeffry car, besides herself. The weight of the 12 women was 1890 pounds, and they were crowded into an ordinary seven-passenger car. They were going to Britt to attend a Royal Neighbor convention. There were four women in the front seat, four in the rear seat, and four in the jump seats. If this isn't a banner load, we will have to be shown. We are not guessing at the weight, because they unloaded at the Iowa Builders office and tested the big scale, and those are the figures.—Signal.

A. C. Holm, a large landowner of Thor, had a honey crop of some three thousand pounds last year and a yearly average of over two thousand. Mr. Holm works for extracted honey from five hundred to a thousand sections of comb honey and saves all the empty combs for use another year. He says his success is not unusual and is based on three essential in bee culture; first, knowledge of bee habits and bee nature; second, cleanliness and strict order, and third exactness with everything done at the proper time. Mr. Holm is a believer in increases by dividing rather than by watching for new swarms altho he is not unwilling to take new swarms when they arrive. During the winter months he keeps the bees in a specially built cave just under the level of the ground. The cave will hold some three hundred hives. In the spring he feeds sugar syrup to increase brood raising.—Eagle Grove Times.

The coming of the Anti-Saloon League lecturers to Clarion, Sunday, reminded the writer of one of the high spots in his early newspaper days, when another anti-saloon league lecturer came to a town down in southwest Missouri and lectured one Sunday morning at one of the churches. The people had been promised something unusual in the way of a lecture, and after the man had gotten well warmed up he delivered as per promise. First he lifted up a nice little black handbag that was resting at the chancel rail and placed it on the altar, after clearing away the Bible. He opened the handbag and began to lift out bottles of a kind you seldom see nowadays. Each bottle was properly labeled, and he began reading the labels. One came from a certain drug store in the little town. Another came from a drugstore across south. Another from a drugstore across the street. Another from a druggist farther down, and yet another from the fifth druggist. As the town boasted only 800 people it was pretty well supplied with drugstores. When the lecturer began emptying his little handbag there were choruses of AHS and OHS Soon he had a row of 15 or 20 bottles on the altar and each bottle bore the name of the store and the date of the purchase, and the price paid. The people of the congregation were in a state of ferment. There was a buzzing of conversation from front to rear. Many of the good church people were very greatly shocked. Some condemned the lecturer. Others upheld him. But the excitement of the moment was nothing compared with what happened later. An afternoon train pulled into the station just before noon, and the lecturer was to board this train for another point. But he didn't board the train. One of the druggists, whose wife was a prominent church worker and who had heard the lecturer and saw his displays, had gone home in a rage, and told her husband. He loaded his revolver and had gone gunning for the lecturer, and near the depot he plugged him twice. The lecturer did not die, but there was almost a riot and the town was divided in two hostile camps for days. Now the lecturers come around, telling us that bootleggers are working, but their manner of handling the situation is neither so dramatic or effective as in days of yore.—News.

OLAF ITEMS OF INTEREST

Miss Carrie Baxter has been spending the past week at the Geo. Baxter home,

Mr. and Mrs. S. O. Windecker and little Margaret Baxter spent Sunday in Iowa Falls visiting relatives

Mrs. R. Rierson and Mrs. Henry Anderson spent last Wednesday at the S. O. Windecker home.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lein are the proud parents of a baby girl, which came to gladden their home one day last week.

T. Solyst and family of Rolnnd visited at the E. O. Munson home last week.

Orpha Anderson and wife spent last Thursday at Mason City on a business mission. Harry Bohning and wife of Belmond accompanied them.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Morse and Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Mallory spent Friday afternoon at the Orpha Anderson home

Threshing seems to be the order of the day. At one time last week there were seven machines working in this neighborhood.

Mr. and Mrs. Elsie Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Baxter and Miss Carrie Baxter attended chautauqua at Goldfield, Sunday evening.

NOTICE OF PROOF OF WILL

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

In the Estate of Nellie Lein, Deceased:

You are hereby notified that on the 1st day of August, 1922, there was filed with and opened by the undersigned Clerk of the District Court of the State of Iowa, in and for Wright County, a Written instrument purporting to be the LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT of Nellie Lien, late of said County, deceased.

And you are further notified that the 5th day of September, 1922, at 1:30 p. m. of said day, has been set as the day for the final hearing and proof of said Will, before me at the Clerk's office in the Court House at Clarion, Iowa, at which time any person interested can appear and show cause why the same should not be admitted to probate.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said Court at my office in Clarion in said County, this 1st day August, A. D., 1922.

EMPIRE CONSTRUCTION CO. GETS BRITT PAVING

News Tribune: The contract for paving Main street at Wesley and the mile and a half east of that town to connect with the Hancock county paving was let Friday to the Empire Construction Co. This is the same company that is building the rural highway between Algona and Wesley at the present time. The mile and a half rural highway and an 18 foot width of the Main street at Wesley was let at $2.40 and the balance of the Main street in Wesley and the curbing was let at $2.68 and the square yard.

This will complete all paving between Algona and Charles City with the exception of the short stretch in the town of Clear Lake from the fish hatchery to the north shore bathing house.

This is canning week, when you can all you can. We can help you can by helping you out on jars and fruits to can—you can get anything to can you want here—apricots, and pears, and peaches, the first in boxes and the latter in bushel lots—and you can can all you get from us, it's good stuff, high grade, and fresh. All kinds of jars to can with, and plenty of sugar. Drop in and see what we have for you.

And say folks, we have some new flour coming which we want you to try; 'tis the real thing, and makes bread and pastries of all kinds that make you think of what mother used to make when you swiped a handful of cookies and treated the gang, waiting back of the barn. We have all the old brands that we have been carrying, all good flours, if you prefer to stick by them.

Just a little tip— coffee is going up. Better get some ahead and save some money.

Celery direct from the growers, as crisp and savory as it can be had.

RADIO

VACUUM TUBE WHEN USED AS AMPLIFIER

It Will Function Thus for Either Radio Frequency or Audio Frequency.

Starting today we shall give a detailed description of the vacuum tube when used as an amplifier. This series, as in the past, is continuous and if clipped out and saved will be convenient for reference.

When the three-electrode vacuum tube was used as a detector, the circuits associated with it were such that where a symmetrical alternating difference was applied to the grid, a symmetrical change in plate current resulted. That is to say, the vacuum tube acted as a rectifier. In addition to rectifying, the tube also amplified. The variation in plate circuit was "K," where "K" is the amplification constant of the tube, times what it would have been in a two-electrode tube, for the same potential impressed on the grid.

By properly adjusting the electrical constants of the circuits associated with a three-electrode tube, symmetrical variations of grid potential can be made to produce symmetrical variation in plate current, which are "K" times the amplitude of the plate circuit variations of a similar two-electrode value with the same applied grid potential. This means that if a three-electrode value be used in the proper circuits in a radio receiver, the signals can be made to appear as though the received signal is "K" times as strong as it actually is. If two tubes are used with their proper circuits in conjunction with a radio receiver the received signals will appear to be "K" times as strong as they actually are and so the apparent strength of the incoming signal is multiplied by "K" for each additional tube added to the receiver circuit.

A vacuum tube used in conjunction with a circuit that will cause the plate current to vary in exact proportion to the applied grid voltage, but apparently caused by "K" times the actual grid voltage variation, is called an amplifier. If the tube functioning as an amplifier is used to amplify the incoming signal at radio frequency before it is rectified by the detector, it is termed a radio frequency amplifier. If the tube functioning as an amplifier is used after the incoming radio frequency has been rectified by the detector, it is termed an audio frequency amplifier.

Returning again to the characteristic curve of the three-electrode vacuum tube, shown in Figure 23, notice its shape. Suppose that a positive potential was applied to the grid by means of a "C" battery so that the tube would function at a point represented by "A" on the characteristic curve. If now the applied grid potential from the "C" battery be reduced by an amount represented by A-B in Figure 23 the corresponding reduction in plate current will be represented by B-E. On the other hand if the grid potential be increased by an amount represented by A-C, where A-C equals B-C, the corresponding increase in plate current is C-D.

If the portion of the characteristic curve in the region of E-A-D is a straight line, then C-D will equal B-E, or so long as the working range falls within straight line portion of the characteristic curve, symmetrical changes in grid potential will cause symmetrical changes in plate current. From this it can be seen that if the working point "A" be selected near the bend of the characteristic curve, symmetrical changes in grid potential will not cause symmetrical changes in plate current. Since the plate current variation in such case would bear only slight relation to the grid variation in potential, the output of the tube would be distorted.

In applying amplifiers to receiving sets used to pick radiophone stations, distortion is one of the greatest difficulties to overcome. Too strong signals will result in decreased amplification. In Figure 23, if the applied variation in grid potential were 10 times that shown in the example, the plate current would not change 10 times as much, because of the bends in the curve, due to saturation. Finally, a condition can be reached where the use of an amplifier tube will decrease the signal strength because of the saturation of the tube.

The rectified incoming signals would be louder without the use of the amplifier tube, because of the inability of the plate current of the tube caused by saturation to increase in proportion to the signal strength.

There are, in general, two factors that can be taken from the characteristic curve and the second is the length of the straight portion of the curve. The slope of the straight portion of the curve determines the amplification of the tube. The more nearly vertical the straight portion of the curve is, the greater will be the change in plate current for a given change in grid potential, or, in other words, the louder will be the response in the telephone receivers corresponding to a given received signal. The length of the straight portion of the curve determines the maximum variation in grid potential that will cause the tube to function properly without distortion.

TIPS TO RADIOISTS

At Muncie, Ind., bacon was fried by means of a radio current. At last an explanation for that "frying" noise.

Gifford Pinchot, nominated for governor of Pennsylvania by the vote of the people, acknowledges his great indebtedness to the radio. A primary coil no doubt played an important part.

An inventor of Chicago claims to have invented radio apparatus that permits of successful communication with the spirits. We hope that the anti-prohibitionists will not misinterpret this claim.

The police department of Portland, Ore., has asked for an appropriation for radio receiving and broadcasting stations and to equip the police automobiles with radio apparatus. Copper wire, it is needless to say, will be used.

Lord Northcliffe, famous English editor, in speaking of the future of journalism, recently predicted that radio would have an effect upon the publication of newspapers that will equal the invention of the linotype and high-speed press. He said that radio would undoubtedly come into general use of newspapers and newsgathering agencies.

Farm Bureau News

County Agent Edwards spent two days last week in attendance at the Northeast Iowa County Agent's conference, which was held at Charles City, August 3 and 4. About 25 of the county agents from northeastern Iowa attended this meeting which was arranged by State County Agent Leader, Murl McDonald. The program arranged by the state leader included addreseses by R. K. Bliss, Director of Agricultural Extension work, Dr. E. G. Nourse of the Agricultural Economics department, Prof. Beckman of the Agricultural Journalism Department, Prof. Brindley on taxation problems and general round table discussions by the county agents

The county agents and extension workers were entertained royally on Friday noon at a luncheon given by the Charles City Lions club. About 30 business men of Charles City were present at this luncheon and took part in the hour and a half of good fellowship between the business men and county agents. Short addreseses were given by Director R. K. Bliss and by E. G. Nourse, which seemed to be enjoyed keenly by the Charles City business men. Mr. Bliss explained very briefly the great need of the agricultural extension service and a county agent in the community, while Dr. Nourse brought out some interesting facts in connection with the ship subsidy bill and many other important problems. The conference was a great success especially from the standpoint of valuable information which was given out by these authorities and the discussion of general problems by the county agents themselves. It is only by these conferencese that county agents get in touch with one another and decide upon policies which are for the betterment of agricultural communities.

Clothing School Planned

Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist from Ames, will spend three days in Wright county, August 14, 15,16 conducting three one-day training schools on remodeling of clothing.

Arrangements have been made to have two representatives from each township in the county attend one of these meetings to receive instruction so as to be able to take it back to the ladies of their own communities. About 12 or 15 ladies have been selected to take the course of instruction and all ladies who are interested in the work are invited to attend one of the demonstrations of the three days as listed below.

These training schools will be all day meetings and each lady is asked to bring a lunch for noon, also a piece of material, her needles and colored thread for making stitches.

The meeting will be held according to the following schedule:

August 14: Mrs. J. W. Akers' home one-half mile west of Dows.

August 15: Evergreen Daughters of Ceres club, D. D. Paine cottage, four miles northwest of Eagle Grove.

August 16: Mrs. E. E. Evans, 7 miles north and one mile west of Clarion.

Boys Judging Livestock

The junior livestock judging team under the direction of the county agent met at the Ralph Fisher Poland China stock farm Monday evening, July 31, for work in judging hogs. Thru the kindness of Mr. Fisher several interesting classes of hogs of various ages were arranged and the boys managed to get some practical experience in studying the points of conformation in the Poland China type of hogs.

The county agent took the boys to the O. R. Myers farm at Solberg last Monday evening and spent the time in working with several classes of Percheron horses. Mr. Myers assisted the county agent in arranging the various classes for the boys to work on and the evening was profitably spent in studying the important points in connection with judging Percheron horses.

Max Miller of Dayton township has joined the boys in their judging work. All the boys are looking forward to Saturday, August 12, when they will go with the county agent to the state wide judging contest at the college.

HAMPTON OFFICERS RAKE IN AUTO VIOLATORS

Chronicle: Forty violators of the automobile laws have been notified to appear before police court in Hampton during the past week, some charged with one infraction of the laws, and some with another. The biggest list of offenders seem to be the "no tail lighters." Many are also charged with speeding, cutting corners, running with cutouts open and running up and parking on the wrong side of the streets.

The speeders and known persistent violators have been given substantial fines, and officials state that the second offense will bring the limit, almost the price of a Ford car. Officials are forced to make a roundup at this time, because so many people have carelessly and defiantly violated the laws, and other travelers are entitled to protection from the careless drivers. No snap arrests have been made here, the people have been notified thru the newspapers and given warning as to what would happen if they persisted in violating the automobile laws. Now they have no one to blame but themselves. The officers do not intend to be harsh on technical violators, but there is not much excuse from this time on for any one to be ignorant of the laws. Post up and be safe, and make travel safe for others.

The city council has adopted the improved parking methods, and this week parking places are being marked on the main business streets., so the cars may be more easily parked, and at the same time the new method will take care of at least a third more cars in a given space than the old slip shod way of parking. Every car will now have a certain space, and a correct way to drive in and back out without annoyance or trouble. Study the new parking system on the business streets, and be sure and do not make a mistake and drive in too close to the corners. You will note the special markings at the corners.

SIXTY THOUSAND DOLLARS PAID FOR STRING OF BEADS

Sixty thousand dollars for a string of amber beads. That is what a jeweler paid a New York woman of moderate circumstances the other day. Paid it voluntarily, too. She had bought the beads in China for ten dollars, not because she considered them a bargain, but only because they were pretty. The other day, she decided to have them restrung and took them nto a small neighborhood jewelry shop. "Would you sell these?" the proprietor asked after looking them over. No, she thought not, but what would he pay. "Twenty thousand dollars," he said, never batting an eyelash. It speaks for the poise of our American women that she neither fainted nor gasped. "I'll think it over," she replied, and walked out. It is speaking mildly to say, however, that her curiosity was piqued. If there was a sudden and amazing market for amber beads, it would be interesting to learn the news if it had reached any other places. Tiffany's seemed a fair trial, so there she hastened. Would they like to buy them? A short inspection, and she was offered $40,000 by this conservative and never hysterical concern. It was too much so she asked them right out for the reason. "I am sorry but I can't tell you," was the still more confusing reply. By this time she was determined to find a shop that was communicative as well as generous. The next one proved both. "Sixty thousand," was the quotation. Whereupon she offered the beads in exchange for $60,000 and an explanation. When the sale was completed, he told her. "You can't see with a naked eye," the jeweler said, "but under the magnifying glass there is a distinct J and N carved on every bead. The French government has offered a reward of $100,000 for this string. It was stolen years ago, and it was originally the property of Josephine Bonapart, a gift from Napoleon. I have made $40,000 out of this transaction."—Exchange.

A WINTER FEED WITH A SUMMER TASTE

Butterfat and live stock prices are higher, and this fact is going to make the use of ensilage for winter feeding more desirable than ever. Besides giving the herd in the winter time a feed with the summer time taste, ensilage is highly nutritious and is an important part of a balanced ration. But just becuse it's good to feed ensilage, don't overlook the need of economy in making it. Use the dependable McCORMICK-DEERING (International) ensilage cutter. They are simple and compact, made of steel thruout. McCORMICK-DEERING ensilage cutters are safe running at any speed, require less power for large capacities and therefore are economical. Prices are a good deal lower than last year.

The key to happiness is in your own heart. Make use of it.

The man who doubts the honesty of mankind in general is usually pretty well acquainted with himself.

TIMELY REMINDERS

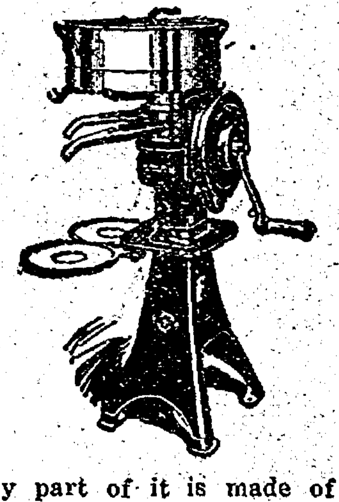
Fall—just a few weeks distant!
Weather due—fine for fall work.
You will need—
Perhaps a Titan 10-20 Kerosene tractor.
A power lift 3-bottom P&O tractor plow.
To go with it.
And maybe a Leverless Disk harrow.
Or possibly.
A McCormick or Deering Husker and Shredder.
An International Ensilage Cutter.
Or any one of a large number of High Quality, service-proved implements.
That we sell.
Come in and see us.
And our fall line of farm equipment.

INCREASE YOUR CROPS

When you hear of an exceptionally good crop in your neighborhood, you can depend on it that the farmer who had the good crop, first of all looked after the fertility of the soil on which it was raised. Fertility is the first chapter of the story—always. Farmers that raise good crops invariably own good manure spreaders. The two go together hand in hand. You cannot afford this year to pass up an opportunity to save all the manure and use its fertility in making your farm more productive. An International roller bearing manure spreader will help you produce bigger crops with less man power. See us about the International and new low prices at your first opportunity.

A Continued Story.

We just can't help telling you a little about the Primrose cream separator each week. You know how it is—when you are thoroly convinced that something is RIGHT, your can't help talking about it. That's the way we feel about the Primrose.



Every part of it is made of highgrade materials insuring long life and years of useful service. The Primrose gets ALL the cream, and it is easy to keep clean. When you buy a separator there are so many reasons why it should be a Primrose that it will be well worth your while to find out all about it. Talk it over with us the next time you're in town.

Cave Man Stuff

BACK near the beginning of things, our prehistoric forbears would have perished from the earth if they had not understood the science of reading advertising.

The cave men didn't know much about underwear, hair tonic or phonographs, but they did have to eat. The one who could follow the track of the game he hunted, or read the meaning of a twisted leaf or broken twig, was best off in life.

Then, as now, the most consistent reader of advertising was best dressed, best fed and most contented. There has been something of an evolution in advertising in the last few thousands of years, but the principle is just the same.

The consistent reader of the advertisements is invariably best informed on what to eat and where to get it; what to wear and how much to pay for it. He's up on the most important things in life.

Throughout the ages, advertising has done much to make life livable and pleasant. We owe it much.

Let's make the most of it.

MEAT MARKET CHANGES HANDS

Our City Meat Market changed hands rather suddenly last Saturday, when Deputy Sheriff Harold Marsh came down and took possession for J. E. Deckers and Sons on an attachment for un-paid bills. Geo. H. Miller, who has been here for some time, was left in charge to dispose of the stock on hand. After this is done the shop will be under new management and we are promised plenty of meat and a reduction in price.

R. L. Robinson has not been at the shop since last Thursday, and left without leaving any forwarding address. His present wereabouts are unknown, so we are unable to tell what his intentions are. Mrs. Robinson has been with her parents at Dows for some time.

FREE MOVIES DRAW CROWDS

The free movies given on the street each Saturday night are drawing large crowds and are apprantly ppreciated. The Meservey business men who pay the bill, are showing the people that they appreciate their customers' trade, and it creates a better feeling between them and the farmer. The farmer has much to say about building up his town; the merchants interest in better business are no less of interest to the farmer.

DOCTOR HAULED FROM TRAIN BY JEERING CROWD

The following is taken from the Denver Post. The doctor is a nephew of H. F. Reif, and visited here two years ago:

Dragged off the Los Angeles & Salt Lake train in the desert four miles east of Las Vegas, Nev., surrounded by a group of men bent on killing him as a railroad labor gent, Dr. H. F. Fuerst of Greeley, Colo., saw with untold relief the stopping of the cars and the passengers rushing to his rescue Sunday morning. To his light checkered summer suit are laid his thrilling adventure and narrow escape from lynching. At Los Angeles a number of strike breakers boarded the train in charge of a man who wore a suit almost identical with that of Doctor Fuerst and who resembled him quite closely. When the train stopped at the railroad yards outside of Las Vegas, this man and the workers under his care, who were on their way to work in the machine shops, got off. Dr. Fuerst walked around a bit and it was there he believes that he was mistaken for the labor agent.

About three miles out of Las Vegas, while he was talking to Rufus Smith, veteran Salt Lake fireman, a gang of men came into the car, Dr. Fuerst said, and dragged him to the vestibule, where the rap door was open.

"Drop him on the rocks. Bust his head open. Kill him," one of the group said, but he was dissuaded from his purpose by another, who counseled that they "hold on until we get to the shack and then lynch the bird." Dr. Fuerst, realizing the seriousness of the situation, pleaded that he was the wrong man and was not connected with the railroad in any way. He was told to shut up, that they had him spotted and that they knew he was the right man.

Soon after the brakeman stopped the train near some shacks, Dr. Fuerst said, and his captors jumped off the train with him. They dragged him away from the train in plain view of the passengers. Ten or fifteen more joined the party, and Dr. Fuerst said his heart sank as the train started to pull away. A Mexican in the group produced a heavy club and branished it in a menacing manner, saying, "I got you now. I kill you."

Meanwhile passengers on board the train started yelling for the conductor to stop and as the engineer applied the brakes a number ran down towards the gang shouting that they had the wrong man. Dr. Fuerst was then released. Several women on the train became hysterical and the incident was almost the sole topic of conversation until the train pulled into Salt Lake Sunday morning. Dr. Fuerst declared that he overheard the brakeman tell Mr. Smith that it served him right, that he was going to get what was coming to him. Mr. Smith accompanied Dr. Fuerst to the railroad officeres here and registered a complaint, demanding the punishment of the brakeman and reparation for his inquiries. An investigation of the incident was promised.

GENEVA BOY AND HANSELL GIRL ELOPE IN DAD'S FORD

Hampton Chronicle: Nothing has been heard of the whereabouts of Raymond Harris, aged 18, and Miss Irene Van Koten, aged 17, of Hansell, since their sudden disappearance from their homes two weeks ago last Sunday night, on July 16.

The young couple had been keeping company some, but had met secretly most of the time because of the objections made on the part of the young lady's parents on account of her age. On the night of their departure she had attended services at the Methodist church at Hansell with a girl friend. She returned home and retired for the night, and the other members of her family retired at the usual time. When they awoke in the morning they found the girl was missing from her room. Some time during the night she and young Harris had left. The screen on her bedroom window had been cut, and she made her getaway thru the window. Whether she cut the screen herself or whether Harris assisted her in getting out of the house is, of course, unknown.

The couple left in a Ford touring car, the property of the boy's father, but it had been registered in the boy's name when the license was taken out at the office of the county treasurer. The license number was 40-23444, and the car had a spot light on the left side. The families of the couple have no idea where or which way they went. Sheriff Atkinson, who has been working on the case, states that it was surely a smooth getaway on the part of the young couple, as not a single clue as to their whereabouts, or which way they went, has been discovered.

W. J. Hartfelder met with quite a painful accident one day last week He was working around a big gas tractor when his hand slipped, striking on a part of the machinery in such a manner that a deep gash was cut between his thumb and forefinger. Several stitches were required to make repairs.

The painters working on the Reformed church are working both inside and outside at the same time, It is thought that the building can be dedicated in two or three weeks.

We were walking along the street the other day, and noticed two men were talking rather loud, and thinking it might be an affair similar to the one pulled off on our streets one Saturday night a short time ago, we stopped to find out what was the trouble. We were intormed that they were not angry. One of them claimed that there were wild beasts, such as bears, lions, tigers and the like, in the weeds on some of our vacant lots; the other claimed there were no wild animals there, but that it was more likely to furnish cover for a still. We did not stop to see how the thing was settled, but we believe, however, that both were wrong. But the fact is that the weeds should be cut.

NOTICE FOR BIDS

The Board of Directors of the CONSOLIDATED INDEPENDENT SCHOOL DISTRICT of MESERVEY will receive sealed bids for the transporting of children until 6 p. m., August 14, 1922. Sealed bids for janitor work in the Meservey school will also be accepted until such time. All bids to be in the hands of the Secretary of the Board before the above mentioned time in order to receive consideration.

All bids for routes shall plainly state the number of the route for which the bidder desires to submit a bid and the wages asked per school month of 20 school days. Plans may be seen at the office of the Secretary. Drivers shall be prepared to furnish a suitable bond in case their bid is accepted.

The Board reserves he right to accept or to reject any or all bids.

Miss Sadie Frohling and Miss Inez Trumbell of Belmond were Meservey callers last week. We understand that Miss Trumbel will teach one of the rural schools north of town this fall.

Mrs. H. Christiansen and Mrs. F. Schuldt of Goodell accompanied by Mrs. Norva Ellison and children of Crane, Missouri, were visitors at the Langlitz and Rief homes one day last week. Mrs. Ellison was a former Goodell resident.

Dr. J. A. Butz and family of Monterey, Minn. were recent visitors at the Mrs. Mary Butz and Wm. Butz homes here.

Have you seen Professor Smith? If not you have failed to see something out of the ordinary. The professor drives two horses hitched to an old spring wagon, with a bottom in the box. The sides, for some reason, are missing; he leads one horse hitched to a cart and another just walks along for company. He carries a box with some guinea pigs, numerous old rags, and a water can. The professor dresses about the same as a typical weary willie. He has been in this vicinity for several weeks, and claims to be in the show business. We are informed that he gave one entertainment in a rural school near town and about all he did was to run down the Consolidated schools. But judging from the professor's appearance and actions he has chosen quite a heavy subject.

ROWAN NEWS

The annual Wright county tennis tournament was held at the Clarmond country club Aug. 3 and 4, Clarion carrying off the honors. Paul Ramsay of Clarion defeated Whiteman of Eagle Grove in the semifinals of the lower bracket, bringing him into the finals. Dr. St. Clair of Clarion defeated D. W. Farran of Rowan in the semifinals of the upper bracket, brining him into the finals with Ramsay. In the final sets Ramsay won from St. Clair 6-3, 6-3, winning the championship of Wright county. The winner of the championship of last year's tournament, Dr. Martin of Eagle Grove, defaulted after playing a number of sets. He was unbeaten when he defaulted.

In the doubles play Ramsay and Hartsock of Clarion fought their way to the finals, but were closely pressed most of the time. In the final sets Ramsay and Hartsock played Whiteman and Brown of Eagle Grove and won their matches. Ramsay and Hartsock played doubles together in their high school days in the State high school meet at Ames, and certainly play well together.

Rowan went farther this year than last, and it is hoped that by next August we may be runners up in both doubles and singles. Tomkinson and Sheldon played good tennis together in the doubles, but were no match for Ramsay and Hartsock. Both showed good form in the singles play, but Ramsay, with his consistant long shots to the back line, drove them off the courts and piled up points against them. Ramsay was taken by surprise by the playing of Wesley Azeltine, and it nearly cost him a set before he got into full swing. Ramsay, who played with Monmouth college, and Don Farran, of the University of Iowa, were unable to meet each other, the former coming up in the lower bracket, and the latter in the upper. Dale Farran caused a stir among the oldtimers at the tournament. When the 13 year old youngster beat two men and went into the third bracket against St. Clair interest centered upon that match. St. Clair had little trouble winning the two sets, 6-1, 6-2. The drives in both setes of this match went deep into the opponents' court, within a foot of the service line on both sides of the net, and it was only after four or five returns that the point was lost.

Dr. St. Clair and Paul Ramsay deserve a great deal of credit for the success of the tournament. Thanks is also due the country club for the arrangements they made for the tournament. It is planned to make this an annual affair, and perhaps a trophy, such as a loving cup, will be offered. If present plans work out, next year the tournament will inclue a ladies' tournament and a junior boys' (under 16) tournament. The feeling of the people from Rowan who attended the tournament is that they were treated fine, and they hope that next year's tournament will be as successful as the one held at Clarmond this year.

The contestants were Dale and Donald Farran, Ray and Wesley Azeltine, Dr. Maker, Guy Sheldon and Rev. Tomkinson.

Congregational Church Notes

Morning service at 11. Sunday school at 12. Young people's meeting at 7 p. m. Evening service at 8.

Last Sunday morning Rev. Hardcastle preached in the morning, and Rev. Ada Anderson delivered the evening sermon. Both services were well attended and two fine sermons were delivered.

Don't forget the prayer service on Wed. evening at 8.

Methodist Church Notes

The Women's Home Missionary society held a social at the home of Mrs. Chas. Richards. Those present declare it to be one of the best ever held. There were lots of good eats and plenty of good fellowship. The attendance was not as large as was expected. But this was largely due to the busy time among the farmers.

The pastor was back in his pulpit last Sunday after two weeks absence.

The Methodist camp meeting is now in progress at Okibegi, Spirit Lake, where many of the great leaders of the Methodisth church, including Bishops Stuntz, Mead and Jones, and Dr. Geo. Elliott of New York, are on the program. Mr. and Mrs. August Rietz and family are taking in the inspiration of these meetings. Rev. Tomkinson expects to be present for a day this next week. The following week he preaches the noon hour sermon at the Algona District Conference.

The Wright county W. C. T. U. convention is to be held at Goldfield next Friday. Two of the Rowan ladies are on the program, Mrs. Logan McCallum and Mrs. H. Tomkinson. Others are planning on being present.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Ross and Mrs. Darrell Stout were Mason City shoppers Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Bingham and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Pritchett motored to Cedar County Saturday to visit at the home of an aunt of Mr. Bingham and Mrs. Pritchett, Mrs Andrew Bixler and family. They returned home Monday.

The W. C. T. U. will meet next Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Will Bailey Jr. Mrs. R. H. Keith is the leader. All members are requested to be present.

Dr. Maker and Ormal Gates went to Clear Lake, Saturday, returning home Sunday. Mrs. Gates, Mrs. William McCallum and Mr. and Mrs. W. R. McCallum, who spent the past week there, returned with them.

Mrs Odland, of Goldfield, came Monday to assist in caring for the new boy at the Langdon home.

Mr. W. A. Burrows and daughters Iva Myrtle and Marion, of Dows, visited at the home of Mrs. Hannah Whitten Sunday.

FORD TRACTOR EXPOSITION HELD AT IOWA STATE FAIR

A totally new developement is promised for the Iowa State Fair, Aug. 23 to Sept. 1, for, in conjunction with the State Fair itself, the Fordson Industrial and Agricultural Tractor Exposition will be held on the fairgrounds.

This is one of a series of 34, covering every principal city in the United States. Much of the equipment now being shown at the Pageant of Progress, in Chicago, and the huge exposition in Cleveland, will be shipped to Des Moines, as well as additional machines of Iowa manufacturers.

A total of 50,000 square feet of space is reserved for this Exposition two thirds of it being open ground just inside the Walnut avenue entrance, where the visitors will see the Fordson operating such equipment as the Wehr one-man grader, the Wehr road maintainer, Merillat road builder (a new Iowa product), Lessman loaders and loading cranes (Iowa products filling a national demand), contractor's plows, the Smith hoist, the Ersted hoist, a new rock pulverizer, the Thomas, Cut-More and Taco tractor mowers, the Ronning Ensilage harvester, tractor trailers, a new tractor spray pump, new truck bodies—the Anthony and Lee, farm and commercial bodies, as well as many governors of recent design, belt rollers, radiator guards, fenders, etc., making it a most complete display of both agricultura and industrial equipment.

Active demonstrations will be given every day so that visitors will not only see the equipment but have a chance to study its work.

U. S. LEADS WORLD IN CHEAP POSTAGE

It is a well known fact that Uncle Sam will carry a letter from New York to San Francisco for two cents —but that is only half the story. The United States postoffice now carries letters to many foreign countries at the regular domestic rates. This country leads the world in the realm of cheap postage.

Announcement is made from Washington that Spain and Argentina have recently been added to our two-cent stamp zone. This is just one step in the extension of the low letter rate. For two cents Uncle Sam will carry a letter to Shanghai, China, or New Zealand. All parts of the British empire can be reached for the same price, with the exception of Australia; India and Egypt.

Nearly all of the countries of South America and Central America are now in the two-cent zone. So also are the islands in our vicinity in the Atlantic and Pacific.

No other country can even come close to the postal record attained by the United States.

Most of us take the mail service for granted. We fail to appreciate how much of a blessing it is and how much service we get at slight cost. Who would be willing to carry a letter to England or Spain for two cents and pay all the expenses of the trip?—Exchange.

WHICH ONE IS A LIAR?

Editors are bound to get the truth tangled once in a while as the two following clippings from the Garner papers will show. Now which is which here and who is the liar—Ted Tierney or Frank Clark? Read the two items and solve the question:

Signal Says It's An Office

A new office room is being fitted up in the northwest corner of the court house basement. Whether it will be used by the engineers or the abstract offices will be removed into it we do not know. It is a nice office and will be a good place for whoever uses it.—Signal

Leader Says It's A Coal Bin

The court house basement, or part of it lying under the office of the Clerk of the Court, has been remodled, and will be used for a coal bin. Added room was needed for coal storage. The way it has been when a year's supply of fuel was installed in the fall, it made Lewis Henschen's office quarters a trifle cramped.—Leader.

Now after reading those two clippings it's as clear as mud, what?—Klemme Times.

(Cheer up, brothers: it happens in the best regulated families!)

I

April.

The Deacons were at supper. In the middle of the table was a small, appealing tulip plant, looking as anything would look whose sun was a gas jet. This gas jet was high above the table and flared with a sound.

"Better turn down the gas jest a little," Mr. Deacon said, and stretched up to do so. He made this joke almost every night. He seldom spoke as a man speaks who has something to say, but as a man who makes something to say.

"Well, what have we on the festive board tonight?" he questioned, eyeing it. "Festive" was his favorite adjective. "Beautiful," too. In October he might be heard asking: "Where's my beautiful fall coat?"

"We have creamed salmon," replied Mrs. Deacon gently. "On toast," she added, with a scrupulous regard for the whole truth. Why she should say this so gently no one can tell. She says everything gently. Her "Could you leave me another bottle of milk this morning?" would wring a milkman's heart.

"Well, now, let us see," said Mr. Deacon, and attacked the principal dish benignly. "Let us see," he added, as he served.

"I don't want any," said Monona.

The child Monona was seated upon a book and a cushion, so that her little triangle of nose rose adultly above her plate. Her remark produced precisely the effect for which she had passionately hoped.

"What's this?" cried Mr. Deacon "No salmon?"

"No," said Monona, inflected up, chin pertly pointed. She felt her power, discarded her "sir."

"Oh now, Pet!" from Mrs. Deacon, on three notes. "You liked it before."

"I don't want any," said Monona, in precisely her original tone.

"Just a little? A very little?" Mr. Deacon persuaded, spoon dripping.

The child Monona made her lips thin and straight and shook her head until her straight hair flapped in her eyes on either side. Mr. Deacon's eyes anxiously consulted his wife's eyes. What is this? Their progeny will not eat? What can be supplied?

"Some bread and milk!" cried Mrs. Deacon brightly, exploding on "bread." One wondered how she thought of it.

"No," said Monona, inflection up, chin the same. She was affecting indifference to this scene, in which her soul delighted. She twisted her head, bit her lips unconcernedly, and turned her eyes to the remote.

There emerged from the fringe of things, where she perpetually hovered, Mrs. Deacon's older sister, Lulu Bett, who was "making her home with us." And that was precisely the case. They were not making her a home, goodness knows. Lulu was the family beast of burden.

"Can't I make her a little milk toast?" she asked Mrs. Deacon.

Mrs. Deacon hesitated, not with compunction at accepting Lulu's offer, not diplomatically to lure Monona. But she hesitated habitually, by nature, as another is by nature vivacious or brunette.

"Yes!" shouted the child Monona.

The tension relaxed. Mrs. Deacon assented. Lulu went to the kitchen. Mr. Deacon served on. Something of this scene was enacted every day. For Monona the drama never lost its zest. It never occurred to the others to let her sit without eating, once, as a cure-all. The Deacons were devoted parents and the child Monona was delicate. She had a white, grave face, white hair, white eyebrows, white lashes. She was sullen, anemic. They let her wear rings. She "toed in." The poor child was the late birth of a late marriage and the principal joy which she had provided for them thus far was the pleased reflection that they had produced her at all.

"Where's your mother, Ina?" Mr. Deacon inquired. "Isn't she coming to her supper?"

"Tantrim," said Mrs. Deacon softly.

"Oh, ho," said he, and said no more.

The temper of Mrs. Bett, who also lived with them, had days of high vibration when she absented herself from the table as a kind of self-indulgence, and no one could persuade her to food. "Tantrims," they called these occasions.

"Baked potatoes," said Mr. Deacon. "That's good—that's good. The baked potato contains more nourishment than potatoes prepared in any other way. The nourishment is next to the skin. Roasting retains it."

"That's what I always think," said his wife pleasantly.

For fifteen years they had agreed about this.

They ate, in the indecent silence of first savoring food. A delicate crunching of crusts, an odor of baked-potato shells, the slip and touch of the silver.

"Num, num, nummy-num!" sang the child Monona loudly, and was hushed by both parents in simultaneous exclamation which rivaled this lyric outburst. They were alone at table. Di, daughter of a wife early lost to Mr. Deacon, was not there. Di was hardly ever there. She was at that age. That age, in Warbleton.

A clock struck the half hour.

"It's curious," Mr. Deacon observed, "how that clock loses. It must be fully quarter to." He consulted his watch. "It is quarter to!" he exclaimed with satisfaction. "I'm pretty good at guessing time."

"I've noticed that!" cried his Ina.

"Last night, it was only twenty-three to, when the half hour struck," he reminded her.

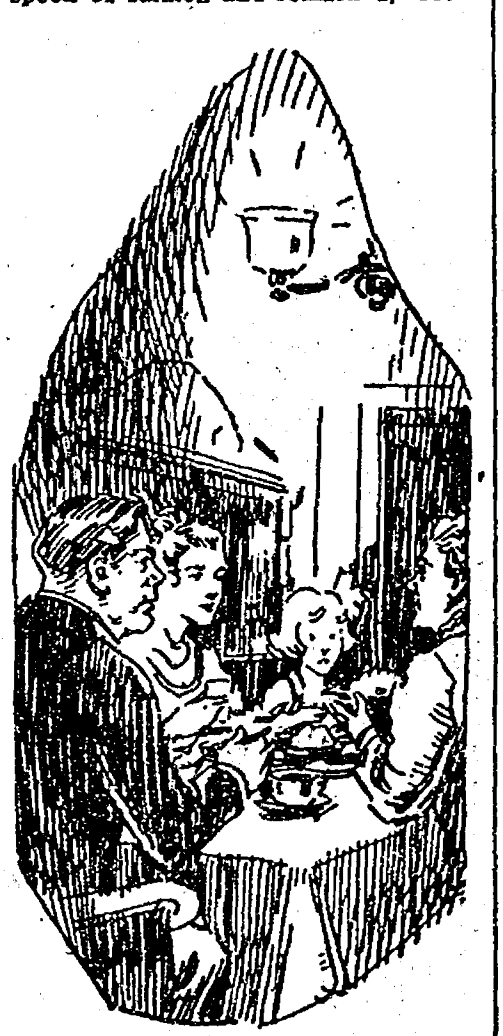
"Twenty-one, I thought." She was tentative, regarded him with arched eyebrows, mastication suspended.

This point was never to be settled. The colloquy was interrupted by the child Monona, whining for her toast. And the doorbell rang.

"Dear me!" said Mr. Deacon. "What can anybody be thinking of to call just at mealtime?"

He trod the hall, flung open the street door. Mrs. Deacon listened. Lulu, coming in with the toast, was warned to silence by an uplifted finger. She deposited the toast, tiptoed to her chair. A withered baked potato and cold creamed salmon were on her plate. The child Monona ate with shocking appreciation. Nothing could be made of the voices in the hall. But Mrs. Bett's door was heard softly to unlatch. She, too, was listening.

A ripple of excitement was caused in the dining room when Mr. Deacon was divined to usher some one to the parlor. Mr. Deacon would speak with this visitor in a few moments and now returned to his table. It was notable how slight a thing would give him a sense of self-importance. Now he felt himself a man of affairs, could not even have a quiet supper with his family without the outside world demanding him. He waved his hand to indicate it was nothing which they should know anything about, resumed his seat, served himself to a second spoon of salmon and remarked, "More roast duck, anybody?" in a loud voice and with a slow wink at his wife. That lady at first looked blank, as she always did in the presence of any humor couched with the least indirection, and then drew back her chin and caught her lower lip in her gold-filled teeth. This was her conjugal rebuking.



"More Roast Duck, Anybody?" in a Loud Voice.

Swedenborg always uses "conjugial." And really this sounds more married. It should be used with reference to the Deacons. No one was ever more married than they—at least Mr. Deacon. He made little conjugal jokes in the presence of Lulu who now, completely unnerved by the habit, suspected them where they did not exist, feared lurking entendre in the most innocent comments, and became more tense every hour of her life.

And now the eye of the master of the house fell for the first time upon the yellow tulip in the center of his table.

"Well, well!" he said. "What's this?"

Ina Deacon produced, fleetly, an unlooked-for dimple.

"Have you been buying flowers?" the master inquired.

"Ask Lulu," said Mrs. Deacon.

He turned his attention full upon Lulu.

"Suitors?" he inquired, and his lips left their places to form a sort of ruff about the word.

Lulu flushed, and her eyes and their very brows appealed.

"It was a quarter," she said. "There'll be five flowers."

"You bought it?"

"Yes. There'll be five—that's a nickel apiece."

His tone was as methodical as if he had been talking about the bread.

"Yet we give you a home on the supposition that you have no money to spend, even for necessities."

His voice, without resonance, cleft air, thought, spirit, and even flesh.

Mrs. Deacon, indeterminately feeling her guilt in having let loose the dogs of her husband upon Lulu, interposed: "Well, but, Herbert—Lulu isn't strong enough to work. What's the use . . ."

She dwindled. For years the fiction had been sustained that Lulu, the family beast of burden, was not strong enough to work anywhere else.

"The justice business—" said Dwight Herbert Deacon—he was a justice of the peace—"and the dental profession—" he was also a dentist—"do not warrant the purchase of spring flowers in my home."

"Well, but, Herbert—" It was his wife again.

"No more," he cried briefly, with a slight bend of his head. "Lulu meant no harm," he added, and smiled at Lulu.

There was a moment's silence into which Monona injected a loud "Num, num, nummy-num," as if she were the burden of an Elizabethan lyric. She seemed to close the incident. But the burden was cut off untimely. There was, her father reminded her portentously, company in the parlor.

"When the bell rang, I was so afraid something had happened to Di," said Ina, sighing.

"Let's see," said Di's father. "Where is little daughter tonight?"

He must have known that she was at Jenny Plow's at a tea party, for at noon they had talked of nothing else; but this was his way. And Ina played his game, always. She informed him, dutifully.

"Oh, ho," said he, absently. How could he be expected to keep his mind on these domestic trifles.

"We told you that this noon," said Lulu. He frowned, disregarded her. Lulu had no delicacy.

"How much is salmon the can now?" he inquired abruptly—this was one of his forms of speech, the can, the pound, the cord.

His partner supplied this information with admirable promptness. Large size, small size, present price, former price—she had them all.

"Dear me," said Mr. Deacon. "That is very nearly salmoney, isn't it?"

"Herbert!" his Ina admonished, in gentle, gentle reproach. Mr. Deacon punned, organically. In talk he often fell silent and then asked some question, schemed to permit his voice to flourish. Mrs. Deacon's return was always automatic: "Herbert!"

"Whose Bert?" he said to this. "I thought I was your Bert."

She shook her little head. "You are a case," she told him. He beamed upon her. It was his intention to be a case.

Lulu ventured in upon this pleasantry, and cleared her throat. She was not hoarse, but she was always clearing her throat.

"The butter is about all gone," she observed. "Shall I wait for the butter-woman or get some creamery?"

Mr. Deacon now felt his little jocularity lost before a wall of the matter of fact. He was not pleased. He saw himself as the light of his home, bringer of brightness, lightener of dull hours. It was a pretty role. He insisted upon it. To maintain it intact, it was necessary to turn upon their sister with concentrated irritation.

"Kindly settle these matters without bringing them to my attention at mealtime," he said icily.

Lulu flushed and was silent. She was an olive woman, once handsome, now with flat, bluish shadows under her wistful eyes. And if only she would look at her brother Herbert and say something. But she looked at her plate.

"I want some honey," shouted the child, Monona.

"There isn't any, Pet," said Lulu.

"I want some," said Monona, eyeing her stonily. But she found that her hair-ribbon could be pulled forward to meet her lips, and she embarked on the biting of an end. Lulu departed for some sauce and cake. It was apple sauce. Mr. Deacon remarked that the apples were almost as good as if he had stolen them. He was giving the impression that he was an irrepressible fellow. He was eating very slowly. It added pleasantly to his sense of importance to feel that some one, there in the parlor, was waiting his motion.

At length they rose. Monona flung herself upon her father. He put her aside firmly, every inch the father. No, no. Father was occupied now. Mrs. Deacon coaxed her away. Monona encircled her mother's waist, lifted her own feet from the floor and hung upon her. "She's such an active child," Lulu ventured brightly.

"Not unduly active, I think," her brother-in-law observed.

He turned upon Lulu his bright smile, lifted his eyebrows, dropped his lids, stood for a moment contemplating the yellow tulip, and so left the room.

Lulu cleared the table. Mrs. Deacon essayed to wind the clock. Well, now. Did Herbert say it was twenty-three tonight when it struck the half hour and twenty-one last night, or twenty-one tonight and last night twenty-three? She talked of it as they cleared the table, but Lulu did not talk.

"Can't you remember?" Mrs. Deacon said at last. "I should think you might be useful."

Lulu was lifting the yellow tulip to set it on the sill. She changed her mind. She took the plant to the woodshed and tumbled it with force upon the chip-pile.

The dining room table was laid for breakfast. The two women brought their work and sat there. The child Monona hung miserably about, watching the clock. Right or wrong, she was put to bed by it. She had eight minutes more—seven—six—five—

Lulu laid down her sewing and left the room. She went to the woodshed, groped about in the dark, found the stalk of the one tulip flower in its heap on the chip-pile. The tulip she fastened in her gown on her flat chest.

Outside were to be seen the early stars. It is said that if our sun were as near to Arcturus as we are near to our sun, the great Arcturus would burn our sun to nothingness.

* * * * * * *

In the Deacons' parlor sat Bobby Larkin, eighteen. He was in pain all over. He was come on an errand which civilization has contrived to make an ordeal.

Before him on the table stood a photograph of Diana Deacon, also eighteen. He hated her with passion. At school she mocked him, aped him, whispered about him, tortured him. For two years he had hated her. Nights he fell asleep planning to build a great house and engage her as its servant.

Yet, as he waited, he could not keep his eyes from this photograph. It was Di at her curliest, at her fluffiest, Di conscious of her bracelet, Di smiling. Bobby gazed, his basic aversion to her hard-pressed by a most reluctant pleasure. He hoped that he would not see her, and he listened for her voice.

Mr. Deacon descended upon him with an air carried from his supper hour, bland, dispensing. Well! Let us have it. "What did you wish to see me about?"—with a use of the past tense as connoting something of indirection and hence of delicacy—a nicety customary, yet unconscious. Bobby had arrived in his best clothes and with an air of such formality that Mr. Deacon had instinctively suspected him of wanting to join the church, and, to treat the time with due solemnity, had put him in the parlor until he could attend at leisure.

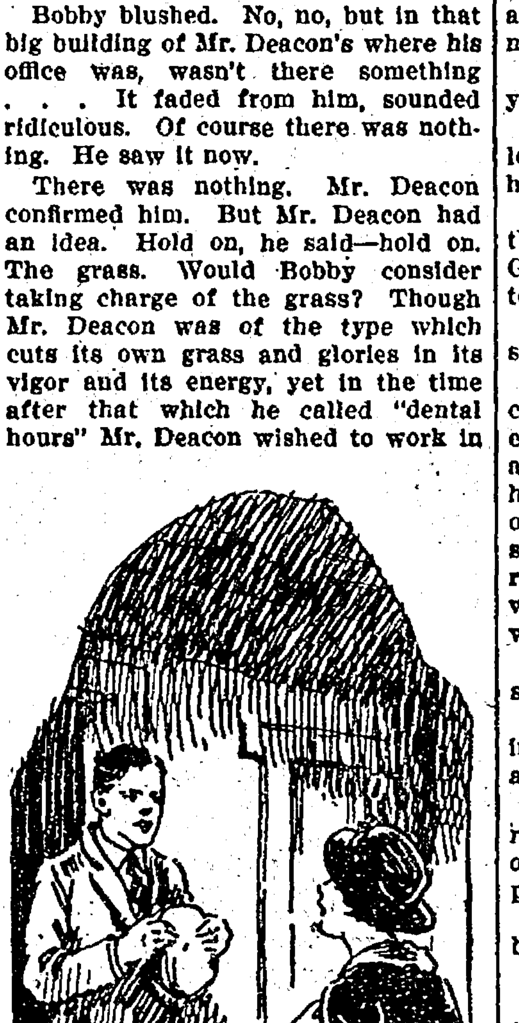
Confronted thus by Di's father, the speech which Bobby had planned deserted him.

"I thought if you would give me a job," he said defenselessly.

"So that's it!" Mr. Deacon, who always awaited but a touch to be either irritable or facetious, inclined now to be facetious. "Filling teeth?" he would know. "Marrying folks, then?" Assistant justice or assistant dentist—which?

Bobby blushed. No, no, but in that big building of Mr. Deacon's where his office was, wasn't there something . . . It faded from him, sounded ridiculous. Of course there was nothing. He saw it now.

There was nothing. Mr. Deacon confirmed him. But Mr. Deacon had an idea. Hold on, he said—hold on. The grass. Would Bobby consider taking charge of the grass? Though Mr. Deacon was of the type which cuts its own grass and glories in its vigor and its energy, yet in the time after that which he called "dental hours" Mr. Deacon wished to work in his garden. His grass, growing in late April rains, would need attention early next month . . . he owned two lots—"of course property is a burden." If Bobby would care to keep the grass down and raked . . . Bobby would care, accepted this business opportunity, figures and all, thanked Mr. Deacon with earnestness. Bobby's aversion to Di, it seemed, should not stand in the way of his advancement.



"Oh, Hullo," Said He. "No. I Came to See Your Father."

"Then that is checked off," said Mr. Deacon heartily.

Bobby wavered toward the door, emerged on the porch, and ran almost upon Di returning from her tea party at Jenny Plow's.

"Oh, Bobby! You came to see me?"

She was as fluffy, as curly, as smiling as her picture. She was carrying pink, gauzy favors and a spear of flowers. Undeniably in her voice there was pleasure. Her glance was startled but already complacent. She paused on the steps, a lovely figure.

But one would say that nothing but the truth dwelt in Bobby.

"Oh, hullo," said he. "No. I came to see your father."

He marched by her. His hair stuck up at the back. His coat was bunched about his shoulders. His insufficient nose, abundant, loose-lipped mouth and brown eyes were completely expressionless. He marched by her without a glance.

She flushed with vexation. Mr. Deacon, as one would expect, laughed loudly, took the situation in his elephantine grasp and pawed at it.

"Mamma! Mamma! What do you s'pose? Di thought she had a beau—"

"Oh, papa!" said Di. "Why, I just hate Bobby Larkin and the whole school knows it."

Mr. Deacon returned to the dining room, humming in his throat. He entered upon a pretty scene.

His Ina was darning. Four minutes of grace remaining to the child Monona, she was spinning on one toe with some Bacchanalian idea of making the most of the present. Di dominated, her ruffles, her blue hose, her bracelet, her ring.

"Oh, and mamma," she said, "the sweetest party and the dearest supper and the darlingest decorations and the gorgeousest—"

"Grammar, grammar," spoke Dwight Herbert Deacon. He was not sure what he meant, but the good fellow felt some violence done somewhere or other.

"Well," said Di positively, "they were. Papa, see my favor."

She showed him a sugar dove, and he clucked at it.

Ina glanced at them fondly, her face assuming its loveliest light. She was often ridiculous, but always she was the happy wife and mother, and her role reduced her individual absurdities at least to its own.

The door to the bedroom now opened and Mrs. Bett appeared.

"Well, mother!" cried Herbert, the "well" curving like an arm, the "mother" descending like a brisk slap. "Hungry now?"

Mrs. Bett was hungry now. She had emerged intending to pass through the room without speaking and find food in the pantry. By obscure processes her son-in-law's tone inhibited all this.

"No," she said. "I'm not hungry."

Now that she was there, she seemed uncertain what to do. She looked from one to another a bit hopelessly, somehow foiled in her dignity. She brushed at her skirt, the veins of her long, wrinkled hands catching an intenser blue from the dark cloth. She put her hair behind her ears.

"We put a potato in the oven for you," said Ina. She had never learned quite how to treat these periodic refusals of her mother to eat, but she never had ceased to resent them.

"No, thank you," said Mrs. Bett. Evidently she rather enjoyed the situation, creating for herself a spotlight much in the manner of Monona.

"Mother," said Lulu, "let me make you some toast and tea."

Mrs. Bett turned her gentle, bloodless face toward her daughter, and her eyes warmed.

"After a little, maybe," she said. "I think I'll run over to see Grandma Gates now," she added, and went toward the door.

"Tell her," cried Dwight, "tell her she's my best girl."

Grandma Gates was a rheumatic cripple who lived next door, and whenever the Deacons or Mrs. Betts were angry or hurt or wished to escape the house for some reason, they stalked over to Grandma Gates—in lieu of, say, slamming a door. These visits radiated an almost daily friendliness which lifted and tempered the old invalid's lot and life.

Di flashed out at the door again, on some trivial permission.

"A good many of mamma's stitches in that dress to keep clean," Ina called after.

"Early, darling, early!" her father reminded her. A faint regurgitation of his was somehow invested with the paternal.

"What's this?" cried Dwight Herbert Deacon abruptly.

On the clock shelf lay a letter.

"Oh, Dwight!" Ina was all compunction. "It came this morning. I forgot."

"I forgot it too! And I laid it up there." Lulu was eager for her share of the blame.

"Isn't it understood that my mail can't wait like this?"

Dwight's sense of importance was now being fed in gulps.

"I know. I'm awfully sorry," Lulu said, "but you hardly ever get a letter—"

This might have made things worse, but it provided Dwight with a greater importance.

"Of course, pressing matter goes to my office," he admitted it. "Still, my mail should have more careful—"

He read, frowning. He replaced the letter, and they hung upon his motions as he tapped the envelope and regarded them.

"Now!" said he. "What do you think I have to tell you?"

"Something nice," Ina was sure.

"Something surprising," Dwight said portentiously.

"But, Dwight—is it nice?" from his Ina.

"That depends. I like it. So'll Lulu." He leered at her. "It's company."

"Oh, Dwight," said Ina. "Who?"

"From Oregon," he said, toying with his suspense.

"Your brother!" cried Ina. "Is he coming?"

"Yes. Ninian's coming, so he says."

"Ninian!" cried Ina again. She was excited, round-eyed, her moist lips parted. Dwight's brother Ninian. How long was it? Nineteen years. South America, Central America, Mexico, Panama "and all." When was he coming and what was he coming for?

"To see me," said Dwight. "To meet you. Some day next week. He don't know what a charmer Lulu is, or he'd come quicker."

Lulu flushed terribly. Not from the implication. But from the knowledge that she was not a charmer.

The clock struck. The child Monona uttered a cutting shriek. Herbert's eyes flew not only to the child but to his wife. What was this, was their progeny hurt?

"Bedtime," his wife elucidated, and added: "Lulu, will you take her to bed? I'm pretty tired."

Lulu rose and took Monona by the hand, the child hanging back and shaking her straight hair in an unconvincing negative.

As they crossed the room, Dwight Herbert Deacon, strolling about and snapping his fingers, halted and cried out sharply:

"Lulu. One moment!"

He approached her. A finger was extended, his lips were parted, on his forehead was a frown.

"You picked the flower on the plant?" he asked, incredulously.

Lulu made no reply. But the child Monona felt herself lifted and borne to the stairway and the door was shut with violence. On the dark stairway Lulu's arms closed about her in an embrace which left her breathless and squeaking. And yet Lulu was not really fond of the child Monona, either. This was a discharge of emotion akin, say, to slamming the door.

II

May.

Lulu was dusting the parlor. The parlor was rarely used, but every morning it was dusted. By Lulu.

She dusted the black walnut center table which was of Ina's choosing, and looked like Ina, shining, complacent, abundantly curved. The leather rocker, too, looked like Ina, brown, plumply upholstered, tipping back a bit. Really, the davenport looked like Ina, for its chintz pattern seemed to bear a design of lifted eyebrows and arch, reproachful eyes.

Lulu dusted the upright piano, and that was like Dwight—in a perpetual attitude of rearing back, with paws out, playful, but capable, too, of roaring a ready bass.

And the black fireplace—there was Mrs. Bett to the life. Colorless, fireless, and with a dust of ashes.

In the midst of all was Lulu herself reflected in the narrow pier glass, bodiless-looking in her blue gingham gown, but somehow alive—natural.

This pier glass Lulu approached with expectation, not because of herself but because of the photograph on its low marble shelf. A large photograph on a little shelf-easel. A photograph of a man with evident eyes, evident lips, evident cheeks—and each of the six were rounded and convex. You could construct the rest of him. Down there under the glass you could imagine him extending, rounded and convex, with plump hands and curly thumbs and snug clothes. It was Ninian Deacon, Dwight's brother.

Every day since his coming had been announced Lulu, dusting the parlor, had seen the photograph looking at her with its eyes somehow new. Or were her own eyes new? She dusted this photograph with a difference, lifted, dusted, set it back, less as a process than as an experience. As she dusted the mirror and saw his trim semblance over against her own bodiless reflection, she hurried away. But the eyes of the picture followed her, and she liked it.

She dusted the south window sill and saw Bobby Larkin come round the house and go to the woodshed for the lawn mower. She heard the smooth blur of the cutter. Not six times had Bobby traversed the lawn when Lulu saw Di emerge from the house. Di had been caring for her canary and she carried her bird bath and went to the well, and Lulu divined that Di had deliberately disregarded the handy kitchen taps. Lulu dusted the south window and watched, and in her watching was no quality of spying or of criticism. Rather, she looked out on something in which she had never shared, could not by any chance imagine herself sharing.

The south windows were open. Airs of May bore the soft talking.

"Oh, Bobby, will you pump while I hold this?" And again: "Now wait till I rinse." And again: "You needn't be so glum"—the village salutation signifying kindly attention.

Bobby now first spoke: "Who's glum?" he countered, gloomily.

The iron of those days when she had laughed at him was deep within him, and this she now divined, and said absently:

"I used to think you were pretty nice. But I don't like you any more."

"Yes, you used to!" Bobby repeated derisively. "Is that why you made fun of me all the time?"

At this Di colored and tapped her foot on the well-curb. He seemed to have her now, and enjoyed his triumph. But Di looked up at him shyly and looked down. "I had to," she admitted. "They were all teasing me about you."

"They were?" This was a new thought to him. Teasing her about him, were they? He straightened. "Huh!" he said, in magnificent evasion.

"I had to make them stop, so I teased you. I—I never wanted to." Again the upward look.

"Well!" Bobby stared at her. "I never thought it was anything like that."

PROGRAM FOR CREAMERY DAY AUGUST 23

Prospects Good For Wall Lake Park

Efforts Of Sportsmen To Have State Take Over Lake Now Bringing Results.

BOARD TO TAKE IT OVER?

Truman Stevens, chief justice of the supreme court of Iowa, has chosen six men to assess the damages which land owners will sustain by reason of the appropraition of a portion of their land adjoining Wall Lake for a state park. Sheriff Lang has notified these gentleman of their selection and already received an acceptance from all but one or two.

The Iowa Falls Sentinal has the following to say on the subject:

Prospects for the establishment of a state park on the south shore of Wall Lake in the southeastern part of Wright county becomes brighter each day, and local enthusiasts for the proposition believe that the park will be a reality by September 1, if not sooner.

The latest step was taken when the date August 18 was fixed to hear condemnation proceedings. At noon on that day a sheriff's jury will sit and hear all claims from property owners and others interested in the proposition. All claims must be filed on that day, and the jury will determine the amounts due each claimant.

If the claimants are dissatisfied with the findings of the jury they may have the right to appeal, but the executive council will go ahead and tender to the claimants the amount which the jury has awarded.

The sitting of the jury, which will be one of the first of its kind in this section of the state, will be the final step before the park is established. There are many people in this part of Iowa who have been interested in the establishment of a state park at Wall Lake, and the news that proceedings are nearly completed and a park to be established will be a welcome to them.

Neil Garret, assistant attorney general for Iowa, was in Iowa Falls recently nd went to Wall Lake with a number of local enthusiasts to look up the situation in connection with the establishment of the park, and ascertaining who had claims against the state in this matter.

LEGION PICNIC THURSDAY

The Legion Auxiliary entertained the members of the American Legion and their families to a picnic in Tyrrell Park last Thursday, and a royal good time is reported. A large number were present.

BELMOND WOMAN ELECTED VICE PRES. CO. FEDERATION

The County Federation of Woman's clubs was held at Dows on Monday of this week. Some 17 members from the various clubs in Belmond attended, and report a splendid time. Mrs. Rose from Conneticut gave an address. She is connected with the League of Women Voters. Mrs. Davis, of Manson, gave a report of the general federation held at Chautauqua, New York. Officers for the coming year were elected, and include Mrs. H. F. Luick of Belmond as first vice president. Other officers are Mrs. Henry Graepler of Dows, president; Mrs. McEihleny, of Dows, second vice president; Mrs. Smiley of Dows, Secretary; Mrs. Rose Garth of Clarion, treasurer; Grace Allen, of Eagle Grove, parlimentarian.

WRIGHT COUNTY BANKERS' ASSOCIATION ELECTS

The annual picnic and meeting of the Wright County Bankers' Association was held at the Clarmond Country Club house last week, at which time the officers for the ensuing year were chosen. Those elected included W. T. Gfeller of Belmond as vice present, F. B. Sheldon of Rowan as president, Hal E. Smith of Clarion, secretary, and Duane Young, also of Clarion, treasurer.

SUGAR FACTORY MAY USE OIL AS FUEL

Officials of the Iowa Valley Sugar Co. are planning to make such changes as may be necessary in the plant to burn oil as fuel under the immense boilers during the campaign this fall, should the coal shortage continue up to that time. While the present indications point to a settlement of the strike, the officials of the company are not taking any chances on it, and we understand have made arrangements to have the necessary change made in short order if it comes to the point.

While the change from coal to oil would cost quite a sum, yet the saving in using oil as fuel would soon offset the cost of installation of oil burners.

OBITUARY

MRS. ANDREW LARSEN

Lisbet Shillingbury Larson was born March 20, 1854 near Furner, Norway. At the age of 30, she imigrater to America. In 1887 she was united in marriage to Andrew Larson. In the year 1890 she together with her husband settled in Norway township, Wright county, Iowa. Here they resided for twenty-six years. They moved to Belmond in 1918 and have lived here since.

Mrs. Larson had not been well for some time. She was subject to severe attacks of headaches. Her health gradually failed her, but at times she seemed to feel fairly well.

Sunday afternoon August 6, she decided to drive out to her daughter, Mrs. Ziska, who lives on the home place, there to be of some help during the busy season. She was suddenly stricken, lapsed into unconsciousness, from which she never rallied. She passed away Tuesday August 8.

Only one daughter, Sena Josephine, was born to this marriage. She together with two brothers and three sisters and husband are left to mourn the loss of a mother, wife and sister.

Funeral services were conducted at the home Saturday afternoon at 1 p. m. and at the Trinity church at 2:30. Rev. Jensen and Rev. Trelstad officiating at the funeral.

Mrs. Larson reached the age of 68 years, 4 months and 19 days. Her remains were laid to rest in Franklin Grove cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our kind neighbors and friends who so generously assisted us, and for the many acts of kindness during the illness and death of our beloved wife, and mother, Mrs. Larson.

Also for the many beautiful flowers that were sent after her death.

-- Andrew Larson
Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ziska
Hans Skillingberg.

OBITUARY

T. B. WALLACE

Thomas Baxter Wallace was born at Hague, Warren County, New York, July 9th, 1853. When he was one year old his parents moved to Carrol County, Illinois, where he grew to manhood.

In the fall of 1875 he came to Grundy Center, Iowa. and in November of the following year he married Matilda J. Dean, who preceded him in death December 6, 1911. To this union was born three sons, Earl D. of Reinbeck, William J. of Goldfield and Harold of Belmond, who with three grandchildren, Winson, John and Robert are left to mourn his loss. A brother and sister also survive.

He was connected and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1882 and continued an active member of the same.

On August 31, 1921 he was united in marriage to Mrs. Mattie Legge Pitman, of Belmond, Iowa, who also survives him.

He was an active member of the Masonic Lodge, being a District Lecturer and a special representive of the Grand Master of Iowa at the time of his death.

He first joined Emerald Lodge, number 334 of Grundy Center, Iowa, June 14, 1887. On February 9, 1904 he demitted to Fountain City Lodge, number 589 of Goldfield which he helped organize as a charter member.

At his death he was a member of King Solomon, number 210, Belmond, Iowa as well as a member of the Belmond Chapter, number 411 Eastern Star.

He was also Secretary and Treasurer of the State G. A. R. Drum Corps of which he had been a member for several years.—Goldfield Chronicle.

MISS BARRY GIVES RECITAL

Miss Cecilia Barry and some 25 of her pupils in music gave a recital last Friday evening, which was attended by a good audience. The selections given were excellent, displaying much talent in her pupils and showing their training.

CATHOLICS HOLD BIG PICNIC IN TYRRELL PARK

The members of the St. Francis church in Belmond held a picnic Tuesday in the Tyrrell Park, taking dinner and supper. The members of the Catholic church at Goodell were invited, and the congregations of the two churches made a large crowd. Several from Clarion, Kenawha and other surrounding towns were also present. The afternoon was spent in games, stunts, races, and two rousing good ball games, the married men vs. the singles, and the married ladies against the unmarried. A fine time was enjoyed by everyone present.

RECITAL

Miss Gretchen Kubitshek of Eagle Grove held a recital in the library basement on Monday evening. She gave some excellent selections on the violin and violincello. Two piano solos were given by her sister, Miss Pauline. Miss Kubitshek is organizing a class here.

Mrs. Geo. Cutler of Clarion spent the week end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willard Morse.

COUNTY NURSE OFFERED FINE POSITION

Charles City Wants Her To Do Nurse Work In Schools At That Place.

(From the Monitor)

James Mehl, the new supervisor from Norway township, was relating some of his early day experiences in the auditor's office the other day. When he left his native land for the good old U. S. A. he was a lad about seventeen years of age and could not speak a word of our language. However, he was equipped with a fair education for a boy in his own mother tongue. He attended our schools with a view of improving his scholarship, but made slow progress and after a few months gave it up as a bad job. Mr. Mehl next turned his attention to the reading of books on various subjects. He read day and night and applied himself so industriously that the neighbors at one time thought he would lose his mind. Notwithstanding his early disadvantages it can be truthfully said today that he is one of the best posted men in his township.

Adolph Claude and Louis Prosper of Woulstock called at the court house Monday and made application of Clerk Goslin for passports in order to visit their native land of France. They expect to leave for the fatherland in a few weeks.

Miss Kate Liddle on Tuesday declined a tempting offer from Supt. Prall, now at the head of the Charles City schools, to take charge of their health work. The compensation offered was fully as good or even better than she is now receiving. In view of the situation in this county is there not a little food for thought in the above statement when it is known that the population of Charles City is about one-third that of this county?

SOCIALS HELD IN BELMOND AND PLEASANT TOWNSHIPS

Two community socials were held in the vicinity of Belmond during the past few days. On Thursday evening, August 3rd, the regular Belmond Township Farm Bureau social was held on the lawn of the A. C. Hinman home, northwest of Belmond. About 250 farmers of the township, also a great many business men from Belmond were in attendance at this social affair. Music was furnished by the Luick orchestra and everyone seemed pleased with the music by local talent. An interesting program including an address from Rev. Leinbach was given at the social. Rev. Leinbach made an appeal to the boys and girls to remain on the farm and gave many reasons why the farm is a better place for them and gave a number of suggestions of how the farm can be made more attractive for the youngsters. The meeting was closed by community singing after which ice cream and cake were served.

The Frank Barry home, northeast of Belmond, was the scene of a lively community gathering Monday evening, August 7th, when about 300 people from Pleasant township and from the city of Belmond gathered on the Barry lawn for a community social. An interesting program consisting of recitations, dialogues and musical numbers were planned by Virgie Jenison to whom credit should go for the success of the meeting. R. E. Lee Aldrich, of Iowa township gave a very interesting and forceful address. Those who had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Aldrich's splendid address are agreed that he not only knows farm conditions but tht he has made a study of the frm bureau activities as well as other problems of present day interest. Mr. Aldrich is a student of farmers' problems and it should be noted that he is called upon to address farmers in various sections throughout the country.

DOWS TRIMS BELMOND SUNDAY BY 11 TO 3

Walk Away With Game After First Few Innings—Play Again Creamery Day.

The base ball aggregation from Dows came up Sunday as per schedule and trimmed the daylights out of the local nine to the tune of 11 to 3. For a while it was a pretty fair game, Dows scoring in the second inning on a couple of errors and a scratch hit. For three or four innings things were pretty even, but after that the Dows bunch began to move, and they kept moving, scoring five times in one inning, and occasionally after that. Up to the eighth frame Belmond was scoreless which suited Dows fine and every attempt was made to paint us white. But in the eighth, Maurice Dillon pulled a dirty Irish trick by stealing home while the catcher and pitcher were viewing the scenery, and Packard came home later on errors, giving us two. In the ninth one more was added. The Belmond boys were off form, playing a ragged game, with spots of brilliant playing and then some simon pure bone heaeds. "Dub" Harson of Kanawha played third for Belmond, and certainly lived up to his name, altho redeeming himself later by a double play unassisted. Clemons for Dows was a riddle to the local team, who were unable to connect with his offerings to any advantage. Chapman for Belmond pitched a good game but had poor support. The two teams play here Creamery Day, and if it isn't a battle for blood there never will be one.

Sunday's lineup was:
Thomas, catcher.
Chapman, pitcher.
Packard, first.
Jones, second.
Harson, third.
Madsen, short.
Nelson, left.
Foss, center.
Dillon, right.

"THE BOTTOM OF THE COAL BIN IS IN SIGHT"

Mr. Kellogg, Mgr. of the Iowa Falls Electric Co. informs us that the company has just purchased 200 tons of western Kentucky screeings that will cost the company $12.50 per ton F. O. B. the plant. While they have three or four weeks supply of coal on hand they are buying as a safety first measure and are using every effort to make their supply last a few days longer.

Most Iowa companies would save money if they suspended service altogether and waited for prices to come down as many manfactures are doing "But this is a thing that simply is not done, but the public should get this firmly fixed in their mind. THE BOTTOM OF THE COAL BIN IS IN SIGHT and thats all there is because there AIN'T no more.

Some companies have enough to last them into September, but with a large number it is now a question of days not weeks before they will be obliged to suspend operations.

The Utilities of the State have done their share and will continue to do it as long as possible, but the public should remember that it takes coal to make electricity, and the coal is about gone and that they face not only the inconvenience but the suffering which must follow the cessation of electric service.

So let's all take hold and boost.

SOME BALL GAME

The game opened with molasses at the stick and Small Pox catching. Cigar was in the box with plenty of smoke. Horn played first base, with Fiddle on second and backed by Corn and Cabbage in the field, they made it hot for the umpire Apple who was rotten. Axe came to bat and chopped. Cigar let Brick walk. Shoe laced to left for a pair and Sawdust filled the bags. Cigar went out and Balloon started to pitch, but went straight up. Then Cherry tried it, but was wild. Ice kept cool in the game. Cabbage had a good head and kept quiet and Grass covered lots of ground in the fieled. The crowd cheered when Spider caught a fly. Sing made a hit and Wheel beat out a slow roller to first and Drum beat it to third while Twenty scored.

In the fifth Wind began to blow what he could do and Hammer began to knock and Trees began to leave and the way the roasted the Peanut was frightful. Ship hit a liner to left and Adding Machine scored on Crank's short punch. When Whiskey got a pass and the bases were full, Chicken fouled out to Roost and Knife was out cutting first. Ten pins up, but went out by the strike route.

In the ninth Apple told Fiddle to take first base, then Song made a second hit. Trombone made a slide for third and Meat was put out on the plate. Lightening finished pitching and struck out one man. There was lots of betting on the game but Soap cleaned up. The score was 23 to 0 and Door said if he had pitched he would have shut them out.—Swea City Herald.

NAB CHICKEN THIEF GET 50 "BONES" FROM FARM BUREAU

The Humboldt County Farm Bureau directors decided at their last meeting to offer a reward of $50 for the first arrest and conviction of a chicken thief in Humboldt county. That is, the thief must be operating in this county. The Farm Bureau is calling on the dealers in poultry to be especially active in this respect, and scan every questionable batch of birds, for they are in better position than anyone else to detect the thieves.

It is believed that by concerted action the thieves of the county can be wiped out. They are usually neighborhood good-for-nothings, and are the sort of people who anyone would suspect of doing such a thing.

The matter issued by the Farm Bureau Directors is as follows:

"Due to the recent activity of chicken thieves in the county the Board of Directors of the Humboldt County Farm Bureau has passed a resolution providing for the payment of the sum of fifty dollars ($50) to anyone bringing about the arrest and conviction of chicken thieves operating in Humboldt County. Dealers in the county are asked to be especially on the lookout for suspicious parties offering poultry for sale."—Humboldt Republican.

WHAT THE FARMER GETS

Threshing commenced in this community last week, and oats are turning out a bumper crop at most places. The quality is said to be extra good, and the yield is running forty-five to fifty bushels to the acre.

The price, however, is rediculous, and the farmers out to get out on a strike, commit murder, destroy the railroad property and raise the devil in general. The price, twenty-five cents—and less a bushel!

If the farmers would only quit farming, attempt to starve other workers already on strike, and shoot or murder every other man who attempts to farm wouldn't they have just as much moral and legal right to do this as others who are now striking against salaries as high as seventy two cents an hour for an eight hour day, and time and a half for all overtime. The farmer puts in twelve to fifteen hours of hard work every day, and he is, under present conditions, absolutely worker nothing and paying for the priveledge besides.—The Hampton Chronicle.

STRIKERS HOLD BIG DANCE

The railroad men from Clarion and Eagle Grove who are on strike, staged a big dance at the Cornelia pavilion Tuesday night. They furnished their own music and had an immense crowd, some three hundred dance tickets being sold. A fine time with perfect order is reported.

Continuous Round of Amusement

Something Doing Every Minute Of The Day With Plenty Of Good Music.

BIG CROWD IS EXPECTED

The program for Belmond's big celebration of the summer has been completed, and everything indicates now that it is going to be some time, August 23rd. An exceptional amount of good music has been provided for with the Garner uniformed band, and the Luick Orchestra, which play thruout the day. Community singing, led by O. L. Varland, will be one of the features. The committee were unable to secure the Immanual chorus owing to Rev. Waalkes being away on his vacation. Two good addresses, by G. H. Tellier of Cedar Rapids, and W. A. Wentworth of Des Moines, are to be given. Both speakers come highly recommended, and Mr. Wentworth particularly is said to be an exceptional strong man on dairy and kindred products. These addresses will both be well worth hearing.

A full line of sports has been provided, the list of which may be found on page eight of this issue, and contains everything from races to ball game and horse shoe pitching. A splendid free attraction has been secured, for two performances, one in the morning and one in the evening. This is said to be one of the best in the market in its line. A balloon ascension is given by one of the troupe putting on the attraction, this is to be given in the afternoon, after the ball game.

The program starts at 9 in the morning, and with something doing every minute lasts thruout the day and well into the evening. It will be as follows:

Forenoon Program
9:00-9:30—Band concert on street.
9:30-10:00—Band Concert at City Park.

Program In Park
Community Singing, Lead by O. L. Varland.
Music by Luick Orchestra.
Address: Mr. G. H. Tellier, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.
Community singing, O. L. Varland, Leader.
11:00—Horse Shoe pitching contest on Main Street.
DINNER—Band concert during noon hour.

Afternoon Program
1:00—Community Singing, O. L. Varland, Leader.
Address: Mr. W. A. Wentworth, of Des Moines.
Music by Luick Orchestra.
Immediately after program Street sports and Races.
3:00—Ball Game: Dows vs. Belmond, $100.00 Purse.

Band Concert.

"Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag," pack the family in the Lizzie, and come to Belmond, Wednesday August 23rd, for a good time and a big time. Everything is absolutely free, no charge for anything; the town is yours, come and enjoy yourself, meet your friends and see the program provided for your amusement.

JESS GETS BACK ON THE JOB AGAIN

T. H. Broeffle, who has been working the Peter Stacy blacksmith shop, left Monday to work at the sugar company grounds, and Jess Underkofler took charge of the shop and is now conducting the business. Every once in a while Jess gets an idea that he can live without his old time work, but every once in a while he gets over it and goes back again. He is an experienced blacksmith and should give his patrons entire satisfaction.

TRINITY CHURCH NOTES

Mid week services will be held at the church Thursday evening at 8 p. m. The classes meet Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Next Sunday the service will be conducted in the Norwegian lenguage. An offering will be received for the church extension fund. We hope for a good congregation and hope to receive a liberal offering.

Sunday school will be conducted at the usual hour and we desire a good attendance.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

A SUGGESTION

In this week's issue of the Independent, under "Clippings," will be found an item taken from the Lake Mills Graphic, which we would like to have those in charge of Tyrrell Park read. This item says in part: "A log cabin, a relic of the early days when the red men and the buffalo roamed over these hills and valleys now dotted over with farms and villages, has been re-erected in the Fertile park. Not only as convenience to tourists, but as a memorial to the one whose generosity enables the public to enjoy without money and without price one of nature's beauty spots."

The Independent offers this suggestion: Why not a log cabin in Tyrrell Park, not only a convenience to those who use the grounds, but as memorial as well to the one who has so very generously donated this beauty spot to Belmond? The logs to build such a cabin can be easily secured; it would furnish the shelter which every tourist park needs above all else; and in keeping with the natural surroundings would be a fitting token of our appreciation to Capt. W. C. Tyrrell for his gift.

We believe that there are among the old timers, Belmond's early settlers, men who have not forgotten how to build a log cabin, and, who would, we feel certain, to take pride in supervising the erection of one in Tyrrell Park. But very few of the present generation have seen a log cabin; only a few of those residing here have lived in one. To those who have charge of Capt. Tyrrell's gift, to the Community Club and the city officials, we offer a plan of a log cabin, constructed of timber from the park, to harmonize with the natural beauty of this spot so graciously given us, as a shelter to the strangers who may use the grounds and as a memorial to the donor. We have had one of the prettiest parks in Iowa given us; let us make such use of it, and make such improvements as will not interfer with its natural beauty.

Bible Thoughts for This Week

Sunday.

GOD CARES FOR HIS OWN:—And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.—Malachi 3: 17.

Monday.

But in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.—Philippians 2: 3, 4.

Tuesday.

CURSE OR BLESSING, WHICH?—He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him; but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it.—Proverbs 11: 26.

Wednesday.

Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.—Psalm 37: 3, 4.

Thursday.

AN EVIL EYE:—He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.—Proverbs 28: 22.

Friday.

IN HIM WE LIVE:—That they should seek the Lord, . . . For in him we live, and move, and have our being.—Acts 17: 27, 28.

GOD IS MERCIFUL:—Thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness.—Nehemiah 9: 17.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Liquor interests the world over seem to be doing their utmost to discredit prohibition; by straw votes polls, politics and propaganda they are working unceasingly, night and day, to bring back light wines and beers, knowing full well that an inch is as good as a mile, and that if they can accomplish this, gradually but surely stronger liquors will creep into open sale. The fact that the sale of intoxicating liquors has been prohibited by the people themselves does not seem to cut much ice with them; the people, according to the brewers, do not know wat they want, and in every way possible an organized campaign of "education" is going forward.

The signs of the times, plain enough it would seem for anyone to read, show that prohibition is here to stay. There is much ado made that prohibition does not prohibit; that never was there so much drunkeness; that bootleggers flourish as never before; that dope is creating untold havoc among the people who who are denied the solace of light wines and beers. Bunk, pure and simple. Any plain ordinary fool knows that since prohibition went into effect drinking has been cut to practically nothing compared to saloon days; you see one man drunk on bootleg hootch now where formerly you saw a dozen. He who drinks tall-grass whiskey nowadays gets drunk on one drink; the time is remembered when a man could be soaked to the gizzard with booze and still be able to navigate so you wouldn't know it. But the liquor interests point to the present-day drunk as a horrible example of the effects of prohibition, which doesn't prohibit, never will prohibit, and cannot be made to prohibit. They pick out every case of bootlegging brought to justice and loudly proclaim "there! look at tha.! That's what probibition does!"

Sentiment brought out in the various polls made the country over on the liquor question show nothing of the real desires of the whole people. Every man who favors booze will take special pains to "vote," whereas those who do not favor it, and are busy making money which formerly went for booze, pay no attention to such straw votes, knowing that the law is there, working, and letting it go at that. And when such a vote shows a majority in favor of easing up, the brewers stress the fact, publish it thruout the land, and loudly holler about injustice to the hard working laborer.

We do not believe that there is a single state in the Union which, having experienced the effects of prohibition, would vote to return to the old days. We do not believe that one would sanction the sale of beers and wines. Those old soaks who lived on their daily bottle, will secure it now if there is a chance. Let them. But the younger generation, coming up without habit, will be able to exist without it, and future generations will not be cursed by the destruction of their moral fibre thru the "demon rum." No business man—unless it be undertaking, and we doubt if they would—would bring back booze; they know that the money once going to a few brewers now goes to the grocer, the butcher and the merchant.

Prohibition is here to stay; it has proved itself successful, one of the greatest events experienced by any nation, and th sooner the liquor interests read the signs of the times the better off they will be.

CLIPPINGS

Mayor Pritchard and wife and daughter Betty went to Belmond this morning to attend a party at the Clarmond Country Club. This afternoon there will be a session at golf, then a picnic supper and dancing in the evening. Our mayor does not know whether he can play golf or not. He has never tried. He can't dance, but he felt he would get his money's worth at the supper. —Signal.

Mrs. Wallace Ramsay and daughter Ruth came up from Belmond Fri'dy and remained until yesterday visiting the Garner Ramsays. They went to Britt yesterday to visit Mrs. Ramsay's parents.—Signal.

Charley Conrad was exhibiting a sugar beet Tuesday which weighed five pounds. It was taken from W. E. Gourley's field. That same afternoon Charley went out to Oren Goodhart's field and found one that weighed 5½ pounds. Most of the beets are doing well.—Corwith Hustler.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. 'aldridge were visitors with Mr Baldridges' parents at Belmond last Wednesday. They brought home some apples from their orchard which George says is bearing unusually well this year. Many of the trees are so heavy with fruit that it is necessary to prop them up.

—How much do you know? If you see a new building there are certain improvements you could have made had you been the architect or the builder. If the city council pass a new law ordinance you can tear it to shreds and lay bare its glaring inconsistencies; and if the preacher points the road to hell you even know a shorter cut to take. Just how much do you know, anyway?—Hampton Recorder.

A log cabin 12x16 a relic of the early days when the red men and the buffalo roamed over these hills and valleys now dotted with farms and villages, has been erected in the Fertile park. Wm. Rhodes, pioneer citizen and founder of the village of Fertile cut the logs and erected the cabin in the early days and now after long years of service the old cabin is pulled down re-erected, not only as a convenience to tourists but as a memorial to the one whose generousity enables the public to enjoy without money and without price, one of nature's beauty spots. The old landmark even to its furnishings will be as the hardy old pioneer left it even the latch string will always be found hanging outside as of yore. —Lake Mills Graphic.

Income taxes have their good points. Men nowadays don't lie as they used to about how much money they make.

Dr. and Mrs. Paul Barth autoed to Belmond Friday evening where they picked up Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Fitts, and together they went on to Des Moines where they remained over Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Barth of Greene, parents of the Doctor, came to Garner and remained until Dr. and Mrs. returned. Baby Willis Glee Barth was left in their care during the absence of her parents.—Leader.

RADIO

VARIOMETER SET ON A VERTICAL PANEL

Method of Building This Receiver and Setting It Up Explained in Detail.

The radio receiver described here is one using a variometer for the tuning circuit and mounted on a vertical panel, 6 inches by 8 inches, instead of a horizontal base board.

To support the panel in a vertical position a small base board four inches wide by six inches long and 1-2 to 5-8 of an inch thick is screwed to the panel.

The material required for the variometer follows:

One piece of bakelite or stiff cardboard tubing, three inches long and 3 1-4 inches outside diameter. Cost about five cents.

One peice of bakelite or stiff cardboard tubing 1 1-4 inches long and 2 3-4 inches outside diameter. Cost about five cents.

100 feet of No. 26 DCC wire. Cost about 25 cents.

Six inches of 1-4 inch outside diameter brass tubing costing about 25 cents.

Four small blocks of wood as shown in Fig 18.

One panel 6 by 8 by 3-8 inch.

Eight small round-head 1-4 inch long brass wood screws.

One base board 4 by 7 by 1-2 inch.

One standard four-inch diameter dial and knob to take 1-4 inch shaft, costing about $1.50.

Seven binding posts.

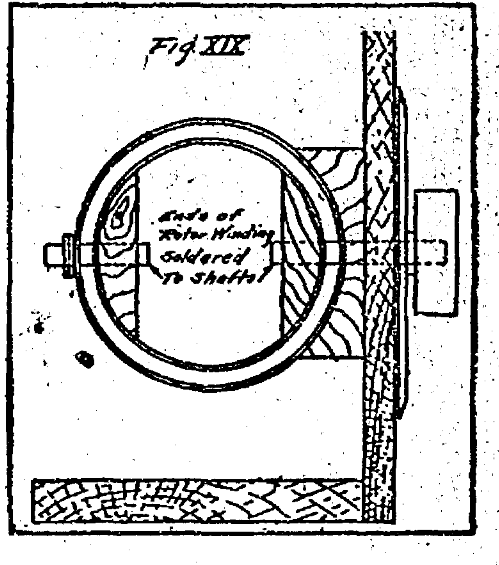
Fig. 18 shows how the details of the variometer are assembled.

The rotor is wound with 40 turns of the No. 26 DCC wire, diveded into two groups of 20 turns, each symmetrical with respect to the center line of the rotor. Start 1-16 of an inch in from the edge of the rotor and wind on 20 turns, then, crossing over on the other side of the center line, wind on 20 more turns, so that the end of the second group of 20 turns will terminate 1-16 of an inch in from the end of the tube. Bring out the end of the rotor winding on the inside of the tube.

Cut two blocks of wood, A and B in Fig. 18, from pieces of 3-inch soft wood and fasten them as shown diametrically opposite each other on the inside of the rotor tube with some small wood screws. Drill two shaft holes, one through each side of the tube over the thick portion of the wooden block. The diameter of this hole should be such that it be a forced fit for the 1-4 inch diameter shaft.

The winding on the stator is similar to that on the rotor. There are 40 total turns divided into the sections of 20 turns each. The beginning and the ending of the stator windings are 15-16 of an inch from the ends of the tube. When the rotor is assembled inside the stator, the winding on the stator should fall just above that on the rotor.

After the rotor and stator are wound, give them a thin coat of shellac and allow it to dry thoroughly before attaching the wooden blocks. Assemble the blocks on the rotor and stator and then give the assembled part a second thin coat of shellac. Put the variometer parts in a hot dry place and allow them to dry until all the volatile matter has been driven off. This will give the windings a hard finish that will not absorb moisture, yet protect them from mechanical injury and hold them in place.



The vertical panel upon which the set is mounted is six inches high and eight inches long by three-eighths of an inch thick. It should be of a clear, close-grained wood that has been well dried to prevent warping. The panel is fastened to the base board, which is four inches by seven inches, by one-half inch thick, by means of the screws.

Before mounting any of the parts, the panel base board should be finished. Staining the panel dull black and shellacking the base board will make a pleasing combination.

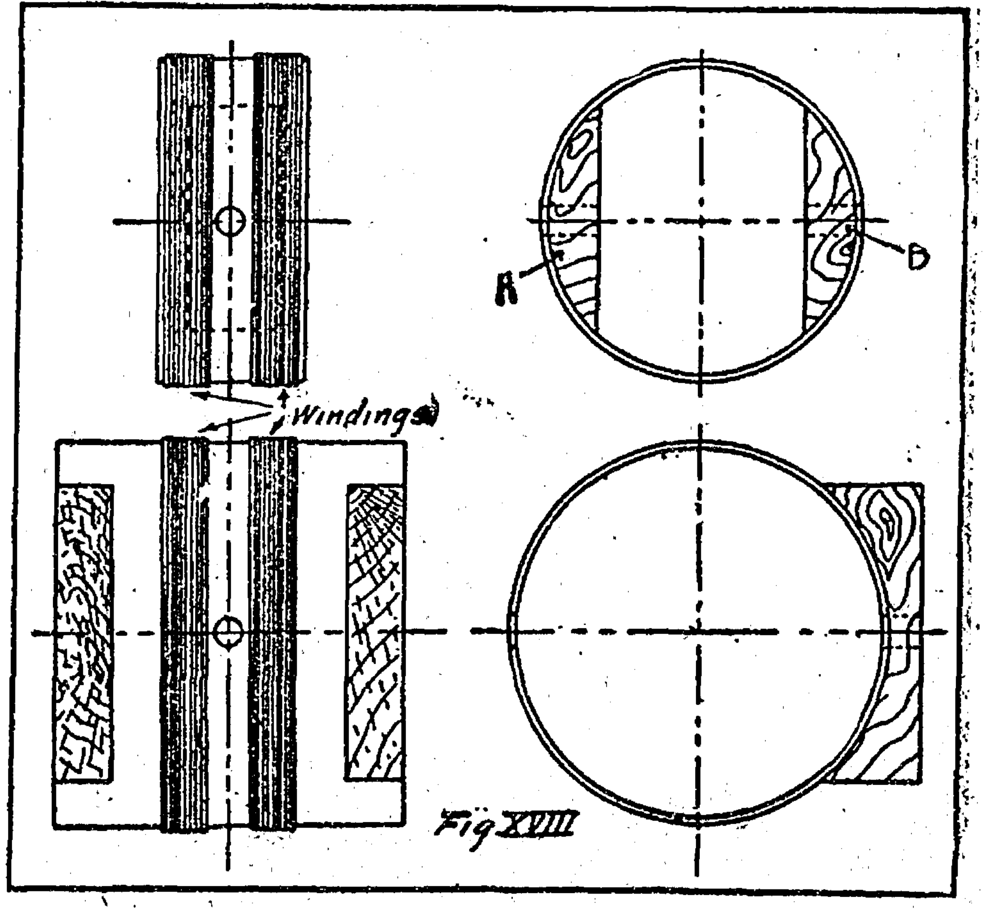


Fig. 19 shows how the variometer is assembled on the panel. The center of the variometer is three and one-quarter inches up from the bottom of the panel and two and three-quarter inches from end. The assembling drawings are all to scale and by referring to them, all the details will be made clear.

Fig. 20 is a plan view of the set, showing the location of the tube socket, grid condenser with grid leak and phone condenser.

A receiver of this type is very simple in operation, since the wave length is entirely controlled by one knob and the detector by the other knob.

SPARKS

The man who uses bedsprings in place of an aerial might at times be accused of "lying down on the job."

The University of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C., is planning to erect and operate a broadcasting station by popular subscription. It is hoped that $12,000 will be raised.

The difference between party-line telephone service in the country and radio service is that all the neighbors are expected to listen in in both cases, but no one objects in the case of the radio.

A magnifying violin, for radio purposes, has been invented by a musical genius. Its use by beginners should be prohibited by law. What the violin beginner needs is a soft pedal of pronounced ability.

To tell of their issues of new bonds and quote prices on regular issues a firm in San Francisco has adopted the radiophone. Besides furnishing the bond news to local investors, the firm in time intends to have a large broadcasting station to keep in touch by wireless telephone with its branch houses, in addition to having the regular telegraph wire.

CRYSTAL SET IS ALL RIGHT

In Its Own Way It Is Quite as Efficient as the Vacuum Tube Outfit.

The small crystal receiving set, which may be likened to "the poor man's set," contrary to reports heard in some quarters, is quite as efficient in its way as the much higher-priced and elaborate vacuum tube outfit. While these sets are usually not guaranteed to receive more than fifteen or twenty-five miles, some amateurs have succeeded in hearing music over a fifty-mile range.

But the most amazing of all is the report which comes from a retailer in New York, who says that he has succeeded in connecting up an amplifier with his set. Despite the handicap of being entirely surrounded by steel skyscrapers, this set is in daily operation.

Radio Warns of Thunderstorms.

Detection of approaching thunderstorms in time to make necessary adjustments in operation of electric service is a valuable practical use of the radio, according to the report of the electrical apparatus committee of the National Electric Light association presented at the convention in Atlantic City. The radio also serves to detect defects in electrical apparatus and equipment more efficiently than any other agency, the report says.

SYNOPSIS

I—APRIL.—General factotum in the house of her sister Ina, wife of Herbert Deacon, in the small town of Warbleton Lulu Bett leads a dull, cramped existence, with which she is constantly at enmity, though apparently satisfied with her lot. She has natural thoughts and aspirations which neither her sister nor her brother-in-law seemingly can comprehend. To Mr. Deacon comes Bobby Larkin, recently graduated high-school youth, secretly enamored of Deacon's elder daughter, Diana, an applicant for a "job" around the Deacon house. He is engaged, his occupation to be to keep the lawn in trim. The family is excited over the news of an approaching visit from Deacon's brother Ninian, whom he had not seen for many years. Deacon jokes with Lulu, with subtle meaning, concerning the coming meeeting.

II—MAY.—Chiefly because of the ripple in her placid, colorless existence which the arrival of Ninian will bring, Lulu is interested and speculative, meanwhile watching with something like envy the boy-and-girl love-making of Bobby and Diana. Unexpectedly, Ninian arrives, in the absence of Herbert, at his business, and of Ina, resting. Thus he becomes acquainted with Lulu first and in a measure understands her position in the house. To Lulu, Ninian is a much-traveled man of the world and even the slight interest which he takes in her is appreciated, because it is something new in her life.

"Of course you didn't." She tossed back her bright hair, met his eyes full. "And you never came where I could tell you. I wanted to tell you."

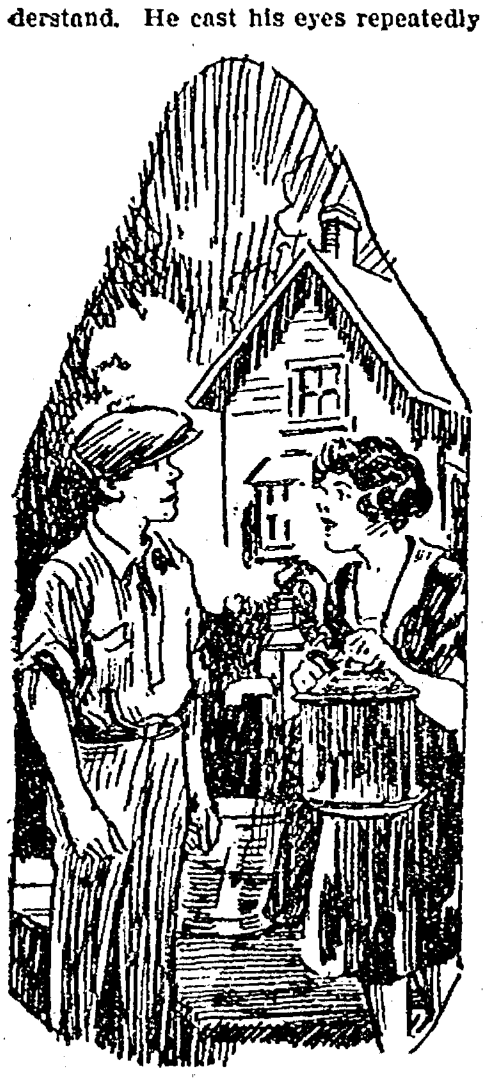
She ran into the house.

Lulu lowered her eyes. It was as if she had witnessed the exercise of some secret gift, had seen a cocoon open or an egg hatch. She was thinking:

"How easy she done it. Got him right over. But how did she do that?"

Dusting the Dwight-like piano, Lulu looked over-shoulder, with a manner of speculation, at the photograph of Ninian.

Bobby mowed and pondered. The magnificent conceit of the male in his understanding of the female character was sufficiently developed to cause him to welcome the improvisation which he had just heard. Perhaps that was the way it had been. Of course that was the way it had been. What a fool he had been not to understand. He cast his eyes repeatedly toward the house. He managed to make the job last over so that he could return in the afternoon. He was not conscious of planning this, but it was in some manner contrived for him by forces of his own with which he seemed to be co-operating without his conscious will. Continually he glanced toward the house.



He Straightened. "Huh!" He Said, in Magnificent Evasion.

These glances Lulu saw. She was a woman of thirty-four and Di and Bobby were eighteen, but Lulu felt for them no adult indulgence. She felt that sweetness of attention which we bestow upon May robins. She felt more.

She cut a fresh cake, filled a plate, called to Di, saying: "Take some out to that Bobby Larkin, why don't you?"

It was Lulu's way of participating. It was her vicarious thrill.

After supper Dwight and Ina took their books and departed to the Chautauqua circle. To these meetings Lulu never went. The reason seemed to be that she never went anywhere.

When they were gone Lulu felt an instant liberation. She turned aimlessly to the garden and dug round things with her finger. And she thought about the brightness of that Chautauqua scene to which Ina and Dwight had gone. Lulu thought about such gatherings in somewhat the way that a futurist receives the subjects of his art—forms not vague, but heightened to intolerable definiteness, acute color, and always motion—motion as an integral part of the desirable. But a factor of all was that Lulu herself was the participant, not the onlooker. The perfection of her dream was not impaired by any longing. She had her dream as a saint her sense of heaven.

"Lulie!" her mother called. "You come out of that damp."

She obeyed, as she had obeyed that voice all her life. But she took one last look down the dim street. She had not known it, but superimposed on her Chautauqua thoughts had been her faint hope that it would be tonight, while she was in the garden alone, that Ninian Deacon would arrive. And she had on her wool chally, her coral beads, her cameo pin. . . .

She went into the lighted dining room. Monona was in bed. Di was not there. Mrs. Bett was in Dwight Herbert's leather chair and she lolled at her ease. It was strange to see this woman, usually so erect and tense, now actually lolling, as if lolling were the positive, the vital, and her ordinary rigidity a negation of her. In some corresponding orgy of leisure and liberation, Lulu sat down with no needle.

"Inie ought to make over her delaine," Mrs. Bett comfortably began. They talked of this, devised a mode, recalled other delaines. "Dear, dear," said Mrs. Bett, "I had on a delaine when I met your father." She described it. Both women talked freely, with animation. They were individuals and alive. To the two pallid beings accessory to the Deacons' presence, Mrs. Bett and her daughter Lulu now bore no relationship. They emerged, had opinions, contradicted, their eyes were bright.

Toward nine o'clock Mrs. Bett announced that she thought she should have a lunch. This was debauchery. She brought in bread and butter, and a dish of cold canned peas. She was committing all the excesses that she knew—offering opinions, laughing, eating. It was to be seen that this woman had an immense store of vitality, perpetually submerged.

When she had eaten she grew sleepy—rather cross at the last and inclined to hold up her sister's excellencies to Lulu; and, at Lulu's defense lifted an ancient weapon.

"What's the use of finding fault with Inie? Where'd you been if she hadn't married?"

Lulu said nothing.

"What say?" Mrs. Bett demanded shrilly. She was enjoying it.

Lulu said no more. After a long time:

"You always was jealous of Inie," said Mrs. Bett, and went to her bed.

As soon as her mother's door had closed, Lulu took the lamp from its bracket, stretching up her long body and her long arms until her skirt lifted to show her really slim and pretty feet. Lulu's feet gave news of some other Lulu, but slightly incarnate. Perhaps, so far, incarnate only in her feet and her long hair.

She took the lamp to the parlor and stood before the photograph of Ninian Deacon, and looked her fill. She did not admire the photograph, but she wanted to look at it. The house was still, there was no possibility of interruption. The occasion became sensation, which she made no effort to quench. She held a rendezvous with she knew not what.

In the early hours of the next afternoon with the sun shining across the threshold, Lulu was paring something at the kitchen table. Mrs. Bett was asleep. ("I don't blame you a bit, mother," Lulu had said, as her mother named the intention.) Ina was asleep. (But Ina always took off the curse by calling it her "si-esta," long i.) Monona was playing with a neighbor's child—you heard their shrill yet lovely laughter as they obeyed the adult law that motion is pleasure. Di was not there.

A man came round the house and stood tying a puppy to the porch post. A long shadow fell through the west doorway, the puppy whined.

"Oh," said this man. "I didn't mean to arrive at the back door, but since I'm here—"

He lifted a suitcase to the porch, entered and filled the kitchen.

"It's Ina, isn't it?" he said.

"I'm her sister," said Lulu, and understood that he was here at last.

"Well, I'm Bert's brother," said Ninian. "So I can come in, can't I?"

He did so, turned round like a dog before his chair and sat down heavily, forcing his fingers through heavy, upspringing brown hair.

"Oh, yes," said Lulu. "I'll call Ina. She's asleep."

"Don't call her, then," said Ninian. "Let's you and I get acquainted."

He said it absently, hardly looking at her.

"I'll get the pup a drink if you can spare me a basin," he added.

Lulu brought the basin and, while he went to the dog, she ran tiptoeing to the dining room china closet and brought a cut-glass tumbler, as heavy, as ungainly as a stone crock. This she filled with milk.

"I thought maybe . . ." said she, and offered it.

"Thank you!" said Ninian, and drained it. "Making pies, as I live," he observed, and brought his chair nearer to the table. "I didn't know Ina had a sister," he went on. "I remember now Bert said he had two of her relatives—"

Lulu flushed and glanced at him pitifully.

"He has," she said. "It's my mother and me. But we do quite a good deal of the work."

"I'll bet you do," said Ninian, and did not perceive that anything had been violated. "What's your name?" he bethought.

She was in an immense and obscure excitement. Her manner was serene, her hands as they went on with the peeling did not tremble; her replies were given with sufficient quiet. But she told him her name as one tells something of another and more remote creature. She felt as one may feel in catastrophe—no sharp understanding, but merely the sense that the thing cannot possibly be happening.

"You folks expect me?" he went on.

"Oh, yes!" she cried, almost with vehemence. "Why, we've looked for you every day."

"'See," he said, "how long have they been married?"

Lulu flushed as she answered: "Fifteen years."

"And a year before that the first one died—and two years they were married," he computed. "I never met that one. Then it's close to twenty years since Bert and I have seen each other."

"How awful!" Lulu said, and flushed again.

"Why?"

"To be that long away from your folks."

Suddenly she found herself facing this honestly, as if the immensity of her present experience were clarifying her understanding: Would it be so awful to be away from Bert and Monona and Di—yes, and Ina, for twenty years?

"You think that?" he laughed. "A man don't know what he's like till he's roamed around on his own." He liked the sound of it. "Roamed around on his own," he repeated, and laughed again. "Course a woman don't know that."

"Why don't she?" asked Lulu. She balanced a pie on her hand and carved the crust. She was stupefied to hear her own question. "Why don't she?"

"Maybe she does. Do you?"

"Yes," said Lulu.

Farm Bureau Picnic at Dows

A joint farm bureau picnic will be put on by Blaine and Vernon townships in Wright county and Morgan and Oakland townships of Franklin county next Thursday, August 17th at the Community picnic park north of Dows.

Lieut. Gov. John Hammill, from Britt, will be the speaker of the da. Mr. Hammill comes from one of the best counties in the cornbelt and every farmer who is interested in agricultural legislation and in farm problems in general should not miss the opportunity of hearing the second man of our great state of Iowa.

In addition to the address by Mr. Hammill there will be a good lively program filed with baseball, horseshoe pitching, and sports of all kinds and of course ham sandwiches and "hot dawgs" will be included in the line-up for the occasion. Arrangements have been made for plenty of good music and we are informed by the program committee that things will be kept moving and that there will be something doing all the time. This is an annual affair of the people of Dows and surrounding community and if we are to judge by past experience there will be a lively time and a big crowd at the Dows community picnic at the Dows Picnic Park on Thursday, August 17th.

Creamery Day Picnic

The Farmers' Cooperative Creamery of Belmond is planning a celebration for Wednesday, August 23. The committe is planning a big day filled with music, sports and lots of fun. W. A. Wentworth, secretary of the Iowa Creamery and manager of the association at Des Moines will be the main speaker of the occasion. G. A. Tellier from Cedar Rapids will also speak in the interests of dairying.

Music will be furnished by the Garner band and there will be a good lively ball game between Dows and Belmond. A day filled with music, sports and a good lively time for everyone is in store for those who can plan to attend this celebration.

Poultry Culling Progressing

Joseph M. Kennedy, the commecial poultry culler who was secured through the poultry department at Ames is very busy this week in culling flocks in Wright county. According to Mr. Kennedy from twenty-five to thirty per cent of the biddies are being thrown out as slackers or non-producers. This means twenty-five per cent of the star boarders in the poultry flocks are being marketed with the result that the farmers' poultry feeding bill will be reduced twenty-five per cent this fall and winter.

Mr. Kennedy is an experienced poultry culler and is giving very satisfactory service to the farmers of Wright county not only in the poultry culling work but also in giving valueable suggestions along the lines of feeding, breeding, care and management, of poultry. Now that the threshing season is nearly over there may be others who wish their flocks culled. The commercial culler wil be able to handle a few flocks yet and those wishing the commercial culling work should make applicatian to the county agent at once.

Judge Livestock at Ames

Several Wright county boys in company with the county agent drove to Ames early last Saturday for the purpose of judging livestock in competition with boys from all parts of Iowa in the livestock pavilion at the college.

The animal husbandry department, of the college under the direction of Prof. Kildee, had arranged classes in beef cattle, hogs, horses, sheep and dairy cattle so that the boys had the experience of handling some of the best livestock at the college. The Wright county boys worked in competion with judging teeams from many other counties throughout the state and some keen competition developed during the contest.

An interesting feature of this trip was the manner in which the boys camped out for the night in Ames. A tent was pitched and the boys report that they bunked for the night on the ground rolled up in woolen blankets. They spent Sunday in looking around the campus and buildings at the college and looking over the experiment plots at the experiment station. The boys who made the Ames trip are as follows: John Bell, Clyde Mechem, Ross Mechem, Everett Woodley, Clarence Clark, Everett Denby, Max Miller.

Farm Bureau Bay at State Fair

Gov. J. A. O. Preus of Minnesota has been secured to deliver the principal address on Farm Bureau Day, Monday, August 28, at the State Fair. The governor is an active and enthusiastic supporter who seems to sense the Big Idea of it, and who appreciates its possibilities for good in the years to come. During his term of office he has been favorable to legislation in the interests of agriculture, and at the present time is a member of the special committee representing the twelve middle west farm bureau federations that are working to eradicate the "poison barbery." The governor is an able and interesting speaker, and will come to the meeting with a stirring message for Iowa farm bureau members.

Still another speaker of wide reputation secured for the day is Mrs. Vera Busick Schuttler of Missouri. Mrs. Schuttler has made a special study of the Farm Bureau movement with reference to its influence upon the lives of farm women and children. She knows the farm and its problems, social, education and econornic, from personal experience, and her address will deal with the questions that have puzzled farm workers and handicapped the farming industry since the beginning of time.

There will be short talks and addresses by various local speakers, interspersed with plenty of music, both vocal and band. The day will be full and busy, with sessions both forenoon and afternoon. The meeting will be staged in the big tent pitched in the same place it occupied last year, convenient to the Federation headquarters, to the camp grounds and other points of interest. Remember day and date, Monday, August 28th.

Woolstock Holds Lively Meeting

Farmers of Woolstock township met at the farm home of Matt Adams for their regular monthly meeting farm bureau social last Friday evening, August 11th. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 300 farmers, their wives and children turned out to enjoy this community entertainment.

People of the Woolstock community seem to have caught the spirit of mixing with one another at regular intervals. The rush of the threshing season does not seem to prevent these good people from holding their monthly social affairs. Woolstock is one of the townships of the county which holds regular monthly meetings in the farm bureau organization.

The program committee should be congratulated upon the interesting program which was given and it should be noted that all recitations, dialogues and several musical numbers were enjoyed by all. A short talk was given, by the county agent, in which he outlined the work as it is being carried on throughout the county.

Miss Blanche Bock, county superintendent of schools, gave a short address on the condition of the schools throughout the county. Miss Bock spoke of the standard which should be expected of the teachers and particularly of the cooperation which should exist at all times between the pupils and parents. She emphasized the necessity of physical health and reminded her hearers of the need of improvement of the lighting, heating and ventilating systems of a great number of the schools.

Miss Kate Liddle, the county Red Cross health nurse gave a most interesting address and expressed the hope that the work would be continued in the county. Miss Liddle gave a brief review of the work in the county and gave convincing facts and figures showing the importance of the work.

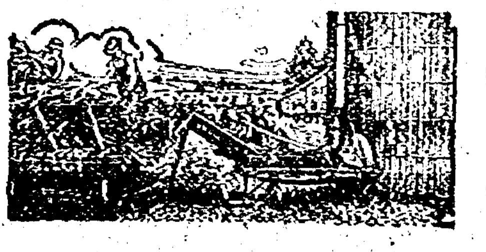
A WINTER FEED WITH A SUMMER TASTE

Butterfat and live stock prices are higher, and this fact is going to make the use of ensilage for winter feeding more desirable than ever. Besides giving the herd in the winter time a feed with the summer time taste, ensilage is highly nutritious and is an important part of a balanced ration. But just becuse it's good to feed ensilage, don't overlook the need of economy in making it. Use the dependable McCORMICK-DEERING (International) ensilage cutter. They are simple and compact, made of steel thruout. McCORMICK-DEERING ensilage cutters are safe running at any speed, require less power for large capacities and therefore are economical. Prices are a good deal lower than last year.



The key to happiness is in your own heart. Make use of it.

The man who doubts the honesty of mankind in general is usually pretty well acquainted with himself.

TIMELY REMINDERS

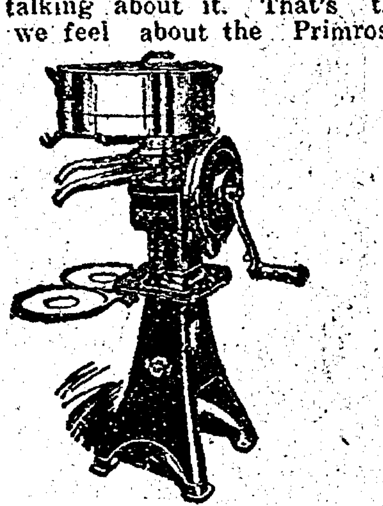
Fall—just a few weeks distant!
Weather due—fine for fall work.
You will need—
Perhaps a Titan 10-20 Kerosene tractor.
A power lift 3-bottom P&O tractor plow.
To go with it.
And maybe a Leverless Disk harrow.
Or possibly.
A McCormick or Deering Husker and Shredder.
An International Ensilage Cutter.
Or any one of a large number of High Quality, service-proved implements.
That we sell.
Come in and see us.
And our fall line of farm equipment.

INCREASE YOUR CROPS

When you hear of an exceptionally good crop in your neighborhood, you can depend on it that the farmer who had the good crop, first of all looked after the fertility of the soil on which it was raised. Fertility is the first chapter of the story—always. Farmers that raise good crops invariably own good manure spreaders. The two go together hand in hand. You cannot afford this year to pass up an opportunity to save all the manure and use its fertility in making your farm more productive. An International roller bearing manure spreader will help you produce bigger crops with less man power. See us about the International and new low prices at your first opportunity.

A Continued Story.

We just can't help telling you a little about the Primrose cream separator each week. You know how it is—when you are thoroly convinced that something is RIGHT, you can't help talking about it. That's the way we feel about the Primrose.



Every part of it is made of high-grade materials insuring long life and years of useful service. The Primrose gets ALL the cream, and it is easy to keep clean. When you buy a separator there are so many reasons why it should be a Primrose that it will be well worth your while to find out all about it. Talk it over with us the next time you're in town.

RAILROADS MAKE BIG PROFITS IN 1921

(BY ROBERT FULLER)

The railroads of the United States must be curbed quickley.

They must be forced to stop manipulations of facts and abandon propaganda policies which have been brazenly practiced for the last four years.

The ruthless policies of the railroads are tying this nation into economic knots so fast that within a few weeks they will bring agriculture, industry and business of all kinds to a dead stop.

Agriculture is in a most serious situation right now. Even though drastic methods were immediately employed there will be a loss suffered by the farmers in trying to movo the twelve billion dollar crops now into the harvest.

Traffic Manager C. B. Hutchings of the Traffis Dept., of the American Farm Bureau Federation, after investigation early in June, and before the strike went into effect, estimated a heavy car shortage this fall.

The American Railroad Association stated that on June 15 there were 332,681 cars needing repairs, 268,305 of which required heavy repairs. Since then the strike has paralyzed construction and repaurs of all kind. The association also stated that the percentage of cars in bad order on June 1 was 15 per cent. These same figures compared with those of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that there was a big backward movement of repairs of freight equipment from April to June. T his, too, in the face of the fact that the railroads knew from Department of Agriculture reports that the biggest crops of years would have to be marketed this fall.

This policy of neglect of vital rolling stock bv the railroads is only in line with the financial camouflage shoved down the public's throat by as clever a bunch of artists as ever drew press-agents' salaries.

In other words all the "hard-time" railroad talk we have heard was cooked up in a great propaganda department and served at breakfast, dinner and supper for the last four years—in fact ever since the government turned the roads back to the private owners after the war.

The result of this is, that nine persons out of ten in the United States today believe that the railroads are in a terrible plight; that their operating expenses are enormous—that freight rates ought to be raised if they are to make repairs etc., etc., etc.

It isn't true!

The figures as quoted in the accompanying box show profits of the leading railroads for 1921. These are their own figures as quoted by gentlemen on Wall Street who are they claim real bargain prices. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe has a few gold bonds ready for absorption. The road operates 11,700 miles of road. In the year 1921 it cleaned up a profit of $39,931,662. Poor little thing!

The New York Central, in the same year, made a clean profit of $22,295,686.

The Northern Pacfic got away with a profit of $22,065,339.

No wonder freight rates ought to be raised.

Of course, when we get into intricate railroad bookkeeping we assume is can be shown that black is white after the manner of proving the cat had ten tails, but, stripped of all befuddling and specious argument, the figures as quoted seem to be the outstanding facts told briefly.

The situation right now is so serious that farmers in many states cannot get coal to thresh wheat—wheat which after threshing, will have to be piled on the ground, because elevators and granaries are packed full waiting—waiting—waiting for cars.

Write to your congressman and senator. Let this government know that the railroads can no longer exploit this nation while they drive on for increased profits—blood money. The very life of our principal industry, Agriculture, is at stake.—News.

Here Are Profits Of Railroads in 1921

A. T. & S. F.	$39,331,662
Atlantic Coast Line	$1,790,569
New York Cent.	$22,295,686

HAWKEYE FARMERS SPEND BIG SUMS FOR DAIRY COWS

Twenty-five counties in Iowa spent $290,700.00 outside the state for dairy cattle last year, according to reports in answer to a questionaire recently sent out by the Iowa State Dairy association. This does not take into account the many other counties of Iowa, which purchased a few or many head. Wisconsin reports that Iowa was the second largest purchaser from that state during the past seven months, in which 30,000 head of dairy cattle were sold to other states.

Authorities believe that at least a quarter of a million dollars of Iowa money from only 25 counties was spent in Wisconsin for dairy cattle during the past year. If Iowa nad been able to secure these dairy cattle within the state instead of investing outside, it would have meant that Iowa farmers would have been over $500,000 ahead, financially.

Wisconsin authorities give figures which indicate that $4,000,000 of $5,000,000 worth of dairy cattle will be sold out of that state this year.

These figures indicate that Iowa is going into the dairy business strong and that a source of dairy cattle to supply the demand needs to be developed in the state. The correct type dairy cattle will be demonstrated at the Dairy Cattle Congress, Waterloo, Sept. 25, to Oct. 1, and at the National Dairy Show, St. Paul, Minn., October 7 to 14.

Managers of these two nation-wide shows report unusual interest this year and that prospects are for the greatest shows on record.

Grade cows from the cow test associations will be a feature of the dairy cattle shows this year and it is expected that this will create a good deal of interest among the ordinary dairymen and grade herds.

Both of these shows are planning unusual educational features this year in addition to the regular showing of dairy cattle. Club exhibits and club demonstrations will be among the features. The most up-to-date production and manufacturing equipment will be on exhibit. The show managers plan to have some educational feature which will touch every phrase of successful dairying. It is stated that the opportunities of seeing the dairy cattle alone—and the reputed best type of each breed in the country will be shown—is equivalent to a trip through more than a dozen states to see these same herds.

LET CONTRACTS TO GRADE AND GRAVEL WILSON HIGHWAY

Garner Signal: Hancock County is to have several miles more of good roads. Yesterday the Board of Supervisors let the contracts for grading the road from Garner to Klemme and to gravel the road from Klemme to the south line of the county and the road from the North Iowa Pike to the Rock Island tracks a mile south of Forest City.

The contract for grading the road from Garner to Klemme goes to Wisely & Son who have recently graded the road from Klemme to the south line of the county, and the price for this grading is 19½ cents a yard. They will begin right away and will finish the job by October 1st.

The graveling of the Wilson Highway from the North Iowa Pike to the Rock Island tracks a mile south of Forest City goes to Geo. E. Sargent of Hampton at 43 cents a yard. Work is to begin not later than September 20 and be finished by November 15th.

The contract on the graveling from Klemme to the south line of the county goes to Hill & Boyle of Everly at 39 cents a yard. Work on this section is to begin not later than August 15th and be finished October 15.

The gravel contracts call for 1700 yard of gravel to a mile, which is dumped at the side of the road and spread with a grader over a smooth surface, the contractor agreeing to keep the surface smooth. If the gravel is not smooth when finished, the contractor must harrow the gravel and re-level it. The grades are 28 feet wide.

The gravel which was put on the Miller road two years ago was at the rate of 900 yards to the mile, so that you can estimate how much better road the new ones should be that are built under State Highway Commission regulations.

Bruce Orr was low bidder on both gravel sections, but his bid would not require the begining the work until November, and this was too late, as the board saw it.

ARREST MEN FOR FIRING EAGLE HOME

News: Four Eagle Grove men got drunk on moonshine liquor Monday night and after firing a residence occupied by Frank Fisher, who is employed firing a stationary boiler at the Northwestern roundhouse, they were rounded up by the United States marshal force at Eagle Grove and taken to Fort Dodge to answer to the charge of attempted arson and violation of the federal injunction.

The four men are said to be Jules Puls, Art Ziehler, Joe Cauley, and Will Swenson. It is known they were drunk at the time. They went out and made an atterpt to fire the house, but were frightened away, it is alleged. Later, on returning for a second attempt, they ran into an attack by Fisher, who had armed himself with a shotgun. One of the men was wounded in the leg, several buckshot penetrating the flesh. His wounds are not bad.

After the facts became known, union leaders at Eagle Grove disavowed any knowledge of the act, and strongly condemned it. They feel that it brings the union membership into disfavor and while the work was that of individuals, they feel men anxious to bring reproach upon the union will not be fair enough to sift the real facts.

It created no little excitement in Eagle Grove Monday night and Tuesday, and union men generally voiced their disapproval of such action.

The damage to the residence occupied by Mr. Fisher was negligible.

The Early Bird

Every Sunday afternoon Robert's mother would take him on her lap and show him pictures in his Bible for little folks, at the same time explaining them to him.

One Sunday the pictures happened to be martyrs thrown to the lions.

She explained very solemnly to him the picture, trying to make him feel what a terrible thing it was.

Robert was very still, then all of a sudden exclamed, "Mama, oh, mama! just look at that poor little lion way behind there, he won't get any."

Very Bad Indeed

The Charwoman's Husband (at door)—The missis is very ill, ma'am and won't be able to come this week.

Lady—Oh, I am sorry, George. Nothing very serious, I hope?

The Charwoman's Husband—Well, ma'am she was so bad last night I 'd to go to the pictures by myself.

USE THE BIG STICK MR. PRESIDENT

It is possible, Mr. President, that you ought not to have interposed the power and dignity of your office in an effort to bring the railroad shop strike to an end. We do not think so. We think you were right. We think Rosevelt was right when he intervened in the coal strike. We know he was right when once having intervened he made his intervention stick. He made it stick with a stick:

That is now the point. You took what we think is the wisely chosen road. The country cannot go into winter with railroad equipment falling to pieces ana with coal unmined in the ground. The conflicting interests may be willing to fight it out if it takes all winter, but the American people cannot starve and freeze while a decision is being reached.

We think you did right. Right or wrong, you have committed yourself, and the President of the United States cannot allow 265 railroad executives to say that he does not know what he is talking about and to executives to make the declaration significant by voting against it because it is worded too politely.

Undoubtedly you submitted your proposal to your counselors in the cabinet—to such men as Davis, Hoover, Weeks, etc. Your cabinet is supposed to be a level headed company of men, mot radical and not tory. These men agreed with you that you were taking the right course to protect public interests. The railroad executives disagree with you. They should be made to agree.

They can be. They are much easier to handle than the workers. The workers have submitted. They have submitted on every issue which caused the strike. There is only the issue of seniority, which is a result of the strike and not a cause of it.

If you had to put regulars along the tracks, in the yards and in the shops to keep the trains moving it would be an unfortunate necessity. You do not need to send companies into the executive offices of the railroads to keep the trains moving. All you need to do is to tell these gentlemen that they are in conflict with the White Huse and that in such conflicts the White House wins.

It is a test of adminstration, Mr. President, and one which determines the fate of administrations. You have made a considered proposal to these railroads executives and they virtually have asked you to confine yourself to the question of marines in Nicaragua and Haiti and of American cable rights in Yap.

You are not an unlimited monarch, but there is one thing the average good natured American citizen does not like to hear, and that is any group of people telling the president of the United States to go to the devil when he plainly is trying to protect them. What they like to see, then, is the big stick falling on the sconces of the group.

The moral is as big and plain as the side of a barn. Swing the big stick, Mr. President, and then cars will run as they should and coal will be mined as it is needed.—Chicago Tribune.

The foreman came around just after Mike had dropped a stick of dynamite and departed for parts unknown.

"Where is Mike?" he asked.

"Mike's gone away," answered Pat.

"When will he be back?"

"Well," said Pat dubiously, "if he comes back as fast as he went he will be back day before yesterday."

New One On Conductor

"I want to be procrastinated at de nex' corner," said the negro passenger to the tramcar conductor

"You want to be what?" demanded the conductor.

Don't lose your temper. I had to look in de dictionary myself befo' I found out dat 'procrastinato' means 'put off."

Don't run away to get married. It deprives your friends of an opportunity to see how scared you are.

Cave Man Stuff

BACK near the beginning of things, our prehistoric forbears would have perished from the earth if they had not understood the science of reading advertising.

The cave men didn't know much about underwear, hair tonic or phonographs, but they did have to eat. The one who could follow the track of the game he hunted, or read the meaning of a twisted leaf or broken twig, was best off in life.

Then, as now, the most consistent reader of advertising was best dressed, best fed and most contented. There has been something of an evolution in advertising in the last few thousands of years, but the principle is just the same.

The consistent reader of the advertisements is invariably best informed on what to eat and where to get it; what to wear and how much to pay for it. He's up on the most important things in life.

Throughout the ages, advertising has done much to make life livable and pleasant. We owe it much.

Let's make the most of it.

THIEVES TAKE TWO CARS FROM GENEVA FIRM

Hampton Chronicle: Thieves broke into the implement shop of Thomas Brothers at Geneva last Sunday night and got away with about 25 automobile tires, of various sizes. They also entered the office of the Luke elevator at Geneva and took his shot gun and a case of shells which had been left in the office. The money drawer was investigated by the thieves, but as it contained only a few personal checks they left them behind.

It is supposed that the same gang of thieves took the Ford car which was stolen from the home of Guy Morgan, at Geneva, the same night. The car was found the next morning, a half mile east of Geneva, stalled at the side of the road. It was evident that the culprits thought they had run out of gasolene and they drained the gas tank of the Ford car at the Jones farm home nearby. However, they could not make the Morgan car move, so it was abandoned.

Fred Beasley, also a resident of Geneva, had a Ford car stolen last Sunday night, and it was found the next morning near Parkersburg. No extra tires were found in this car, or in the Morgan car, which was found east of Geneva. It may be that there were two sets of thieves, and that the ones who took the tires were not the parties who took the two Ford cars. Tires have been stolen from Geneva concerns on several occassions and at no time has any trace of the robber sbeen found. No clue has been found of the Sunday night thieves either.

STAR THEATRE
WED. AUGUST,16
MADGE KENEDY
IN
"THE HIGHEST BIDDER".

A novel plot which sparkles with good humor.

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
"O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED"

A photoplay that is as full of action as an egg is full of meat, is William S. Hart's latest Paramount picture, "O'Malley of the Mounted," which will be shown at the Star theatre next Friday and Saturday. From the opening scenes in Canada when O'Malley is ordered to "get" a man wanted for murder, until the final fade out when he resigns his commission rather than arrest the man whose sister he loves, there is not an instants drag.

O'Malley has many adventures while on his quest—adventures that stir the blood and quicken the heart action. Of course, the customary Hart battle againsts odds is a feature and it is safe to say that a better fight never was waged. The story was written by Mr. Hart and his support headed by Eva Novak who supported him in "The Testing Block" is quite adequate.

Mrs. Ed. Miller nd daughter, Blanche, of Clarion were visiting at the home of her daughters, Mrs. Harold Gates and Mrs. Guy Stumph Thursday. Bernard Stumph, who has been staying with them since his accident came over with them.

A fine eight pound baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Mertell Myers last Wednesday. The little miss has been named Ella Jean. Mother and baby are doing fine.

IOWA STATE FAIR FOUR MILLION AFFAIR

Iowa's four million dollar State Fair and Exposition opens in just a week.

Experts forcast one of the largest crowds in its sixty eight years of existance as the state's big annual outing.

August 25 will be the first day of the fair, with auto races, aviation thrillers, the opening of live stock judging in the boys and girls classes and the general evening program starting.

Entries this year have surpassed all previous marks, Secretary Corey announced. Swine and cattle particularly will present the most complete array of exhibits in the history of the mid-west. Over 7,000 head of live stock are booked for showing, exclusive of poultry and pete stock departments.

A general call has been issued to authorities in all counties of the state to get roads in condition for the unusually heavy auto traffic which is anticipated. Over 40,000 automobiles are expected to come to the fair this year, bringing tens of thousands from all parts of the state.

With admission reduced to 50 cents and with railroads making the unusual concession of fare and one third for round trip, the fair management is advertising that an outing at Iowa's big exposition this year will be the most economical and at the same time the most enjoyable to be had anywhere in the country. The fair dates are August 23 to September 1.

A Ruling Passion

"Why in the world did she marry him? He has lost one leg, his hair is gone, one eye is out and he hasn't any teeth."

"He was her final, grand success. That woman has always had a passion for remnants."

The shadows of life are never so thick but what the sun is trying to break through. Help it along.

They left that night for a short wedding trip. The bride is a daugter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brooks, prominent farmers living south of town. Mr. Amblie being a son of Mr. and Mrs. P. N. Amblie of Belmond. Both young people have many friends, with whom the Independent joins, who extend their best wishes and congratulations.

OBITUARY

MRS. FRED RUITER

The home of Fred Ruiter was dealt a severe blow, and sustained a great loss when the grim Reaper entered and chose the wife and mother of that home. About five weeks ago the 14th child was born but weakness and the absence of proper care, hastened the end which came, after intense pain and much suffering, on the 13th of this month.

The deceased was born on the 21st of April, 1879, in Stoppelmor, Eastfriesland, Germany. While still a maiden she came, in company with her mother and three sisters to this country and settled in this vicinity. The 29th of October, 1898, she was joined in the bonds of holy wedlock with Fred Ruiter. This union was blessed with 14 children, 13 of whom survive the mother. The youngest of these children is 5 weeks and the oldest is 21. How indispensible the mother of such a family. Yet Death, the result of sin coming into the world, chooses whom he will. Blessed for time and eternity the man or woman when the final summons come to lay off this mortal coil can say; "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Besides the sorrowing father and the motherless children there remain to mourn the deceased, her mother and stepfather, three sisters as well as many other relatives and friends. She reached the age of 43 years, 3 months and 23 days. A brief span of life was hers, full of home duties, cares and worries, and anxieties. May her rest from all these be doubly sweet, for her confession was that Jesus had died for her sins.

Last Wednesday afternoon the remains were laid to rest in the Immanual cemetery, Rev. Waalkes officiating. The family desires to express thru the columns of this paper their heartfelt gratitude for the many and varied expressions of sympathy and assistance in the hour of their deep sorrow, and during the weeks of sickness.

GOODELL NEWS ITEMS

Carl Sandberg accompanied his brother-in-law, Earl Jenison, to the fair at Mason City last week.

John Hughes and family of Garner were calling on Goodell friends on Sunday.

Miss Louisa Ahrenkeil spent a few days visiting her uncle, Wm. Nelson of Belmond, last week.

Phillip and Donald Goldberg are visiting Goodell friends this week.

S. C. Pollock of Garner will addres the people of Goodell at the U. B. church at the morning service on Sept. 3. Mr. Pollock is the county Sunday school association president and will have a message that will be inspiring. Come out and hear him.

Andrew Anderson made a business trip to Chicago on Saturday.

Wm. Langlitz and Wm. Rhoads visited at Frank Clarks' on Sunday.

N. Paul and family visited his brother-in-law, George Zeilie, Sunday.

Master Morris Zeille is very sick with bronchitis.

Last Friday Harvey Hubbard and Mrs. Wm. Heginger drove to Hampton and brought their mother and Mrs. Frank Clark home.

On Friday Wm. Cunningham was taken to Hampton to be treated for a very severe case of blood poisoning. The poisoning developed from a tooth that was extracted some time ago. The latest report is that he is getting along nicely.

Martin Grover arrived August 14 to look after his farming interests.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Carpenter visited friends and relatives at Trair last week.

The following families attended the fair at Mason City last week: Walt Mason, Wick Robbins, William Rhoads, and Fred Bachman.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Cook attended the fair on Tuesday.

Thursday evening Miss Ina May Burgess had the misfortune to fall out of a swing and break her collar bone. Dr. Snearly was called and set the broken bonee.

Farmer Cordes and Ray Christie finished threshing on Aug. 15. This completes the threshing in this section except that which is stacked. Oats have made a fair yield and are of good quality.

Most of the farmers are now busy getting their fall plowing done.

The people of Goodell are now enjoying the noise of the large trucks hauling gravel on the Wilson highway. It will cost nearly $2,000 a mile to gravel the road. This section of the highway will be a fine piece of road.

Over 100 attended the United Brethern Sunday school picnic at West Lake last Wednesday. The boys and adults enjoyed the fine swimming and at noon a bountiful dinner was served. Then followed base ball, horse shoe pitching and swimming. Next on the program was eating ice cream cones. From reports all enjoyed the day.

Last Friday Finis Letch and wife, his wife's father and mother and brother-in-law, came to spend a few days at the parental home.

Mr. and Mrs. Okrueg and family are enjoying a visit from relatives in Wisconsin.

BELMOND AGAIN TRIMS CORNELIA TEAM

Pretty Fair Game Results In 6 To 2 Victory For The Local Bunch

The Cornelia Boosters, once defeated, acquired the idea that they could trim the Belmond team, if only given another chance, and Sunday came to town to prove it. They came very near it, only missing by four runs, the result of the fray being 6 to 2 in favor of Belmond. Cornelia secured Green of Clarion to do the heavy act, but his slants had nothing whatever on them, not even hopes, and the boys nicked them for nine safe swats. Saving Chapman for Creamery Day, Clark of Goodell was on the mound for Belmond, and while he never threw more than three curves of any size in the whole game Cornelia could only gather five safeties off his delivery. Belmond scored two in the fourth, one in the sixth, and three in the fatal seventh, Cornelia getting one each in the sixth and eighth. Some mighty good playing was exhibited, and some that had the reverse English altogether. As a whole, it wasn't a bad game, but not anywhere near up to what the boys are capable of. The lineup was:

Thomas, c.
Clark, p.
Packard, 1b.
Chapman, 2nd.
Nelson, 3b.
Madsen, ss.
Dillon, lf.
Foss, cf.
Fulton, rf.

THIEF TAKES MATT BARRY'S CAR TUESDAY

Takes Car While Barry Is At Show—$50 Reward Offered For Return.

Some thief with an extraordinary amount of nerve purloined Matt Barry's Buick car Tuesday night, from in front of the Lyric theatre. Matt and his wife were attending the show, and the car was out in front, where the lights were bright. The thief deliberately got in and drove off. It is reported that the car was seen going west, at a fast clip, but at this writing no clew has been found of the missing auto. Mr. Barry offers $50 reward for information leading to the recovery of the car. It was a Buick six, five-passenger, bearing license No. 99-370, Model, K-45, Engine No. 602273, Factory No. 610327, and had on the front of the radiator three A's within a metal circle, insignia of the American Automobile Association. Anyone seeing the car is requested to notify the Sheriff, Henry Lang, at Clarion, or M. C. Barry, owner at Belmond. The car was insured against theft, and Matt will recover if the auto is not located, but says he would rather have the car back.

WANT BARROWED ARMY GUNS

News: The Clarion police force has received a communication from the war department, asking the local officers to make an effort to recover as many firearms belonging to the government as may be possible. Every police and detective agency in the country, both public and private, is asked to assist in this work in order that unecessary complications may not arise it is desired to make clear the views of the war department with regard to complications.

During the world war there were large numbers of firearms issued to troops destined for service in Europe. In the rush of activity during and immediately following the close of the war, there was a large number of these arms lost or stolen. In numerous instances men leaving the service carried the government firearms with them, presumably as souvenirs, but this action in every case was in direct violation of the law and army regulations, as these arms were still government property and were only authorized disposed of by sale to commissioned officers of the army, navy and marine corps.

SOME CRACKER JACK

Monitor: C. C. Crawford and family of Ida Grove spent a few days last week at the home of Mrs. Crawford's brother. Mr. Crawford is engaged in the grain business and recently purchased a million pounds of pop corn from the farmers of that locality, which is one of the largest pop corn centers in the west. The price paid was two cents per pound. A year ago these same farmers refused nine cents per pound for their crop. A fair crop is one and one-half tons per acre and even at two cents per pound brings the sum of $60. Will some school boy or girl tell us how many packages of Cracker Jack the above crop of pop corn will make? We understand the manufacturers of this product are large buyers of pop corn.

Harry Nordschow was able to get up from his bed Tuesday after a week's seige of tonsilitis, of which he had a very severe case necessitating lancing.

Rev. Seth R. Huntington of Dinsdale was in town yesterday taking in the big doin's. Seth has been at Lake Cornelia the past few days, where he has fourteen boys from his church who are enjoying an outing at the lake. They returned home today.

COUNTY NURSE TO GIVE BABY CONFERENCE

The County Nurse will hold a baby conference at the home of Mrs. Jake Henn, in Pleasant township, on Wednesday, August 30. The meeting will commence at 2:30 p. m., and all mothers are invited to attend and bring their children of all ages. This will be an excellent opportunity for the mothers to consult the county nurse on any questions regarding the health welfare of their children, and it is hoped that all will take advantage of the opportunity offered.

HURT WHEN SPEEDER STRIKES DERAIL

Ole Champlin of Belmond was seriously injured Sunday afternoon, when he was thrown from a railroad speeder when the speeder hit a derail. Ole and his brother, Frank, who is station agent at Holmes, had started for that place about 5:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon, so as to be there when an evening train came thru. Frank lives in Clarion. They were on Frank's gasolene speeder, and as they were leaving the railroad yards at Clarion it is said the tower man gave them the signal to go ahead, which they did. But before the speeder had left the switch to the main line, the tower man threw the switch over, causing the speeder to strike a derail. Frank, feeling the track moving called to his brother to hold on, but Ole did not hear in time and the shock of the impact threw him into an eight-foot bank at the side of the track, Ole turning over several times before he struck. The ligaments and muscles in his hip and back were torn loose, and he is now at Frank's home in Clarion. It is not thought that he will be able to be out and around again for some time. Ole had gone to Clarion, Saturday, selling electric lamps and was visiting his brother and wife Sunday.

WALL LAKE TO BE MADE STATE PARK

Nearly 150 people were present Friday when the sheriff's jury appraised the land at Wall Lake to be used for park purposes. The hearing began about two o'clock and was not concluded until nine that evening. Twelve acres more or less were included in the condemnation proceedings. The assessment board fixed the valuation at $185 per acre, which will be generally conceded a fair price for swamp land. Although Frank Ross says he received $500 an acre from the Waterloo parties he sold a small tract to a few years ago. This sum was allowed the Waterloo men, also $80 for some minor improvements made by them since coming into possession of the land. The tract had been platted and the lots offered for sale or lease. D. H. Eyler of Clarion, a member of the commission, states that at the prices asked for the lots the Waterloo fellows stood to make from $10,000 to $15,000 on the deal. This situation brought forth a strong protest from the hunters and citizens generally to the state evecutive council in which they alleged a monopoly of the lake shore. Eight shacks and cottages had been erected upon this land at a cost of from $100 to $600. These were appraised accordingly and in case the owners think the price too low they are privileged to move them onto adjacent land. Heretofore the lake has been accessible via a private road. The commission condemned a strip of land for public road purposes on the old Birdsall farm a short distance to the left of the old road, allowing the owner, Chas. Griek of Davenport, the sum of $560 for the same. While the Waterloo parties did not seem satisfied with the findings of the jury it is probable they will accept the awards.

All parties concerned have fifteen days in which to file an appeal. The lakes of Iowa are for the use of the people as a whole and no particular set or clique should be allowed a monopoly of the same.—Monitor.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Monitor: Several new cases have been filed for the coming term of the district court which convenes at Clarion October 2d with Judge McCall presiding.

Another echo of the land boom is the case of F. H. Trowbridge vs. John Callesen and ten other defendants in which plaintiff seeks judgement for $10,785, interest and costs.

Sam McCombs et al vs. W. H. Short is another suit growing out of a land sale. Plaintiff's claim is for $16,000.

The First National bank of Windom Minn., has begun action against R. E. Mourlam to force collection on a $1000 note.

A transcript of the divocre proceedings in the case of Mamie Robb vs. Chas. Robb in the Linn county district court at Marion, was filed with Clerk Goslin last week. The parties have been residents of Dows for several years. The court denied the wife's petition and $30,000 alimony and granted the husband a divorce on his cross-petition. Mr. Robb was ordered to pay his wife $500 and an equal sum for her attorneys.

Program Successfully Carried Through

Weather Turns Off Fine And A Large Crowd Comes To Enjoy Day's Program.

EVERYTHING GOES NICELY

Belmond's big day went off just about as had been planned, and a large crowd was in attendance. While not as large as had been anticipated, yet there were crowded streets thruout the afternoon and evening.

Th program was carried thru as was planned, and a successful day's event's was the result. Beginning at 9:00 in the morning with a band concert by the Garner band, the program was taken to the park where another concert, community singing, music by the orchesra and an address took up most of the forenoon. The free attraction was given, and proved quite good. From 12 to 1 the band played in the park, and at one o'clock the afternoon program commenced.

This consisted of community singing, music and an address, all of which were very good. Following the program the street sports were held. As we go to press we are unable to give the list of winners in the various races, but will give this in the next issue.

The ball game between Belmond and Dows was the main sports attraction in the afternoon, and drew an immense crowd. The game was airtight for five innings, and in the first half of the sixth Dows score two runs. In their half the Belmond boys came thru with three, making the score 3 to 2 for Belmond. In the seventh Dows was held down in the first half, and in the last half the Dows team forfeited the game. Simerson, first up for Belmond, was out; the next man got on, stole second, and advanced to third on an infield grounder by Madsen. The decision at first base was close, and the umpire, Earl Clark of Goodell, called him safe. Dows exhibited a steak of yellow, with the game going against them, and quit, altho the crowd booed them for it.

After the game the crowd adjourn- to the ground west of the bridge, where the scheduled balloon ascension took place. This went thru as called for and was a thrilling sight, the balloonist landing safely north of town.

At 6:30 the boxing glove contests, pillow fights and another performance on the trapeze by the attraction troupe filled in a couple of hours. After this a band concert closed the day's activities.

As a celebration the day may be pronounced a success, and many people were made acquainted with the advantages and activities of the Belmond creamery. Hundreds of people utilized the day to meet their friends here and enjoy the day. Aside from the dispute caused by the Dows ball team, the day was perfectly orderly, not an arrest being made and not a disturbance of any kind marring the day. It is to be hoped that similar affairs will be made annual events.

CLARMOND CLUB LOSES GOLF MATCH TO ROLFE

A number of golf fans from Rolfe were here Monday to take part in a tournament with the Clarmond golfers, says the Monitor this week. Plans had been made for staging the tournament at one o'clock in the afternoon and there would then be time for a social hour afterwards, but on account of the condition of the weather, the visitors did not arrive until late and it was well along in the middle of the afternoon before the playing began. Rolfe took the tournament, however by a very small margin. The final score being 10 to 9. However at the end of the first nine holes the score stood even. During the second filight a couple of the locals went off their game a little and allowed Rolfe to edge out. The winning of this match by the Rolfe team keeps them in the running for the district championship, with Eagle Grove and Webster City their opposition. Rolfe recently won from Eagle Grove and both teams have as yet to play Webster City. The visitors proved a bunch of good sports and we believe had every reason to enjoy their trip here. Refreshment stands where iced drinks and cigars were served were located at prominent points complimentary to the visitors, and a splendid dinner was served to all the players before the match.

Marriage licenses were issued the past week to Edward Erwin Sadler and Marie Elizabeth Haaland of Eagle Grove and Philmore Amblie and Esther Brooks of Belmond.

W. O. Eaton drove to Mason City on Sunday evening, to meet his son, LeRoy, who was returning from Tracy, Minnesota, where he has been the past month or two visiting Mr. Eaton's sister.

ACTING THE GOOD SAMARITAN

Who won the war? Of course we did; says England, France, Belgium, the United States, and every other nation on the winning side. What's the difference? It was won. No single nation won it; they all helped; the united effort was successful. But of all those who participated in the greatest conflict of history, it would seem just from the plain face of it that the United States was the final straw that broke the Daschund's back. Had it not been for our men, our money, our munitions and our food, Europe would have been in a pretty tough fix.

Yet the rest of the Allied nations cannot see that we had so very much to do with the big fuss; the English had it about won anyway, and the French were on the up-grade, and Japan was there with plenty of help—offered—so about all we done was to come in at the last minute and try to hog all the glory. Sure. We were just a good Samaritan—at a profit to ourselves. The rest had all the suffering and losses; we just gobbled the dough. In the Saturday Evening Post has been running a series of articles by Geo. Pattula, dealing with the inside history of the A. E. F. They are an eye-opener on the way American forces were handled. Every attempt was made to keep our troups from working as an army of their own; they must be placed with French and English troups, as re-enforcements and to keep up the morale of French and English troups, to stimulate them and cheer them up. Of course, when it came to downright fighting, American men were made the head of the spear to break thru, and took the brunt of the attack; and where the French and English gave way the greenhorns from across the pond went ahead. That's just history. The Argonne was too tough a nut to crack, and the St. Mihiel sector was impossible, for four years. So we volunteered to go thru, as a good Samaritan, and keep the enemy busy while the French and English won the war at another place. We went thru, and they won the war. It worked out beautifully.

Of course we spent a little money, and lost a few men, and worried a little about it, but as a good Samaritan that was just part of the job. By all rights we bought to present Europe with ten billion dollars and a vote of thanks for the opportunity to have a hand in the affair. It wasn't our quarrel to start with; we could have stayed at home, gathering our forces, and when both sides had fought to an exhausted stand-still we could have stepped in and said "Here, you folks do this and that or we'll whale the stuffin' out of the whole lot of you," and with sixteen million fresh men, 50 billions of money, an overflowing granary and an intact navy against an utterly exhausted world our word would have been absolute law. But we didn't; we went over and acted the good Samaritan—and now we are get'ing a good Samaritan's reward.

Sometimes we wonder whether this good Samaritan stuff pays.

Bible Thoughts for This Week

THE OTHER FELLOW'S JOB

Did you ever notice how easy the other fellow's job is? A regular cinch. Gosh, if you only had a snap like that! Nothin' to do and all day to do it in. Rollin' in the coin like a steam shovel. Some folks are sure born lucky. And if you only had a job like that you could do it so much better. Sure, the old maid can always raise the kids better than they are being raised. They ought to do this and that and the other, et cetera, vice versa, etc. ditto.

The doctor ought to have treated him so and so, the attorney should have asked him this and that, the merchant might have had it this way, and the editor should have done differently, and in fact the whole works should have had your expert opinion and advice. If you had been doing it things would have been thus and so, resulting so fashion.

If we could see ourselves as others see us we wouldn't believe it anyway, so what's the use?

When the modern flapper becomes a confirmed devotee of my lady Nicotint we may expect to hear such remarks as "Gimme the makin's, Maggie," Got a pill, Gertie?" and "Let's have a drag, Liz."

There are doubtless many folks in Belmond today who feel like the morning after the night before.

When cold weather comes some folks are going to get warm fussing about the coal shortage.

From the way they are holding up American tourists in Europe one would suspect that they don't know the war is over yet.

Isn't it just about time for President Harding to call "strike three, you're out"?

How many bottles of pop do you suppose met their death in Belmond yesterday?

The man on the street was heard to remark that notes ought to be changed from "I promise to pay" to "I promise to renew."

CLIPPINGS

Peck Hanson and famiy returned last Wednesday from their trip to Chicago. They made the return trip in one day. They left Chicago at 5:30 in the morning and were at home at 11:30 that night, a distance of 427 miles. The trip in was not made in such good time as they encountered mud, and they picked a better route coming home, and made the trip in some 70 miles less coming home than going. But Peck says never again will he make such a long drive in one day, as it is too tiresome.—Signal.

Miss Eloise Brooks, of Belmond is a guest of her friend, Miss Kathryn Russell in Clarion this week.—News.

The Chautauqua closed here on Tuesday night. The talent for the entire course was very good and each entertainment was very interesting. As a financial success the Chautauqua was a failure and money was lost on the project. We understand that the company have agreed to stand half of the loss. Five of the men who signed the chautauqua aggreement last year moved away and this added a burden to the remaining signers here. Chutauquas had ought to take their own chances in a town the same as any other theatrical company and take what they can get, make or lose. Why should a chautauqua be guaranteed a certain sum and they themselves take no chances whatever. Does anybody guarantee our picture show (that is paying a town and state license) or any other business concern in Klemme that if they lose money, you will fork over for it? If the business man loses—he pays.—Klemme Times.

Fred Shipley, former Klemme boy, was in town yesterday on business. Fred has purchased the Case Hotel at Belmond and takes possession of the business Saturday. Fred and his wife are experienced hotel people and will give the people of Belmond a good hotel.—Times.

The members of the Clarmond Country club held another of their series, of pleasant social gatherings at the club house Wednesday. In the afternoon a program had been arranged under the supervision of the entertainment committee and was carried out as follows: piano solos, Pauline Peterson; readings, Miss Pritchard of Garner and piano solos by Ray Peterson, a former Clarion boy, but now of Dows. The diclicous picnic supper which was served buffet style was in charge of five ladies. The evening was spent at dancing, the music being furnished by Ray Peterson.—Monitor.

A BIG LAND DEAL

Reinbeck Courier: James Porter, president of the Reinbeck State Bank, is on his way back from Bakersfield, calif., where he closed a big real estate deal. A tract of 5,600 acres was sold by him to Chas. Bloemer, a big real estate man of Bakersfield at a price of $350 per acre The tract, which is known as the Weed patch tract, will be sub-divided into five acre tracts and developed by extensive cultivation. The land is some of the most productive in that state and Mr. Bloemer and his associates have dreams of big olive and orange groves there.

Mr. Porter bought this land in 1909 at a price of around $6 an acre. In the years that he has had it he has added considerable improvements to it, bringing the cost to him around 100 an acre but this sale leaves him with a fine profit on the deal. Negotiations have been on for the past two years between Mr. Porter and the California people with regard to this deal and Mr. Porter made a special trip to the coast to close it up. Reinbeck people who have known of his land will be glad to hear of his closing out at this price.

HOW TO CONSTRUCT SIMPLE RADIO SETS

Materials That Are Necessary and Method of Assembling and Mounting Them.

For those who would like to construct a simple nonregenerative vacuum tube receiver, the details of several sets will be given, before taking up the explanation of the vacuum tube as an amplifier. The circuits which will be described depend upon the vacuum tube for a detector or as a rectifier not having the additional function of an oscillator.

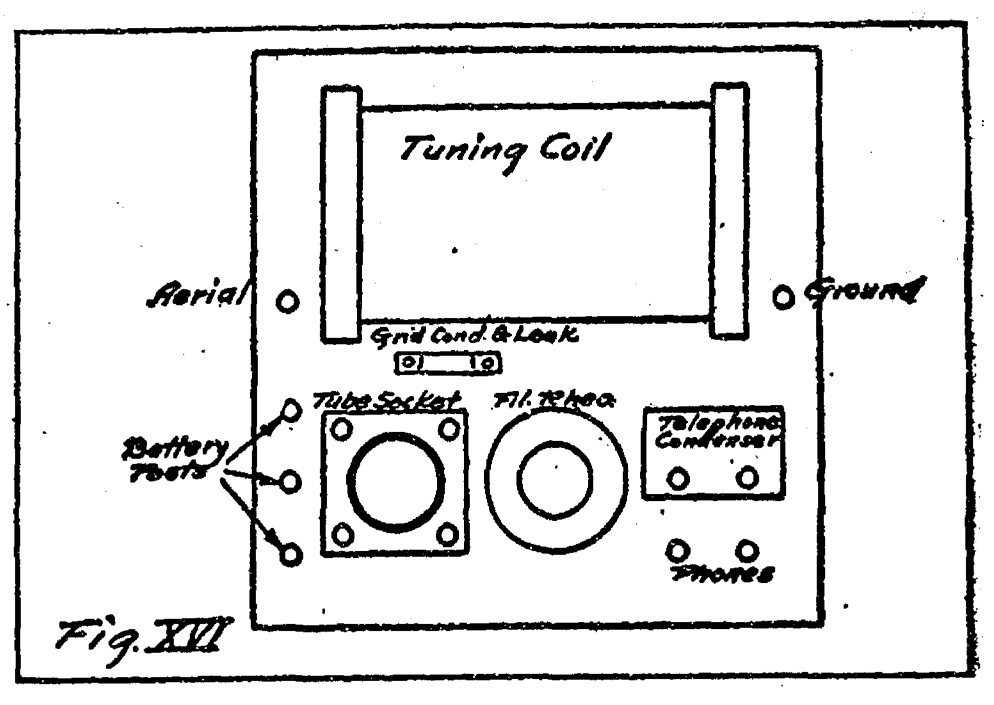

Fig. XVI

The first set described will be that of a tuning coil mounted on a horizontal base board. The following material is necessary for its construction:

The Tuning Coil.

A piece of cardboard tubing, outside diameter, three inches, and five inches long. It will cost about 10 cents.

One hundred feet of No. 22 DCC magnet wire. Cost about 25 cents.

One standard slider to fit ¼ by ¼-inch brass rod. Cost about 40 cents.

A six-inch length of ¼ by ¼-inch square brass rod. Cost about 20 cents.

Two circular blocks of wood, whose diameter is just equal to the inside diameter of the cardboard tubing and between ⅜ and ½ inch thick.

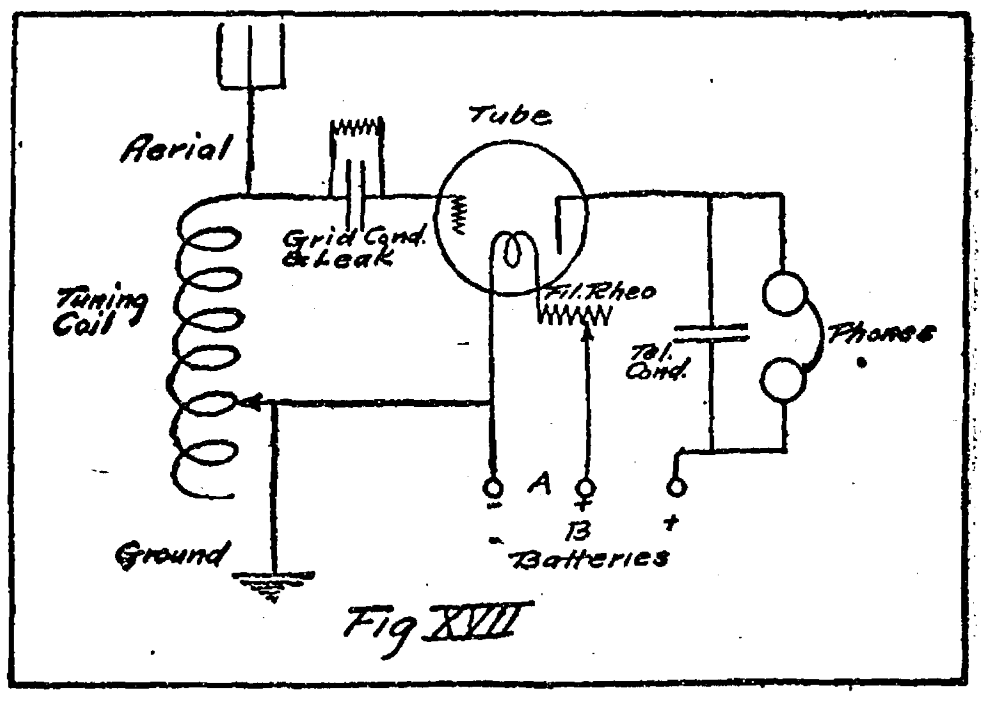

Fig XVII

Two binding posts. Some orange shellac.

The Detector.

A type U V Radiotron vacuum tube which sells for $5.

The standard vacuum tube socket costing about $1.

A filament rheostat of 6-11 ohms resistance costing about $11.

A combination grid condenser and grid leak for the U V 200 Radiotrom costing 55 cents.

In addition a phone condenser costing 50 cents.

One pair of Murdock No. 56 receivers costing $6.

For mounting on base board:

One piece of wood eight inches square.

Five binding posts.

This set requires, of course, an "A" battery to light the vacuum tube filament and a "B" battery to furnish the plate potential. The "A" battery should be a six-volt storage battery of not less than 20 ampere hours' capacity. One 22½-volt "B" battery unit is necessary for a source of plate potential.

Assembling the Coil.

Starting one-half inch from one end of the cardboard tube, wind on the No. 22 DCC wire until within one-half inch of the other end of the tube. Fasten one end of the winding to the tube, but allow some surplus wire on the other end for making a connection. After the winding is in place apply a thin coat of orange shellac to hold the turns in place.

Assemble the circular-cut pieces of wood in the geometrical center of square blocks and then shellac or varnish them for appearance' sake.

When thoroughly dry slip the two end blocks into the wound tube and by means of a few finishing brads driven through the cardboard tube fasten the end blocks to the wound tube.

The slider is to be mounted on top of the coil and should be capable of making contact with any turn of the wire on the tube. In order to remove the insulation from the wire, just under the rod where the slider moves back and forth wrap a piece of sandpaper around a thin piece of wood and, using another piece of wood as a guide, sandpaper the insulation from the winding.

Drill a hole one-eighth inch in diameter through the slider rod about one-fourth inch in from each end so that the rod is fastened in place; see that the contact finger on the bottom of the slider can at all times make good contact with the windings. Mount a binding post on either end of the coil, attaching one by means of a wire to the slider rod and the other to the end of the wire wound on the tube, and the tuning coil is complete.

Mounting the Set on Base Board.

It is only necessary now to mount the component parts on the base board and connect them up.

Fig. 16 shows the relative positions of the instrument mounted on an eight-inch square base board, with the actual wiring diagram. Fig. 17 shows a schematic diagram of the wiring of the same set.

GREAT PLANT IN MELBOURNE

Australian City is Building Radio Station for Direct Communication With Great Britain.

The work of establishing the mammoth Australian radio station in Melbourne for direct communication with Great Britain has been begun.

The substations for overseas traffic will be about three times as powerful as any European station today. It will take two years before the central and feeder stations are completed. As a normal performance the chief station will be able to speak direct over 12,000 miles for the greater part of any working day.

Receiving and sending stations to correspond will be built in Canada during the same period. The plant for the main station will be imported from England, but the plant for the feeder stations will be manufactured in Australia; one for each of the states.

The combined cost of all these stations will be about $5,000,000. The main station will consist of a transmitter and receiver terminal thirty miles apart, the latter including twenty-four towers each 800 feet high spread over a square mile.

The wireless rates will be one-third less than the present cable rates to Europe.

SHORT FLASHES

San Francisco is receiving concerts broadcast at Schenectady, N. Y.

In New York a squad of soldiers was drilled in an armory uptown at the commands of a superior on Governor's island.

At the Pacific coast seaside resorts, instead of burying themselves in the sand, the young ladies clamp on their ear-pieces and kill time between swims listening to radio music.

Educational experts say that radio will prove of great assistance in the development of the minds of subnormal children. The great obstacle in their education has been inability to arouse interest. It is believed that radio will greatly stimulate such interest.

And now it is the dentists who are profiting by radio. It is a great advantage to keep the mind of a patient off his troubles. When a radio ear-piece is clamped on, what registers on the ears of the sufferer makes him more or less indifferent to what is going on in his mouth. Great possibilities for the soothing talker.

Clothing Schools Successful

Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist from Ames, spent three days in Wright county last week conducting training schools on remodeling of clothes. These training schools were held at three different points in the county, one at the Chas. Hubbell home in Blaine township, one at the D. D. Paine cottage, Eagle Grove tonship, one at the Albert Thompson home in Norway township. About twenty-five were in attendance at the first meeting, forty at the second and about thirty at the last meeting. The plan of these meetings was to have two representatives from each township at one of the meetings so as to carry the work back to the ladies of the different townships. Miss Foster spent the time in lecturing on remodeling of old clothing and in demonstrating various kinds of fancy stitches which are used in giving made over garments a new appearance. Since Wright county is without a home demonstration agent the ladies feel that the training schools will be a great help in developing the home economics work in the county. All who attended these training schools seem to feel that the work is practical and that with a little cooperation among the ladies themselves the demonstration agent work can be carried on successfully in Wright county.

Wright County at State Fair

Wright county is to be represented at the Iowa State Fair this year especially in the club department. The county agent has spent considerable time during the past two months in training a livestock judging team to enter the state wide judging contest which will be held at the stock-pavilion Friday, August 25th.

The boys were taken to the Kirstem Bros., Polled Hereford farm last Thursday to work on several classes of beef cattle. They also spent part of the same day at the J. W. Watts' farm in judging his Poland China hogs. The following boys will enter the state wide individual and judging contest: Max Miller, Clarence Clark, Maurice Mechem, Everett Denby, Everett Woodley, Ross Mechem, Leo Woodley, Clyde Knight and John Bell. A livestock judging team consisting of Clarence Clark, Everett Denby, Clyde Knight with Ross Mechem as alternate will represent Wright county in the judging work at the state fair.

Miss Hill, assistant state leader of Girls' Club Work, was in Clarion Friday afternoon, to select the girls' garment demonstration team which will represent Wright county at the state fair this year. According to Miss Hill the Tri-G club of Grant township gave the best demonstration and this team will make the trip to Des Moines next Sunday so as to be ready for the demonstration on Monday, August 28th. Mrs. L. F. Dorr, who has worked so faithfully in training the girls for this demonstration, has selected Lola Flurer and Blanche Siberts with Blanche Flurer as alternate on the team which will make the trip to Des Moines. Wright county will also be represented by a poultry demonstration team consisting of Miss Marie Hinckley, Blaine township and Miss Amy Benson, Dayton township. The county agent, who has spent considerable time in training this demonstration team, will be in charge at the fair. Mrs. Dorr has made arrangements for the girls to stay at the girls' dormitory at the fair grounds. The boys are planning to camp with the county agent in one big tent on the farm bureau grounds. The county agent and boys will leave for Des Moines Thursday evening, August 24th, and Mrs. Dorr and the girls will leave Sunday afternoon, August 27th.

Lieut. Gov. Speaks at Dows

The community picnic which was held at the Dows Community park Thursday, August 24th, was attended by about 1200 to 1500 people from the city of Dows and the four townships in that vicinity. A good lively program consisting of music and a number of readings by local talent and a wonderful address was enjoyed by the picnicers. In spite of the fact that the day was hot everyone seemed to enjoy themselves at the picnic ground, which is a wooded lot with plenty of burr oak shade trees. The people of the Dows community are fortunate in having such a splendid picnic grounds for their community gatherings.

Lieut. Gov. John Hammil from Britt gave a most interesting and able address which was heard by many people from points several miles from the borders of Wright county. Farmers and business men from Clear Lake, Mason City, Hampton, Iowa Falls, Eldora and Webster City drove to Dows to hear the address by the lieutenant governor. Mr. Hammill made a strong plea for a closer cooperation between the business men and the farmers of any community and reminded his people of the interdependence between the farmers and the business man. He also reminded the farmers of the fact that it has been only during the last three or four years that the farmers have been organized and in a position to demand recognition from the commercial and industrial interests of our great nation. He told his farmer friends that now is the time to stay by their organizations, whether they be farm bureau, farmers' union, equity or what not, because it wil require organization and the closest cooperation among the farmers if the highest type of agriculture is to be maintained.

This is the third annual affair of its kind in the vicinity of Dows. It will be remembered that Blaine Township Farm Bureau cooperating with three other townships in that community purchased a picnic ground just north of Dows about two years ago and since that time the city of Dows has joined hands with the farmers and the ground now belongs to Dows and the four townships surrounding and it is used for a public community park and picnic grounds. It should be noted that the business men of Dows make this picnic an annual holiday and close their places of business in order to cooperate with their friends. Dows recently organized what is known as the Community club and we are told its membership is made of both farmers and business men of Dows and immediate community. This is surely a splendid example of team work in a public way.

Boys Judging Corn

Members of the livestock and grain judging class, who are going to the state fair next Friday, spent last Monday evening at the O. J. Pardun home judging several classes of corn. Mr. Pardun and the county agent arranged several classes of the different types in order that the boys might receive some points in judging work. Mr. Pardun, who makes a specialty of breeding corn, gave the boys many helpful points in the selection of good seed corn. Each required to judge two classes of each of horses, cattle (one of dairy and one of beef), and swine, consisting of three or more animals and not less than two varieties of corn of ten ears each. All contestants will be allowed fifteen minutes to place and write reasons substantiating their judgment on corn and each class of animals. The classes and written report when finished by the contestants will be judged and passed upon by experts. The highest ranking team in livestock judging will receive a special prize of a free trip to the Interstate fair at Sioux City. A prize of $200 and a silver trophy will be awarded to the boy having the highest total number of points in all classes of grain and livestock.

BOY DROWNED AT HAMPTON

Recorder: Hampton people were shocked and grieved Tuesday evening by the tragic death of George Orrin Stilson, 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Stilson, of this city, who was drowned in the swimming pool at Harriman park at about 8:30 o'clock.

Nearly 150 people were there and it was a scene of much hilarity and fun, as everyone was trying to cool off after the oppressively hot day. Young Stilson, with four other boys of about the same age, dived off the spring board at the same time, and his failure to come to the surface was not noticed by anyone except his little six-year-old brother, Donald, who told people standing near that "Billy did not come up," but no one paid any attention to his childish prattle as the little fellow does not talk pain.

After failing to make anyone understand, Donald ran home and told his mother, who immediately drove to the park in a hysterical condition and asked where her son, George, was. Persons at the park tried to quiet her by saying that the lad was round somewhere, but little Donald took his mother to the edge of the pool and pointed to the spot where he saw his brother go down. Five men then dived in the place indicated by the boy and brought the body up. Several Hampton physicians rushed to the park but were unable to resuscitate the body.

It is believed that the Stilson lad struck his head on the bottom of the pool, knocking him senseless, and that when he began to regain consciousness, his lungs filled with water. Orville Moore, son of Mrs. Bessie Moore, who was one of the five boys on the spring-board with the Stilson lad when he took the fatal dive, claims that he, too, struck his head on the cement and left the pool crying.

The boy's body was taken from the park to the family residence. Funeral arrangements are not completed, but in all probability services will be held at the home Thursday afternoon. —Recorder.

STRIKERS GET HEAVY SENTENCE

Federal Judge George C. Scott, at Sioux City, Saturday, jolted the Eagle Grove strikers who participated in a raid on the Frank Fisher home there about ten days ago. Jail sentences totalling 360 days and $500 fines, were the punishment fixed for the men, who plead guilty to violating the federal court injunction.

The men, Julius Puls, Al Ziegler, Martin Olson, Roy Taylor, and August Grandgeorge, raided the Fisher home in an attempt to destroy it by fire. Fisher had accepted employment with the Northwestern as stationary boiler fireman.

The union officials at Eagle Grove disavowed the act, and attributed it to moonshine liquor.—News.

CLARION SEWER JOB BEING HELD UP

The Clarion storm sewer job is slowing up on the big mains for lack of tile. The Belmond Construction Co., which has the contract for supplying the larger portion of the tile and is manufacturing the tile at Belmond, finds it almost impossible to get service even to Carion. Five carload of tile were loaded at the company's yards last week and the contractors here were impatient to get it shipped but the roads at Belmond could not move the shipment. Monday Supt. Fatherson and Roadmaster McCreery were in Belmond and told the contractors they would move the five cars to Clarion before Tuesday, but promises of other deliveries could not be made with any certainty.

A carload of tile from Fort Dodge billed to the local contractor, was shipped out of that city early last week the bill reaching Clarion Thursday, but it did not arrive until Monday.

The big ditching machine is manned by three men, who draw salaries by the month, it is said, and one of these men at $150 per month, has worked around three days in as many weeks. The hand work is being rushed by twelve men.

If the strike grows worse, as is possible, it may be the contract for the local job will be a losing one and filled with much vexation.—News.

Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, AUGUST 24, 1922. No. 24

Now that Creamery Day is over and you have had a good time and enjoyed yourselves with the entertainment and meeting your friends and neighbors, we just want to tell you that we have everything you need in the way of farm implements. You know our line, the old reliable Deering and International. There are none better—if there was we'd handle them. It will soon be time to think of getting in the corn, but right now after harvest is a good time to fill silo. Come in and let us talk over with you the merits of our ensilage filler. It's a real machine that does the business in the right way.

Winter and its cold weather seems a long ways off just now, with the thermometer hovering around the 90 mark and stretching up, but just the same this is a good time to think a little about heating the home when winter comes. We have a full line of heaters for you to pick from, all sizes and prices. Next time you are in town drop in the store and let us show you and talk over a new heater Perhaps you have an old heater that is in good shape but needs a little repairs. We can fix you out in that case too.

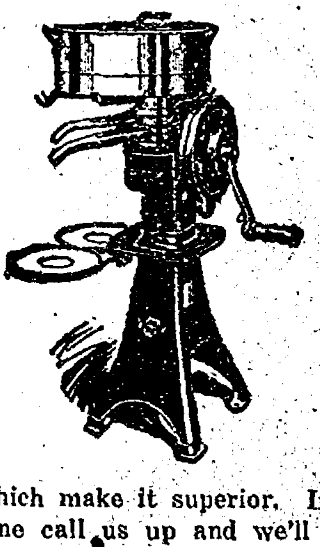
Along with our complete line of implements we have everything in the hardware line too, from bolts and screws to ranges and stew pans. Make our store your headquarters while in town; whether you want to buy or not we are always glad to see you.

If everything were taken out of politics except the politicians there would be still too much left.

Keeping your best foot forward sounds good, but alternating is what gets you there.

Don't rock the boat unless you know how to smim. The other fellow doesn't count.

And there's that Primrose Cream Separator we were telling you about. You need a good separator every month in the year, and the Primrose has them all beaten. There are so many fine points about the Primrose which make it superior. If you need one call us up and we'll come out and show you, or drop in when in town and see for yourself. With a Primrose every day will be Creamery Day for you.



The world is at peace with everything but itself.

Haul out that manure and spread it on your fields. It will pay you well for the time and trouble.

Candies--

THIS WEEK WE WANT TO TELL YOU ABOUT THE DELICIOUS CANDIES WE HAVE FOR YOU--CHOCOLATES, FONDANTS, CARMELS, PEANUT BRITTLE--ALL KINDS, ALWAYS FRESH AND MADE BY OURSELVES, ASSURING YOU OF THE BEST MATERIALS AND CLEAN HANDLING.

In package lots or boxes. The next time you get that sweet-craving spell come in and get a sack of our delicious home-made candy, take home a sack or a box to the wife and kiddies. It hits the right spot every time.

Are Positions Plentiful?

A great many people have the idea that it is practically impossible to get a position. This is not true. During the week of the Fair we were at our wits' ends to meet the demand for really competent office help. On Wednesday morning we had six calls for bookkeepers, stenographers and machine operators. We will furnise the names of the firms and business men asking for help if you wish.

One thing is required today, that was given little thought two or three years ago, and that is thorough preparation. Our graduates without exception get positions. Many under graduates are placed but those who graduate get the choice positions.

The fall term opens TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5th. Enroll, complete your work and you need not worry about a position.

EUROPEAN TRIP BY WEST BEND GIRL

(West Bend Journal,)

We have just returned from Versailles. It has been a great day for me. Everything here is so full of interest that I hardly know what to write.

We took the boat near Notre Dame, passing under sixteen bridges, all different and some very beautiful, especially the bridge of Alexandria. We saw the Statue of Liberty (like our own in New York harbor the Eiffel Tower, from which wireless messages are sent across the Atlantic; the Trocadero, with its beautiful grounds; the Louvre and the entrance to the Bois de Bologne.

The Seine is not wide, nor large, but very beautiful, when we were at the outskirts of Paris, and came to the gardens, and the low hills and then the higher hills—it was beautiful—much like along the Hudson. The tall populars and pines with red and white stone hidden in the pines and its brick-colored tile roof, the towers with tiny windows, and nearer the wild flowers and ferns; this on one side and on the other, perhaps, the same view or higher wooded hills—oh, it is so beautiful!

But we took the car at Seves for Versailles. Here in this village one sees the very narrow winding side streets and the very tiny shops, stone houses and every space in garden either of flowers, fruits or vegetables, and usually all three. Some of the homes here are very humble but each garden has some beauty about it.

Versailles is quite a city. Here the wide shady streets leading to the Palace of Versalles are paved and the court before the castle is very very spacious. A guard took us through the marvelous palace built by Louis XIV.

I had wondered when I saw the Tuilleres and palace at Paris why any king would build another palace at Versailles but when I saw the palace at Versailles! Just outside is the marble court and inside many many halls and spacious rooms, massive doors, gold trimmings, painting on the walls and ceilings, tapestries line in Louvre (it takes one man a year to make a yard and one could study tapestry for a long time for each tells some history) The statuary, the furniture—it is so beautiful. And all has something about Louis XIV, even the clock when it strikes has a king appear instead of a cuckoo. Here, you know, is the hall of mirrors, 245 feet long and 35 feet wide, where in June 1919, the Peace Treaty was signed, where also in January, 1871, the German Empire was founded. I couldn't have imagined the beauty of the castle with the inlaid marble tables, marble floors in some rooms, pillars, great gilded arches, tapestry rugs, and even a chapel—a beautiful chapel.

From the bedroom of Louis XIV, there is a view down the long avenues. Here also is a jeweled table, his bed with gold trimmings and tapestry covering and then a high canopy of velvet, gold and tapestry, the handmade chairs—all are still there. I can now much better imagine how much it costs to support a king. The windows in the castle open like double doors. This is true of all the windows I've seen here. From three sides of the castle one can look upon the prettiest gardens I have ever seen. As far as the eye can see there are flower gardens, statuary fountains, beyond them the lake and then more flowers. Also yew trees trimmed in so many shapes, rose trees and arbors. From the outside and in front of the castle, or outside the iron fence, the gardens can't be seen for the castle is built around and in front of the gardens. Only the sweetest perfume compares with the scent of the orange blossoms.

You know the queen of Louis the 16th had another castle built for her at a far corner of the gardens. We walked. It seemed a couple of miles and then at the end of a long avenue of high plane trees, so high that for a hundred feet above our heads there were no branches. The avenues boarded deep moors on both sides. It seemed that we were in the heart of a woods, the combination of the artificial and nature is so facinating. Nearer the castle there are many lakes and statues and the Temple of Love and beyond the Temple of Love where they say, Marie Antoinette came to hear the music, in her "model farm" her dairy, where she made cheese and butter for her Royal family. Here the vine covered mill, the dairy tower of Malborough are especially picturesque with thatched roofs and vines. Near the mill there are many fish in the little stream. We would have liked to stay there, the woods seem so satisfying and so quiet. We returned on the train to Paris.

Trains here aren't like at home. The first one I saw was at LeHavre where we landed. But I must tell you how happy we were Saturday evening when we saw land. We knew Saturday afternoon that we were nearing England, and, while we were at dinner about 7 o'clock the people rushed to the port holes (in the dinning room) and we could here a glad cry from the deck above us. I wondered why. Yes, we could see Bishop Lighthouse. We rushed to the deck. There we saw land, and the sea gulls were just thick and in the distance we could also see the sail boats. As darkness fell about us, far away we could see a tiny spark perhaps twenty miles away. An hour later the tiny spark blinking at us had grown larger and larger until is sent a shining ray across our deck about every seven seconds. That was the light at Plymouth England. That last night on the water was beautiful—the moonlight on the water, the sea breeze, the light house, and the cheerful, happy passengers caused us to forget for awhile that we were far from home. Sunday morning we could see France. It is home to many who were on board and you can imagine with what enthusiasm the strains of the Marseilles were sung as we landed safely in the harbor of LeHavre on Sunday afternoon.

It takes a long time to land but by 3:30 we were in the special train for Paris. Trains have first, second and third class compartments, and the express trains are very comfortable, but you sit facing your fellow travelers. In some coaches there are no corridors but in most of them there is a corridor along one side.

Three days we went to the Louvre, but time was too short. However, we saw our favorite paintings and many others, but we had little time to see the beautiful cameo dishes, pottery, chests, stained glass, carvings and ancient handwork and writings from Egypt, etc.

"The Last Supper" by Vinci, "The Last Supper" by Campaigne, "The Young Martyr," "La Jaconde," and many other paintings we went to see the second time, and on Sunday afternoon the Louvre was simply filled. When the doors closed at five o'clock, the court yards were packed with men, women and children.

On Monday mornings many of the stores and museums are closed. Yes, we went shopping some—mostly window shopping, or window seeing.

I should like to tell you about Reims, but later, perhaps. My French is very poor but I had no difficulty in going to Reims and Chatieu Thierry and back to the hotel here in Paris. Hoever, I'm sure the people were often amused as they kindly answered my questions, and sometimes gave directions in part German, part English and part French.

My heart was thrilled to see the dear Stars and Stripes on the Fourth of July and my thoughts were not in Paris all that day.

Diplomacy

During an equestrian performance a number of ladies in the front stood up, thus obstructing the view of those persons who were seated. In vain they were collectively requested to sit down, till at last a happy thought occurred to one of the sufferers. He called out in measured tones: "Will the pretty lady in front kindly sit down?" Whereupon about fifty women briskly seated themselves.

TO:
DISTRICT JUDGES
COUNTY ATTORNEYS SHERIFFS of Iowa

Gentlemen:

We have received many requests recently from the above for information regarding the workings and policies of this Department, and it is thought a brief outline of same will be of benefit to you. You will remember, of course, that this is merely an outline of the more important parts of our proceedure and that many other details of proceedure exist that are not mentioned here.

In the first place, the Board of Parole is concerned only with prisoners confined in the Anamosa Reformatory and at the Ft. Madison Penitentiary. Shortly after a prisoner is received at either of these institutions, the Board receives from the institution a report on the prisoner which includes a statement of the crime, the place from which sentenced, name of the trial judge, a brief life history of the prisoner, a report of his physical and mental examination, and the history of the prisoner's family.

Upon receipt of this report, our investigation of this prisioner begins. The proper enteries are made on our office records and a folder is prepared in which everything that comes to the office pretaining to this case is filed. At this time letters are written to the trail judge, county attorney and sheriff asking for whatever information or impression they may have regarding the man. We also check up and see if he has served time before in any penal or reformatory institution in the United States; as well as many other special letters to various places in an effort to chek this man's past life and character.

After the above is done and after a man has been in the institution about six or eight months, the Board has a personal interview with him at which time we ask him any questions we care to and he makes any statement in connection with himself and his crime that he desires. At this time, we have him give us the names of a number of people who have known him for a number of years, and upon our return to the office these people are written to for information. All of this interview is taken down in shorthand and later transcribed and placed in the man's file for future reference.

About three or four months after this interview and after all of the above information has had time to get to the prisoner's files, the Board reads the files through carefully and enters the first determination in this man's case which takes the form of a parole or a denial of a parole. If a parole is decided upon, the man is released from the institution as soon as a job can be secured for him, and if he is denied (which usually happens the first time) he must remain in prison.

After a man is denied he is entitled to have his case placed on the docket for reconsideration every year until he is paroled or released on expiration. Each time he is called before the Board for a personal interview at which time he is premitted to present any new evidence in his case and the Board notes his prison record as well as any evidence of reformation.

The above method of investigation is followed in every case (except life cases) irrespective of the crime or the length of the sentence. The fact that we start our investigation soon after a man enters prison leads many people to believe that the man is about to be parolled, but you can easily see that such is not necessarily the case, as it may just as readily mean that he will never be paroled.

When a man is parolled, a good and satisfactory job with some responsible person or firm within the state is secured for him before he is released. While on the job, the man, under supervision of his employer, sends us a very complete report of himself every month. He is also visited several times during a year by an Agent from this department who makes a personal investigation in that locality to find out if the prisoner is conducting himself as a useful and respectable citizen. After the man has been on parole for at least a year and everything is regular in his case, he is certified to the Governor for final discharge which relieves him from all further obligations under his sentence.

In many cases, the man on parole does not conduct himself properly and in such an event the Board revokes the parole and returns the man to prison.

When you know that we have from 250 to 300 men on parole all of the time and that we have to secure jobs for all of them and in some cases two or three jobs before the year is up, you can appreciate the enormous amount of work connected with this phase of the work alone. In fact, we are the largest employment agency in the state.

The general policy of the Board can be stated very briefly. We beleive that men who are a menace to society should be confined—not only for any definite period, but indefinitely and the only fault we find with the present law is that such men are released at the end of their maximum sentence and we believe that the law should allow us to hold them indefinitely. We also believe that men who are accidental criminals and not viscious or a serious menace to society, should be released at once under careful supervision and make industrious and useful citizens. The main criticism we have to make of ourselves is that we hold some of these latter named too long. This fact is largely due to our rules of procedure whereby it takes about a yar for us to complete our ivestigation of each case. Therefore, in the future if you have anyone who should receive earlier consideration, you can call our attention especially to the fact and we will take it up before the regular order.

As far as we know, the Board is biased only on one point, and that is in our actions towards the automobile thieves, and we admit that we don't give these men much consideration. Larceny of automobiles is such an easy and common occurance that we have made up our minds that we are going to make it so hot for those who are caught that this practice in Iowa will soon become as popular as the stealing of horses in years gone by.

Another thing we might call your attention to is that if a judge decides to parole a man before comitment, the law provides that he may turn him over to the Board of Parole in which event we handle his case the same as if he were a man paroled by us from one of the institutions. When this is done, the man can be discharged from his sentence at the end of his parole period in the regular manner and without causing the Governor any additional labor.

One very important thing to keep in mind is that the records show a very small percentage of paroled men ever get into trouble. You will usually find that the cases where ex-convicts return to crime or get into trouble in your community is when these men were released from prison by expiration of sentence. The main trouble with our prison system today is that when a man is released from prison by expiration of sentence, he is given a suit of clothes and a five dollar bill and, unless he has a home to go to, about the only thing he can do to keep from starving to death is to return to crime. If the legislature could work out some plan whereby this Board would be required to get a man a job and supervise him for a period of time the same as a man on parole, many of these men would become good citizens instead of repeaters.

As mentioned at the beginning of this letter, this office keeps very complete records of all men confined in our prisons and the information we have is public property (with the exception in some cases, or when requested, of the identity of our informant) and we will be glad to have you avail yourselves of this information at any time you desire.

Most people have an idea that the only function and utility of the Board of Parole is to restore criminals or moral derelicts to useful citizenship; but there is another phase to our work, and that is an economic one. The Board of Parole is not onlly self-sustaining, but it actually saves the State about $30,000.00 per year besides this, in this way—when a man is released on parole there is an actual saving to the State of about $20.00 per month which is the cost of keeping him confined. Besides this, society is benefited because the man becomes a producer and earns a wage which goes to maintain himself and his family, thereby, in many cases, relieving the community from the support of said family.

In conclusion, we wish to remind you that you are charged by statute with the duty of assisting in the execution of the parole law in this state and we hope that you will take this duty seriously and give us every assistance possible.

Sincerely yours,
IOWA BOARD OF PAROLE

MANY ARRESTS MADE

A total of 199 persons were arrested and property valued at $16,478 recovered during the month of July. The number of arrests was more than double that of the same month a year ago. The largest number of arrests were made for investigation. Forty-nine vagrants were picked up by detectives and eleven men were arrested for gambling. Four men were arrested for obtaining money by false pretense, five for breaking and entering, eleven for intoxication and one each for forgery, grand larceny and assault with intent to commit murder. Of the property recovered all but $3,444 represented the value of stolen automobiles. The automobiles recovered were exclusive of those returned to thir owners by the auto theft bureau which is entirely seperate from the detective department.

IOWA CORN SONG

E. E. Taylor of Traer, Tama county upon his return from a western trip, marveled at the prominence that has been given Iowa because of its famous corn song. Mr. Taylor's comment reached Sioux City Journal and that paper proceeded to state that both the words and the music of the famous song were written by John O. Knutson, of Sioux City. It constitutes the most effective bit of advertising for the state and its leading industry that has been devised up to date. It has spread the name and the fame of Iowa to the remotest sections of the country and even to foreign lands. It is sung by Iowans wherever they travel and whatever their business may be. It is played by bands on parade. It has been adopted and adopted. Iowa's neighbor in the middle weset—everyone from the land of the tall corn—claims it and proclaims it with a zest equal their songs, but none is equal to that of Iowa's. Other states have Iowa corn song in catchiness. The song is short and to the point: "We're from Iowa, Iowa. State of all the Land. Joy on every hand. We're from Iowa, Iowa. That's where the Tall Corn Grows."

Not in His Line

A salesman was trying to sell a vacuum bottle to a Louisville man.

"It will," explained the salesman "keep anything in the shape of a liquid hot or cold for seventy-two hours."

"I don't want it," said the Louisville man. "If I had anything worth drinking I wouldn't want to keep it seventy-two hours."

Why Fido Failed

"Just think of it! That fellow came in and actually stole the clock right off the mantel-piece."

"And your dog was in the very room?"

"Yes, but that doesn't count. Fido is only a watchdog, you know."

Something New Under the Sun

"Physical culture, father, is perfectly lovely!" exclaimed an enthusiastic young miss just home from college. "Look! To develop the arms I grasp this rod in both hands and move it slowly from right to left."

"Well, well," replied dad admiringly, "what won't science discover next? Why, if that rod had straw on the other end you'd be sweeping."

Mr. Merchant

Do you realize the importance of getting your advertising copy prepared early?

You know our old friend procrastination. He's a cousin to the cow's tail.

Why follow, when you can lead?

Supposing all your customers left their shopping in your store until an hour before you were closing up at night, what would happen? You know. It would make great confusion, you couldn't give service and your customers would leave the store dissatisfied.

Well, in a way, that's what you often ask the newspapers to do. You wait until the ninth hour to prepare your copy, and when it reaches the office you expect the compositors to do two hours' work in one.

It can't be done.

The result is that your advertisement is slapped together in great haste, with a chance for errors and without proper display. It can't be otherwise.

Stop that old habit of putting off till the last day, the last hour and the last minute to send your copy to the newspaper office.

Get it out early when you have time to think and prepare it properly. Then send it to the newspaper office two or three days ahead. That will give the newspaper time to prepare your advertisement properly.

You can see the logic of it. It will mean better ads, better service and better results.

That's what you want. That's why you advertise.
Give the newspaper a chance.
Apply the Golden Rule.

The Webster City Freeman-Journal tells this story: According to the story told by a Webster City dealer, one of the nation's leading cloth manufacturers has abandoned the idea of naming a fine piece of goods in honor of Presidenet Harding. The manufacturer had a fine suit of clothes made for the president and presented it to him. It was a very pleasing shade of blue. One day when the aforesaid Webster City dealer was in the east, the manufacturer told him of the plan to give this certain grade of cloth a boom and that they were going to name it "Harding blue." "Well," observed the w. c. d., "the west is so blue now over electing Harding that such a name fastened onto your goods will absolutely kill its sale out in our part of the country." It is the judgement of this dealer that the manufacturers made some inquiries about the popularity of the president in the west. At any rate the "Harding blue" cloth was never put upon the market under that name.

A newspaper man in Missouri had the following diagnosis of an acute case:

Editing a newspaper is somewhat like preaching: The gospel truth must be presented in the form of a generism or some fellow will get up and howl, says a recent writer. Few persons like the truth, even in homepathic doses, if it hits them. But while preachers and editors are criticised for what they do say, no one thinks of giving them credit for what they do not say. Yet what they keep to themselves constitutes the major portion of what they know about people. Very many people harbor the belief that newspapers are eager to publish derogatory things. This is a mistake. There isn't a newsaper that could not spring a sensation in the community at any time by merely telling what it knows. There is not a newspaper that does not have under lock scores of derogatory things which never reach the public eye or reach the public ear. Deciding what not to print is the most troublesome part of the newspaper work. How many good stories are suppressed for innocent relatives and for the public good nobody outside a newspaper office knows. In some instances he who flies into a passion because a newspaper prints something about him which he considers uncomplimentary has every reason to feel profoundly grateful to the newspaper for publishing so little of what it knows about him. And oftimes the loudest howler is the most vulnerable to attack.

"Yes, on approval," groaned the other weakly "You see I may not want to keep it."

"THE JUCKLINS"

A beautiful story, delightfully depicted by some of the most characteristic types ever seen in a screen drama. The characters of Opie Reed's famous novel seem to have been lifted bodily out of the book and transformed into living, breathing, moving people. Monte Blue, who plays Bill Hawes, the country school teacher, seems a living double for the author's character creation, and so is Charles Ogle who interprets old Lem Jucklin to perfection.

WE THOUGHT MUNCHAUSAN HAD DIED LONG, LONG AGO

Hampton Recorder: Attorney B. H. Mallory, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Lee C. Robinson and son, Lee Junior, arrived home last Wednesday from a two weeks outing at Lake Nipigon, Canada, somewhat worse for the experience. Mr. Mallory is carrying his left arm in a sling and relates a rather remarkable story regarding the accident. His recital runs as follows:

"You see, it was this way. My daughters and Lee and Lee Junior, and I had gone down a river that runs either into Hudson Bay or the Berring Strait, and after successfully shooting the rapids north as far as Devils Run, alongside of Hell's Half Acre, we managed to propel our canoe out of the death dealing current of this mountain stream, and landed on a shore that was inhabited only by wild animals and a few Indians who had never seen a white man, and there made a camp for the night. After starting a number of large fires around our tent to keep the wolves away. we were ready to enjoy a little rest in prepartion for the next day's dangerous and arduous duties. During the night a Canadian Polar Bear broke into our food convoy and ate everything, even drinking the milk that we had brought along for Lee Junior.

"The next morning the two Indian guides and I started to run down a cow moose in order to get a supply of milk for my grandchild. We finally succeeded in capturing a large one and after fastening the animal securely between two giant pine trees of the forest I proceeded to get on the right side of the moose to milk her and she kicked me, breaking my wrist, and in so doing broke down both trees that were holding her, one of the giant trees falling on my injured wrist. The guide finally succeeded in getting the tree off my arm by rolling a big boulder down the side of a small mountain, which gathered sufficient momentum to knock the tree off from my arm and down into the river, where it immediately dammed the stream to such an extent that we were compelled to run for our lives up a steep precipice in order to get away from the over-flowing banks of the river. We finally got back to our camp and there I was informed that I could have avoided all this trouble if I had only milked the moose on the left side instead of the right. You see, we were north of the principal Meridian, 54:40, and it was '54:40 or fight.' I had forgotten my history."

Mr. Mallory also relates a number of large fish stories which he will be only too glad to tell anyone interested in listening to tales of this character.

Every Moment Counted

Elihu Root was cross-examining a young women in court one day.

"How old are you?" he asked.

The young women hesitated.

"Don't hesitate," said Mr. Root. "The longer you hesitate the older you are."

Personal Liberty

Visitor—Which of these hotels is the better?

Town Guide—Wal. one of 'em has all rooms with baths. and the other believes in personal liberty—you can have a bath or not just as you like.

THEY CALL HIM BATTY

Batty, the young man sent to the penitentiary for automobile stealing, with Council Bluffs as his headquarters, started something when he declared that if the Missouri river were to be dragged there would be found reposing peacefully beneath its murky waters innumerable automobiles that had been plunged therein by fellows hired by their owners that insurance might be obtained on old and out of date equipment. A crew of eight professional river divers working with a steamboat equiped with a hoisting crane and several side barges secured five cars the first week. Some were in water 30 feet deep. The point of contact is 15 miles below Council Bluffs. The crew is working from a map furnished it by the insurance company by which they were retained. On this map are designated where the companys' agents believe cars have been run into the river by men desiring to collect insurance on them as stolen machines. Robert Shoemaker of New York is in charge of the crew. The crew came from Kansas City.

Them Was the Days

Sorry, but I can't insure you—you're too tall," said the agent to the man who wanted to take out an accident policy.

"Too tall? What's the matter with that?" protested the applicant, "And anyway I'm not as tall as my father was and he had no trouble getting insured."

"But your fther," the agent explained, "was insured years ago when there was no danger of a fellow having his head knocked off by a skidding airplane."

Not Hard

"How long did it take you to learn to run a motor car?"

"Oh, three or four."

"Weeks?"

"No, motor cars."

OBJECT TO TRUCKS

The commercial club at Boone is out with printed matter, making an appeal to the merchants of that town to refuse to send freight to neighboring towns over motor truck lines that are handling freight. Attention is called to the high taxes imposed in keeping up highways because of the damage done the roads by heavy freight motor trucks, and it is also cited that the railroads leave large sums of money in that city and pay heavy taxes and therefore ought to receive the carrying business of the city. Motor busses and motor freight trucks are playing havoc with the busciness of the branch railroads in Iowa. The state railway commossion looks upon the movement as a real hardship because most of the "plug" lines are operated at a loss, but communities are insistent that train service be not impaired.

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE

Hampton Chronicle: State officials have been here this week inquiring into the case where the road just north of Chapin was blocked with a rope a week ago Sunday night, when auto travelers were forced to stop their cars in order to proceed.

There is a heavy penalty against blocking the highway, and it is well that there is a penalty provided. First, because no person has any right ot blockade a highway except on official business. Second, travelers are to be protected from holdups and when they find a road blocked day or night, without any seeming reason, they are justified in using revolvers on any gang of boys who are blocking the roads just for the fun they are getting out of it. The traveler is not expected to know that the road was blocked as a joke. Thugs and robbers do these same stunts when they want to stage a holdup.

MISS LULU BETT

"Good enough!" He applauded noiselessly, with fat hands. His diamond ring sparkled, his even white teeth flashed. "I've had twenty years of galloping about," he informed her, unable, after all, to transfer his interests from himself to her.

"Where?" she asked, although she knew.

"South America. Central America. Mexico. Panama." He searched his memory. "Colombo," he superadded.

"My!" said Lulu. She had probably never in her life had the least desire to see any of these places. She did not want to see them now. But she wanted passionately to meet her companion's mind.

"It's the life," he informed her.

"Must be," Lulu breathed. "I—" She tried, and gave it up.

"Where you been mostly?" he asked at last.

By this unprecedented interest in her doings she was thrown into a passion of excitement.

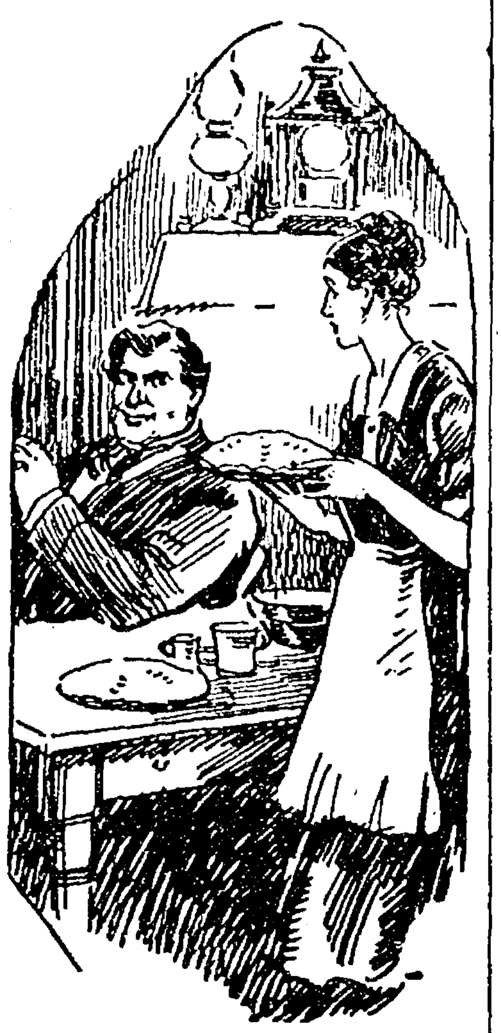
"Here," she said. "I've always been here. Fifteen years with Ina. Before that we lived in the country."

He listened sympathetically now, his head well on one side. He watched her veined hands pinch at the pies. "Poor old girl," he was thinking.

"Is it Miss Lulu Bett?" he abruptly inquired. "Or Mrs.?"

Lulu flushed in anguish.

"Miss," she said low, as one who confesses the extremity of failure.



Lulu Flushed in Anguish. "Miss," She Said Low.

Then, from unplumbed depths, another Lulu abruptly spoke up. "From choice," she said.

He shouted with laughter.

"You bet! Oh, you bet!" he cried. "Never doubted it." He made his palms taut and drummed on the table. "Say!" he said.

Lulu glowed, quickened, smiled. Her face was another face.

"Which kind of a Mr. are you?" she heard herself ask, and his shoutings redoubled. Well! Who would have thought it of her?

"Never give myself away," he assured her. "Say, by George, I never thought of that before! There's no telling whether a man's married or not, by his name!"

"It don't matter," said Lulu.

"Why not?"

"Not so many people want to know."

Again he laughed. This laughter was intoxicating to Lulu. No one ever laughed at what she said save Herbert, who laughed at her. "Go it, old girl!" Ninian was thinking, but this did not appear.

The child Monona now arrived, banging the front gate and hurling herself round the house on the board walk, catching the toe of one foot in the heel of the other and blundering forward, head down, her short, straight hair flapping over her face. She landed flat-footed on the porch. She began to speak, using a ridiculous perversion of words, scarcely articulate, then in vogue in her group. And, "Whose dog?" she shrieked.

Ninian looked over his shoulder, held out his hand, finished something that he was saying to Lulu. Monona came to him readily enough, staring, loose-lipped.

"I'll bet I'm your uncle," said Ninian.

Relationship being her highest known form of romance, Monona was thrilled by this intelligence.

"Give us a kiss," said Ninian, finding in the plural some vague mitigation for some vague offense.

Monona, looking silly, complied. And her uncle said, my stars, such a great big tall girl—they would have to put a board on her head.

"What's that?" inquired Monona. She had spied his great diamond ring.

"This," said her uncle, "was brought to me by Santa Claus, who keeps a jewelry shop in heaven."

The precision and speed of his improvisation revealed him. He had twenty other diamonds like this one. He kept them for those Sundays when the sun comes up in the west. Of course—often! Some day he was going to melt a diamond and eat it. Then you sparkled all over in the dark, ever after. Another diamond he was going to plant. They say— He did it all gravely, absorbedly. About it he was as conscienceless as a savage. This was no fancy spun to pleasure a child. This was like lying, for its own sake.

He went on talking with Lulu, and now again he was the tease, the braggart, the unbridled, unmodified male.

Monona stood in the circle of his arm. The little being was attentive, softened, subdued. Some pretty, faint light visited her. In her listening look, she showed herself a charming child.

"It strikes me," said Ninian to Lulu, "that you're going to do something mighty interesting before you die."

It was the clear conversational impulse, born of the need to keep something going, but Lulu was all faith.

She closed the oven door on her pies and stood brushing flour from her fingers. He was looking away from her, and she looked at him. He was completely like his picture. She felt as if she were looking at his picture and she was abashed and turned away.

"Well, I hope so," she said, which had certainly never been true, for her old formless dreams were no intention—nothing but a mush of discontent. "I hope I can do something that's nice before I quit," she said. Nor was this hope now independently true, but only surprising longing to appear interesting in his eyes. To dance before him. "What would the folks think of me, going on so?" she suddenly said. Her mild sense of disloyalty was delicious. So was his understanding glance.

"You're the stuff," he remarked absently.

She laughed happily.

The door opened. Ina appeared.

"Well!" said Ina. It was her remotest tone. She took this man to be a peddler, beheld her child in his clasp, made a quick forward step, chin lifted. She had time for a very javelin of a look at Lulu.

"Hello!" said Ninian. He had the one formula. "I believe I'm your husband's brother. Ain't this Ina?"

It had not crossed the mind of Lulu to present him.

Beautiful it was to see Ina relax, soften, warm, transform, humanize. It gave one hope for the whole species.

"Ninian!" she cried. She lent a faint impression of the double e to the initial vowel. She slurred the rest, until the y sound squinted in. Not Neenyun, but nearly Neenyun.

He kissed her.

"Since Dwight isn't here!" she cried and shook her finger at him. Ina's conception of hostess-ship was definite: A volley of questions—was his train on time? He had found the house all right? Of course! Anyone could direct him, she should hope. And he hadn't seen Dwight? She must telephone him. But then she arrested herself with a sharp, curved fling of her starched skirts. No! They would surprise him at tea—she stood taut, lips compressed. Oh, the Plows were coming to tea. How unfortunate, she thought. How fortunate, she said.

The child Monona made her knees and elbows stiff and danced up and down. She must, she must participate.

"Aunt Lulu made three pies!" she screamed, and shook her straight hair.

"Gracious sakes," said Ninian. "I brought her a pup, and if I didn't forget to give it to her."

They adjourned to the porch—Ninian, Ina, Monona. The puppy was presented, and yawned. The party kept on about "the place." Ina delightedly exhibited the tomatoes, the two apple trees, the new shed, the bird bath. Ninian said the unspellable "m—m," rising inflection, and the "I see," prolonging the verb as was expected of him. Ina said that they meant to build a summer house, only, dear me, when you have a family—but there, he didn't know anything about that. Ina was using her eyes, she was arch, she was coquettish, she was flirtatious, and she believed herself to be merely matronly, sisterly, womanly . . .

She screamed. Dwight was at the gate. Now the meeting, exclamation, banality, guffaw . . . good will.

And Lulu, peeping through the blind.

When "tea" had been experienced that evening, it was found that a light rain was falling and the Deacons and their guests, the Plows, were constrained to remain in the parlor. The Plows were gentle, faintly lustrous folk, sketched into life rather lightly, as if they were, say, looking in from some other level.

"The only thing," said Dwight Herbert, "that reconciles me to rain is that I'm let off croquet." He rolled his r's, a favorite device of his to induce humor. He called it "croquette." He had never been more irrepressible. The advent of his brother was partly accountable, the need to show himself a fine family man and host in a prosperous little home—simple and pathetic desire.

"Tell you what we'll do!" said Dwight. "Nin and I'll reminisce a little."

"Do!" cried Mr. Plow. This gentle fellow was always excited by life, so faintly excited by him, and enjoyed its presentation in any real form.

Ninian had unerringly selected a dwarf rocker, and he was overflowing it and rocking.

"Take this chair, do!" Ina begged. "A big chair for a big man." She spoke as if he were about the age of Monona.

Ninian refused, insisted on his refusal. A few years more, and human relationships would have spread sanity even to Ina's estate and she would have told him why he should exchange chairs. As it was she forebore, and kept glancing anxiously at the overburdened little beast beneath him.

The child Monona entered the room. She had been driven down by Di and Jenny Plow, who had vanished upstairs and, through the ventilator, might be heard in a lift and fall of giggling. Monona had also been driven from the kitchen where Lulu was, for some reason, hurrying through the dishes. Monona now ran to Mrs. Bett, stood beside her and stared about resentfully. Mrs. Bett was in best black and ruches, and she seized upon Monona and patted her, as her own form of social expression; and Monona wriggled like a puppy, as hers.

"Quiet, pettie," said Ina, eyebrows up. She caught her lower lip in her teeth.

"Well, sir," said Dwight, "you wouldn't think it to look at us, but mother had her hands pretty full, bringing us up."

Into Dwight's face came another look. It was always so when he spoke of this foster-mother who had taken these two boys and seen them through the graded schools. This woman Dwight adored, and when he spoke of her he became his inner self.

"We must run up-state and see her while you're here, Nin," he said.

To this Ninian gave a casual assent, lacking his brother's really tender ardor.

"Little," Dwight pursued, "little did she think I'd settle down into a nice, quiet, married dentist and magistrate in my town. And Nin into—say, Nin, what are you, anyway?"

They laughed.

"That's the question," said Ninian.

They laughed.

"Maybe," Ina ventured, "maybe Ninian will tell us something about his travels. He is quite a traveler, you know," she said to the Plows. "A regular Gulliver."

They laughed respectfully.

"How we should love it, Mr. Deacon," Mrs. Plow said. "You know we've never seen very much."

Goaded on, Ninian launched upon his foreign countries as he had seen them: Population, exports, imports, soil, irrigation, business. For the populations Ninian had no respect. Crops could not touch ours. Soil mighty poor pickings. And the business—say! Those fellows don't know—and, say, the hotels! Don't say foreign hotel to Ninian.

He regarded all the alien earth as barbarian, and he stoned it. He was equipped for absolutely no intensive observation. His contacts were negligible. Mrs. Plow was more excited by the Deacons' party than Ninian had been wrought upon by all his voyaging.

"Tell you," said Dwight. "When we ran away that time and went to the state fair, little did we think—" He told about running away to the state fair. "I thought," he wound up, irrelevantly, "Ina and I might get over to the other side this year, but I guess not. I guess not."

The words give no conception of their effect, spoken thus. For there in Warbleton these words are not commonplace. In Warbleton, Europe is never so casually spoken of. "Take a trip abroad" is the phrase, or "Go to Europe" at the very least, and both with empressement. Dwight had somewhere noted and deliberately picked up that "other side" effect, and his Ina knew this, and was proud. Her covert glance about pensively covered her soft triumph.

Mrs. Bett, her arm still circling the child Monona, now made her first observation.

"Pity not to have went while the going was good," she said, and said no more.

Nobody knew quite what she meant, and everybody hoped for the best. But Ina frowned. Mamma did these things occasionally when there was company, and she dared. She never sauced Dwight in private. And it wasn't fair, it wasn't fair—

The dishes were washed. Lulu had washed them at breakneck speed—she could not, or would not, have told why. But no sooner were they finished and set away than Lulu had been attacked by an unconquerable inhibition. And instead of going to the parlor, she sat down by the kitchen window. She was in her chally gown, with her cameo pin and her string of coral.

Laughter from the parlor mingled with the laughter of Di and Jenny upstairs. Lulu was now rather shy of Di. A night or two before, coming home with "extra" cream, she had gone round to the side door and had come full upon Di and Bobby, seated on the steps. And Di was saying:

"Well, if I marry you, you've simply got to be a great man. I could never marry just anybody. I'd smother."

Lulu had heard, stricken. She passed them by, responding only faintly to their greeting. Di was far less taken aback than Lulu.

Later Di had said to Lulu: "I s'pose you heard what we were saying."

Lulu, much shaken, had withdrawn from the whole matter by a flat "no." "Because," she said to herself, "I couldn't have heard right."

But since then she had looked at Di as if Di were some one else. Had not Lulu taught her to make buttonholes and to hem—oh, no! Lulu could not have heard properly.

"Everybody's got somebody to be nice to them," she thought now, sitting by the kitchen window, adult yet Cinderella.

She thought that some one would come for her—her mother or even Ina. Perhaps they would send Monona. She waited at first hopefully, then resentfully. The gray rain wrapped the air.

"Nobody cares what becomes of me after they're fed," she thought, and derived an obscure satisfaction from her phrasing, and thought it again.

Ninian Deacon came into the kitchen.

Her first impression was that he had come to see whether the dog had been fed.

"I fed him," she said, and wished that she had been busy when Ninian entered.

"Who, me?" he asked. "You did that all right. Say, why in time don't you come in the other room?"

"Oh, I don't know."

"Well, neither do I. I've kept thinking, 'Why don't she come along.' Then I remembered the dishes." He glanced about. "I come to help wipe dishes."

"Oh!" she laughed so delicately, so delightfully, one wondered where she got it. "They're washed—" she caught herself at "long ago."

"Well then, what are you doing here?"

"Resting."

"Rest in there. He bowed, crooked his arm. "Senora," he said—his Spanish matched his other assimilations of travel—"Senora, allow me."

Lulu rose. On his arm she entered the parlor. Dwight was narrating and did not observe that entrance. To the Plows it was sufficiently normal. But Ina looked up and said:

"Well!"—in two notes, descending, curving.

Lulu did not look at her. Lulu sat in a low rocker. Her starched white skirt, throwing her chally in ugly lines, revealed a peeping rim of white embroidery. Her lace front wrinkled when she sat, and perpetually she adjusted it. She curled her feet sidewise beneath her chair, her long wrists and veined hands lay along her lap in no relation to her. She was tense. She rocked.

When Dwight had finished his narration, there was a pause, broken at last by Mrs. Bett:

"You tell that better than you used to when you started in telling it," she observed. "You got in some things I guess you used to clean forget about. Monona, get off my rocker."

Monona made a little whimpering sound, in pretense to tears. Ina said, "Darling—quiet!"—chin a little lifted, lower lip revealing lower teeth for the word's completion; and she held it.

The Plows were asking something about Mexico. Dwight was wondering if it would let up raining at all. Di and Jenny came whispering into the room. But all these distractions Ninian Deacon swept aside.

"Miss Lulu," he said, "I wanted you to hear about my trip up the Amazon, because I knew how inter-ested you are in travels."

He talked according to his lights, about the Amazon. But the person who most enjoyed the recital could not afterward have told two words that he said. Lulu kept the position which she had taken at first, and she dare not change. She saw the blood in the veins of her hands and wanted to hide them. She wondered if she might fold her arms, or have one hand to support her chin, gave it all up and sat motionless, save for the rocking.

Then she forgot everything. For the first time in years some one was talking and looking not only at Ina and Dwight and their guests, but at her.

III.

June.

On a June morning Dwight Herbert Deacon looked at the sky, and said with his manner of originating it:

"How about a picnic this afternoon?"

Ina, with her blank, upward look, exclaimed: "Today?"

"First class day, it looks like to me."

Come to think of it, Ina didn't know that there was anything to prevent, but mercy, Herbert was so sudden. Lulu began to recite the resources of the house for a lunch. Meanwhile, since the first mention of picnic, the child Monona had been dancing stiffly about the room, knees stiff, elbows stiff, shoulders immovable, her straight hair flapping about her face. The sad dance of the child who cannot dance because she never has danced. Di gave a conservative assent—she was at that age—and then took advantage of the family softness incident to a guest and demanded that Bobby go too. Ina hesitated, partly because she always hesitated, partly because she was tribal in the extreme. "Just our little family and Uncle Ninian would have been so nice," she sighed, with her consent.

When, at six o'clock, Ina and Dwight and Ninian assembled on the porch and Lulu came out with the basket, it was seen that she was in a blue cotton house gown

"Look here," said Ninian, "aren't you going?"

"Me?" said Lulu. "Oh, no."

"Why not?"

"Oh, I haven't been to a picnic since I can remember."

"But, why not?"

"Oh, I never think of such a thing."

Ninian waited for the family to speak. They did speak. Dwight said: "Lulu's a regular home body."

And Ina advanced kindly with: "Come with us, Lulu, if you like."

"No," said Lulu, and flushed. "Thank you," she added, formally.

Mrs. Bett's voice shrilled from within the house, startlingly close—just beyond the window blind, in fact: "Go on, Lulie. It'll do you good. You mind me and go on."

"Well," said Ninian, "that's what I say. You hustle for your hat and you come along."

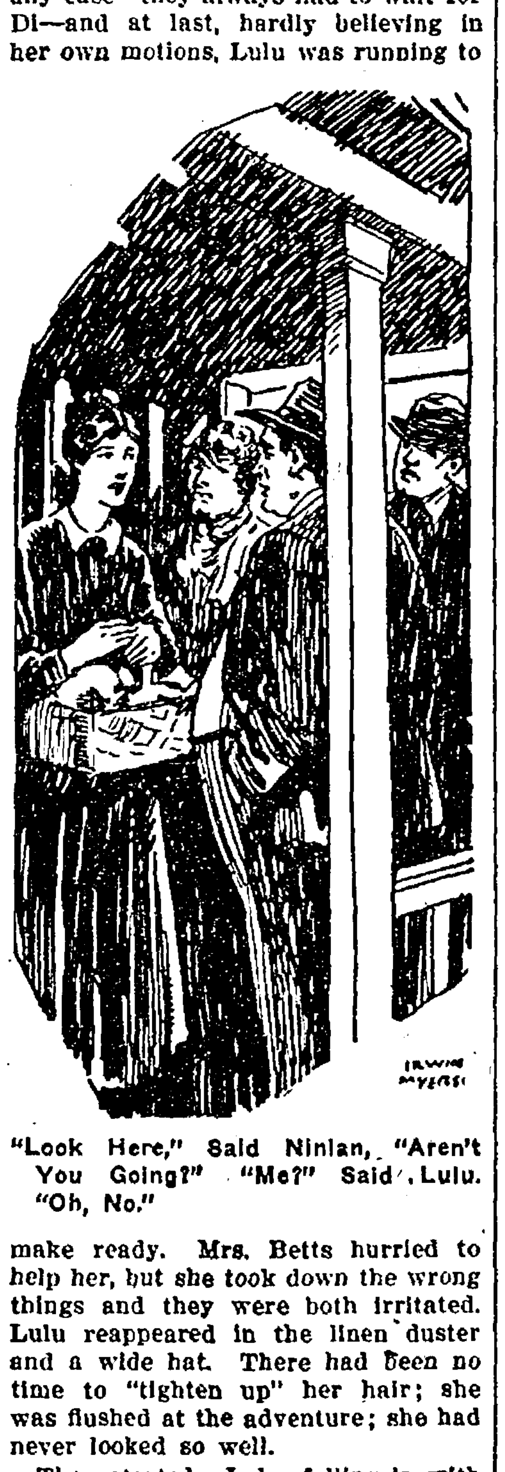
For the first time this course presented itself to Lulu as a possibility. She stared up at Ninian.

"You can slip on my linen duster, over," Ina said graciously.

"Your new one?" Dwight incredulously wished to know.

"Oh, no!" Ina laughed at the idea. "The old one."

They were having to wait for Di in any case—they always had to wait for Di—and at last, hardly believing in her own motions, Lulu was running to make ready. Mrs. Betts hurried to help her, but she took down the wrong things and they were both irritated. Lulu reappeared in the linen duster and a wide hat. There had been no time to "tighten up" her hair; she was flushed at the adventure; she had never looked so well.



"Look Here," Said Ninian, "Aren't You Going?" "Me?" Said Lulu. "Oh, No."

They started. Lulu, falling in with Monona, heard for the first time in her life, the step of the pursuing male, choosing to walk beside her and the little girl. Oh, would Ina like that? And what did Lulu care what Ina liked? Monona, making a silly, semi-articulate observation, was enchanted to have Lulu burst into laughter and squeeze her hand.

Di contributed her bright presence, and Bobby Larkin appeared from nowhere, running, with a gigantic bag of fruit.

"Bullylujah!" he shouted, and Lulu could have shouted with him.

She sought for some utterance. She wanted to talk with Ninian.

"I do hope we've brought sandwiches enough," was all that she could get to say.

They chose a spot, that is to say, Dwight Herbert chose a spot, across the river and up the shore where there was at that season a strip of warm beach. Dwight Herbert declared himself the builder of incomparable fires, and made a bad smudge. Ninian, who was a camper neither by birth nor by adoption, kept offering brightly to help, could think of nothing to do, and presently, bethinking himself of skipping stones, went and tried to skip them on the flowing river. Ina cut her hand opening the condensed milk and was obliged to sit under a tree and nurse the wound. Monona spilled all the salt and sought diligently to recover it. So Lulu did all the work. As for Di and Bobby, they had taken the pail and gone for water, discouraging her to the point of tears. But the two were gone for so long that, on their return, Dwight was hungry and cross and majestic.

"Those who disregard the comfort of other people," he enunciated, "cannot expect consideration for themselves in the future."

He did not say on what ethical tenet this dictum was based, but he delivered it with extreme authority. Ina caught her lower lip with her teeth, dipped her head and looked at Di. And Monona laughed like a little demon.

As soon as Lulu had all in readiness, and cold corned beef and salad had begun their orderly progression, Dwight became the immemorial dweller in green fastnesses. He began:

"This is ideal. I tell you, people don't half know life if they don't get out and eat in the open. It's better than any tonic at a dollar the bottle. Nature's tonic—eh? Free as the air. Look at that sky. See that water. Could anything be more pleasant?"

He smiled at his wife. This man's face was glowing with simple pleasure. He loved the out-of-doors with a love which could not explain itself. But he now lost a definite climax when his wife's comment was heard to be:

"Monona! Now it's all over both ruffles. And mamma does try so hard. . . ."

After supper some boys arrived with a boat which they beached, and Dwight, with enthusiasm, gave the boys ten cents for a half hour's use of that boat and invited to the waters his wife, his brother and his younger daughter. Ina was timid—not because she was afraid, but because she was congenitally timid—with her this was not a belief or an emotion, it was a disease.

"Dwight, darling, are you sure there's no danger?"

"Why, none. None in the world. Whoever heard of drowning in a river?"

"But you're not so very used—"

Oh, wasn't he? Who was it that had lived in a boat throughout youth, if not he?

Ninian refused out-of-hand, lighted a cigar, and sat on a log in a permanent fashion. Ina's plump figure was fitted in the stern, the child Monona affixed, and the boat put off, bow well out of water. On this pleasure ride the face of the wife was as the face of the damned. It was true that she revered her husband's opinions above those of all other men. In politics, in science, in religion, in dentistry, she looked up to his dicta as to revelation. And was he not a magistrate? But let him take oars in hand, or shake lines or a whip above the back of any horse, and this woman would trust any other woman's husband by preference. It was a phenomenon.

Lulu was making the work last, so that she should be out of everybody's way. When the boat put off without Ninian, she felt a kind of terror and wished that he had gone. He had sat down near her, and she pretended not to see. At last Lulu understood that Ninian was deliberately choosing to remain with her. The languor of his bulk after the evening meal made no explanation for Lulu. She asked for no explanation. He had stayed.

And they were alone. For Di, on a pretext of examining the flocks and herds, was leading Bobby away to the pastures, a little at a time.

The sun, now fallen, had left an even, waxen sky. Leaves and ferns appeared drenched with the light just withdrawn. The hush, the warmth, the color, were charged with some influence. The air of the time communicated itself to Lulu as intense and quiet happiness. She had not yet felt quiet with Ninian. For the first time her blind excitement in his presence ceased, and she felt curiously accustomed to him. To him the air of the time imparted itself in a deepening of his facile sympathy.

"Do you know something?" he began. "I think you have it pretty hard around here."

"I?" Lulu was genuinely astonished.

"Yes, sir. Do you have to work like this all the time? I guess you won't mind my asking."

"Well, I ought to work. I have a home with them. Mother, too."

"Yes, but glory! You ought to have some kind of a life of your own. You want it, too. You told me you did—that first day."

She was silent. Again he was investing her with a longing which she had never really had, until he had planted that longing. She had wanted she knew not what. Now she accepted the dim, the romantic interest of this role.

"I guess you don't see how it seems," he said, "to me, coming along—a stranger so. I don't like it."

He frowned, regarded the river, flicked away ashes, his diamond obediently shining. Lulu's look, her head drooping, had the liquid air of the look of a young girl. For the first time in her life she was feeling her helplessness. It intoxicated her.

"They're very good to me," she said.

He turned. "Do you know why you think that? Because you've never had anybody really good to you. That's why."

"But they treat me good."

"They make a slave of you. Regular slave." He puffed, frowning. "D—d shame, I call it," he said.

Her loyalty stirred Lulu. "We have our whole living—"

"And you earn it. I been watching you since I been here. Don't you ever go anywheres?"

She said: "This is the first place in—in years."

"Lord! Don't you want to? Of course you do!"

"Not so much places like this—"

"I see. What you want is to get away—like you'd ought to." He regarded her. "You've been a blamed fine-looking woman," he said.

She did not flush, but the faint, unsuspected Lulu spoke for her:

"You must have been a good-looking man once yourself."

His laugh went ringing across the water. "You're pretty good," he said. He regarded her approvingly. "I don't see how you do it," he mused. "blamed if I do."

"How do what?"

"Why come back, quick like that, with what you say."

ACTIVE REPRESENTATIVE—wanted by large wholesale house of high standing. Unlimited earning possibilities with opportunity to build permanent trade selling complete line of staples in constant us. A connection with a real future. State age and full details.—John Sexton & Co., Chicago, Ill.

A. H. Storm and son, Leland, of Sanborn, Iowa, were visitors several days last week at the home of Chas. Schmalle. Mr. Storm returned last week, but Leland remained for a little longer visit with his grandfather.

John Barry of Des Moines was in town a day or so last week, looking after some business interests here. He was formerly a resident of this place.

M. J. Thoe spent several days last week visiting with relatives at his former home, Lake Mills.

O. T. Jacobson is improving his store building by a new coat of paint, Jake Jacobs doing the work.

Mr. Bettin, former proprietor of the Hotel Case, left Saturday of last week for Sioux City, where he will make his home for the present. Mr. Bettin says he does not know what his future plans will be, but that he probably will go back to the hotel business.

Mr. Fred Shipley, the new proprietor of the Hotel Case, took possession on the establishment last Saturday morning. Mr. Shipley, who has resided both at Garner and Klemme, is given very high recommendations by the papers of these two towns, and Belmond people may expect the best service and accomodations from the new proprietor.

G. H. Jenison, one of Belmond's most progressive farmers and a raiser of Spotted-Polands, took second prize at the North Iowa Fair at Mason City on his entry in the Junior boar class. Mr. Jenison has also entered in the Fort Dodge fair.

Clarence Obrecht of Thornton was a visitor in town with friends over the week end.

Mrs. Sinplop of Iowa Falls was a visitor last week Thursday with Miss Ruth Polmateer, near Alexander.

Leo Kenefick, who expected to reach home the 15th on a two-weeks' vacation from his school duties at Ft. Collins, Colorado, was delayed and expects to be here some time this week.

Merle Hildebrand, who has been working near Des Moines, has been in town the past week or so. He may move his family here to live.

Mrs. T. D. Rankins was a visitor a couple of days last week with her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Leonard, at Swaledale.

The Independent is in receipt of a special booster edition of the Mankato, Minnesota, Free Press, a 40-page paper with a complete write-up of an Elks convention held there. Judging from the sheet,, Mankato is a live wire town. The paper was sent by J. S. Cook, a former resident of Belmond.

D. L. Mallory and wife are now at Rapid City, South Dakota, visiting relatives.

Harry Heuerman and family arrived Saturday night for a visit at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Heuerman. Harry had to return to his duties in the railroad station at Fairbault, Minnesota, where they reside, Sunday night, but Mrs. Heuerman and two children will remain for a few days longer stay. Harry reports Fairbault as booming, with every factory hudming and generally behind on orders. There are a number of factories of various kinds there, Fairbault being a place of about 12,000.

Mrs. Douglas, an aunt of Mrs. O. T. Jacobson, is a guest at the Jacobson home, where she will remain a few weeks. Her home is in California.

While driving into town from the south Sunday evening, Chris Sorenson was blinded by an approaching auto's lights and ran his car into the ditch at the side of the road. No damage was done, the car not turning over, but Chris had to secure help to get into the road again. Drivers using glaring headlights should be jerked up and given everything the law has to give; they are a danger to every car they meet.

Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Jacobson drove to Rowan on Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Webb spent Sunday with their son, Harry, at Ottoson, Iowa, where he has charge of the Methodist churuch. Harry is doing splendidly in his minister's duties and we are informed has very good sized congregations.

Mr. and Mrs. Harm Steenblock son Peter, and Mrs. Sarah Zook left Monday of this week on a trip to West Bend, Sibley and Rock Rapids, where they will visit relatives, and then they go on to South Dakota for a short visit there. On their return they will visit several places in Minnesota.

Kinseth's Store News

Well the big day has come and gone and today we're all holding the "post mortem." It was a pretty good all-round day, wasn't it? We hope you had a good time and that Belmond will see you often in the future. You came in to see us yesterday, and we were mighty glad to see you and hope you will come again soon. Every day is a big day with us, and we will be with you if you trade at The Store on the Corner. Any day when you can get what you want when you want it and save money too is a good day, and good goods at living prices—if you have been here you know it, and if you haven't you'll soon find it out when you come. For of course you're coming—they all do finally to the biggest little store in town, The Store on the Corner, where your dollar is worth 100 cents.

WRIGHT COUNTY BOYS WIN AT STATE FAIR

College Program Is Splendid Affair

Program At Community Club Meeting Draws Many Approving Remarks.

ALL BY BELMOND GIRLS

The college program given by the Belmond college girls at the Community Club last Friday was certainly a fine one. Everyone spoke of the remarkable talent we have among our home town girls. The club certainly appreciated the work of the leader, Miss Beatrice Leinbach, in arranging such a splendid program, and the kindness of all the girls who so willingly gave their time in taking part. Someone said admission should have been charged to such a program.

The first number was the college high school quartette. Mrs. R. H. Klemme read a very interesting paper on the early history of Iowa colleges. Miss Florence Simerson sang a beautiful solo. Miss Dorthea Okrueg played a piano solo. The quartette gave a second selection after which two Morningside girls gave an original stunt. Next came an Iowa City State University song. Mrs. R. H. Klemme, Mrs. Glenn Klemme and Mrs. L. R. Parsons sang a Cornell College song. A tragedy in two acts by Coe College girls was so tragical that the audience almost wept, after they were unable to laugh any more.

Different colleges gave yells and cheers for their Alma Matre. The college girls on the program were Esther Harwick from Ames, Erma Wilkinson, Clara Johnson, Marjorie Purcell from Morningside, Luella Christie, Olive Butts, Dortha Okrueg, Beatrice Leinbach and Elizabeth Leinbach from Coe and Florence Simerson from St. Olaf.

GOOD RESULTS ON COUNTY ROAD PROBLEM

Monitor: By the end of the present year Engineer Hilton expects to have the road work in Wright county in such shape that he will be able to dispense with about one-half of his present force. It is apparant to all that the completed gravel roads in this county are second to none the state over, many declaring that they prefer them to paving. It takes time to build good roads, but Engineer Hilton has demonstrated that it can be done.

A brief review of the road work the county over shows the following progress to have been made:

The two mile connecting link with the Wilson highway between Dows and Williams was completed Saturday and thus opens another four and one-half miles of good gravel road for travel.

The work of graveling the Clarion-Woolstock road south is progressing nicely and before winter sets in will be fully completed. The gravel on the first three miles from the Clarion end has been spread for some weeks. Several miles additional gravel has been hauled and will soon be spread. The entire length of this project is 13 and 1-2 miles and was awarded to two contractors, each beginning work at the opposite end.

On the Holmes-North road the gravel is now being hauled on the fifth mile, which completes the same to the Olson school house. None of the gravel has been spread as yet. It is proposed to continue the graveling yet this fall two miles north from the school house and two miles east. From this point to the Hancock county line is but three miles, the same being the main south road into Kanawha. In all probability this section will be graded, drained and graveled next season.

The work of grading and draining the Woolstock-Eagle Grove road is about two-thirds completed. Good progress is being made on the same.

The same work on the Clarion-Eagle Grove road is about one-half finished. This work proper starts at the Harry Sumners corner three miles south of Clarion, thence five miles west, thence one and one-half miles south and then direct into Eagle Grove on a three mile stretch.

The south nine and one-half miles of the Wilson highway in this county will have been completely graded and drained this fall, all ready for the gravel next season.

In the northeast part of the county the work of graveling the Belmond-East road is about half completed at the present time. This is a five mile stretch between that town and the Hancock county line.

It is plain to be seen that the governor of New York is not a politician. He used $8,000 of his own salary to pay state bills.

A mother with her first baby does not have much in the way of ignorance on the man with his first automobile.

TRINITY CHURCH

Mid-week service will be conducted at the church Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock.

Saturday morning the classes meet at 10 o'clock.

Sunday morning English service will be conducted at the usual hour, 11 o'clock. At this service we receive the annual offering for our Snyodical church extension fund. Please come prepared for this. We need the encouragement for the poor and needy brethern, who are without a church home. Let us therefore have a good congregation and and a good offering. It will gladden the hearts of those who give and benefit those who receive. Please come and tell others to come.

Sunday morning our Sunday school meets at the usual hour. Remember that Sunday, Sept. 10, is Rally Sunday. Let pupils and teachers take a big interest in Sunday school.

Sunday evening at 8 o'clock service will be conducted in the Norwegian language.

ST. OLAF CHURCH

Wednesday afternoon, at 1:30 the class meets at the church. Wednesday evening cottage prayer will be held at the home of Andrew Scott. As many as possible should attend these meetings. Therefore come and take someone with you.

Sunday morning Sunday school will be conducted at the church at 10:30. Let the parents and children meet together in the Sunday school. There is something worth while for all.

Wednesday afternoon Sept. 6th the North Ladies Aid meets at the home of Mrs. Andrew Linning. Better attendance is hoped for at this meeting.

Thursday afternoon Sept. 7th the South Ladies Aid meets at the home of Mrs. Elling Ellingston. We look for a good attendance at this gathering.

IOWA TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU MEETING

The next meeting of the Iowa township Farm Bureau organization will be held at the A. C. Lieuwen home two miles west and one-half mile south of Alexander, two miles east and three and one-half miles north of Rowan, and three and one-half miles south and four miles east of Belmond, Tuesday evening, September 5th. Ice cream and cake will be served, the small charge of 10 cents a dish being made to defray expenses. The following program will be given:

Music ---------- Meeker's Orchestra
Instrumental Duet ----------------
Edna Arends and Gail Thompson
Song ---------------- Arnold Myers
Talk: Woman's Work in the Farm Bureau ------ Mrs. A. E. Martin
Reading -------------- Carol Tyrrell
Duet ------------------------------
Mrs. Lyle Hall and Mrs. Lee Reed
Address —O. P. Morton of Lincoln township.
Reading ------------- Ralph Whitten
Remarks —R. M. Edwards, County Agent.
Community Singing.
Music ---------- Meekers' Orchestra

A good attendance is desired.

ALL IN A DAY

"It's all in a day," we hear men say. But what is a day—for a man, and for the woman? Custom says that eight hours is the proper amount of time that should be consumed in work in a day. The remaining sixteen hours are for rest, recreation and sleep. The husband works his eight hours at his place of business and then goes home to his supper. His day's labor is at an end. After supper he lights his pipe, picks up the paper and proceeds to post himself on the affairs of the day. Or perhaps he goes to his lodge, or "out among the boys."

But what of the wife? Does she hunt a comfortable chair, and immerse herself in her favorite book, or spend the evening with her neighbor, or in a hundred other different ways that are possible? Occasionally, but not often. The dishes must be washed up and put away after the evening meal and the kitchen and dining room must be cleaned. Then the husband has a pair of sox that need mending and some buttons to be sewed on, and possibly there is some ironing to be done, and some clothing to be made or mended for the children. The kiddies, too, need some assistance in their lessons, and the baby has to be rocked and put to sleep in its cradle. And many other things must be done of which a mere man can not think.

Yes, "it's all in a day," both for the man and the woman, but the woman seldom gets the best of it.—Exchange.

FARM BUREAU BOX SOCIAL

The Pleasant township farm burea will hold a box social on Monday, September 4th, in the evening, at the S. A. Anderson home one-half mile east and two and one-half miles north of Belmond. Everybody is invited, and ladies are requested to bring baskets. The proceeds of the social will go toward the short course to be held next winter. Mr. Anderson lives on the old Matt Sullivan place. Here's your chance to have a good time.

13-STRAIGHT TEAM LOSES NUMBER 14

Livermore Has Record Broken Sunday When Belmond Is Victorious In Game.

The much-touted ball team from Livermore, who claimed that they had not lost a game in thirteen played, lost their reputation Sunday on the local diamond when the Belmond team very neatly trimmed them by an easy score of 7 to 1. It was all Belmond's game from the start, and the ultimate result was a foregone conclusion. The boys started pounding the Livermore pitcher in the very start, and kept it up thruout the entire game. Chapman on the mound for Belmond was a Chinese puzzle for the enemy, and they never got half a dozen balls in the outfield. John threw a very nice game, and out classed his opponent in all angles of the art. Some fine playing was displayed by the local team. The line-up was as follows:

Chapman, pitcher
Fulton, catcher
Packard, 1st base
Jones, 2nd base
Nelson, 3rd base
Madsen, short stop
Dillon, left field
Foss, center field
Wenzel, right field

THIS OUGHT TO BE A RECORD BREAKER

Quite a number of Belmond folks went to Thornton last Thursday to take in the big day, but chiefly to witness the ball game between Dows and Hampton. This was certainly the most wierd and astonishing exhibition of the national sport seen in many moons. The score was 14 to 11, won by Dows, and the game was featured by thirteen—count 'em—home runs. Hampton secured eight of the thirteen, and lost the game. The Hampton second baseman only had four of the eight. Some of the drives were the hardest ever seen, several of the batters crossing the plate before the ball was touched. This many home runs in one game ought to set a record. An immense crowd was present, and at 35 cents a head Thornton made about enough to pay the day's expenses. The town entertained the largest crowd in history it is reported, running out of roast ox to feed the mob.

BARRY LOCATES HIS CAR

M. C. Barry's stolen Buick Six auto was found in the ditch near Woolstock last Wednesday, where the parties who took it from in front of the Lyric theatre a night or two before, had left it. The thieves, of whom it is believed there were four, two men and two women, had left the car in the ditch after vainly trying to get it out. In making a short detour near Woolstock where the road was blocked they got into the ditch, and after hitting a tree and burning out the clutch they left their stolen property and skipped to other parts. No one seems to know who they were or where they went, altho farmer's wife saw two men and two women walking up the road the next morning. It is thought that they were from Webster City, where it is said there is a gang of car thives hangs otu, a sort of sub-gang for Des Moines headquarters in this line of business. The car was taken to Mason City for repairs, the insurance company we understand standing the repair bill.

Last Monday evening Carl Dorenkamp was much surprised by a party of friends and relatives who gathered at his home in honor of his birthday. Those present were Mr. and Jacob Dorenkamp, Sr., and children, Mr. and Mrs. Hughie Sharp and children, Mr. and Mrs. Delbert Ainger and baby, Jake Dorenkamp, Jr., and Miss Bena Dorenkamp. Delicious refreshments were served and a very enjoyable evening was spent.

SUITS BEING FILED FOR NEXT COURT TERM

What Is Going On In District Court—One Case Entered From Belmond. 9

Monitor: B. F. Hollingshead has filed suit against W. N. Bump and Geo. Smalridge to collect the sum of $350 alleged to be the balance due on an oral contract to manage their 80 acre farm.

P. C. Rand [illegible] R. W. Frank, et al is a suit to recover amount due on a $6,000 note.

Tillinghast & Company ask for a judgment against E. L. Hollenbeck for the sum of $199 for groceries sold the defendant. About two hundred chickens were attached to secure a portion of the obligation. A second attachment was issued on Tuesday.

Thirty property owners residing within the corporate limits of Clarion have filed suit in the district court asking that their respective farm lands be severed and set apart from the said corporation. This move is made principally to get away from the excessive taxes which the city can by law levy against their lands for public improvements. This fact was brought out very forcibly when the city proposed to gravel the four main roads into Clarion. In at least one case the amount of tax to be assessed was over $1,500. If the above petition is granted, four additional miles of county road will be secured and Clarion will then be able to gravel the four remaining miles without burdening those owning agricultural tracts.

Phoebe White, admisistrator of the estate of W. H. White, brings suit against Adam Hollman, et al to recover on a note for $3,090.

The Wright county board of supervisors was in session Monday with the Franklin county board at Hampton considering matters pertaining to a joint drainage district.

County Engineer Hilton received an awful wallop on the head the other day. One might think a mule had kicked him, but not so. The gallant gentleman was assisting a lady to start her auto when the engine backfired and the crank flew off striking him a stunning blow.

Marriage licenses were issued the past week to Milan Curtis Corwin and Veta Pearl Butler, both of Clarion, Lester Thomas Bicket of St. Louis and Inez Lenore Boughton of Belmond, Chas. H. Latch and Edna Schoon, both of Iowa Falls.

SCHOOL OPENS HERE ON SEPTEMBER FOURTH

The Belmond public schools will open Monday, September 4th. The superintendent and the principal of the high school will be in the building the Thursday, Friday and Saturday previous for the purpose of enrolling students. The seniors are asked to come Thursday morning, August 31, the Juniors Friday afternoon, the Sophomores Friday forenoon and the Freshmen Friday afternoon, September 1. New pupils entering the grades are asked to present their report cards or promotion slips to the superintendent Satuday morning.

There will be a meeting of all the teachers of the corps Saturday afternoon at 2:30 p. m.

DEMPSEY BUYS BURKE'S POP CORN STAND

"Bill" Dempsey has purchased the pop corn stand of E. Burke and took possession last Friday morning of the business. The deal includes the stand itself, all supplies and so forth, the consideration not being known at this time. Bill has already started doing a very nice business he will increase the size of his sacks, is using real butter and endeavoring in all ways to give his patrons the full value of their money. He is a live wire and we predict that he will do a good business. We do not know what Burke's future intentions are.

BITES DYNAMITE CAP —JAWS BLOWN OPEN

At the home of a farmer named Lon Nagel near Greenleafton, a hired man gave a two-year-old daughter of the man of the house a stick of gum from his suitcase. He left the suitcase in his room and went about his work. Later the little one went to his room and found the open suit case and looking in it found a dynamite cap. She placed it in her mouth and bit it hard enuf to explode the cap. The force of the explosion blew her jaws open so wide that her mouth was torn and a physician had to take several stitches in her cheek to close the wound. The inside of her mouth was also badly burned and lacerated, but it is believed she will recover. —Humboldt Republican.

Three men from South Dakota, on their way to Texas in a Winton Six touring car, had the misfortune to have their car catch fire Monday afternoon near the Adolph Meinders' farm. The fire, starting it is believed from a short circuited wire from the battery, burned the top, back seat and floor of the car, but fortunately the engine and gears were uninjured and they were able to proceed on their way.

Cato Griesy is holding a demonstration on Majestic ranges from the 4th to the 9th of September.

Stock Judging Team Wins Over State

Judging Team Captures First Honors In Livestock Judging Contest For Boys.

MAY GO TO CHICAGO SHOW

A signal honor came to Wright county last week when the Wright county team of the boys' stock judging won first place in the statewide livestock judging contest at the Iowa State Fair in Des Moines.

The winning of the boys in the state contest entitles them to enter the Inter-State Fair, which will be held at Sioux City, with all their expenses paid. At [illegible] judge in competition with teams from Illinois, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas and Missouri for national honors. Should they win here they will be given a free trip to the International Livestock Show at Chicago. In addition to this the State Superintendent of Agriculture awards a trophy which if won two years in succession will become the property of that particular county.

The members of the prize-winning team from Wright county are Clarence Clark, of Lake township, Clyde Knight, of Liberty township, Everett Denby, of Lake township, and Ross Mechem, of Lincoln township, alternate.

Clarence Clark of the team won first prize in the state Individual judging contest, with a total of 711, which entitles him to a scholarship at Iowa State College and a silver loving cup valued a $50. Clyde Knight took sixth place in this contest.

Club work for boys and girls was originated in Wright county a number of years ago, and it was from here that it spread over the state, the nation, and internationally. The county has every right to be proud of the judging team that has been its representative at the state fair, and much credit should be given to County Agent Edwards for his work in developing a winning team.

TRAVEL BY AUTOMOBILE

A fleet of automobiles manned by a desperate band of gypsies invaded the business section of Rockwell City in Calhoun county, and proceeded to use high-handed methods in extracting coin from unsuspecting by-standers. Finally two women entered the First National bank when the assistant cashier, Earl Lemen, was all alone. They asked for a canvas money bag and were handed a discarded one. To show their appreciation they offered to tell Mr. Lemen's fortune which one of them proceeded to do in regulation gypsy style, and while the process was on the other women deftly extracted from a money till $65 in bills. Immediately after the departure of the women, Mr. Lemen became suspicious and decided to check up the cash. He found that he was $65.00 short. Sheriff Wolie was notified and the two women were placed under arrest. When brought to the bank by the sheriff, one of the women asked Earl Lemen for his handkerchief. As the handkerchief passed, the women slipped $40 of the money under Mr. Lemen's belt, nd pointed it out to the sheriff. He counted the money and demanded the remaining $25. The gypsy after some remonstrance, finally attempted to return the $25 in the same manner but, in her excitement, was too clumsy with her slight of hand work. The women were arrested and a fine of $15 and costs was imposed which was paid by one of the men of the party.—Garner Leader.

BANK AT SHEFFIELD IN TROUBLE

Hampton Recorder: The Sheffield Bank, owned and managed by the Carhart family at the town which bears its name, an institution that for forty years has successfully passed through many financial storms, is in trouble. Monday the Carhart brothers voluntarily closed its doors giving as a reason that they were unable to make required collections on papers.

It is said that depositors will lose nothing and there is reason to believe that the bank will reopen after readjustment is made to facilitate necessary liquidation.

The bank was organized on Jan. 1, 1880, by the late L. B. Carhart and since his death, which occurred two years ago, has been under the management of his sons, Herman L. and Ralph R. Carhart.

Ole Champlin, who was injured in an accident with a railroad speeder at Clarion last Sunday, was brought home last Friday, Wm. Dempsey bringing him home in his car. Ole is able to walk around and is on the job again, but is still pretty sore and bruised.

More Care—
More Life

Remember the old shoes you left out on the back porch—how they got stiff, misshapen and useless.

It's like that with a battery. If you neglect it you'll find that you've left the way open for a whole flock of troubles that shorten battery life.

Your battery doesn't need much attention, but it needs a little—and that regularly. The safe way is to let us care for it according to Willard Standards of Service.

Never mind the make. We look after all of 'em!

THE CARNIVAL

Eagle Grove Times: A number of cities over the country are putting the taboo on carnival companies and refuse to let them come into the city at any price. The larger cities are making a fight against these shows which leave their marks in every town. The Minneapolis Journal in urging the ban on carnivals says:

"The carnival shows that have flooded the country of recent years are all bad, or so nearly so that there should be no hesitation in shutting them out of Minneapolis. They provide a low grade of amusement in a town already provided with high grade amusement. The usually bring surething gambling schemes as a side issue. They take away large sums of money, without leaving any valuable equivalent. But the worst charge laid at the carnival's door is that it is a traveling focus of disease. This charge is supported by the testimony of many mayors and health officers in communities that have had sad experience of carnivals."

The Marshalltown Times-Republican says it has been urging this advice upon the community for years and voices its approval of the indictment of the carnival:

"The average town big enough to attract a carnival is supplied with legitimate amusements, often oversupplied. These amusement ventures are, or should be, properly regulated. They are legitimate and part of the activities and business enterprise of the town. From their point of view they deserve protection from cheap, fly-by-night carnivals, with their cheap shows, crooked methods and general uncleanliness. And their argument is sound. The carnival season is at hand. Keep the carnival out. There isn't a single good reason why it should be let in," says the Times-Republican.

Eagle Grove has had two carnivals this year and everyone knows that the community is worse off for having them. During the railroad strike the companies have stayed away from railroad towns, but we are due for one or two more before the season ends. Other towns have passed laws to keep these shows out. Laws can be passed in Eagle Grove to keep them out. Some action should be taken now before another carnival comes in.

THE SENSE GOD GAVE HENS

He was saying things about another man. Evidently he ranked the other fellow's intelligence rather low, for he said: "He hasn't the sense that God gives hens."

It's an attractive phrase in its way. It seems to cover the ground.

It's a little unfair to the hen, however. At times the hen seems to display more intelligence than humans.

The highway used to be strewed with the remains of hens which had misjudged the speed of the automobiles. If you notice now there is a comparatively small amount of dead poultry along the highways. Most of these are youthful chickens. But a few hens indeed .

So, the hen does learn. "With the sense that God gives hens," she soon learns to keep out of the way of the speeding machines. She rolls in the dust and picks along the road, but she has learned that there are forces she must calculate upon and avoid.

We don't do it. Big public utility strikes, extravagances in government, class struggles for advantage one over another, those and other things leave wrecks along the highways.

The automobile is the hen's disaster. When it hits her she becomes bankrupt as a hen. But God seems to have given her sense to adapt her self to a changed condition.

A hen never tries to pass a law which shall bring corn and worms and bugs to her bill without effort on her part. She gets down from the perch and scratches. She hunts worms and chases grasshoppers. And that is the way she gets along. She's an egg producer, hatches a clutch and provides for them. That is what a hen is for. That is her business.

Take note of the hen. Consider her ways and be wise. She knows enuff to come in out of the rain, God gave her sense enuff to know what hurts her. She has intelligence enuff to know that good, hard steady scratching uncovers the worm. And she waits to cackle euntil she has laid an egg.

After all, that is knowing a good deal. There are many things that we might learn from hens.—Stockport, Iowa, News.

DID YOU EVER THINK—

That you should be either for or against your city. If you are for it you should boost it! If you are against it you should leave it!

That you should clean up your city and keep it clean.

That you should seize every opportunity to help to exploit in your community a spirit of better and bigger business.

That most cities are big and generous enough to realize that in order to go ahead they must destroy and do away with much of the littleness, narrowness and staleness of some of their backward citizens.

That the one big thing behind all achievments is opportunity.

That many firms are waiting for business to pick up; others are realizing the opportunities of today and are forcing business by newspaper advertising.—Ackley World Democrat.

CLIPPINGS

More men are beaten by success than by failure. There are men who cannot be defeated by difficulty nor disappointment; but before praise, reward and recognition, they go tumbling down. The man who is not ahead of what the people praise him for, who is not willing to forego their praise to fulfill his program, is already on the down grade. The man who thinks he has done something, has not many more things to do. One's program should be so long and so complete that when praise comes to him it will seem to him to be trivial, or for some accomplishment which he made long ago and has left behind. The man who cannot see more things yet to do, than the public praise him for having done, is nearly through.—Ford.

In the old days it didn't make much difference what our neighbors said about us, for it couldn't be heard more than a block, but now with wireless, we are liable to have our shortcomings spread from one end of the country to the other. At the Brenner wireless a few days ago, they listened in to a speech being made at the Alta fair, and this speech, broadcasted far and wide, was made by a fair speaker. He told of the value of a fair and then disgressed to tell about Wright county letting its fair go to the wall. It made the ears of the Brenner family tingle to hear a gentle roast for the good old Wright county people going thru the air, but what could one do? Nothing!—News.

Dr. Sams says every few days people come up to his office to get permission to camp out at the fair grounds. Two young men touring the country dropped into his office Monday afternoon and asked if Clarion had a tourists camp. The doctor told them to go out to the fair grounds and camp. He says many travelers drive in and make themselves at home without permission. This matter of a public tourist camp is something that business men should get interested in. Hampton, east; Belmond, north; Goldfield, west; and Eagle Grove, southwest, and Webster City, south of us are offering the traveling public tourists camp accomodations. We know we haven't one, and from the standpoint of civic pride, if not for business benefits, we should have a tourist park.—News.

Many West Benders have doubtless been curious from time to time as to where all the cars come from that visit our city ostensibly to see Father Dobberstein's grotto and park. W. G. Wilson is one of these and to satisfy himself he made a chart and during his spare moments jotted down the county or state from which cars acme. The system of auto license numbers making this possible. During the last couple of months he has noted cars here from 73 different counties in Iowa and from 28 different states. The states represented were from each of the coasts and as far south as the Gulf. Truly the Grotto is advertising West Bend in great shape.—West Bend Journal.

Two men lived side by side, and each owned a dog. Each day as one man went home his dog would rush to greet him, joyful over the return of its master. Whenever the other man entered his gate his dog would slink out of sight. Dogs are good judges of the true inwardness of a man.—Hampton Recorder.

BUSINESS PERSONALS

The Variety Store recently got in around $55 worth of harmonicas, or mouth organs, and has but a few left, having sold the biggest share of them. Harmonicas were difficult to get during the war, and we believe these were the first brought to town since then.

O. T. Jacobson has had the second coat of paint put on his store, and now has a nifty looking place of business.

Townsan Hardware have just received a large shipment of Pyrex kitchen ware. This ware is one of the best, stands the hard knocks, and the Townsan Hardware report that they are one of their best sellers.

The opening of the Hat Shoppe occured last Saturday, and Mrs. Rosecrans, the genial proprietor, entertained a good many of the ladies of this vicinity that day. The shop has been very nicely remodeled and makes an attractive place.

B. K. Kinseth made a wise remark the other day. When asked how business was he said it was FINE. Asked if he thought his advertising was worth while he remarked "If it didn't pay I wouldn't be doing it." Judging from his crowded store then, it must be paying.

Jim Adams has put in a complete line of supplies for school students, and this week takes space in the Independent to tell parents about them. Jim has been doing a nice business.

With the boss gone on a vacation, Griesy's hardware store has been under the able charge of Leppo Dorenkamp. Leppo has been with Cato some years, and knowing the business from table forks to corn cultivators he has given comlete service and satisfaction.

E. M. Lathrop returned the first of the week from the north, where he had been on business. During his absence E. A. Pierce was in charge of the produce business and he reports good trade.

ALL ABOUT VACUUM TUBE AS AMPLIFIER

Connected Up to Furnish Rated Filament Current and Maintain Plate Potential.

Figure XXIV shows a three-electrode vacuum tube connected with the "A" battery to furnish the rated filament current and a "B" battery to maintain rated plate potential. In the plate circuit is a current meter to read the plate current. A "C" battery is connected in the grid circuit to maintain the grid at the positive potential O-A in order to have the tube operate at the point A on the characteristic curve. To T-T will be connected the alternating difference of potential having a maximum positive value equal to A-O and a maximum negative value equal to A-B.

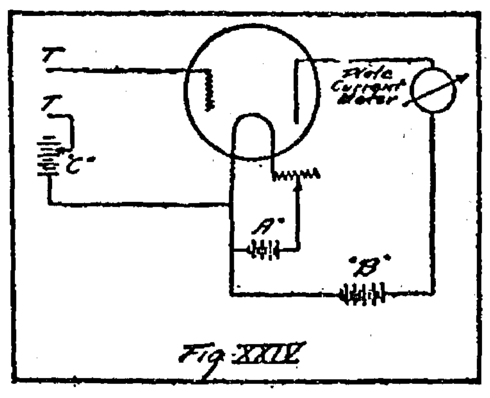

Fig XXIV

The resulting variation in plate current is shown in Fig. XXV. Inserting the tube functioning as an amplifier, with an amplification factor of K, between the supply of alternating difference of potential at T-T, was just K times what it actually is.

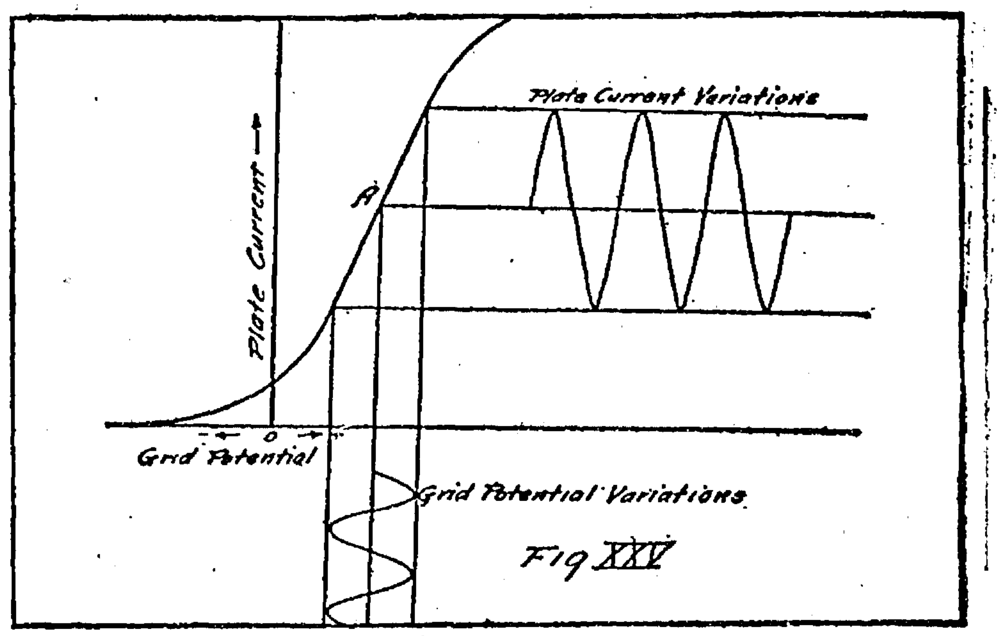

Fig XXV

All these considerations have been based on the assumption that the total impedance (resistance to the flow of an alternating current) of the entire plate circuit existed internally in the tube between the filament and the plate, and that the external electrical circuit from the plate to the filament had zero impedance. Of course, this condition never exists in practice. The external plate circuit always has impedance in it in the form of telephone receivers, resistance choke coils, or transformer primaries, depending upon the means that is employed to couple the successive tubes together.

It is only where the external plate circuit of a vacuum tube has zero impedance that the plate voltage is equal to that of the "B" battery. As soon as an impedance is introduced into the external plate circuit, part of the total potential of the "B" exists as a drop across the external impedance, so that only a portion of the total "B" battery is available at the plate.

Fig. XXVI represents the characteristic curve of the tube as we have been discussing it, with no impedance in the external plate circuit. This curve is called the "static" characteristic curve, to differentiate from the others. Suppose that we introduce into the external plate circuit an impedance in the form of a resistance as shown by R in Fig. XXVII. When the current flows around through the plate circuit, there will be a voltage drop across the resistance R equal in value to R times I, where I is the plate current in amperes. If the internal impedance of the tube be denoted by Z, then the drop in voltage from the plate to the filament inside of the tube is ZI. The sum of these two voltage drops, ZI plus RI, is always equal to the applied voltage of the "B" or plate circuit battery. The voltage of the "B" battery is constant.

As the plate current increases, the value of RI increases because R, the external plate resistance, does not change in value. So if the sum of ZI plus RI is always equal to a constant when RI increases, ZI must decrease. This means that when a constant "B" battery potential is applied to the plate circuit of a vacuum tube, containing external resistance, an increase in plate current causes a decrease in the potential existing between the plate and the filament.

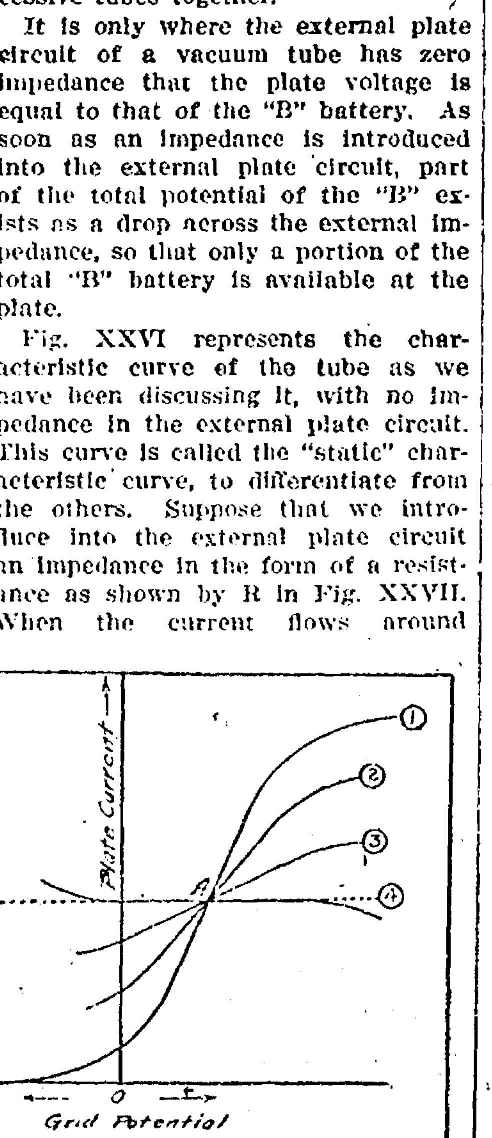

Fig XXVI

The "static" characteristic curve was drawn on the assumption that the difference in potential between the plate and the filament remained constant, obviously then, when the external plate circuit has other than zero impedance, the static characteristic curve no longer holds true.

The characteristic curve of a tube having other than zero impedance in the external plate circuit is the "dynamic" characteristic. The greater the variations in plate current, the greater the variation in the voltage existing between the plate and the filament. If the value of R, the external plate impedance, is increased, the greater will be the variation in the plate to filament voltage for the same variation in plate current.

In Fig. XXVI (2) is represented the dynamic characteristic of a tube with a certain definite value of R in the plate circuit. Curve (3) represents the dynamic characteristic of the same tube with a larger value of R in the plate circuit. Finally the extreme condition is reached, in which R is made infinitely high and the dynamic characteristic becomes parallel to the grid voltage axis as in (4). This shows that variations of grid potential would produce no variation of plate current, but maximum variations of plate variations of plate potential. These would be amplified variations of grid potential variations.

This last condition of having the variations of plate potential amplified variations of grid potential variations is the ideal condition sought for in vacuum tube amplifiers.

In Fig. XXVII as the current of the plate circuit flows through the resistance R there is a drop in potential across R between the points X and Y that will be proportional to the current flowing. If the value of R and the plate potential are high enough this potential variation between X and Y will be exactly proportional to and K times that applied to the grid of the tube at T-T.

To amplify a signal from a radio receiver then, it is only necessary to have a circuit whose output is to be amplified connected to T-T and the amplified output taken off at X and Y. If greater amplification is desired the output from X and Y is run through another circuit similar to that shown in Fig. XXVII.

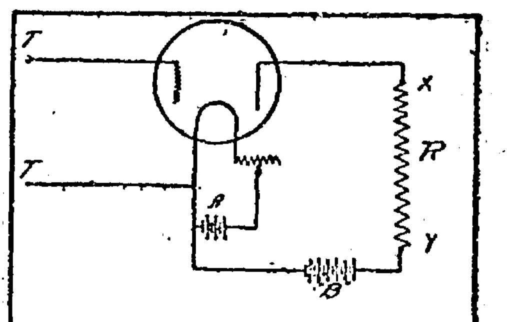

Fig XXVII

SPARKS

The "Totemites," a society of radio fans at Seattle, decided that receiving code signals during broadcast programs is inevitable, and instead of registering complaints, opened a free school to its members for instruction in the code.

People living in isolated sections are getting great satisfaction from radio, as it is a cure for loneliness. They not only feel that they have friends within "speaking distance" but that entertainers of the highest grade are next door neighbors.

Major General Squire, chief signal officer, U. S. A., told the graduates of the Camp Vail signal school there had been greater developments in radio in the past decade than in any other science. Also that in future wars barrages and bombardments would be laid down by radio.

The British have developed a two-purpose vacuum tube for use in conjunction with radio. The new tube, or valve, as it is called in England, is the Mullard Ora. The plate voltage is given as 30, and the filament voltage at 3.6 to 4. The base of the tube is of the four-prong type. It is said to combine efficiently the qualities of the rectifier and amplifier, which make it possible to use one tube for all purposes.

Farm Bureau News

Vernon Holds Social

One of the livliest social meetings ever held in Vernon township was staged at the Glen Knox home southwest of Dows on last Monday evening, August 21st, when about 300 farmers, their wives and families gathered for this occasion. The Knox home was beautifully decorated and ample seating capacity was provided on the front lawn of the farm home.

R. E. Lee Aldrich of Iowa township was the principal speaker of the evening and gave a most able address on farm conditions of the present day. Mr. Aldrich, who is one of the progressive farmers of Iowa township, is not only a good farmer but is also a man who is capable of expressing himself very convincingly before an audience. His address at the Vernon social is evidence of the fact that he is a student of national problems, particularly along lines of agriculture and the farmers of Vernon township seemed very much pleased with the thoughts presented by Mr. Aldrich.

Another feature of this meeting was the poultry club demonstration which was put on by Miss Amy Benson of Dayton township and Marie Hinckley of Blaine township, the two girls who are representing Wright county at the state fair this year. A varied program consisting of dialogues, readings, recitations and several musical numbers was also given at this social and everyone seemed ed to have a very enjoyable time.

Club Teams At Fair

County Agent Edwards and Mrs. L. F. Dorr are in Des Moines this week in charge of the three club teams which are demonstrating at the fair this week. The grain and live stock judging team consisting of Clyde Knight, Clarence Clark, Everett Denby and Ross Mechem, alternate, will judge classes each of draft horses, fat steers, fat hogs and dairy cattle, also two classes of corn. The poultry club team team will demonstrate the method of culling and the garment club team will demonstrate the different home made dresses which have been made by th club girls this year.

The county agent took the live stock judging team to Fort Dodge fair last Tuesday and the boys entered the individual judging contest where about four counties were represented. Clarence Clark of Lake township placed third in the individual judging work. The Wright county boys took third place in the team judging contest. The boys spent last Thursday afternoon judging horses and Duroc hogs at the home of W. F. Mechem east of Clarion.

This is the first year that Wright county has had club teams at the Iowa state fair and it is hoped that the boys and girls will make a good showing for their county, because all club work, state national and international had its origin in Wright county a few years ago. It is certain that these youngsters will benefit greatly by their trip to the state fair and it is hoped that the club work in Wright county will continue and that next year Wright county will have a larger representation than ever in the club department.

Garment Teams Changed

Amy Benson of Daytown township has consented to help the Grant township girls in their demonstration work at the fair this year. Lola Flurer, who was selected originally as a representative on the garment club team, decided not to take part and Mrs. Dorr decided in the eleventh hour to ask Amy Benson to substitute and we are told that the girls have prepared a very good demonsration in the short time they have had to prepare for the work.

Mrs. L. F. Dorr should be commended very highly for her untiring efforts put forth in training the girls for the garment club demonstration which has taken considerable time and a lot of patience to train the girls for his demonstration and bring home the bacon.

Creamery Celebration a Success

The creamery day celebration which was held at Belmond, Wednesday, August 23rd, was a big success from the standpoint of attendance and general community interest. The city park and streets of Belmond were literally packed with about 3,000 people of Belmond and surrounding community.

A splendid program consisted of a very able address by W. A. Wentworth of Des Moines and a short talk by G. H. Tellier of Cedar Rapids. The Belmond picnic celebration was really a community affair and the spirit of co-operation which was in evidence at this celebration is the community spirit which cements the people of any community closer together.

HAMPTON MEN GET FIVE YEARS

Hampton Chronicle: Judge Thompson, of Webster City, held court in Hampton yesterday and sentenced several men who were being held for trial. The men had all plead guilty to the charges against them so there was no need for them to wait until court convened in September to have their sentence fixed.

Edward Schoemer and Ernst Hanna were sentenced to not over five years in the state reformatory at Anamosa for breaking into and entering the office of the farmers elevator Company in this city and stealing an automobile and driving it to Chapin.

Harold Walsh was sentenced to four months in the county jail for breaking and entering the W. G. Atzbaugh garage in this city.

Louis Crawford was given a fine of $300 or ninety days in the county jail for stealing an automobile and driving to Chapin.

Else Eden and Dallas Bailey were both given fines of $200 on a bootlegging charge. Niles Anderson, who was arrested at the same time on a similar charge will have to appear before the grand jury in September as he did not enter a plea of guilty at the time of his original hearing.

FORD TO SHUT DOWN ALL PLANTS SEPT. 16TH

Henry Ford's great motor plants in and around Detroit will be closed down Sept. 16 because of lack of coal it was announced. In the neighborhood of 60,000 men will be thrown out of work here as a result.

Mr. Ford recently failed in his efforts before the interstate commerce commission to make arrangements for hauling coal over his own railroad into Detroit from connecting railroads leading from the Kentucky fields.

Assembly plants of the Ford company thruout the country also will be closed, it was stated bringing the number of employees effected by the suspension to approximately 85,000.

Concerns that supply the Ford company with material were notified today to stop shipments.

Explaining the order to close the plants, Mr. Ford said that by Sept. 16 the company's reserve stock of fuel will have been exhausted and only sufficient fuel will be left to keep the furnaces and ovens warm.

Asked when he hoped the plants could resume oprations Mr. Ford declared he had not the remotest idea.

The shutdown Mr. Ford added comes at a time "when we are doing a greater business than ever before in our history."

The normal daily coal consumption of the Ford industries here is 3,800 tons. Officials of the company declined to estimate the exact amount of fuel on hand but declared the company engineers held that by Sept. 16 it would be reduced to the point where only sufficient coal would be left to keep the ovens and boilers warm.—Des Moines Sunday Register.

Belmond Local News

George Snyder, who has been a guest at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Snyder, the past week or so, started on his return trip to Fort Worth, Texas, Friday last. He will visit relatives at Harcourt and Kansas City, Missouri on the way.

Alma Stapley returned last week from her visit with relatives at Goldfield.

ONE MORE WEEK WANTED

(Livermore Gazette)

Cabbage week is over. Far and wide, no doubt, the great event was celebrated, the delicious incense from its shrine has floated forth upon many benighted mortals who might have passed unawares. The lovers of the toothsome morsel have had their fill.

In company with the dainty corn beef, in the briny ferment of sauerkraut or in the mystery of the salad, the lordy cabbage has paraded for a whole week down the paths of boarding house menu. No unkind word has been allowed to mar its journey. It was Cabbage Week, so designated by those in the seats of the mighty. What epicurean would dare to turn, at the thought of the splendid vegetable.

Smile week has gone, and we have to smile about it still. Gingham week is past, and sales may now begin. We have had home-coming week, and tree week, and flower week, apple week, and paint week, in fact every little kind of a week that the advertising manager can think about, and induce a gullible mayor, or governor, or somewhat higher to issue a proclamation about.

Nearly all the weeks are pretty well filled, but there should be one left. Just one week, officially proclaimed, dedicated, consecrated, and set aside. Let's have one week for pure undiluted buncombe.

Here's to Bunk Week.

FORMER HUMBOLDTER GETS 300 PATENTS —FIREPROOF LIQUID

Humboldt Republican: Arthur Arent, former Humboldt citizen, has at last been granted his patents on his fire- liquid with which he paints any known combustable material and makes it impervious to fire or heat.

It has been known in Humboldt that Arthur Arent has been several years in persuit of the United States patent office to secure patents on his compound. He has at last succeeded. He is also the first man who has received such a patent. The government has steadfastly refused to grant a patent on such compounds, but at length were prevailed on, owing to the value of the discovery, to allow the patent.

Mr. Arent's patent will make the use of his fluid universal. When applied to wood the wood cn be placed in a fire, and it will become red hot like a piece of iron, but will not burn. Silk treated with the Arent solution can not be burned. Wood treated by this same solution will neither burn nor rot. Ships treated with this solution will neither rot nor burn. They can be made almost everlasting.

The above information was received at this office in a letter from Mr. Arent's business associates, and we feel certain that they would not have given out the information had it not been authentic.

IOWA'S BEAUTIFUL GIRLS

(Waukon Republican and Standard.)

A Des Moines newspaper has been conducting a beautiful girl contest to find the most beautiful girl in Iowa. They're on the wrong track. We have discovered the way to find 'em. Just go up to Spirit Lake or Okoboji and wander down to the bathing beaches. There you can look 'em over—all over and see so much more than you can in a photograph. Beauty is not confined to the face—not by a darn sight. Why at Okoboji one hardly ever has a chance to look at the face. We saw attractions that would be none the less interesting, face or no face. Rear views, profiles, birdseye, telescopic—that's the way to find the beauties, and they're all at the summer beaches.

HE SAYS IT'S WRONG

Prof. L. H. Pammel of Ames, president of the Iowa Conservation Commission is deeply concerned in the conservtion of the natural resources of the state. He looks upon lakes, ponds, swamps, marshes and the like as valuable in that they afford a breeding place for fish and wild fowls as well as fur bearing animals. He states that not a single lake that has been drained has afforded land suitable for farming as was expected because of wild and acid conditions of the soil. He contends that in most cases the straightening of streams is a mistake in that it destroys the breeding places of fish because of the elimination of deep holes. According to Dr. Pammel the lake area in Iowa is about 43,000 acres. Spirit Lake, the largest body of water has an erea of 5,660 acres. West Okoboji has an expanse of 3,788 acres, Clear Lake, 3,640 acres and Storm Lake, 3,683 acres.

GRAND OLD MEN

However severe may be the strain of life in America, it has not prevented the attainment of old age, and in most cases of vigorous old age, by a number of our leading citizens. America's list of grand old men embraces various professionals. John Wanamaker, who has just celebrated his 84th birthday, stands out as a pioneer merchant. Uncle Joe Cannon, at 86, is still active in political life. John A. Stewart, 100 years old, attends to his banking business in Wall street and is a remarkable active force in modern life. Lyman Abbott, clergyman and editor, can still make a good speech at 87 years. Chauncey Depew and Charles W. Elliot have seen 176 years between them. The list complete would cover the names in a considerable part of the political, edcuation and public affairs since 1850. Most noticeably absent from the list of octogenarians are men prominent as artists. Politics, banking and medicine seem to agree best with the human constitution.—New York Sun.

A goodly number from this place spent last Thursday at Thornton at the "Big Day" celebration.

A Five-Minute Sermon on Church Advertising

DID you ever think of the church as a business proposition? Why should a church always be considered a subject for charity? How often have you heard men say: "I don't go to church very often, but when I do go they are always begging for money. That's the reason I don't go oftener."

It's a narrow point of view, of course, for a church needs money to run it, just the same as a business. But why shouldn't a church be run as a business and be INdependent and not DEpendent? It can be, but business methods must be adopted.

All successful businesses advertise. The greatest competitor of the church on Sundays—the movies—advertises liberally. You have attractions in your church. You have a story to tell. You have a minister who can preach with a punch. The "regulars" may know it, but it isn't the "regulars" you want to reach—it's the "irregulars" and the "neverwuzzers." That's where the church has got to grow. And you have got to go after them the same as the business house goes after business.

You know that every business man keeps track of his sales every week and every month and he compares them with a year ago. And if he isn't running ahead he wants to know why. Do the churches keep track of their attendance? They know what the subscriptions are, for that's vital; yet increased attendance would mean increased subscriptions.

The church should cease to be DEpendent. It should go after business Ministers who have tried it have been well compensated. Supposing this advertisement should appear in this paper this week:

FIRST REFORMED CHURCH
This Sunday Evening at 7:45
THE REV. JOHN KNOX ALLEN, D. D. will preach on "OUR TOWN"
Front Seats Free. Rear Seats, Ten Cents Each.
You'll be surprised. Come out and hear a worth-while sermon. A special invitation to all. We would like to see YOU in church. Special music.

Don't you think it would help? Wouldn't it start some talk about the church? Wouldn't the people say, "Well, I guess the church people are waking up?" The cost of the advertisement would be small, but the results would be big.

Think it over. Why shouldn't our churches stand on their own feet and be run in a businesslike way? Why shouldn't the people be educated to the fact that it takes money to run a church, that it is not a charity organization and that people ARE EXPECTED to contribute to it.

What would this town be without churches? You would not live in it, for it wouldn't be a fit place to live in. You need the church. The church needs you and the church needs advertising.

ANOTHER MAIL ROBBERY AT BRITT DEPOT

Another mail robbery took place at Britt, Thursday night between the hours of ten and twelve-thirty o'clock at the M. & St. L. depot, when a thief or thieves broke in the door to the waiting room where the mail sacks and pouches are stored for the night trains, and got away with one pouch of fist class mail going out from Britt on No. 3. Alac Anderson, the depot agent was there until ten o'clock that evening and reports there was no sign of any one around that would attempt such an act and the robbery was discovered by the night man, Del Redmond, at twelve-thirty when he was due on duty. No clue to the robbery has been found.

One of the windows to the waiting room was opened about six inches; it is thot they attempted to gain entrance there first nd did not succeed.—News-Tribune.

GAYER TINTS FOR MOTOR CARS

Automobiles in brighter colors is the prediction in the automobile world Crimsons, lilacs and sea greens will not be so unusual, they say, from now on, and some day, a thronged boulevard may look like a moving rainbow.

Being a machine the motor may never develop the attractive lines of grace of the horse, but it has possibilities of gorgeousness, from gay colors to gilding.

The man who broke the bank at Monte Carlo would have probably driven a gold-plated gasoline chariot if such vehicles had existed in his day.

Once the highly decorated automobile comes into vogue, its splendor might be emphasized until the magnificence of a rhinestone-encrusted car dazzles the eye of the world.

THE CARELESS SMOKER

A fool there was and his pipe he lit
(Even as you and I)
On a forest trail where the leaves were fit
To become ablaze from the smallest bit
Of spark—and the fool he furnished it.
The day was windy nd dry.

The forest was burned to its very roots,
Even beneath the ground,
With the flowers, the birds and the poor dumb brutes,
Old hoary oaks, and the tender shoots
Which might have made logs but for such galoots
Allowed to wander around.

The lumber jack has now passed on
His pay-day comes no more
And the screech-owls hunt the camp at dawn
Where the cook's tin pan woke the men of brawn.
But the mill's silent, the trees are gone,
The soil and the forest floor.

A deadly sight are those hills of rocks
Which once were beds of green
No hope for the human, no food for the flocks
The floods must be held by expensive locks
And the harbor is silted to the docks,
The ships no more are seen.

But the fool smokes on in the forest still Leaves camp-fires burning too,
While the patient public pays the bill
And the nation's wealth is destroyed for nil
If the law doesn't get him, Old Satan will
When his smoking days are through.

—Harris A. Reynolds with apologies to Kipling.

KNOCKS OVER LAMP POST

Some automobile driver ran into the lamp post at the intersection of Broadway and Jackson Avenue on Sunday evening and broke off the post at its base. Those who witnessed the accident state that the car was badly damaged but the driver failed to stop to investigate the extent of the damage and passers by failed to secure the license number of the car.—Eagle Grove Times.

THREE PLACES ARE ROBBED

Someone evidently thought we needed a little excitment here, so volunteered to play the robbery game. Some time after 12:30 Thursday morning someone broke into the Hulsebus-Muller store, gaining entrance by cutting thru an upstairs window, taking about $55 in silver. Nothing else was missed except Mr. Muller's revolver, which was later found in the Raecker garage. Next they went to the Jones' restaurant, gaining entrance thru the basement window. About a dozen packages of Bull Durham tobacco was all that was missed here. The Raecker garage was next entered thru a window, where about $5 was taken from the cash register, and a Ford touring car, well filled with gas and oil, was taken thus making their getaway. Indications point to local talent work. Sheriff Marsh was immediately notified and arrived about 10 o'clock to investigate. Raecker's car was located at Mason City and returned the same day, but the thieves and Mr. Muller's cash and Mr. Jones' tobacco are still missing.

MEAT MARKET IS SOLD

On Thursday afternoon the meat market was sold at public auction, Engel Ruitter and Heinie Waage being the successful bidders. Patrons congratulate themselves on having these fine young men starting out in this business, both being well qualified for this work. Now it is up to us to do our share to back them up in their new undertaking by giving them a liberal share of our patronage. Success to you, boys!

Those who motored from here Sunday to attend the Tabernacle meetings at Cedar Falls were Mr. and Mrs. Garfield Raecker and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Muller and daughters. There was a large crowd in attendance, people from near and far, it being the last day of the Assembly. The principal speakers of the day were Bishop L. H. Seager, of Naperville, Ill., and Rev. W. H. Beachler, pastor of First Brethern church at Waterloo. C. H. Wieand, Harrisburg, Pa., had charge of the song services, and the sacred concert was given by the choirs of Waterloo 1st and Calvary churches.

NOT TOO LATE FOR GARDEN

If the farm garden is to continue producing until late in the fall, the late crops must be planted very soon says C. V. Holsinger, extension specialist in small fruits at Iowa State College. Three late crops are recommended by Mr. Holsinger, radishes, lettuce and endives.

If the latter are to produce before frost, they must be planted at once, according to Mr. Holsinger. Radishes, which require only about four or five weeks to produce, can be planted as late as Aug. 15 to 25.

Mr. Holsinger suggests that the best results can be secured with the flat leaf endive rather than the curled leaf. The seed should be planted rather thick and later thinned so that the plants are from a foot to 15 inches apart in rows.

A practical way to bleach the endives is to gather the leaves together into a loose bundle and tie them up with a string. The result is a plant very much like head lettuce with white crisp leaves, which make an excellent salad material.

We all feel better since the big heat spell was broken Thursday night. A good shower of rain visited this section and since then the weather has been grand and one can breathe with more ease.

Wm. Messelheiser has rented his farm to R. F. G. Gobeli for next year. The Messelheisers expect to remain in the farm home and take things more easy, and Robert expects to be batchelor in the small house formerly occupied by the ired men. We understand however, that there is nothing in the contract to prevent him from taking in a helpmate in the kitchen.

H. T. Swenson of Huxley has been here for several days looking after his farm interests north of town.

Jesse Brogan of Thornton and A. C. Brogan of Marinette, Wis., were greeting old friends here last Friday.

The W. F. Butz family left Friday morning via auto for Des Moines where they will spend several days at the state fair.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pieper arrived here Thursday from Iowa Falls, where they had been spending a week with the former's parents having left their home in Naperville, Ill., via the auto route on Wednesday the week previous. They left Friday for River View Park, Cedar Falls, to attend Camp Meeting in session there. Mr. and Mrs. C. Bier accompanied them.

A. E. Muller, Henry Proost and Harm Groen motored to Mason City Friday afternoon on a business errand.

C. E. Brogan, Marvel and Vere motored to Garner Friday to make arrangements to move the family into the house they will occupy about Sept 1s.

Mrs. L. B. Hulsebus, George Brater and Donald Muller returned from Cedar Falls, Thursday, where they had spent the fore part of the week attending the Y. P. A. and S. S. convention at River View Park. Mrs. Hulsebus represented the local Young People's Alliance and George Brater was the delegate chosen for the Sunday school.

Mrs. Bert Frey had the misfortune of falling down cellar at her home, Thursday, while busy about the home duties. At present she is resting fairly well, but the extent of her injuries has not yet been fully determined.

Miss Wilhelmine Loats is spending a few days at the parental home, while Mr. and Mrs. Loats and two daughters are visiting in the southwestern part of the state with relatives. They made the trip in their car.

Mrs. A. E. Muller returned from Cedar Falls the first of the week, where she had been in attendance at the annual assembly at River View Park as a delegate for the Woman's Missionery society.

Miss Eletha Taylor has been spending a few days with friends here.

Crist Enabnit of Des Moines is spending a week here with relatives and friends.

Thelma Thomas who has been confined to her room for a number of weeks, is slowly recovering.

Mr. and Mrs. Dick Nordman and Mr. and Mrs. Abbes of Ackley spent several days at the Ben Gruis home. They left Saturday for Buffalo Center where they will visit with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Vierkant and two younger children spent a few days with relatives at Buck Grove, Iowa, and vicinity, returning Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Nissen and children accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. H. Reif departed Sunday for Des Moines where they will take in the fair for a few days.

"So you graduated from a barber college? What was your college yell?" "Cut his lip, cut his jaw, leave his face raw, raw, raw!"

Mr. and Mrs. Simon Fischer and daughter Gladys motored to Mason City Sunday to spend the day at the Geo. J. Fischer home.

Supt. Herbster was in town Friday attending to matters pertaining to the school work here.

Mr. and Mrs. Nick Freese and two children from Dike, and Crist Boike wife and son, of Cedar Falls, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. B. Gruis. Mrs. Freese and Mr. Boike are daughter and son of Mrs. Gruis.

Miss Rose Nicolet of Thornton spent a few days the fore part of the week with Mildred Gealow at the A. J. Nissen home.

Harm Groen and family and Dan Smith and family were Sunday visitors at the Henry Groen home at Belmond.

David Mosher from Colorado was greeting him many old time friends here the first of the week. From here he went to Soo Rapids to visit at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Wm. Leighton.

The Crist Wendel family returned from Tama last Thursday, where they had been visiting relatives of Mrs. Wendell.

The C. E. Brogan family loaded their household effects and had them trucked to Garner, Monday, where they will make their future home. The Brogans have made this their home for the past 15 years and they will be greatly missed. The move was made so the children might gain the advantage of an accredited school. Here's hoping that the school problem here may soon be changed for the better, thus avoiding any more exodus of school patrons who have the welfare of their children at heart. Mr. Brogan will remain here for the time being, to conduct the business of the grain and cream station as heretofore.

Tenus Johnson of Alexander was in town last Saturday greeting his friends. Mr. Johnson has just returned from a year's stay in Germany. He reports that Mr. and Mrs. Hulsebus are well and happy but are anxious to get home. They expect to sail Oct. 18 which is the earliest date on which they could secure passage.

MISS LULU BETT

Lulu's heart was beating painfully. The effort to hold her own in talk like this was terrifying. She had never talked in this fashion to anyone. It was as if some matter of life or death hung on her ability to speak an alien tongue. And yet, when she was most at loss, that other Lulu, whom she had never known anything about, seemed suddenly to speak for her. As now:

"It's my grand education," she said.

She sat humped on the log, her beautiful hair shining in the light of the warm sky. She had thrown off her hat and the linen duster, and was in her blue gingham gown against the sky and leaves. But she sat stiffly, her feet carefully covered, her hands ill at ease, her eyes rather piteous in their hope somehow to hold her vague own. Yet from her came these sufficient, insouciant replies.

"Education," he said laughing heartily. "That's mine, too." He spoke a creed. "I ain't never had it and I ain't never missed it."

"Most folks are happy without an education," said Lulu.

"You're not very happy, though."

"Oh, no," she said.

"Well, sir," said Ninian, "I'll tell you what we'll do. While I'm here I'm going to take you and Ina and Dwight up to the city."

"To the city?"

"To a show. Dinner and a show. I'll give you one good time."

"Oh!" Lulu leaned forward. "Ina and Dwight go sometimes. I never been."

"Well, just you come with me. I'll look up what's good. You tell me just what you like to eat, and we'll get it—"

"I haven't had anything to eat in years that I haven't cooked myself."

He planned for that time to come, and Lulu listened as one intensely experiencing every word that he uttered. Yet it was not in that future merrymaking that she found her joy, but in the consciousness that he—some one—anyone—was planning like this for her.

Meanwhile Di and Bobby had rounded the corner by an old hop-house and kept on down the levee. Now that the presence of the others was withdrawn, the two looked about them differently and began themselves to give off an influence instead of being pressed upon by overpowering personalities. Frogs were chorusing in the near swamp, and Bobby wanted one. He was off after it. But Di eventually drew him back, reluctant, frogless. He entered upon an exhaustive account of the use of frogs for bait, and as he talked he constantly flung stones. Di grew restless. There was, she had found, a certain amount of this to be gone through before Bobby would focus on the personal. At length she was obliged to say, "Like me today?" And then he entered upon personal talk with the same zest with which he had discussed bait.

"Bobby," said Di, "sometimes I think we might be married, and not wait for any old money."

They had now come that far. It was partly an authentic attraction, grown from out the old repulsion, and partly it was that they both—and especially Di—so much wanted the experiences of attraction that they assumed its ways. And then each cared enough to assume the pretty role required by the other, and by the occasion, and by the air of the time.

"Would you?" asked Bobby—but in the subjunctive.

"She said: "Yes, I will."

"It would mean running away, wouldn't it?" said Bobby, still subjunctive.

"I suppose so. Mamma and papa are so unreasonable."

"Di," said Bobby, "I don't believe you could ever be happy with me."

"The idea! I can, too. You're going to be a great man—you know you are."

Bobby was silent. Of course he knew it—but he passed it over.

"Wouldn't it be fun to elope and surprise the whole school?" said Di, sparkling.

Bobby grinned appreciatively. He was good to look at, with his big frame, his head of rough, dark hair, the sky warm upon his clear skin and full mouth. Di suddenly announced that she would be willing to elope now.

"I've planned eloping lots of times," she said ambiguously.

It flashed across the mind of Bobby that in these plans of hers he may not always have been the principal, and he could not be sure . . . But she talked in nothings, and he answered her so.

Soft cries sounded in the center of the stream. The boat, well out of the strong current, was seen to have its oars shipped; and there sat Dwight Herbert gently rocking the boat. Dwight Herbert would.

"Bertie, Bertie—please!" you heard his Ina say.

Monona began to cry, and her father was irritated, felt that it would be ignominious to desist, and did not know that he felt this. But he knew that he was annoyed, and he took refuge in this, and picked up the oars with: "Some folks never can enjoy anything without spoiling it."

"That's what I was thinking," said Ina, with a flash of anger.

They glided toward the shore in a huff. Monona found that she enjoyed crying across the water and kept it up. It was almost as good as an echo. Ina, stepping safe to the sands, cried ungratefully that this was the last time that she would ever, ever go with her husband anywhere. Ever.

Dwight Herbert, recovering, gauged the moment to require of him humor, and observed that his wedded wife was as skittish as a colt. Ina kept silence, head poised so that her full little chin showed double. Monona, who had previously hidden a cooky in her frock, now remembered it and crunched sidewise, the eyes ruminant.

Moving toward them, with Di, Bobby was suddenly overtaken by the sense of disliking them all. He never had liked Dwight Herbert, his employer. Mrs. Deacon seemed to him so overwhelmingly mature that he had no idea how to treat her. And the child Monona he would like to roll in the river. Even Di . . . He fell silent, was silent on the walk home, which was the signal for Di to tease him steadily. The little being was afraid of silence. It was too vast for her. She was like a butterfly in a dome.

But against that background of ruined occasion, Lulu walked homeward beside Ninian. And all that night, beside her mother who groaned in her sleep, Lulu lay tense and awake. He had walked home with her. He had told Ina and Herbert about going to the city. What did it mean? Suppose . . ., oh no; oh no!

"Either lay still or get up and set up," Mrs. Bett directed her at length.

IV

July.

When, on a warm evening a fortnight later, Lulu descended the stairs dressed for her incredible trip to the city, she wore the white waist which she had often thought they would "use" for her if she died. And really, the waist looked as if it had been planned for the purpose, and its wide, upstanding plaited lace at throat and wrist made her neck look thinner, her forearm sharp and veined. Her hair she had "crimped" and parted in the middle, puffed high—it was so that hair had been worn in Lulu's girlhood.

"Well!" said Ina, when she saw this coiffure, and frankly examined it, head well back, tongue meditatively teasing at her lower lip.

For travel Lulu was again wearing Ina's linen duster—the old one.

Ninian appeared, in a sack coat—and his diamond. His distinctly convex face, its thick, rosy flesh, thick mouth and cleft chin gave Lulu once more that bold sense of looking—not at him, for then she was shy and averted her eyes—but at his photograph at which she could gaze as much as she would. She looked up at him openly, fell in step beside him. Was he not taking her to the city? Ina and Dwight themselves were going because she, Lulu, had brought about this party.

"Act as good as you look, Lulie." Mrs. Bett called after them. She gave no instructions to Ina, who was married and able to shine in her conduct, it seemed.

Dwight was cross. On the way to the station he might have been heard to take it up again, whatever it was, and his Ina unmistakably said: "Well, now, don't keep it going all the way there"; and turned back to the others with some elaborate comment about the dust, thus cutting off her so-called lord from his legitimate retort. A mean advantage.

The city was two hours distant, and they were to spend the night. On the train, in the double seat, Ninian beside her among the bags, Lulu sat in the simple consciousness that the people all knew that she too had been chosen. A man and a woman were opposite, with their little boy between them. Lulu felt this woman's superiority of experience over her own, and smiled at her from a world of fellowship. But the woman lifted her eyebrows and stared and turned away, with slow and insolent winking.

Ninian had a boyish pride in his knowledge of places to eat in many cities—as if he were leading certain of the tribe to a deer-run in a strange wood. Ninian took his party to a downtown cafe, then popular among business and newspaper men. The place was below the sidewalk, was reached by a dozen marble steps, and the odor of its griddle-cakes took the air of the street. Ninian made a great show of selecting a table, changed once, called the waiter "my man" and rubbed soft hands on "What do you say? Shall it be lobster?" He ordered the dinner, instructing the waiter with painstaking gruffness.

"Not that they can touch your cooking here, Miss Lulu," he said, settling himself to wait, and crumbling a crust.

Dwight, expanding a bit in the aura of the food, observed that Lulu was a regular chef, that was what Lulu was. He still would not look at his wife, who now remarked:

"Sheff, Dwightie. Not cheff."

This was a mean alvantage, which he pretended not to hear—another mean advantage.

"Ina," said Lulu, "your hat's just a little mite—no, over the other way."

"Was there anything to prevent your speaking of that before?" Ina inquired acidly.

"I started to and then somebody always said something," said Lulu humbly.

Nothing could so much as cloud Lulu's hour. She was proof against any shadow.

"Say, but you look tremendous tonight," Dwight observed to her.

Understanding perfectly that this was said to tease his wife, Lulu yet flushed with pleasure. She saw two women watching, and she thought: "They're feeling sorry for Ina—nobody talking to her." She laughed at everything that the men said. She passionately wanted to talk herself. "How many folks keep going past," she said, many times.

At length, having noted the details of all the clothes in range, Ina's isolation palled upon her and she set herself to take Ninian's attention. She therefore talked with him about himself.

"Curious you've never married, Nin," she said.

"Don't say it like that," he begged. "I might yet."

Ina laughed enjoyably. "Yes, you might!" she met this.

"She wants everybody to get married, but she wishes I hadn't," Dwight threw in with exceeding rancor.

They developed this theme exhaustively, Dwight usually speaking in the third person and always with his shoulder turned a bit from his wife. It was inconceivable, the gusto with which they proceeded. Ina had assumed for the purpose an air distrait, casual, attentive to the scene about them. But gradually her cheeks began to burn.

"She'll cry," Lulu thought in alarm, and said at random: "Ina, that hat is so pretty—ever so much prettier than the old one." But Ina said frostily that she never saw anything the matter with the old one.

"Let us talk," said Ninian low, to Lulu. "Then they'll simmer down.

He went on, in an undertone, about nothing in particular. Lulu hardly heard what he said, it was so pleasant to have him talking to her in this confidential fashion; and she was pleasantly aware that his manner was open to misinterpretation.

In the nick of time the lobster was served.

* * * * * * * *

Dinner and the play—the show, as Ninian called it. This show was "Peter Pan," chosen by Ninian because the seats cost the most of those at any theater. It was almost indecent to see how Dwight Herbert, the immortal soul, had warmed and melted at these contacts. By the time that all was over, and they were at the hotel for supper, such was his pleasurable excitation that he was once more playful, teasing, once more the irrepressible. But now his Ina was to be won back, made it evident that she was not one lightly to overlook, and a fine firmness sat upon the little doubling chin.

They discussed the play. Not one of them had understood the story. The dog-kennel part—wasn't that the queerest thing? Nothing to do with the rest of the play.

"I was for the pirates. The one with the hook—he was my style," said Dwight.

"Well, there it is again," Ina cried. "They didn't belong to the real play, either."

"Oh, well," Ninian said, "they have to put in parts, I suppose, to catch everybody. Instead of a song and dance, they do that."

"And I didn't understand," said Ina, "why they all clapped when the principal character ran down front and said something to the audience that time. But they all did."

Ninian thought this might have been out of compliment. Ina wished that Monona might have seen, confessed that the last part was so pretty that she herself would not look; and into Ina's eyes came their loveliest light.

Lulu sat there, hearing the talk about the play. "Why couldn't I have said that?" she thought as the others spoke. All that they said seemed to her apropos, but she could think of nothing to add. The evening had been to her a light from heaven—how could she find anything to say? She sat in a daze of happiness, her mind hardly operative, her look moving from one to another. At last Ninian looked at her.

"Sure you liked it, Miss Lulu?"

"Oh, yes! I think they all took their parts real well."

It was not enough. She looked at them appealingly, knowing that she had not said enough.

"You could hear everything they said," she added. "It was—" she dwindled to silence.

Dwight Herbert savored his rarebit with a great show of long wrinkled dimples.

"Excellent sauces they make here—excellent," he said, with the frown of an epicure. "A tiny wee bit more Athabasca," he added, and they all laughed and told him that Athabasca was a lake, of course. Of course he meant tabasco, Ina said. Their entertainment and their talk was of this sort for an hour.

"Well, now," said Dwight Herbert when it was finished, "somebody dance on the table."

"Dwightie!"

"Got to amuse ourselves somehow. Come, liven up. They'll begin to read the funeral service over us."

"Why not say the wedding service?" asked Ninian.

In the mention of wedlock there was always something stimulating to Dwight, something of overwhelming humor. He shouted a derisive endorsement of this proposal.

"I shouldn't object," said Ninian. "Should you, Miss Lulu?"

Lulu now burned the slow red of her torture. They were all looking at her. She made an anguished effort to defend herself.

"I don't know it," she said, "so I can't say it."

Ninian leaned toward her.

"I, Ninian, take thee, Lulu, to be my wedded wife," he pronounced. "That's the way it goes!"

"Lulu daren't say it!" cried Dwight. He laughed so loudly that those at the near tables turned. And, from the fastness of her wifehood and motherhood Ina laughed. Really, it was ridiculous to think of Lulu that way . . .

Ninian laughed, too. "Course she don't dare say it," he challenged.

From within Lulu, that strange Lulu, that other Lulu who sometimes fought her battles, suddenly spoke out:

"I, Lulu, take thee, Ninian, to be my wedded husband."

"You will?" Ninian cried.

"I will," she said, laughing tremulously, to prove that she, too, could join in, could be as merry as the rest.

"And I will. There, by Jove, now have we entertained you, or haven't we?" Ninian laughed and pounded his soft fist on the table.

"Oh, say, honestly!" Ina was shocked. "I don't think you ought to—holy things—what's the matter, Dwightie?"

Dwight Herbert Deacon's eyes were staring and his face was scarlet.

"Say, by George," he said, "a civil wedding is binding in this state."

"A civil wedding? Oh, well—" Ninian dismissed it.

"But I," said Dwight, "happen to be a magistrate."

They looked at one another foolishly. Dwight sprang up with the indeterminate idea of inquiring something of some one, circled about and returned. Ina had taken his chair and sat clasping Lulu's hand. Ninian continued to laugh.

"I never saw one done so offhand," said Dwight. "But what you've said is all you have to say according to law. And there don't have to be witnesses . . . say!" he said, and sat down again.

Above that shroud-like plaited lace, the veins of Lulu's throat showed dark as she swallowed, cleared her throat, swallowed again.

"Don't you let Dwight scare you," she besought Ninian.

"Scare me!" cried Ninian. "Why, I think it's a good job done, if you ask me."

Lulu's eyes flew to his face. As he laughed, he was looking at her, and now he nodded and shut and opened his eyes several times very fast. Their points of light flickered. With a pang of wonder which pierced her and left her shaken, Lulu looked. His eyes continued to meet her own. It was exactly like looking at his photograph.

Dwight had recovered his authentic air.

"Oh, well," he said, "we can inquire at our leisure. If it is necessary, I should say we can have it set aside quietly up here in the city—no one'll be the wiser."

"Set aside nothing!" said Ninian. "I'd like to see it stand."

"Are you serious, Nin?"

"Sure I'm serious."

Ina jerked gently at her sister's arm.

"Lulu! You hear him? What you going to say to that?"

Lulu shook her head. "He isn't in earnest," she said.

"I am in earnest—hope to die," Ninian declared. He was on two legs of his chair and was slightly tilting, so that the effect of his earnestness was impaired. But he was obviously in earnest.

They were looking at Lulu again. And now she looked at Ninian, and there was something terrible in that look which tried to ask him, alone, about this thing.

Dwight exploded. "There was a fellow I know there in the theater," he cried. "I'll get him on the line. He could tell me if there's any way—" and was off.

Ina inexplicably began touching away tears. "Oh," she said, "what will mamma say?"

Lulu hardly heard her. Mrs. Bett was incalculably distant.

"You sure?" Lulu said low to Ninian.

For the first time, something in her exceeding isolation really touched him.

"Say," he said, "you come on with me. We'll have it done over again somewhere, if you say so."

"Oh," said Lulu, "if I thought—"

He leaned and patted her hand.

"Good girl," he said.

They sat silent, Ninian padding on the cloth with the flat of his plump hands.

Dwight returned. "It's a go all right," he said. He sat down, laughed weakly, rubbed at his face. "You two are tied as tight as the church could tie you."

"Good enough," said Ninian. "Eh, Lulu?"

"It's—it's all right, I guess," Lulu said.

"Well, I'll be dished," said Dwight.

Ninian meditated, his lips set tight and high. It is impossible to trace the processes of this man. Perhaps they were all compact of the devil-may-care attitude engendered in any persistent traveler. Perhaps the incomparable cookery of Lulu played its part.

"I was going to make a trip south this month," he said, "on my way home from here. Suppose we get married again by somebody or other, and start right off. You'd like that, wouldn't you—going south.

"Yes," said Lulu only.

"It's July," said Ina, with her sense of fitness, but no one heard.

It was arranged that their trunks should follow them—Ina would see to that, though she was scandalized that they were not first to return to Warbleton for the blessing of Mrs. Bett.

"Mamma won't mind," said Lulu. "Mamma can't stand a fuss any more."

They left the table. The men and women still sitting at the other tables saw nothing unusual about these four, indifferently dressed, indifferently conditioned. The hotel orchestra, playing ragtime in deafening concord, made Lulu's wedding march.

* * * * * * * *

It was still early next day—a hot Sunday—when Ina and Dwight reached home. Mrs. Bett was standing on the porch.

"Where's Lulie?" asked Mrs. Bett.

They told.

Mrs. Bett took it in, a bit at a time. Her pale eyes searched their faces, she shook her head, heard it again, grasped it. Her first question was:

"Who's going to do your work?"

Ina had thought of that, and this was manifest.

"Oh," she said, "you and I'll have to manage."

Mrs. Bett meditated, frowning.

"I left the bacon for her to cook for your breakfasts," she said. "I can't cook bacon fit to eat. Neither can you."

"We've had our breakfasts," Ina escaped from this dilemma.

"Had it up in the city, on expense?"

"Well, we didn't have much."

In Mrs. Bett's eyes tears gathered, but they were not for Lulu.

"I should think," she said, "I should think Lulie might have had a little more gratitude to her than this."

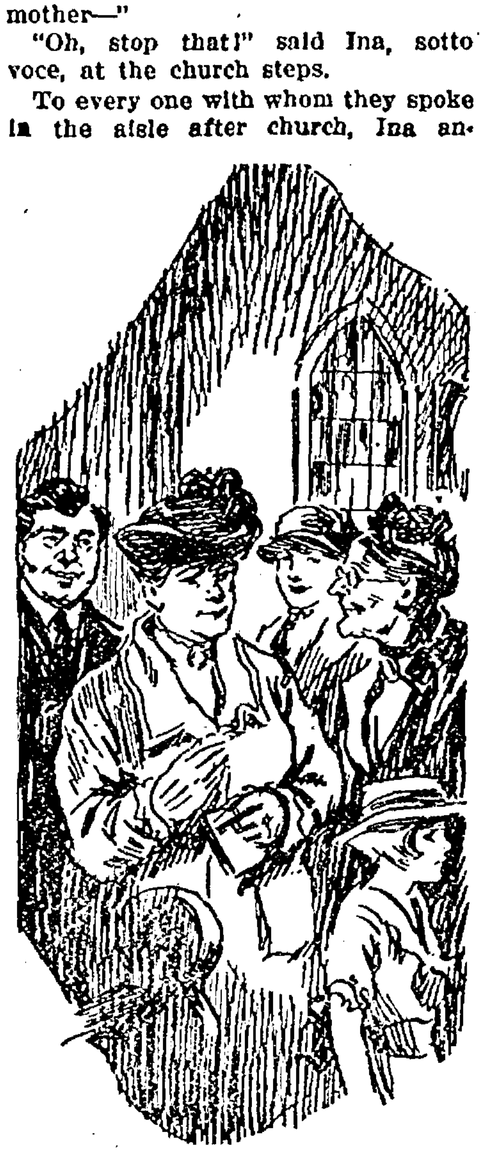
On their way to church Ina and Dwight encountered Di, who had left the house some time earlier, stepping sedately to church in company with Bobby Larkin. Di was in white, and her face was the face of an angel, so young, so questioning, so utterly devoid of her sophistication.

"That child," said Ina, "must not see so much of that Larkin boy. She's just a little, little girl."

"Of course she mustn't," said Dwight sharply, "and if I was her mother—"

"Oh, stop that!" said Ina, sotto voce, at the church steps.

To every one with whom they spoke in the aisle after church, Ina announced their news: Had they heard? Lulu married Dwight's brother Ninian in the city yesterday. Oh, sudden, yes! And romantic . . . spoken with that upward inflection to which Ina was a prey.



To Every One With Whom They Spoke in the Aisle After Church Ina Announced Their News.

V

August.

Mrs. Bett had been having a "tantrim," brought on by nothing definable. Abruptly as she and Ina were getting supper, Mrs. Bett had fallen silent, had in fact refused to reply when addressed. When all was ready and Dwight was entering, hair wetly brushed, she had withdrawn from the room and closed her bedroom door until it echoed.

"She's got one again," said Ina, grieving. "Dwight, you go."

He went, showing no sign of annoyance, and stood outside his mother-in-law's door and knocked.

No answer.

"Mother, come and have some supper."

No answer.

"Looks to me like your muffins was just about the best ever."

No answer.

"Come on—I had something funny to tell you and Ina."

He retreated, knowing nothing of the admirable control exercised by this woman for her own passionate satisfaction in sending him away unsatisfied. He showed nothing but anxious concern, touched with regret, at his failure. Ina, too, returned from that door discomfited. Dwight made a gallant effort to retrieve the fallen fortunes of their evening meal, and turned upon Di, who had just entered, and with exceeding facetiousness inquired how Bobby was.

Di looked hunted. She could never tell whether her parents were going to tease her about Bobby, or rebuke her for being seen with him. It depended on mood, and this mood Di had not the experience to gauge. She now groped for some neutral fact, and mentioned that he was going to take her and Jenny for ice cream that night.

Ina's irritation found just expression in her office of motherhood.

"I won't have you downtown in the evening," she said.

"But you let me go last night."

"All the better reason why you should not go tonight."

"I tell you," cried Dwight. "Why not all walk down? Why not all have ice cream . . ." He was all gentleness and propitiation, the reconciling element in his home.

"Me, too?" Monona's ardent hope, her terrible fear were in her eyebrows, her parted lips.

"You, too, certainly." Dwight could not do enough for every one.

Monona clapped her hands. "Goody! goody! Last time you wouldn't let me go."

"That's why papa's going to take you this time," Ina said.

These ethical balances having been nicely struck, Ina proposed another:

"But," she said, "but, you must eat more supper or you cannot go."

"I don't want any more." Monona's look was honest and piteous.

"Makes no difference. You must eat or you'll get sick."

"No!"

"Very well, then. No ice cream soda for such a little girl."

Monona began to cry quietly. But she passed her plate. She ate, chewing high, and slowly.

"See? She can eat if she will eat," Ina said to Dwight. "The only trouble is, she will not take the time."

"She don't put her mind on her meals," Dwight Herbert diagnosed it. "Oh, bigger bites than that!" he encouraged his little daughter.

Di's mind had been proceeding along its own paths.

"Are you going to take Jenny and Bobby too?" she inquired.

"Certainly. The whole party."

"Bobby'll want to pay for Jenny and I."

"Me, darling," said Ina patiently, punctiliously—and less punctiliously added: "Nonsense. This is going to be papa's little party."

"But we had the engagement with Bobby. It was an engagement."

"Well," said Ina, "I think we'll just set that aside—that important engagement. I think we just will."

"Papa! Boby'll want to be the one to pay for Jenny and I—"

"Di!" Ina's voice dominated all. "Will you be more careful of your grammar or shall I speak to you again?"

"Well, I'd rather use bad grammar than—than—than—" she looked resentfully at her mother, her father. Their moral defection was evident to her, but it was indefinable. They told her that she ought to be ashamed when papa wanted to give them all a treat. She sat silent, frowning, put-upon.

"Look, mamma!" cried Monona, swallowing a third of an egg at one impulse. Ina saw only the empty plate.

"Mamma's nice little girl!" cried she, shining upon her child.

The rules of the ordinary sports of the playground, scrupulously applied, would have clarified the ethical atmosphere of this little family. But there was no one to apply them.

When Di and Monona had been excused, Dwight asked:

"Nothing new from the bride and groom?"

"No. And, Dwight, it's been a week since the last."

"See—where are they then?"

He knew perfectly well that they were in Savannah, Georgia, but Ina played his game, told him, and retold bits that the letter had said.

"I don't understand," she added, "why they should go straight to Oregon without coming here first."

Dwight hazarded that Nin probably had to get back, and shone pleasantly in the reflected importance of a brother filled with affairs.

"I don't know what to make of Lulu's letters," Ina proceeded. "They're so—so—"

"You haven't had but two, have you?"

"That's all—well, of course it's only been a month. But both letters have been so—"

Ina was never really articulate. Whatever corner of her brain had the blood in it at the moment seemed to be operative, and she let the matter go at that.

"I don't think it's fair to mamma—going off that way. Leaving her own mother. Why, she may never see mamma again—" Ina's breath caught. Into her face came something of the lovely tenderness with which she sometimes looked at Monona and Di. She sprang up. She had forgotten to put some supper to warm for mamma. The lovely light was still in her face as she bustled about against the time of mamma's recovery from her tantrim. Dwight's face was like this when he spoke of his foster-mother. In both these beings there was something which functioned as pure love.

An Armenian girl was in town a few days last week, selling Armenian fancy work. She stated that she in company with her father, were selling the work in an effort to secure funds enough to bring the balance of the family, the mother and several smaller children, to America. They expected to have money enough this next month to bring the family across. The father had been here a couple of years, making money enough to bring over the eldest daughter, and th girl had been here but a few months. She told some horrible tales of life and conditions in Armenia, and her hatred for the Turks was intense. She claimed that there would soon be nothing left of the Armenian nation.

Thursday evening of last week it looked like this vicinity was going to have a real storm. With a heavy, black sky and a high wind things did look pretty dubious for awhile, but it all went around and we had nothing but the wind. At other points around hard storms were experienced that evening.

TOURISTS BADLY BITTEN WHEN ASKING DIRECTION

Hampton Chronicle: W. S. Bergundthal and daughter, of Topeka, Kansas, stopped at the Keefe farm east of Hampton last Monday evening to ask if they were traveling on the Glacier trail and the big collie dog owned by Mr. Cummings attacked them and bit both Mr. Bergundhal and his daughter. The dog caught Mr. Bergundthal on the right arm near the elbow and tore the flesh and muscle loose clear to the bone. The dog badly lacerated both of the girls' legs.

The party was returning from a touring trip to Minnesota and were headed for St. Louis before returning to Topeka. After the dog attacked them they came to Hampton where they received medical attention and from here they changed thier course and headed for home.

CUT CORN AT RIGHT TIME

Corn that is to be cut for the silo wants to be matured enough so that the kernels are hard and at least one fourth of the leaves and husks have turned brown, says the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station experts. Corn that is cut when too immature lacks the nutriment value the more mature corn has.

However, when corn becomes too dry before cutting, it is not likely to have enough moisture for the fermentation process. If the corn is dry when cut it is a good plan to add water, as this not only helps in the fermenting but serves to pack the silge and drive out air spaces. It is in the air pockets that form in the silage that molds start and ruin part of the silage.

Corn that is cut too green produces a high acid content in the silage so that considerable trouble to stock often follows its use.

In cutting the silage it has been found that inch lengths are the easiest to pack properly. Be sure that the silage gets tamped around the edges, as it is here that the air pockets form the easiest. Due to the incoming silage from the blower the center of the silo is packed the hardest and the tampers should keep the outside edges as solid.

It a silo is half filled in the afternoon and left to stand over night, it is a good plan to operate the blower fast for a few minutes and force fresh air into the silo before starting to fill it. Often there is in the silo an accumulation of gas thrown off by the new cut corn and this is dangerous. The blower will soon remove this.

SCHOOL BEGINS WITH LARGEST ENROLLMENT

List Of Jurors For Next Term

Belmond Folks Who Will Have A Chance To "Tell It To The Judge."

$3,000,000 MORTGAGE FILED

The ladies and gentlemen from this part of the county who will have the opportunity of telling the judge how busy they are and therefore will be seriously convenienced by having to do jury duty are the following, whose names have been drawn to appear at Clarion on October 9 for the next term of court:

Those from Belmond are J. W. Baldridge, Joe H. Barton, C. E. Jenison, A. Swenson, A. R. Dorr, Lillian Nelson. From Rowan, Ira Stumph.

A three million dollar mortgage was placed on record last week in the recorder's office by Miss Vaughn. It was given by the Iowa Falls Electric Co. to the Harris Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, to secure an authorized issue of first mortgage gold bonds. The recording fees on this instrument was $30 and the wording of the same covered thirty four and one-half pages of large record sheets in closely typed matter. The mortgage is to run ten years.

Messrs. Reese, Richardson and Stewart, the gentlemen comprising Wright county's inheritance tax commission, met in Clarion, Friday, and made an appraisement of the property of the estate of A. B. Morse of Ionia, Mich., which consisted of a 320-acre farm near Belmond. They performed a like service in the Hugh Bennett estate appraising a 219-acre estate near Cornela. The estate of Minnie Furuseth included a house and lot in Belmond and $22,000 i personal property.

OLAF ITEMS OF INTEREST

S. O. Windecker spent Tuesday and Wednesday of last week in Clear Lake and Mason City on a business mission.

Henry Shurson and family drove down from Minneapolis and spent a part of last week visiting at the Jacob Thompson home. Mrs. Thompson and Mr. Shurson are sister and brother.

Andrew Scott and wife and John Shurson and wife drove to Morris, Ill., last week. While there they will attend the 71st anniversary of the Norwegian Lutheran church at that place. All ministers who have preached to this congregation, and also all who have been members, were requested to be present if possible.

Mrs. Torres Scott accompanied her brother, Rev. Severson of Eagle Grove, to Illinois to attend the 71st anniversary of their home church.

Martin Paulson was an over Sunday visitor with relatives in Belmond.

Arthur Ericson accompanied Cryder Wicks and family in an auto trip to Montana where they expect to visit relatives for about a month. On the way out they will visit at several places in North Dakota.

Olaf school began Monday with Miss Nellie Delaney of Belmond as teacher. [redacted]

TRINITY CHURCH

Wednesday evening the choir will take up its' work again at 7:30. Old members are requested to be present and new members are invited. We want as many as possible to take a live interest in our choir work. Please come and make up your minds to continue. We like to have a good strong choir.

Thursday afternoon the Ladies Aid meets at the home of Mrs. John Kalvig. All members are asked to be present. Thursday evening the prayer meeting will be conducted at the church at 8 o'clock. The classes meet at the church Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

Next Sunday is rally day for our Sunday school. Let it be a rally day in every sense of the word. Let us not forget that success in our Sunday school work depends largely upon the interest of the individual.

Sunday afternoon the lay people conduct a service at 2:30 in the afternoon.

ST. OLAF

The North Ladies Aid meets at the home of Mrs. A. Linning, Wednesday afternoon.

Wednesday evening cottage prayer meeting will be conducted at the home of Jacob Thompson.

Thursday afternoon the South Ladies Aid meets at the home of Elling Ellingston.

Saturday afternoon at 1:30 the class meets at the church. The change has been made to accomodate those attending school.

Sunday morning Norwegian service will be conducted at 10:30. In the evening the young people will conduct their meeting. We want a good attendance. Come and bring someone with you.

CONGREGATIONAL NOTES

The regular services next Sunday morning and evening.

Sunday school at 10.
Morning worship at 11.
Christian Endeavor at 7:30 p. m.
Evening worship at 7:30.

A very enjoyable time was spent at the Sunday school picnic last Thursday at Mr. Hinman's. A good old fashioned picnic dinner was served for all at one long table. Over two hundred were present. One very enjoyable part of the day was the ball game between the women's Bible class and the men's Bible class. Of course the women won the game even tho a few of them didn't know whether to carry the bat along with them when they ran for first base or not. The feature of the day was a game between the men of Mrs. Peterson's and Mr. Leinbach's classes and those of Mrs. Tyrrell's and Mrs. Schlieffarth's.

WHAT THIS COUNTRY NEEDS

What this country needs is not a new birth of freedom, but the old-fashioned $2 lower birth.

What this country needs isn't more liberty but less people who take liberties with our liberty.

What this country needs is not a job for every man, but a man for every job.

What this country needs isn't to get more taxes from the people, but for the people to get more from the taxes.

What this country needs is more tractors and less detractors.

What this country needs isn't more young men making speed, but more young men planting spuds.

What this country needs is more paint on the old place and less paint on the young face.

What this country needs isn't a lower rate of interest on money, but a higher interest in work.

What this country needs is to follow the footsteps of the fathers instead of the footsteps of the dancing master.—St. Paul Crescent.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT HAT SHOPPE PLEASES KIDDIES

Children's Day last Saturday at The Hat Shoppe was very successful, many of the school children of the vicinity coming in to try on the hats displayed for them, an event which they enjoyed to the utmost. As a reseut of the day Mrs. Rosecrans had successful sales.

CHICKEN THIEVES TAKE FOUR DOZEN FINE ONES

Wm. Dampsey And Wife Lose Best Ones In Their Flock Saturday Night.

Last Saturday evening, or rather early Sunday morning, some thief or thieves took four dozen of the best chickens of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Dempsey. The majority of the fowls taken were capons, averaging six pounds each, and altogether the loss to the owners comes to about $50. Mr. Dempsey, after coming home from his pop corn stand about 12 o'clock, secured a chicken for Sunday dinner, and looked the flock over at that time, all of them being there. About four in the morning he was awakened by the barking of the dog, and upon getting up heard someone out by the chicken house. He secured a loaded shotgun and went out the back door, but the thieves, evidently taking alarm, went around by the front way and escaped in a car. The night-watch reports seeing a car coming from the south and turning East on Main street about that time. All the produce houses in the neighboring towns have been notified to be on the watch for a batch of chickens such as those stolen, and if the guilty parties are apprehended they certainly ought to get the limit of the law. Stealing chickens is one of the most contemptible things anyone can do, and ought to be classes in the same category as horse stealing was in days gone by.

SONG OF THE LAZY FARMER

(From Praire Farmer)

Most everybody's on a strike because of something they don't like, it seems their wages are too low or else they work too hard, and so to get the thing fixed up the men lay down their tools and strike again. And so, while men and bosses fight and quarrel 'bout which side is right, the rest of us must bear the curse and thank the Lord it ain't no worse. If trains don't run we'll have to walk and still the strikers sit and talk. If coal ain't dug we'll have to freeze or else cut down a few big trees and saw wood till our back is lame, the strike keeps going just the same.

Perhaps the farmers better strike and show 'em what a real one's like. We'll turn the calves in with the cows and turn the horses and the sows out on the pasture for a spell, we'll sit around the store and tell the world where it gets off if it don't raise our price a little bit. We'll let our wheat set in the shock, we'll be too mean to wind the clock, we'll set around and rest and smoke and laugh about our little joke. We just won't do a bloomin' thing until we win that strike, by jing! Then when the people haven't et for several days they'll come, I'll bet, and tell us if we'll get to work that they'll work too, and never shirk. They'll hang each walking delegate and shoot the men who speculate in grain to submarine the price, they'll treat us mighty kind and nice, they'll greet us mighty kind and nice, they'll greet us friendly-like and sweet if we will work so they can 'eat!

GALT TEAM PROVES EASY MARK SUNDAY

Nothing To It After Belmond Gets Started—To Play Wall Lake Here Sunday

The ball game Sunday between the Galt team and the locals was an easy affair, the locals winning by 9 to 2. Chapman pitched eight innings, his curves being something the Galt players had heard about but never before seen, and consequently they failed to do much. Two Galt heavers were batted freely, the first three men in the 1st inning getting on and coming home by a homer by Fred Fulton. In the ninth the boys considered they had enough, and set about having a little variety by putting Thomas in the box, Nelson on first, Packard on third, Jones to the short stop and Chapman second. The "new team" was as successful as the "old". Louie Foss featured the game by a beautiful balancing act in center field when after a fly ball.

Sunday of next week, September 10, the local club will meet the team from Wall Lake. This certainly ought to be a worth while game. Wall Lake has lost but two games this summer, they have a strong, fast bunch, and with the Belmond team delivering the brand of ball which we know they are capable of this should be a real affair.

DR. HOXIE TO PRACTICE AGAIN

Hampton Chronicle: Dr. W F. Hoxie will again engage in the practice of medicine in Hampton, and has already leased the rooms in the office building just west of the city park, and recently vacated by Dr. D. A. Rice.

Dr. Hoxie will leave for Chicago in a few days to take some post-graduate work, after which he will return to Hampton and open his office for the practice of his profession. A full new equipment has been ordered for his office. On account of a large amount of business matters to look in connection with the Hoxie estate during the past few years he quit the practice of medicine here as he was unable to look after the practice properly, but now with the added burdens off his hands he will be able to give his personal business his careful and undivided attention. Dr. Hoxie has hundreds of friends in this county who will be pleased to learn that he will again practice medicine here.

"FOR LIGHT WINES AND BEER"

Fred P. Hageman of Waverly, the democratic candidate for Congress in this district against T. J. B. Robinson of Hampton, republican, was in the city Tuesday greeting voters. Mr. Hageman was county superintendent of the Bremer county schools for two terms, and state senator four years. Across the top of his card he has "I am for light wines and beer." It is a question whether this will win him as many votes as he thinks, but one must give credit for having the nerve to publicly announce that he is for them, there are candidates who are but wouldn't admit it for the world.

SHOWER FOR INEZ BOUGHTON

On August 17th the Misses Elizabeth Leinbach and Esther Hardwick were hostesses at a kitchen shower at the Hardwick home, in honor of Miss Inez Boughton.

The afternoon was spent in games and the bride-to-be was put thru many tests. The gifts were presented in rather a unique way. Miss Boughton was taken a part where she was dressed as a bride in lace curtains and artificial flowers. To the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march she stepped down an isle of pink and white crepe paper streamers held by the guests who were arranged so as to form an isle. At the end of her march she found a basket decorated with crepe paper and bows in which the gifts were piled.

From teaspoons to baking dishes the gifts ranged and when the last gift was unwrapped we could scarcely think of a utensil which the bride-to-be did not have for her kitchen.

At 5:30 the hostesses served dainty refreshments after which the guests having extended their best wishes to Miss Boughton, departed.

BOUGHTON-BICKET

Miss Inez L. Boughton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Boughton of Belmond, was united in marriage to Mr. Lester Bicket, of St. Louis, Mo., on Wednesday, August 30, at the home of the bride's parents. The ceremony was performed by Rev. S. U. Leinbach of the Sands Memorial Congregational church, assisted by Rev. Seth R. Huntington of Dinsdale, Iowa. Only the near relatives of the contracting parties were present.

The ceremony took place at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon. Mrs. Seth R. Huntington played the wedding march, and little Miss Jeannette Huntington was the ring bearer. The happy couple left that evening on the Rock Island for Grundy Center, to spend a few days visiting relatives before proceeding to St. Louis, where they will make their future residence and where they will be at home after October 1st.

The bride is among Belmond's fairest young ladies, a graduate of the 1921 class of the Belmond High School, and for the past year has resided at home with her parents.

Mr. Bicket is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bicket of Dinsdale, and is connected with the Federal Bank at St. Louis.

The out-of-town guests present at the wedding were Mrs. Thomas Bicket of Dinsdale, Mr. Wm. Bicket of Dinsdale, Miss Marjory Innes from Reinbeck, Mrs. Will Stark and two children William and Gladys from Grundy Center, and Rev. and Mrs. Seth Huntinton of Dinsdale.

The Independent very heartily joins with the many friends in extending best wishes and congratulations to the happy couple.

More Teachers To Be Employed

Nearly Every Grade Has Heavy Enrollment—Classes To Be Held All Over

MEANS NEW BUILDING?

The local school opened on Monday of this week with the largest enrollment of scholars in its history, there being a total enrollment of 528 pupils.

This is the largest enrollment that that the school has ever had by quite a ways. From the present indications this enrollment may increase, and it is now probable that in order to take care of the present enrollment, to any more, that one or two more teachers will have to be employed in the near future. There are as many as 50 to a class, which is more than any teacher can give adequate attention. The enrollment Monday was forty in the Kindergarten, fifty in the primary, forty six in the second grade, 54 in the third, thirty two in the fourth grade, fifty one in the fifth, thirty five in the sixth and twenty seven in the seventh. The eighth grade hnd a totalal of 21. We are given to understand that in the Freshmen class there are sixty pupils enrolled.

From the looks of things now, as they seem to be going, it is but a question of a short time before Belmond will have to erect another school house. The present building with the present enrollment is crammed to the doors and the teaching force are hard put to nd room for the various classes. Undoubtedly in the not very distant future either the present building will have to be turned into a grade school and a high school building constructed, or more room will have to be built onto the present building.

GOODELL NEWS NOTES

Tuesday of this week Mr. and Mrs. Matson and daughter Alva autoed to Mason City.

Supt. O. Nelson came down from Albert Lea, Thursday.

Fred Graeber and family came down from Minnesota, Saturday. They stopped a short time in Goodell, and then drove on to Kanawha where they will live after Oct. 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Wood of Marshaltown came Saturday and spent Sunday with Mrs. Africa, returning on Monday.

Chas. J. Nelson and family from Lake Mills visited at the Sandberg home Wednesday.

Mrs. Wm. Beier spent the week end with relatives at Waterloo, returning Sunday.

S. C. Pollock of Garner gave a very interesting address at the U. B. church last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Graeber were in Belmond on Thursday afternoon having dental work done at Dr. Parsons.

Peter Benson of Kanawha visited at the O. Sandberg home Sunday.

The Misses Hill, McCormick and Butts are the new teachers for the Goodell school. Miss Butts teaches primary, Miss McCormick in high school and domestic science. Miss Hill is the new principal.

The teachers spent Monday in organization and arranging the program of studies.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert McNutt, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Allaben and daughter Dorothy went to Clear Lake on Monday to attend the mail carriers' picnic.

J. W. Griggs and Miss Maude of Ventura spent Sunday here, returning Monday.

Wm. Nelson visited his sister here Monday.

The Woman's Missionery society will hold their third quarterly business meeting at the home of Mrs. L. W. Sherwood on Sept. 8.

The Hancock county Sunday school convention will be held on Thursday, Sept. 14 at the Liberty M. E. church.

Guess Work on Batteries Don't Go!

The man who guesses what's the matter with batteries doesn't last long in the battery business.

Sooner or later he guesses wrong—and there's a battery owner who'll never come back!

We take the trouble to find exactly what's the matter—and our experience tells us the best remedy.

Willard Standards of Service are impartial—exactly the same for every make of battery. Come in and let us show you!

DO UNTO OTHERS

Why is it that, when a fellowman falls from grace, we are so prone to kick him down yet a little farther? Instead of offering him a helping hand, endeavoring to assist him to rise again and be one of us, we go out of our way to push him down farther. Is it just? Is it Christian? Is it "Doing unto others as we would have them do unto us?"

Why is it that so many people think a prison is to punish, when as a matter of common sense it should be to reform? Why is a person forever damned because they have disobeyed once the laws of God or man? Is it so awful that we should fall from the dictates of ourselves occasionally? How many people would there be outside of prison if all were in who have broken the law? Mighty few, folks, mighty few! The next time you feel inclined to swing the hammer on some one who is down, just stop to think whether you have any cause to make a noise—are you so free from taint that you can condemn? If you are, order your casket, you're too good to live much longer.

But, some of you will say, we must do something to protect ourselves; if there were no laws and no public opion where would we be? Better off with fewer laws most emphatically enforced, and do not confuse public opinion with back-fence gossip, there is a wide difference. Public opinion may justly condemn the offender for the act, but only gossip and narrow-minded prejudice will kick him or her down further. Because an individual has once gone wrong it is no sign that such is to be expected always, that there is no decency in them. It is narrow-minded, rather let us say feeble minded, fools who knock and jeer and gossip over the back fence, the store counter and the supper table that deny the fallen one a chance to rise. Do unto others as you would have them do unto you, for you may need tomorrow the help you deny another today.

CLIPPINGS

Last Thursday afternoon as Wm. Sarber was taking Irvin Rubendall home his Studebaker car went over the embankment just west of the river bridge and turned completely over. Mr. Rubendall was thrown from the car in such a way as to break his hip bones and he was also injured internally. Medical aid was administered to him as soon as possible and he was rushed to the hospital at Iowa Falls, where he lies in a critical condition. Mr. Sarber received a broken shoulder, a broken rib and some minor bruises and is getting along fairly well.—Dows Advocate.

Guy Lynch of Belmond was a caller in Klemme, Thursday.—Times.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Munson have a flock of chickens at their place near the dam on the west river, that is the admiration of everyone who visits the home. These birds are given excellent care, and their ration consists a liberal feeding of grain, and all the clams that Will gathers in his work of clamming in the river northwest of town. This combined ration seems to suit the fowls exactly, and the way they thrive would make an Ames poultry expert envious.—Humboldt Republican.

A visitor called at this office last week and wanted to see several copies of the Advertiser, saying that in getting a line on the town as a place to invest money, or in which to live, it was possible to make a decision without seeing what kind of a newspaper the town was supporting. And among the things after looking carefully thru the papers she asked whether we had only the one general store, and commented that she never saw a town yet that had a better paper than the town was willing to support. The lady complimented Alta on the two fine banks which served us and assured us that she was not an agent or solicitor, but had been attracted to the town by newspaper reports of the fine schools and other advantages.—Alta Advertiser.

Wm. Johnson, of the Johnson Drug Co., and Miss Naomi Baldridge went to Belmond, Thursday morning where they underwent an operation for the removal of their tonsils. They returned home Friday and are getting along fine.—Kanawha Reporter.

Frank Landt of Tama county was passing along the public highway in front of the residence of Mrs. Charles Novotny. His wagon was loaded with various articles and behind trailed a mowing machine. A dog belonging to Mrs. Novotny rushed for the passing team and caused a vicious runaway and Mr. Landt was thrown from the wagon, falling in front of the mower, resulting in serious injuries that have laid him up all summer, and he is reported to still be practically helpless. Suit for damages against the owner of the dog will be brought in the October term of court, the amount asked being $2,300, including costs of medical attendance and nurse hire.—Exchange.

Levi Ridder received severe burns from gasoline last Thursday while working in the shed back of the H. Ridder garage. A gasoline blow torch, which he was using, exploded and threw gasline on him and then caught ablaze. His father was close by and extinguished the flames with a chemical gun but not until Levi had received bad burns on one leg and arms. He is getting along well at this writing but will have some ugly scars to show for his experience.—Klemme Times.

Mr. and Mrs. Sigurd Anderson of Belmond spent Sunday here with Mrs. Anderson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Fryslie.—Dows Advocate.

Mrs. Ed. Murphy of Belmond came Tuesday for a visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Roths.—Klemme Times.

USE OF CHOKE COIL AND TRANSFORMERS

Latter Provide the Most Practical Method of Coupling for the Amateur.

Figure XXVIII shows the actual circuit of a three-stage resistance coupled amplifier. The output of such a circuit is K times K times K the input or assuming the amplification factor of each tube to be 10, the output would be 1,000 times the input. The resistance R is the coupling resistance whose function it is to transform the plate current variation to potential drops to be applied to the grid of the next tube.

The capacity C is simply a means of allowing the potential variations across the coupling resistance R to be applied to the grid of the next tube, yet not allowing the "B" battery applied to the plate circuit of a tube to be applied to the grid of the next. Because of using the condenser to, what one might say, insulate the grid from the "B" battery potential, it is necessary to use a grid leak, to keep the charge which collects on the grid from becoming excessive and reducing the plate current to zero.

One of the chief disadvantages of the resistance coupled amplifier is that very high plate battery potentials are necessary. The amplification per tube of a resistance-coupled amplifier is not as high as it is for some other methods but it is stable and does not distort the input as much as do some other methods used which give greater amplification per tube.

Resistance-coupled amplifying may be used to amplify either radio or audio frequency.

A method of transforming the change in plate current of a vacuum tube to differences in potential is by means of a choke coil. A choke coil consists of a number of turns of wire wound up in a multilayer coil and may or may not have an iron core. A coil of this kind offers a high impedance to the flow of alternating current, but has a relatively low direct current resistance.

The choke coil on account of having a low ohmic resistance, will have a smaller method of coupling, so that lower "B" battery potential can be used on choke coil coupled amplifiers and the batteries can be of smaller capacity.

The choke coil not only has inductance but a certain amount of distributed capacity. The distributed capacity of the coil plus the capacity of the plate with respect to the filament, together with the inductance of the coil, give to the plate circuit a certain definite period. That is, the plate circuit is an oscillating circuit whose resonant frequency is determined by the total capacity and inductance in the circuit.

If the choke coil be made variable, it will not only serve to transform the plate current variation with maximum plate potential variations, but it will also serve to tune out unwanted frequencies. When the plate circuit of the amplifier is tuned, the resonant frequency is amplified K times, but all other frequencies are amplified to a less degree.

Another and by far the most widely used method of coupling successive tubes in a cascade amplifier is by means of transformers. The transformer method of coupling amplifier tubes may be considered a development and a refinement of the simpler choke coil method. Coupling tubes by means of properly designed transformers will give a greater amplification per tube than any of the other methods.

Figure XXXI shows the diagram of a three-stage transformer coupled amplifier, where P and S are respectively the primaries and secondaries of the coupling transformers. The transformer as a whole is so designed as to convert the plate current variations into maximum potential variations. The plate circuit of each tube which includes the primary winding of a coupling transformer must be assigned for maximum power amplification, while at the same time the ratio of the transformer must be such as to deliver maximum potential to the grid circuit of the next tube.

The greatest advantages of the transformer method of coupling audio frequency amplifiers are the high degree of amplification, the relative simplicity of operation, and the low plate voltage required.

Chief among the disadvantages of the transformer coupled frequency amplifier is noise. Also the transformers amplify different frequencies to different degrees, which means that when this type of coupling is used for radiophone reception, the voice is distorted by the amplifying transformers. However, from a practical standpoint, the average amateur will have better results using transformer coupled audio frequency amplifiers than from any other method that can be used with the tubes and equipment now available.

GREAT BRITAIN VS. AMERICA

Radio Amateurs of Those Countries Pursuing Distinct Courses in Development of Receivers.

Two separate and distinct courses are being followed by the radio amateurs of this country and Great Britain in the development of receiving apparatus for continuous-wave telegraphy and wireless telephony. Both courses are of the utmost importance to the art, and each will exert a great influence on the future of radio communication and entertainment.

The American amateurs have gone along the lines of regeneration and amplification of audible signals, as well as development of long-distance reception on short waves by the superheterodyne principle.

On the other side of the Atlantic the British amateurs, restricted in their hobby by ultra-conservative government regulations, have turned their attention solely to radio-frequency amplification. This has given excellent results on all long and medium wave lengths, but its success on shorter wave lengths has depended solely upon the expert handling of the operator, who has been compelled to use tuned coupling circuits between each of the radio-frequency vacuum tubes.

It is too early yet to tell which of the two systems will ultimately triumph, but there is no doubt that the laurels at the present moment rest upon the American amateurs through the latest achievement of their leader, Armstrong, in the production of the super-regenerative system.

SHORT FLASHES

The enormous popularity of radio has started out a new crop of solicitors offering the stock of fake companies, with alleged glittering prospects. A general warning is being broadcast for fans to be on the lookout for these smooth gentlemen.

A young radio sharp at Ogdensburg, N. Y., recently heard through his set: "Come home with the car, Howard; I have to go to the store." Who can say that a set in the pasture will not soon call the cows at milking time: "Come bos!"

In making a regenerative set employing two variometers and a variocoupler be careful not to get the instruments too close together. If they are, the set will howl. A set of this type should be mounted in a box not less than sixteen inches long.

Dr. John J. Carty, often referred to as "the wizard of the telephone," has had added to his many complimentary college degrees that of doctor of science, Yale university. Doctor Carty, who ranks as a brigadier general in the signal corps reserve, U. S. A., was given this last honor for being a radio expert.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle predicts communication with the dead by radio within four years. Sir Arthur is firm in the belief that within that time "we will have the direct communication that Edison hoped for," and that those who have passed beyond will "have transmitters in the line of ether and all that we will need will be the receiver."

Judging Team Will Make Tours

The boys on the livestock judging team which took first place in the state wide livestock judging team contest will make several trips with the county agent to various livestock farms within the county during the next few weeks. The boys will also attend a few of the neighboring county fairs making the trip to the interstate fair at Sioux City which will be held the week of September 18 to 25.

The county agent has an invitation from the head of the Animal Husbandry Department of the college at Ames to bring the livestock judging team to Ames for a work-out with the livestock at the college. If this invitation is accepted the boys will be given some first hand information from the college authorities on points in livestock judging. The Wright county boys, who will represent Iowa in the Interstate livestock judging contest, should be given all encouragement possible from every source.

Club Exhibits Win at State Fair

Ruth Dorr, a member of the Tri-G club of Grant township, has the honor of winning two second premiums at the state fair, one on a dress made with sewing machine attachments, a prize of $2.00, and the other on a three-piece suit of underwear, a prize of $4.00. Pearl Woodley, a member of the same club, won fifth place with a prize of $2.00 on a dress for the tall, slender girl.

Club exhibits were entered from every county in the state and the girls should be commended for their winnings in the club department.

Reorganization Of Grain Growers

Sec. Cunningham of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, who has recently been elected president of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., due to the reorganization of the board of directors, makes a few statements which are of particular interest at this time to all people of Iowa.

"The U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., involves the supreme effort on the part of the American farmer to follow his own product closer to the ultimate consumer. The movement was born of the highest minded sincerity on the part of the grain farmer, necessity forcing him to seek improved methods of marketing the product of his toil. As the new management comes into control of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., we have no Utopian schemes to propose, no visionary plans to work out. We recognize certain economic laws which cannot be flouted, and certain business principles which cannot be ignored without inviting disaster. We have no fight against existing agencies or methods. But we do believe most sincerely that the men who grow grain have the right to sell what they produce.

"And we plan to create a producers' selling agency, which shall function in strict accordance with sound business methods, and procedure. We do not expect to establish any great and spectacular reforms while the farmer waits. We hold out no flattering promises to producers that we will be able to reach out into space and get 25, 40 or 50 cents a bushel more for their grain than the market justifies. Our grower members must recognize that fact in the beginning, and they will be called upon to exercise patience, as well as co-operation.

"The U. S. Grain Growers is in a deplorable condition financially. A general statement of liabilities and assests shows a net deficit of $285,267.27. While that is significant enough to trained financiers, it gives the general public no conception of the financial entanglements and complications that will have to be ironed out before we can hope to attempt actual grain marketing operations. We are in no position to say definitely when we can hope to market grain. There are a few markets where we may be able to begin marketing as soon as the financial entanglements of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., can be unraveled."

"ALWAYS AUDACIOUS" featuring Wallace Reid. In this picture Mr. Reid portrays two entirely different types of men, one the hero and the other the scheming villian, and he puts them both over to perfection. A delightful love romance adds much to the interest of the play.
STAR THEATRE SEP. 8 AND 9

S. F. Stout had the misfortune to be kicked by a horse last Saturday. He was leading a team from the pasture when another horse whirled, kicking with both hind feet and striking him in the back of the head. It was necessary to take several stitches. He was also hit in the shoulder and had some ribs cracked in his chest, also his face skinned up quite badly. He was knocked unconscious when kicked and lay there awhile before getting able to call for help. Taking it all around it was a very lucky accident for he would have been killed had the horse not been as close as it was. He is doing very nicely.

Another accident last Wednesday night between the S. F. Stout and Chas. Moon homes when the fill in the buggy came down in which Mr. and Mrs. Ormal Gates and baby and Ormal's mother, Mrs. Gates of Sioux City, were riding. It jerked the buggy into the ditch throwing them al out. Both ladies had their ankles sprained, it becoming necessary to take the elder Mrs. Gates to the hospital at Belmond. Mrs. Ormal Gates is able to be around again. Ormal and the baby escaped uninjured.

J A. Whitten sells Goodyear tires.

Men must wear pants. We sell Strus Bros. "Master Tailored Clothes" also clean, press and alter suits, coats, hats, etc.—Hyde's Panitorium, Rowan, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Jens Kjar and family have gone for a visit with the Walter Carmon family in Wisconsin.

Elberta Peters and Floyd Smith, who have been visiting relatives here left for their home at Highmore, S. D., Tuesday.

Miss Florence Box left Wednesday for Chicago where she will enter the hospital for training in a nurses' course. We wish her success in her new line of work.

Mr. and Mrs. Charley Adams of Cedar Rapids, Mrs. F. O. Kennison and mother Mrs. Charlotte Flick of Waterloo were guests at the S. F. Stout home this week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Crozier, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Guyer and daughter, Mr and Mrs. E. J. Margertz and Darrel and Garaldene of Waterloo came Saturday to spend a few days at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hyde.

Dr. and Mrs. Evans and Mrs. John Cousins of New Hartford spent Sunday at D. W. Whitten home.

The funeral of the late Mrs. L. D. Bingham was held in Rowan, Friday at the Methodist church. After a short service at her home in Iowa Falls the friends accompanied the body here. Rev. H. Tomkinson conducted the service and Rev. Dr. Clinton of Iowa Falls delivered the address. The church and school room were filled to capacity. The cympathy of the whole comunity goes out to the bereaved husband and family.

Mrs. Frank Toyne has returned from a visit at Lake City and Lanesboro where she visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hinkley.

Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Stevenson are enjoying a visit from the following guests: Mrs Mary Beavers of Goldfield, Mr. and Mrs. Delmer Short and children of Vincent, and the Misses Martha and Marsell Stevenson of Minneapolis.

BOYS' SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS ENTERTAINS

The "S. O. S." Sunday school class entertained the Pollyanna class last Tuesday evening in the Evangelical church parlors. Those present report an enjoyable evening. Both classes held their regular business meeting after which the girls were served cafeteria style to what proved a delicious lunch, prepared by the boys. Following was the bill of fare the girls had to order from:

Go-Betweens, Predicaments, Jumbles, Transparent Perplexities, Orchard Gages, Crystals, A Tight Squeeze. And this what the girls received: Sandwiches, pickles, rolls, buns, cookies, fruit salad with whipped cream, green plums, water and fruit juice.

The Pollyannas voted the S. O. S. boys novel entertainers.

FAREWELL SURPRISE

Last Friday evening 31 young people gathered at the home of Harm Dierks for a farewell party for Rev. Eilert Dierks, who will leave soon for the East, where he has accepted a pastorate, it being his first charge, having completed his school work at New Jersey Theological Seminary last May. A royal good time was spent. Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served. As a token of esteem the young people clubbed together and presented Mr. Dierks with a parting gift of money, amounting to $15.50, all wishing him well in his new field of labor.

How Far Will Your Dollar

Go Today

What you get for a dollar determines its value. Every week this newspaper contains information. The man or woman who is best informed is the one who buys to best advantage.

Every week this newspaper contains information that you should have in order to increase your buying power. The advertisements are intimate little lessons in economy. They are notices of how---where---when and for what your dollar will go farthest.

This advertising awaits your pleasure. It does not force itself upon you. At your convenience you can study it to learn where to go for the product or service you require---to discover where and how you can buy most easily and to best advantage.

It's a fascinating and worth-while practice to see just how you can make your dollar do its best for you.

The Advertisements Will Tell You

FINISHING YOUR EDUCATION

Any young man who can finish his education and does not, is handicapping himself in the race of life. It is the weakness of the young that they cannot see into the future. Older people who have traveled the path that lies before the young man, know that he will find his greatest handicap a lack of education.

Education is a means of profiting by the experience of others. Let us illustrate the statement. When a man goes to school to learn farming he is taught all that the past generations have learned by experience in farming. He is taught the best sort of grain to raise on certain soil and in certain climates. He is taught the most nourishing foods to feed his stock, and the most profitable stock to raise. All the things that the stock raisers and land farmers have learned by experience in the past are taught to this young farmer. Suppose that a young man should discard the wisdom of the ages and start to learn by experience. How long would it take him to accumulate even a small per cent of the knowledge that is his for the asking in school? You and I know that he could not do it in a life time.

It is the same in every walk of life. No matter whether you are studying for the farm or the office or a profession. Education teaches you what the generations before you learned by experience and research. You positively can't take time to learn by experience. You must have an education if you are to succeed. If you have brains, you must cultivate them. If you have energy, you must direct it with good education. There is no other way.

You can not find a really successful man in the world today who lacks an education, who will not admit that his greatest handicap was that very lack of education.

Some people point to certain successful men and argue that because they have limited educations it is not necessary to be educated to succeed. Successul men who are not well educated have accomplished their success by sheer force of character and dogged perseverance. The same force of character and perserverence had they been coupled with an education, would have landed their owner much further up the ladder of success. These men achieved success in spite of their lack of education, and not because of it.

Other people point to some of life's failures that are very well educated indeed. Again they are the excption. An educated fool is the greatest fool of all, because fools can not profit by either the experience of others or themselves. To such people an education is useless. If you are a fool, get out of school and make room for someone who will utilize an education.

Did you ever stop to think what a narrow margin separates success and failure? Fifteen per cent will turn a failure into success. The man who makes seven and one-half per cent less than cost will go broke—be a failure. The man who makes seven and one-half per cent on his investment is a success. That fifteen per cent is available to the man who "knows his business"—was taught it by education.

Many boys are being lured away from school today by the prospect of good money for manual labor. These boys do not stop to think. Suppose it takes fifteen years to finish that education. Which will be best twenty years from today, fifteen years of high priced labor such as is paid experts, or twenty years of low priced labor such as is paid common laborers? Every boy knows that an educated will earn more in fifteen years than an uneducated man will earn in twenty years. And yet everyone of the boys quitting school to-day should live more than twenty years.

Young men who contemplate quitting school should take a long look into the future. If they do so they will not quit school if there is any possible means of avoiding it. No wages that can be paid to-day for manual labor will pay any boy for sacrificing an education. He will be a heavy money loser in the end.

Harold Blewitt and family and A. E. Muller and family attended the big Masonic picnic held at Sheffield in the tourist park last Friday. They report it a most enjoyable event. Masons and their families from Hampton, Rockwell, Geneva, Swaledale, Thornton, Meservey and Sheffield were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Heiko Kuhlers and Edward and Dena autoed to Britt on Thursday where they will attend the fair for a few days and visit relatives. From there they went to Woden, Ia., to visit at the Helms home. Mrs. Wilkinson and children accompanied them to Britt for a few days' visit with friends.

Mrs. Andrew Reevert and daughter from Pella, Iowa, arrived Friday for a visit at the Rev. Pannkuk home. Mrs. Reeverts and Mrs. Pannkuk are sisters.

WHITTEMORE OFFICER NABS ALGONA MASHERS

There is a rather common practice of boys and young men driving around town of an evening, and when they see a bunch of girls they swing to the curb and intreat them to go with them for a joy ride, said last week's Whittemore Champion. "Sometimes the boys are rather insistant in their demands. Last Sunday evening four lads were driving around pulling off such a stunt and stopped four Whittemore girls, some of them hardly in their teens. It just happened that Marshall Ed. Walsh was close by and he collared the lads before they could get away. They told him their home was in Algona, and that this was their first visit to Whittemore. Mr. Walsh invited them to visit the mayor and then they began to beg like goodfellows. They solemnly promised that if he would let them go they would never come to Whittemore again, and that they would never bother the girls again. Mr. Walsh being of a kind disposition let them go on their way, and they exceeded the speed limit in getting out of town. Algona boys are not the only ones disturbing the young ladies out walking, our own boys are just as handy as any of the outsiders. Some day some of them will get picked up as an example to others."

To Secretaries of Local Organizations

Why not let this newspaper save you labor?

Labor-saving devices are the modern methods.

They spell efficiency.

Why stay in the old rut?

This is what you have been doing for years—wasting your time and energy in sending out separate notices of meetings regarding your lodge to each member. This means that you have to address from 50 to 100 postal cards or envelopes in addition to preparing the notices for mailing out.

Why not put your notice in an advertisement under "Lodge Notices" in this paper? You could do it for $1.25 and save all that labor.

It's the modern way. It's the way most lodges are doing in the up-to-date communities.

What would be more interesting in this paper than a column or two of such notices? Your members would look for this feature in every issue. And then, think of the labor it would save you.

Just write out one notice and bring it to us. That's all. Simple, isn't it? You bet. Try it and you won't do it any other way.

We are here to serve you and ready to make suggestions.

Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Pals are rejoicing over the arrival of a new daughter, born Wednesday of last week.

CHURCH DEDICATION AND MISSION FEAST HELD

Wednesday, Aug. 30, was a proud day for the pastor and members of the Reformed church at this place. During the spring and summer months workmen have been busy, building the new addition to the church, which was found it would be necessary to add to make adequate room for the ever increasing membership. The cost of addition was about $5,500, and the entire sum has been raised, leaving the church free from debt. Big crowds came from far and near on this day to be present at the dedication, and in connection with this the Annual Mission Feast was held, making it an unusually interesting event. The amount collected during the day was $784.68, a share of which goes to Missions. Ministers who took part at the services during the day and in the evening are Rev. F. Reeverts, Stout, Ia; Rev. Theilken, Forreston, Ill; Rev. W. F. Janssen, Chapin, Ia; Rev. Barth, Hampton, Ia; Rev. Depping, Klemme, Ia; Rev. H. Kruse, Woden, Ia; Rev. E. Dirks, Rev. Schlesselman and Rev. Pannkuk, Meservey. All gave suitable, inspiring talks, or led in prayer, and altogether it was a most enjoyable and profitable day for those who attended. The music rendered by the choir and male quartette was much appreciated.

Jesse Brogan of Thornton was seen on our streets last Wednesday.

K. C. Ruigh and family departed Friday by auto for Friend, Nebr., where they will spend their vacation visiting relatives.

Taken up about July 25th—one black spring pig. Owner can have same by paying cost of advertising, etc.—U. J. Cooper.

OBITUARY

Sarah May Azeltine was born at Guttenburg, Clayton county, Iowa, May 23, 1864. She passed away at the family home in Iowa Falls about 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, August 30, 1922. Obtaining welcome relief from long and intense suffering. She had thus reached the age of 58 years, 3 months and 7 days. She is survived by her husband Lorenzo D. Bingham, one son, Harold C. Bingham of Washington, D. C., and her aged father, Andrew J. Azeltine, of Rowan, Iowa. She also leaves five brothers and two sisters: Mrs. F. H. Fowler, William W. Azeltine, Edward W. Azeltine, John Wesley Azeltine, Ray A. Azeltine, Henry O. Azeltine, and Mrs. A. C. Rietz, all of Rowan or vicinity.

During her early childhood she moved with her parents from her birth place in Clayton county to a farm in Grundy county, where they remained until 1873 when the family removed to the prairies of Nebraska and Kansas. Misfortunes, due to crop failures, compelled the family to return in 1875 to Grundy county. Nearly eight years later, in the spring of 1883, the family again left Grundy County for a future home in Wright county where they settled on a farm near Rowan. In and near this community she and the surviving members of the parental family have remained.

She was the second of a family of ten children. The oldest brother and one younger brother died in infancy leaving her the oldest living child in the family of eight children. She early assumed unusual responsibilities with the little brothers and sisters and she participated in the various hardships with which all pioneer families were confronted. From her Clayton county home she rode to church on an ox-drawn wood rack and in Kansas and Nebraska she attended schools conducted in primitive sod houses. In spite of the limitations of her time and surroundings she persevered in her efforts to prepare for a life of service. By taking full advantage of her meager opportunities for study she managed to obtain at the age of 18 a license to teach in the rural schools of Grundy county. Here and in the district schools of Franklin and Wright counties she taught continually until 1886. Much of her school service was rendered under primitive conditions when the blizzards of the open Iowa prairies often made the school house almost inaccessible.

In November 1886 she was united in marriage to Lorenzo D. Bingham. To this union one son was born. Until November, 1904, they lived continuously on a farm near Rowan when they moved to improve the educational opportunities for the son to Iowa Falls where they made their later home. She followed with rare interest and insight his progress in school work. The winters of later years were quite frequently spent in the home of his family in Boston, Mass., or Washington, D. C. She was always eager to learn and these visits in eastern cities were to her a source of much satisfaction.

Aftr the birth of the only child she never enjoyed the full vgor of health. For a few years she was a near invalid from which she recovered slowly and only partially, but for several years prior to her fatal illness she enjoyed moderate health. In the fall of 1917 she submitted to an operation which was repeated in 1921. Altho various kinds of medical aid was sought there was from this time a gradual decline in her vitality. For about a year prior to her departure from this life she suffered immeasureable pain and endured with wonderful resignation the tortures of her illness. During the period of this illness she made her final plans with full composure and in complete detail.

Thruout her life and her last illness she was in her quiet way cheerful, patient and deeply devout. She was always eager to serve, but cautious lest her service be not the best. Her christian life began in her childhood when she learned to pray at the knees of her parents. At different stages her christian experience was vividly heightened. She united with the Methodist Episcopal church at Rowan in 1890, when this church was dedicated, where her membership has always remained. During her residence in Iowa Falls she participated in the activities of the Methodist church at that place.

Outstanding in this life was the spirit of warm sympathy and the ability to exert a soothing influence on those who were intimate with her. In her quiet way she counselled helpfully with many friends about the problems of their hearts. To her husband she was a true and intimate companion and with him was thoroly versed in all phases of the family business. To the son she was always a devout teacher and wise leader and in his work she was to the end remarkably interested and helpful.

Albert Berhow was taken to the Steele hospital at Belmond, Friday, where he was operated on for hernia. The case was diagnosed by Dr. Sharon of this city.—Reporter.

MISS LULU BETT

Mamma had recovered and was eating cold scrambled eggs on the corner of the kitchen table when the ice cream soda party was ready to set out. Dwight threw her a casual "Better come, too, Mother Bett," but she shook her head. She wished to go, wished it with violence, but she contrived to give to her arbitrary refusal a quality of contempt. When Jenny arrived with Bobby, she had brought a sheaf of gladioli for Mrs. Bett, and took them to her in the kitchen, and as she laid the flowers beside her, the young girl stopped and kissed her. "You little darling!" cried Mrs. Bett, and clung to her, her lifted eyes lit by something intense and living. But when the ice cream party had set off at last, Mrs. Bett left her supper, gathered up the flowers, and crossed the lawn to the old cripple, Grandma Gates.

"Inie sha'n't have 'em," the old woman thought.

And then it was quite beautiful to watch her with Grandma Gates, whom she tended and petted, to whose complainings she listened, and to whom she tried to tell the small events of her day. When her neighbor had gone, Grandma Gates said that it was as good as a dose of medicine to have her come in.

Mrs. Bett sat on the porch restored and pleasant when the family returned. Di and Bobby had walked home with Jenny.

"Look here," said Dwight Herbert, "who is it sits home and has ice cream put in her lap like a queen?"

"Vanilly or chocolate?" Mrs. Bett demanded.

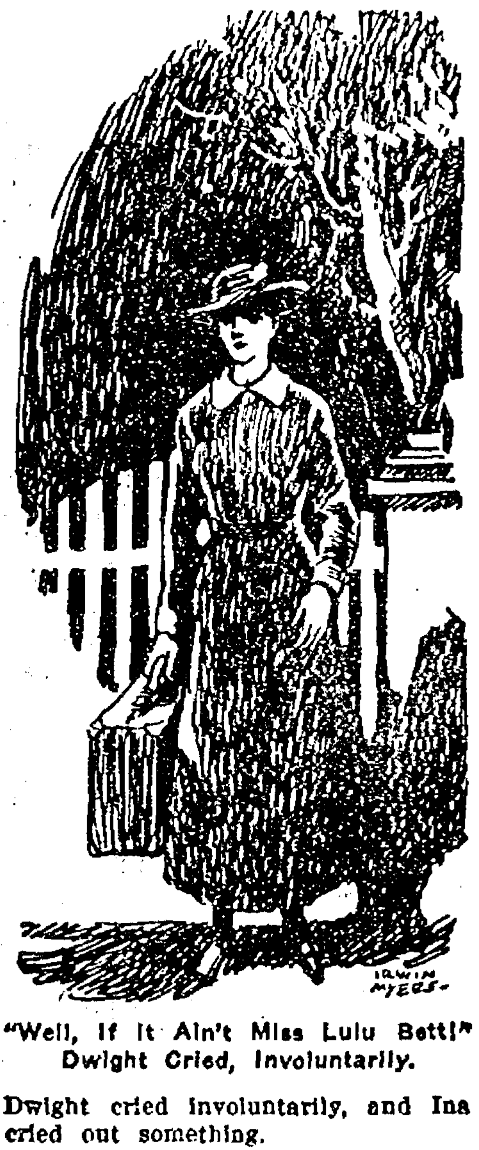
"Chocolate, mamma!" Ina cried, with the breeze in her voice.

"Vanilly sets better," Mrs. Bett said.

They sat with her on the porch while she ate. Ina rocked on a creaking board. Dwight swung a leg over the railing. Monona sat pulling her skirt over her feet, and humming all on one note. There was no moon, but the warm dusk had a quality of transparency as if it were lit in all its particles.

The gate opened, and some one came up the walk. They looked, and it was Lulu.

"Well, if it ain't Miss Lulu Bett!"



"Well, If It Ain't Miss Lulu Bett!" Dwight Cried, Involuntarily.

Dwight cried involuntarily, and Ina cried out something.

"How did you know?" Lulu asked.

"Know! Know what?"

"That it ain't Lulu Deacon. Hello, mamma."

She passed the others and kissed her mother.

"Say," said Mrs. Bett placidly. "And I just ate up the last spoonful o' cream."

"Ain't Lulu Deacon!" Ina's voice rose and swelled richly. "What you talking?"

"Didn't he write to you?" Lulu asked.

"Not a word." Dwight answered this. "All we've had we had from you—the last from Savannah, Georgia."

"Savannah, Georgia," said Lulu, and laughed.

They could see that she was dressed well, in dark red cloth, with a little tilting hat and a drooping veil. She did not seem in any wise upset, nor, save for that nervous laughter, did she show her excitement.

"Well, but he's here with you, isn't he?" Dwight demanded. "Isn't he here? Where is he?"

"Must be 'most to Oregon by this time," Lulu said.

"Oregon!"

"You see," said Lulu, "he had another wife."

"Why, he had not!" exclaimed Dwight absurdly.

"Yes. He hasn't seen her for fifteen years and he thinks she's dead. But he isn't sure."

"Nonsense," said Dwight. "Why, of course she's dead if he thinks so."

"I had to be sure," said Lulu.

At first dumb before this, Ina now cried out: "Monona! Go upstairs to bed at once."

"It's only quarter to," said Monona, with assurance.

"Do as mamma tells you."

"But—"

"Monona!"

She went, kissing them all good-night and taking her time about it. Everything was suspended while she kissed them and departed, walking slowly backward.

"Married?" said Mrs. Bett with tardy apprehension. "Lulie, was your husband married?"

"Yes," Lulu said, "my husband was married, mother."

"Mercy," said Ina. "Think of anything like that in our family.'

"Well, go on—go on!" Dwight cried. "Tell us about it."

Lulu spoke in a monotone, with her old manner of hesitation:

"We were going to Oregon. First down to New Orleans and then out to California and up the coast." On this she paused and sighed. "Well, then at Savannah, Georgia, he said he thought I better know, first. So he told me."

"Yes—well, what did he say?" Dwight demanded irritably.

"Cora Waters," said Lulu. "Cora Waters. She married him down in San Diego, eighteen years ago. She went to South America with him."

"Well, he never let us know of it, if she did," said Dwight.

"No. She married him just before he went. Then in South America, after two years, she ran away again. That's all he knows."

"That's a pretty story," said Dwight contemptuously.

"He says if she'd been alive, she'd been after him for a divorce. And she never has been, so he thinks she must be dead. The trouble is," Lulu said again, "he wasn't sure. And I had to be sure."

"Well, but mercy," said Ina, "couldn't he find out now?"

"It might take a long time," said Lulu simply, "and I didn't want to stay and not know."

"Well, then, why didn't he say so here?" Ina's indignation mounted.

"He would have. But you know how sudden everything was. He said he thought about telling us right there in the restaurant, but of course that'd been hard—wouldn't it? And then he felt so sure she was dead."

"Why did he tell you at all, then?" demanded Ina, whose processes were simple.

"Yes. Well! Why indeed?" Dwight Herbert brought out these words with a curious emphasis.

"I thought that, just at first," Lulu said, "but only just at first. Of course that wouldn't have been right. And then, you see, he gave me my choice."

"Gave you your choice?" Dwight echoed.

"Yes. About going on and taking the chances. He gave me my choice when he told me, there in Savannah, Georgia."

"What made him conclude, by then, that you ought to be told?" Dwight asked.

"Why, he'd got to thinking about it," she answered.

A silence fell. Lulu sat looking out toward the street.

"The only thing," she said, "as long as it happened, I kind of wish he hadn't told me till we got out to Oregon."

"Lulu!" said Ina. Ina began to cry. "You poor thing!" she said.

Her tears were a signal to Mrs. Bett, who had been striving to understand all. Now she too wept, tossing up her hands and rocking her body. Her saucer and spoon clattered on her knee.

"He felt bad, too," Lulu said.

"He!" said Dwight. "He must have."

"It's you," Ina sobbed. "It's you. My sister!"

"Well," said Lulu, "but I never thought of it making you both feel bad, or I wouldn't have come home. I knew," she added, "it'd make Dwight feel bad. I mean, it was his brother—"

"Thank goodness," Ina broke in, "nobody need know about it."

Lulu regarded her, without change.

"Oh, yes," she said in her monotone. "People will have to know."

"I do not see the necessity." Dwight's voice was on edge. Then too he said "do not," always with Dwight betokening the finalities.

"Why, what would they think?" Lulu asked, troubled.

"What difference does it make what they think?"

"Why," said Lulu slowly, "I shouldn't like—you see they might—why, Dwight, I think we'll have to tell them."

"You do! You think the disgrace of bigamy in this family is something the whole town will have to know about?"

Lulu looked at him with parted lips.

"Say," she said, "I never thought about it being that."

Dwight laughed. "What do you think it was? And whose disgrace is it, pray?"

Ninian's," said Lulu.

"Ninian's! Well, he's gone. But you're here. And I'm here. Folks'll feel sorry for you. But the disgrace—that'd reflect on me. See?"

"But if we don't tell, what'll they think then?"

Said Dwight: "They'll think what they always think when a wife leaves her husband. They'll think you couldn't get along. That's all."

"I should hate that," said Lulu.

"Well, I should hate the other, let me tell you."

"Dwight, Dwight," said Ina. "Let's go in the house. I'm afraid they'll hear—"

As they rose, Mrs. Bett plucked at her returned daughter's sleeve.

"Lulie," she said, "was his other wife—was she there?"

"No, no, mother. She wasn't there."

Mrs. Betts' lips moved, repeating the words. "Then that ain't so bad," she said. "I was afraid maybe she turned you out."

"No," Lulu said, "it wasn't that bad, mother."

Mrs. Bett brightened. In little matters, she quarreled and resented, but the large issues left her blank.

Through some indeterminate sense of the importance due this crisis, the Deacons entered their parlor. Dwight lighted that high, central burner and faced about, saying:

"In fact, I simply will not have it, Lulu! You expect, I take it, to make your home with us in the future, on the old terms."

"Well—"

"I mean, did Ninian give you any money?"

"No. He didn't give me any money—only enough to get home on. And I kept my suit—why!" she flung her head back, "I wouln't have taken any money!"

"That means," said Dwight, "that you will have to continue to live here—on the old terms, and of course I'm quite willing that you should. Let me tell you, however, that this is on condition—on condition that this disgraceful business is kept to ourselves."

She made no attempt to combat him now. She looked back at him, quivering, and in a great surprise, but she said nothing.

"Truly, Lulu," said Ina, "wouldn't that be best? They'll talk anyway. But this way they'll only talk about you, and the other way it'd be about all of us."

Lulu said only: "But the other way would be the truth."

Dwight's eyes narrowed: "My dear Lulu," he said, "are you sure of that?"

"Sure?"

"Yes. Did he give you any proofs?"

"Proofs?"

"Letters—documents of any sort? Any sort of assurance that he was speaking the truth?"

"Why, no," said Lulu. "Proofs—no. He told me."

"He told you?"

"Why that was hard enough to have to do. It was terrible for him to have to do. What proofs—" She stopped, puzzled.

"Didn't it occur to you," said Dwight, "that he might have told you that because he din't want to have to go on with it?"

As she met his look some power seemed to go from Lulu. She sat down, looked weakly at them, and within her closed lips her jaw was slightly fallen. She said nothing. And seeing on her skirt a spot of dust she began to rub at that.

"Why, Dwight!" Ina cried, and moved to her sister's side.

"I may as well tell you," he said, "that I myself have no idea that Ninian told you the truth. He was always imagining things—you saw that. I know him pretty well—have been more or less in touch with him the whole time. In short, I haven't the least idea he was ever married before."

Lulu continued to rub at her skirt.

"I never thought of that," she said.

"Look here," Dwight went on persuasively, "hadn't you and he had some little tiff when he told you?"

"No—no! Why, not once. Why, we weren't a bit like you and Ina."

She spoke simply and from her heart and without guile.

"Evidently not," Dwight said dryly.

Lulu went on: "He was very good to me. This dress—and my shoes—and my hat. And another dress, too." She found the pins and took off her hat. "He liked the red wing," she said. "I wanted black—oh, Dwight! He did tell me the truth!" It was as if the red wing had abruptly borne mute witness.

Dwight's tone now mounted. His manner, it mounted too.

"Even if it is true," said he, "I desire that you should keep silent and protect my family from this scandal. I merely mention my doubts to you for your own profit."

"My own profit!"

She said no more, but rose and moved to the door.

"Lulu—you see! With Di and all!" Ina begged. "We just couldn't have this known—even if it was so."

"You have it in your hands," said Dwight, "to repay me, Lulu, for anything that you feel I may have done for you in the past. You also have it in your hands to decide whether your home here continues. That is not a pleasant position for me to find myself in. It is distinctly unpleasant, I may say. But you see for yourself."

Lulu went on, into the passage.

"Wasn't she married when she thought she was?" Mrs. Bett cried shrilly.

"Mamma," said Ina. "Do, please, remember Monona. Yes—Dwight thinks she's married all right now—and that it's all right, all the time."

"Well, I hope so, for pity sakes," said Mrs. Bett, and left the room with her daughter.

Hearing the stir, Monona upstairs lifted her voice:

"Mamma! Come on and hear my prayers, why don't you?"

* * * * * * * *

When they came downstairs next morning, Lulu had breakfast ready.

Well!" cried Ina in her curving tones, "if this isn't like old times."

Lulu said yes, it was like old times, and brought the bacon to the table.

"Lulu's the only one in this house can cook the bacon so's it'll chew." Mrs. Bett volunteered. She was wholly affable, and held contentedly to Ina's last word that Dwight thought now it was all right.

"Ho!" said Dwight. "The happy family, once more about the festive toaster." He gauged the moment to call for good cheer. Ina, too, became breezy, blithe. Monona caught their spirit and laughed, head thrown well back and gently shaken.

Di came in. She had been told that Auntie Lulu was at home, and that she, Di, wasn't to say anything to her about anything, nor anything to anybody else about Auntie Lulu being back. Under these prohibitions, which loosed a thousand speculations, Di was very nearly paralyzed. She stared at her Aunt Lulu incessantly.

Not one of them had even a talent for the casual, save Lulu herself. Lulu was amazingly herself. She took her old place, assumed her old offices. When Monona declared against bacon, it was Lulu who suggested milk toast and went to make it.

"Mamma," Di whispered then, like escaping steam, "isn't Uncle Ninian coming too?"

"Hush. No. Now don't ask any more questions."

"Well, can't I tell Bobby and Jenny she's here?"

"No. Don't say anything at all about her."

"But, mamma. What has she done?"

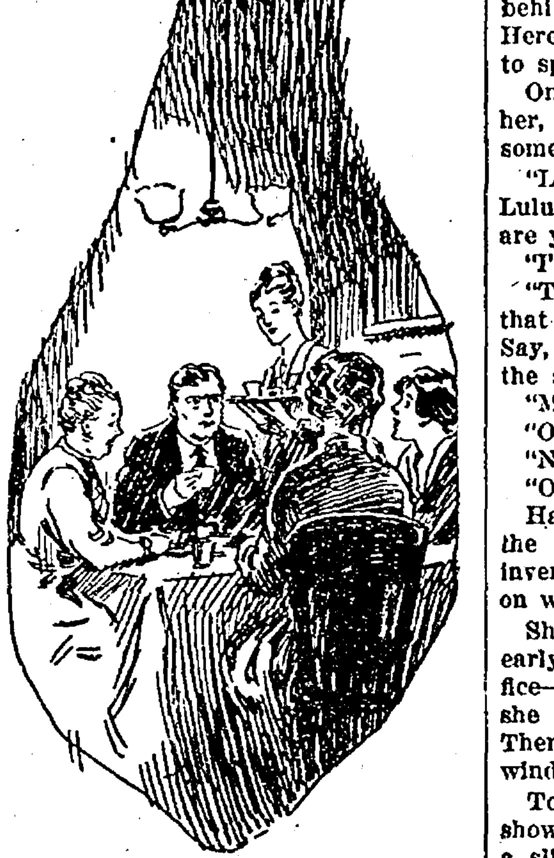
"Di! Do as mamma tells you. Don't you think mamma knows best?"

Di of course did not think so, had not thought so for a long time. But now Dwight said:

"Daughter! Are you a little girl or our own grown-up young lady?"

"I don't know," said Di reasonably, "but I think you're treating me like a little girl now."

"Shame, Di," said Ina, unabashed by the accident of reason being on the side of Di.



Under These Prohibitions, Which Loosed a Thousand Speculations, Di Was Very Nearly Paralyzed.

"I'm eighteen," Di reminded them forlornly, "and through high school."

"Then act so," boomed her father.

Baffled, thwarted, bewildered, Di went over to Jenny Plow's and there imparted understanding by the simple process of letting Jenny guess, to questions skillfully shaped.

When Dwight said, "Look at my beautiful handkerchief," displayed a hole, sent his Ina for a better, Lulu, with a manner of haste, addressed him:

"Dwight, it's a funny thing, but I haven't Ninian's Oregon address."

"Well?"

"Well, I wish you'd give it to me."

Dwight tightened and lifted his lips. "It would seem," he said, "that you have no real use for that particular address, Lulu."

"Yes, I have. I want it. You have it, haven't you, Dwight?"

"Certainly I have it."

"Won't you please write it down for me?" She had ready a bit of paper and a pencil stump.

"My dear Lulu, now why revive anything? Why not be sensible and leave this alone? No good can come by—"

"But why shouldn't I have his address?"

"If everything is over between you, why should you?"

"But you say he's still my husband."

Dwight flushed. "If my brother has shown his inclination as plainly as I judge that he has, it is certainly not my place to put you in touch with him again."

"You won't give it to me?"

"My dear Lulu, in all kindness—no."

His Ina came running back, bearing handkerchiefs with different colored borders for him to choose from. He chose the initial that she had embroidered, and had not the good taste not to kiss her.

* * * * * * * *

They were all on the porch that evening, when Lulu came downstairs.

"Where are you going?" Ina demanded, sisterly. And on hearing that Lulu had an errand, added still more sisterly: "Well, but mercy, what you so dressed up for?"

Lulu was in a thin black and white gown which they had never seen, and wore the tilting hat with the red wing.

"Ninian bought me this," Lulu only said.

"But, Lulu, don't you think it might be better to keep, well—out of sight for a few days?" Ina's lifted look besought her.

"Why?" Lulu asked.

"Why set people wondering till we have to?"

"They don't have to wonder, far as I'm concerned," said Lulu, and went down the walk.

Ina looked at Dwight. "She never spoke to me like that in her life before," she said.

She watched her sister's black and white figure going directly down the street.

"That gives me the funniest feeling," said Ina, "as if Lulu had on clothes bought for her by some one that wasn't—that was—"

"By her husband who has left her," said Dwight sadly.

"Is that what it is, papa?" Di asked alertly. For a wonder, she was there; had been there the greater part of the day—most of the time staring, fascinated, at her Aunt Lulu.

"That's what it is, my little girl," said Dwight, and shook his head.

"Well, I think it's a shame," said Di stoutly. "And I think Uncle Ninian is a slunge."

"Di!"

"I do. And I'd be ashamed to think anything else. I'd like to tell everybody."

"There is," said Dwight, "no need for secrecy—now."

"Dwight!" said Ina—Ina's eyes always remained expressionless, but it must have been her lashes that looked so startled.

"No need whatever for secrecy," he repeated with firmness. "The truth is Lulu's husband has tired of her and sent her home. We must face it."

"But, Dwight—how awful for Lulu . . ."

"Lulu," said Dwight, "has us to stand by her."

Lulu, walking down the main street, thought:

"Now Mis' Chambers is seeing me. Now Mis' Curtis. There's somebody behind the vines at Mis' Martin's. Here comes Mis' Grove and I've got to speak to her . . ."

One and another and another met her, and every one cried out at her some version of:

"Lulu Bett!" Or, "W-well, it isn't Lulu Bett any more, is it? Well, what are you doing here? I thought . . ."

"I'm back to stay," she said.

"The idea! Well, where you hiding that handsome husband of yours? Say, but we were surprised! You're the sly one—"

"My—Mr. Deacon isn't here."

"Oh."

"No. He's West."

"Oh, I see."

Having no arts, she must needs let the conversation die like this, could invent nothing concealing or gracious on which to move away.

She went to the post office. It was early, there were few at the post office—with only one or two there had she to go through her examination. Then she went to the general delivery window, tense for a new ordeal.

To her relief, the face which was shown there was one strange to her, a slim youth, reading a letter of his own, and smiling.

"Excuse me," said Lulu faintly.

The youth looked up, with eyes warmed by the words on the pink paper which he held.

"Could you give me the address of Mr. Ninian Deacon?"

"Let's see—you mean Dwight Deacon, I guess?"

"No. It's his brother. He's been here. From Oregon. I thought he might have given you his address—" she dwindled away.

"Wait a minute," said the youth. "Nope. No address here. Say, why don't you send it to his brother? He'd know. Dwight Deacon, the dentist."

"I'll do that," Lulu said absurdly, and turned away.

She went back up the street, walking fast now to get away from them all. Once or twice she pretended not to see a familiar face. But when she passed the mirror in an insurance office window, she saw her reflection and at its appearance she felt surprise and pleasure.

"Well!" she thought, almost in Ina's own manner.

Abruptly her confidence rose.

Something of this confidence was still upon her when she returned. They were in the dining room now, all save Di, who was on the porch with Bobby, and Monona, who was in bed and might be heard extravagantly singing.

Lulu sat down with her hat on. When Dwight inquired playfully, "Don't we look like company?" she did not reply. He looked at her speculatively. Where had she gone, with whom had she talked, what had she told? Ina looked at her rather fearfully. But Mrs. Bett rocked contentedly and ate cardamom seeds.

"Whom did you see?" Ina asked.

Lulu named them.

"See them to talk to?" from Dwight. Oh, yes. They had all stopped.

"What did they say?" Ina burst out.

They had inquired for Ninian, Lulu said; and said no more.

Dwight mulled this. Lulu might have told every one of these women that cock-and-bull story with which she had come home. It might be all over town. Of course, in that case he could turn Lulu out—should do so, in fact. Still the story would be all over town.

"Dwight," said Lulu, "I want Ninian's address."

"Going to write to him!" Ina cried incredulously.

"I want to ask him for the proofs that Dwight wanted."

"My dear Lulu," Dwight said impatiently, "you are not the one to write. Have you no delicacy?"

Lulu smiled—a strange smile, originating and dying in one corner of her mouth.

"Yes," she said. "So much delicacy that I want to be sure whether I'm married or not."

Dwight cleared his throat with a movement which seemed to use his shoulders for the purpose.

"I myself will take this up with my brother," he said. "I will write to him about it."

Lulu sprang to her feet. "Write to him now!" she cried.

"Really," said Dwight, lifting his brows.

"Now—now!" Lulu said. She moved about, collecting writing materials from their casual lodgments on shelf and table. She set all before him and stood by him. "Write him now," she said again.

"My dear Lulu, don't be absurd."

She said: "Ina, help me. If it was Dwight—and they didn't know whether he had another wife, or not, and you wanted to ask him—oh, don't you see? Help me."

Ina was not yet the woman to cry for justice for its own sake, nor even to stand by another woman. She was primitive, and her instinct was to look to her own male merely.

"Well," she said, "of course. But why not let Dwight do it in his own way? Wouldn't that be better?"

She put it to her sister fairly: Now, no matter what Dwight's way was, wouldn't that be better?

"Mother!" said Lulu. She looked irresolutely toward her mother. But Mrs. Bett was eating caradmom seeds with exceeding gusto, and Lulu looked away. Caught by the gesture, Mrs. Bett voiced her grievance.

"Lulie," she said, "Set down. Take off your hat, why don't you?"

Lulu turned upon Dwight a quiet face which he had never seen before.

"You write that letter to Ninian," she said, "and you make him tell you so you'll understand. I know he spoke the truth. But I want you to know."

"M—m," said Dwight. "And then I suppose you're going to tell it all over town—as soon as you have the proofs."

"I'm going to tell it all over town," said Lulu, "just as it is—unless you write to him now."

"Lulu!" cried Ina. "Oh, you wouldn't."

"I would," said Lulu. "I will."

Dwight was sobered. This unimagined Lulu looked capable of it. But then he sneered.

"And get turned out of this house, as you would be?"

"Dwight!" cried his Ina. "Oh, you wouldn't!"

"I would," said Dwight. "I will. Lulu knows it."

"I shall tell what I know and then leave your house anyway," said Lulu, "unless you get Ninian's word. And I want you should write him now."

"Leave your mother? And Ina?" he asked.

"Leave everything," said Lulu.

"Oh, Dwight," said Ina, "we can't get along without Lulu." She did not say in what particulars, but Dwight knew.

Dwight looked at Lulu, an upward, sidewise look, with a manner of peering out to see if she meant it. And he saw.

He shrugged, pursed his lips crookedly, rolled his head to signify the inexpressible. "Isn't that like a woman?" he demanded. He rose. "Rather than let you in for a show of temper," he said grandly, "I'd do anything."

He wrote the letter, addressed it, his hand elaborately curved in secrecy about the envelope, pocketed it.

"Ina and I'll walk down with you to mail it," said Lulu.

Dwight hesitated, frowned. His Ina watched him with consulting brows.

"I was going," said Dwight, "to propose a little stroll before bedtime." He roved about the room. "Where's my beautiful straw hat? There's nothing like a brisk walk to induce sound, restful sleep," he told them. He hummed a bar.

"You'll be all right, mother?" Lulu asked.

Mrs. Bett did not look up. "These cardamon hev got a little mite too dry," she said.

* * * * * * *

In their room, Ina and Dwight discussed the incredible actions of Lulu.

"I saw," said Dwight, "I saw she wasn't herself. I'd do anything to avoid having a scene—you know that." His glance swept a little anxiously his Ina. "You know that, don't you?" he sharply inquired.

"But I really think you ought to have written to Ninian about it," she now dared to say. "It's not a nice position for Lulu."

Geo. Hunst and family have been quarantined for scarlet fever the past week or two, the children having the disease in a light form.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Obrecht are the parents of a baby boy, who came to their home on Thursday of last week.

Lud Simerson returned Wednesday last from North Dakota, where he had been for a week or so looking after his farming interests in that country.

Louie Balridge was in town over the week end, visiting at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Baldridge, and greeting old friends. Louie is now employed in a freight house of the Rock Island road at Waterloo.

Matt Holtzbauer and family drove to West Bend last week to see the grotto, and also to visit relatives at Algona.

The Independent had an item handed in this week that bore the notation at the end, "please criticise." Never mind who it was, but we want to say that the item needed no changing, and the fact that the writer of it was willing to have it changed if necessary speaks much. We are very glad to have such items come in. Let's have many of them.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Townsan drove to West Bend on Sunday to visit the famous grosto. Clarence reports that there must have been in the neighborhood of two thousand people there Sunday afternoon to view this wonderful work.

40 ACRES OF MELONS!

Reporter: Just think of it. Forty acres of fine, luscious water melons, cantaloupes and musk melons, just east of the city limits of Clear Lake. The writer visited the farm one day last week, with a guard to see that we did not run off with any of this choice fruit. A few o the melons are just getting ripe, and are being placed on the market. They are of the very best and sweetest varieties, and are far superior to most of those shipped from other places. When a melon is really ripe it will not stand shipping and handling and lying around for several days without spoiling. These are not picked until ripe, because they are to be consumed here and consumed at once.

But we should not bring this little notice to a close without adding one more word. A live, active, non-sleeping individual, accompanied by two bull dogs with sharp teeth, make it their duty each night to see that none of these melons get away. If you want to visit the patch for any purpose whatever, go in the daytime. Night time visits will be attended with danger.

Mrs. Ray Morris and children of Belmond, former residents of this place, were here Thursday visiting old time friends.—Reporter.

TRAIN WRECK AT GARNER SATURDAY

Signal: The Milwaukee had a wreck in Garner Saturday evening that would undoubtedly have been very serious had it happened at a point where the train was going at a high rate of speed. As it was the train was moving slowly and not much damage was done, except that a couple of cars were more or less torn to pieces.

The regular time freight going east was pulling into town and at a point near the water tank the rear trucks on the next to last freight car of the train broke loose from the car and left the track. The front trucks on the next car went over the loose trucks, burying them in the dirt and this tipped the rear car over on its side.

The way-car was derailed but did not tip over. However the conductor said the way-car rocked like a cradle.

The conductor and two brakeman were in the way-car and had the car tipped over they might have been injured. As it was they were not in the least injured.

The car from which the trucks came loose stayed right side up and was not otherwise damaged. The car that was tipped over was loaded with shelled corn which was later transfered to another car. The roof and front platform of the way- car were damaged some.

The wreck happened at a very convenient place, for though the main track and the regular passing track were blockaded by the wreckage, the house track was cleared and the evening passenger and the Sunday trains could get by.

A wrecking crew came from Mason City Sunday morning and worked all day clearing it up. The rails were twisted and bent so that it was necessary for the trains to pass at slow speed until the damage could all be repaired.

Had the accident occurred as the train was coming down the hill west of town, it is likely that it would have been much more serious, as the derailed cars very likely would have pulled the other cars from the track.

FARM FIRE AT KLEMME

Times: The Melvin Whitesell farm, four miles north of Klemme on the Wilson Highway, was the scene af a bad fire which was first noticed at about eight o'clock Monday morning. At that time the roof of the barn was all ablaze and it was seen that the fire could not be controlled to save the other buildings near by and so efforts were directed toward saving the house.

A large barn, a good sized granary containing 3,000 bushels of oats, corn crib, 200 bushels of corn, some hay, some machinery and harnesses were destroyed.

The fire was on Mr. Whitesell's south farm and was tenanted by Mr. C. C. Nelson, who will be the heavy loser as he had no insurance on the grain or machinery. Whitesell carried some insurance on the buildings.

Most of Mr. Nelson's good machinery was standing under the trees as he had used it recently and had not as yet put it away in the sheds, but he will lose quite a large sum anyway.

THE SUGAR FACTORY STARTS STEAMING UP

Land Deals Up In District Court

Purchasers Who Bought At Peak Prices Have Hard Job To Pay Up Now

$5,000 DAMAGE SUIT IS UP

Monitor: The board of supervisors was in session Saturday at which time they transacted a portion of the regular September business. No session was held on Labor Day, but Tuesday saw the balance of the work cleaned up.

The force with the county engineer has been devoting some time to the making of cement reference posts for use on primary road work. The posts are 4 x 4 inches in size and six feet long and made of cement. The forms were made last week in the court house basement and the manufacture of the posts is now in progress.

Chas. Rotzler petitions the court for judgment against Thos. Russell on a judgment for $184.04 granted in this court twenty years ago this coming October, at which time it will outlaw if not renewed. The interest and costs now amount to $475.

Wm. Wehrhein, who is defendant in an action brought by W. H. Smalley, on a land contract, has filed his answer and counterclaim. The deal in question involved the exchange of an interest in seven sections of Montana land and a $3,340 mortgage for a quarter section of Minnesota land and a mortgage for $17,022, of which amount $5,000 was to be paid by Smalley. He alleges misrepresentation regarding the Minnesota land by Smalley, who stated it was good tillable soil with no quack grass and good buildings, all of which this defendant alleges is untrue. He also alleges he has been damaged in the sum of $4,000 and asks judgment for that amount.

Leuthold & Hinkley vs L. R. Woodward is a suit to recover on a note and mortgage in the sum of $153.

Another suit growing out of a land deal in 1920 is that of Sam McComber vs. W. H. Short et al, who asks the court to foreclose a second mortgage for $16,000. A first mortgage for $12,000 is held by the Citizens State Bank.

John Lindstrom of Clarion is made defendant in a suit brought by the Chippewa Shoe Mfg. Co. for the sum of $169.20, being for goods sold defendant.

During the past two and one-half years seventy patients from Wright county have been sent to Iowa City for treatment under the Perkins law for children and the Haskell-Klass measure for adults. The last patient, Mrs. Jeff Tudor of Clarion, departed for the state institution on Saturday.

A $5,000 damage suit growing out of an auto accident near Rowan on last Christmas eve has been filed by Arthur Hanson against Geo. Aldrich. In his petition plaintiff alleges himself and family were returning home from the Christmas exercises at Rowan in their Ford touring car when the lights went out and the car stopped; that he spent several minutes trying to start the car, but was unable to do so; that he heard defendant's stripped Ford approaching at a high and dangerous rate of speed; that in order to protect his car and family he went back some distance and waved his arms in signalling defendant to stop or turn out; that the highway was of sufficient wdth and the night sufficiently bright to have avoided a collision; that this plaintiff was knocked down and seriously and permanently injured; that his skull was crushed rendering him unconscious; two bones of the left leg were broken, also both bones of the right arm, besides cuts and gashes, mental and physical pain, for all of which he claims he was damaged in the above amount.

Monday evening after the concert by the Rainbow band there will be a dance at the opera house.

OLAF NEWS ITEMS

Miss Alma Ericson returned Tuesday of last week from Aitken, Minn., where she had spent several months for her health. We are glad to note that Alma is looking very well and says she feels as well as she ever did.

Clarence Scott and wife, accompanied by Miss Blanche Baker and Mr. Stevenson drove to Minnesota Saturday to spend a week's vacation at the lakes.

The Ladies Aid society met with Mrs. A. Lunning last Wednesday and was quite well attended. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Andrew Olson, Sept. 20.

A reunion of cousins was held at the Anton Olson home last Sunday. There were 12 children and families of Ole Thompson and several cousins from Thor. The reunion was the children and nieces and nephews of Mrs. Ole Thompson. A fine picnic dinner was served.

Harold Simerson goes to Harvard University this week, where he will attend school this year.

Silo filling is the order of the day among the farmers.

A much-needed rain refreshed the earth Friday night. The hot winds of the past week damaged the corn and beets to some extent.

A heavy frost fell Sunday night, doing little damage however, except to corn in the peet beds.

GOODELL NEWS NOTES

Miss Alva Matson spent Sunday with friends near Belmond.

Friday evening Eddie Boller and John Miller left for Cedar Rapids where they will attend Coe College the coming year.

John McCorckle and family from Kanawha visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Graeber on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ritter of Klemme called on Mr. and Mrs. Beier on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Conwell returned Sunday from a two weeks' vacation.

There was a light frost in the low places around Goodell on Sunday night. It was so light that no damage was done.

Monday noon Miss Dorothy Okrueg left for Coe College. This is her second year. She was accompanied by the Misses Louisa Ahrenkeil and Louise Mason, who will enter the Freshman class at Coe. Goodell will be represented at Coe by five of its' finest young people.

The educational program at the U. B. church Sunday night was well attended. The choir was out in full force and rendered a fine anthem. Addresses were made by Miss Okrueg, Supt. Nelson, and Rev. Miller.

The Women's Missionary Association of the U. B. church will hold their third quarterly business meeting at the home of Mrs. L. W. Sherwood on Sept. 15. at 2 p.m. Because of the rain last Friday it was postponed to this date.

WALL LAKE LOSES 6 TO 0

The Wall Lake team went down to defeat Sunday before the Belmond team by a white-wash score of 6 to 0. It was a good game despite the one-sided result, and some very good playing was exhibited. The Wall Lake team is a good outfit, and they put up a hard fight, but they were simply outplayed by the local bunch. The Belmond team was handicapped by the absence of Fulton, Packard and Foss, three of the best players and batters, all three being out of town. However with Edwin Christie in right field, Claire Christie at first, and Quigley in center, the boys put up a real exhibition and had the Wall Lake bunch helpless. Chapman on the mound for Belmond was a regular mystery to the Lakeites, who simply could not connect with his offerings. John has pitched some of the best base-ball that has been seen in this neck of the woods this summer. And "Barney" Dillon drove one for a complete circuit of the sacks, bringing Thomas ahead of him, as the feature of the game. The Eagle Grove shopmen were only able to trim the Wall Lake team 4 to 2 after a hard-fought contest. When are we going to have another game with these same shopmen? The last one went 15 innings.

NO OPPORTUNITIES TODAY?

It is the common cry of failure and weakness—there are no opportunities today like there were when the rich and prominent in other ways "made their stake."

Come here boy. When any one gives you that kind of stuff don't take time to listen to it. Walk away.

Someone has compiled a little list that you'd much better memorize than to listen to the husky whiner who has failed because he hated to work and wait and to the conclusions of the fellow who thinks the way to success should be a moving stairway run by the exertion of others. Here's the list. Read it. It starts out "thirty years ago—

The world's most famous automobile manufacturer and rated as the richest individual in America, was a day laborer in a bicycle factory.

The country's most famous hotel owner and a millionaire many times over, was a bell boy in a rooming house.

The man who is today the "steel king" of America was working 16 hours a day as a stoker in a blast furnace.

The man who is today one of the country's most powerful bankers, a financier of international repute, was fireman on a locomotive.

The president of the United States was working as a day laborer in a printing office.

One of the greatest merchants in America was a peddler traveling over the country with a pack on his back.

The president of one of the nation's biggest railroad systems was pounding a key in a telegraph.

That's only a short list. It doesn't say anything about Thomas Edison, erstwhile telegraph operator at $30 a month.

It doesn't include the men you know personally, the boy who was selling magazines and peanuts as a train butcher and who is a bank president the other who come to town to clerk in somebody's store and now has a big store of his own; the list doesn't include the boy who worked on a farm for $16 a month 35 years ago and now has a farm for each of his boys and another for his son-in-law; the leading professional men who "worked their way thru;" there's a lot of men whom you know personally that are not in that list but who would make a mighty imppressive list of their own, a long list.

When somebody tells you that stuff walk away from him. Start out and take a little census of the men you know, of those who have succeeded in business, industry, professions. Find out what they were doing 30 odd years ago.

When you have completed your investigation you'll know more about opportunity.—Times-Republican.

HORSE CAUSES EXCITEMENT

A horse belonging to Clyde Duncan, which he had driven to town and tied on the south side of the J. U. Johnson store, became frightened Tuesday eve about ten thirty, broke loose and started north on the run. In the square by the banks it changed its mind as to the direction it wished to go and turned around and went south. In front of the Judd Sign Co. building it bumped into the John Peters Ford and tipped the buggy over. Hearing the band practicing it headed straight for the open door of Tande & Heckerson building where the practice was being held, but just before getting there, stumbled and fell, but soon regained its footing, broke loose from the buggy and continued on its southward journey. Aside from a broken harness no damage was done. —Reporter.

TO HAVE FOOT BALL IN HIGH SCHOOL NOW

We understand that the faculty of the school are planning on a foot ball team this fall, and preliminary pracice work has begun. Supt. Guthrie, we are informed, first put it up to the board of education, and then sent personal letters to the parents of the boys asking hem to state their deboys asking them to state their dejority it is understood replied favorably. We believe that a foot ball team will go nicely in the local school and that a fast team can be developed. With the proper coaching and training the danger of injury, which heretofore has held back such sport, is very small, and in Mr. Pals the school has a man who has had several years of foot ball in college, who knows the game and how to prepare the boys for it. Under his care and training parents need not fear that their sons will be sent into "battle" unprepared and untrained. We anticipate some good exhibitions of this popular sport when the team gets into shape.

CASH MARKET IS SOLD

A deal was recently consumated by which the Cash Market is sold to the Larsen Brothers of Klemme. Possession is to be given on October 1st. We did not learn the consideration, or what the present proprietor, Thos. Tyrrell's, future plans are. The Larsen Brothers are well established in the meat market business, operating the shop at Klemme and one at Garner. We understand that they plan to do all their butchering for the three towns at Klemme, hauling the meat to the various shops by truck.

TRINITY CHURCH

Wednesday evening the choir will meet in the church for practice at 7:30. Let us meet and help in our church work.

Thursday evening the mid-week service will be conducted at the church at 8 o'clock.

Saturday morning at 10 o'clock the classes will meet in the church.

Sunday morning the services will be conducted in the English language. We hope to see the pupils, teachers and parents present. We begin a new year's work then. Let us begin with co-operation. In the evening Hon. L. A. Jensen of Forest City, now a member of the Parole Board, will speak. We want the many people especially to hear him. He will have something good for all.

ST. OLAF

Wednesday evening prayer meeting will be conducted at the home of Ole Tegland. Come!

Saturday afternoon at 1:30 the class meets at the church. Remember we have review work now and nobody must be absent. Sunday school will be conducted next Sunday morning at 10:30. You should be there.

NOTICE!

To the members of the Farm Bureau and Others: Let me know when you are to hold a meeting, and where, and I will pop corn, also have fresh roasted peanuts, gum, cracker jack and cigars. I can go to any meeting, picnic, party or dance. Just notify me and I will be there. Public sale easily handled.—Wm. Dempsey, at Burke's old stand.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

The teachers should not forget the first study center at Clarion, Saturday Sept. 16. at 9:15 o'clock.

Pleasant township is well represented in the Belmond high school this year; there are now about 30 attending.

Hajo Goeman had the misfortune of turning turtle with his Lizze last Sunday, and breaking his shoulder.

Little Lorine Hoppel is suffering from a slight attack of scarlet fever.

Henry Goeman and Fol. Mennenga returned last Friday from Dakota, where Mr. Mennenga consulted a physician.

Mrs. Edvin Dipple left last week for a few days' visit with her mother at Peterson, Iowa.

Mr. Dziewanowski and children and Miss Nora Finn were Sunday visitors at the Walter Courtney home n Thornton.

Mr. and Mrs. John Halfpop, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gartz, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Barkema and families and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Halfpop visited at the parental W. A. Gartz home Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Frohling and children were Sunday visitors at the home of Henry Schulte, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Goeman spent Sunday afternoon at the Jake Smidt home.

Getting Ready For Campaign Opening

Fire Up To Test Out Machinery Now Being Overhauled— Have Plenty Of Coal.

GOOD CROP OF BEETS TOO

The boilers at the factory were fired up for the first time yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, for the purpose of testing out the machinery now in process of being overhauled.

The company now has 250 tons of coal on hand, and have plenty more coming. Six thousand tons of Iowa coal has been purchased, and a thousand tons of coal from another state. There seems to be no question but what the plant will have plenty of fuel to operate. The machinery is rapidly being placed in shape for the campaign, and men are beginning to come to town for the operating season.

The factory will have, from present indications a splendid crop of beets for the campaign. Everything looks decidedly favorable for a successful operating campaign, and if this is the case the factory will be practically an assured success from now on.

A COE STUDENTS PARTY

Miss Olive Butts was hostess to a group of young ladies last Thursday evening when a party was given at her home for present and past students of Coe Collee. Nine young ladies were present. The time was spent in games and music, and later refreshments were served. A very enjoyable time was had by those in attendance.

HIGH WAGES TO MINERS

The union miners have already bad five month's vacation, and the "strike benefits" they have received amounts to probably half of the salary they would received if they had been working. The people of this country have paid the miners sufficient wages, so that when working they have contributed to the "strike fund" enough money to pay them half the time while loafing on the job for five months.

This is the kind of system which is going to break down the unions in this country. The public is not going to stand for any such holdups. They want the miners as well as all other labors to receive good wages, but they do not care anything about them receiving such wages which plainly show that they do not need the present rate of pay when they can put away half of it to be paid out for strike benefits on a "five months' lay off."

How can the unions convince the public that their present wage scale is not high enough?

ALUMINUM SALE BIG SUCCESS

The aluminum sale of Townsan Hardware held Saturday evening was a huge success from every angle. The sale was well advertised, and was certainly proof aplenty of the power and value of advertising. The store was crowded to the last inch of space even before the sale opened, and for an hour or more the boys were selling aluminum as fast as they could hand it out, which wasn't fast enough to fill orders. They sold practically every piece in the store.

HIGH SCHOOL LYCEUM DATES ARE RECEIVED

Supt. W. J. Guthrie has received notice from the Redpath Vawter management that the dates and attractions for the coming season will be as follows:

Oct. 24: Oakley Concert Company.
Nov. 30: Montraville M. Wood.
Jan. 13: Welsh Singers.

Cut this out and paste it in your hat, so as to reserve these dates and make your plans to attend the entire course. Watch this paper for later announcements giving full details of attractions and date of ticket sale.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

MINNESOTA VS. IOWA

The Independent received a letter last week from a subscriber in Minnesota, containing some figures on the wonderful progress being made and the material wealth being gained, in Minnesota. We present some of the figures below:

"Leading all American counties in butter production per square mile, Steele county, Minnesota, this year will manufacture 5,000,000 pounds of rich, pure butter valued at two and one-half million dollars. This output is greater than the 1920 combined creamery butter production of the entire states of Alabama, Arkansas, Arizona, Connecticut, Deleware, Louisiana, Maine, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Maryland and West Virginia."

"This little Southeastern Minnesota district, producing more butter to the square mile than any other county in all America, has a population of just 18,000 people. Eighteen thousand cows, one for each inhabitant, supply the milk for the 23 co-operative creameries, the manufactured products of which are responsible, to a great extent, for the $7,000,000 deposited in Steele county's 11 banks."

The foregoing was sent by a former Belmond boy, Walter Sorenson, and we trust that Walter has a goodly part of the stated seven million. It is a fine example of what dairying will do for the farmer, and something which might well be seriously considered by every farmer of Iowa, and by those of this vicinity who are letting one of the greatest sources of revenue escape them on the farm. It has been the universal story the past four years that the man who had cows, chickens and hogs was the man who had a little ready cash, while he who depended upon grain alone has been hard up against it.

But lest Walter get the idea that Iowa is so far behind that there is nothing but dust, we quote a few statistics recently put out by the Greater Des Moines Committee, and labeled "KNOW IOWA!"

"Altho Iowa is 16th in population and 23rd in area of land, she ranks:

In value of corn, oats, horses, hogs, poultry	First
In value of farm lands and buildings	First
In total value of farm products	First
In combined value of live stock	First
In total value of farm property	First
In percentage of farm land improved	First

The farms of ten Iowa counties are worth more than all the combined farms in the six states of Arizona, Florida, Maine, Maryland, New Jersey, and Nevada.

"The farms of two Iowa counties are worth more than the combined value of all the farms in the states of New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

"The taxable wealth of Iowa is over twelve billion dollars.

"One tenth of all the food products in the United States come from the state of Iowa.

"The factories of Iowa in 1920 had an output worth seven hundred and forty-five million dollars, and have over four hundred million dollars invested in plants and machinery.

"Iowa's grain products for 1921 totaled 609 668,000 bushels. This amount divided by Iowa's number of square miles—55,586—gives an average of 10,750 bushels per square mile. No other state begins to equal these figures.

"The per capita wealth for Iowa is $3,539. The per capita wealth for the remainder of the United States is $1,965.

Iowa has over 200,000 farms. The average size of each is about 160 acres, and the value of these farms and the property thereon is over eight and a half billion dollars.

"No point in Iowa is over 12 miles from a railroad, and no one walks to the railroad station, as Iowa has a total of over 400,000 cars, and has more automobiles on farms than any other state in the Union."

All of which, when you look it over seems to show that Iowa doesn't have to take a seat so very far back for any of them. It's a pretty good little old place, is Iowa, a good place with good homes and good schools, with good business and good farms, a place where people are folks, interested in you and yours and ready to help out. We don't question friend Walter's pride in Minnesota, but just the same we believe that Iowa is as good a place—if not just a little bit better!

Dr. H. E. Meyer has sold his interests in the Hampton Clinic and closed his work at the Lutheran hospital last Saturday night. It is reported that Dr. Meyer plans on leaving Hampton and moving his family to California. He has been a member of the Hampton Clinic since its organization a few years ago, when the Lutheran hospital was opened.

Harry Morehouse, of West Fork township, was bound over to the grand jury yesterday afternoon by Judge Sharpe for driving an automobile while intoxicated. The crime was committed at Sheffield, August 30th. Morehouse was unable to furnish the$350 bond demanded by the court, so he is now sojourning in the county jail. —Chronicle

Judging Team Attends Fairs

The Wright county boys of the state champion livestock judging team accompanied by the county agent made three trips last week for work-outs in the livestock judging work. Tuesday was spent at the Webster City fair working over separate classes of horses, hogs and cattle. On Thursday the boys drove to the Algona fair where they were allowed to take part in the Kossuth county livestock judging contest. Saturday was spent at Ames at the college where the boys worked over the college livestock and rceived valuable suggestions from Prof. Kildee, head of the animal husbandry department. In making these trips to the neighboring county fairs and to the state agricultural coullege the boys have received some valuable points along livestock judging lines.

The county agent and the judging team will leave Clarion, Sunday, September 17, for Sioux City, where the team will spend five days at the interstate livestock judging contest. In the competitive livestock judging contest with seven other states the boys will be required to judge one ring of draft horses, one ring of breeding horses, one ring of fat hogs, three rings of breeding hogs, one ring of fat sheep, one ring of breeding sheep, two rings of beef cattle (one ring of breeding and one ring of fat) and two rings of dairy cattle. Each member will place the 12 rings of livestock and fifty points will be given for places on each ring. Oral reasons will be given on six of the rings and fifty points will be given for reasons on each of these, thus a total of 600 points for placings and 300 points on reasons, may be won.

Veterinary Specialist in County

Dr. K. W. Stouder, veterinary specialist from the extension department at Ames, spent one day in Wright county last week on special cases from two points within the county.

Part of the day was spent at the Geo. Dipple farm, two miles east of Belmond, where special instructions were given by the doctor in the case of a diseased horse where it was found the animal was effected with what the doctor termed malignant tumor of the nose.

Part of the day was also spent on several herds of hogs and the doctor gave special instructions for treatment and recommended that in case the disease continued in the herds that one of the diseased animals be shipped to the department of Veterinary invesigation at Ames.

Wright County Farm Tour

Arrangements have been made with the Extension department at Ames for three specialists to come to Wright county October 11th and 12th for a two-day farm tour. Rex Beresford, animal husbandry, F. G. Churchhill, farm crops and soils, and Miss Avis Talcott will be in the county at that time to lecture on these various subjects wherever stops are made.

No definite plans have been worked out as yet for this farm tour but the general plan is to cover part of the county the first day making stops at the various points of interest. A schedule is now being worked out and plans will be made to stop at several of the purebred livestock farms, at a number of the experiment plots and various points of interest thruout the county. Those who are interested in spending the day or two with the county agent and the specialists from Ames in visiting some of the points of interest within the county are urged to plan their work so as to be able to make the trip Wednesday and Thursday, October 11 and 12.

Clothing Specialist Coming

Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist, will spend three days in this county, Ssptember 26, 27, 28, in demonstrating "Renovation of clothing and hats." A schedule of Miss Foster's meetings was worked out by the ladies at the last regular Board of Director meeting and it was planned to hold the training schools for Miss Foster as follows:

Boone township, Sept. 26.
Iowa township, Sept. 27.
Troy township, Sept. 28.

The places of meeting within these townships will be announced later.

Three Live Farm Bureau Socials

Last week was a mighty busy one for the Wright county farm bureau when three township organizations managed to hold community gatherings. Pleasant township started the week off with a box social at the S. A. Anderson home, three miles north of Belmond. An interesting program was held in connection with this social and we understand that a neat sum was realized from the sale of the baskets. The proceeds from this box social will go toward financing the Belmond short course this winter.

Iowa township came on Tuesday night with a rousing big meeting at he A. C. Lieuwen home, southeast of Belmond, where two or three hundred farmers and business men and their families from Belmond, Rowan, Alexander and surrounding territory gathered for a real community get-to-gether meeting. A. L. Middleton of Troy township gave the address of the evening and a short program consisting of recitations and musical numbers was also enjoyed by the Iowa people.

The A. E. Martin home, northeast of Belmond was the scene of a lively community social on Thursday evening when about 300 people from the vicinity of Belmond gathered to enjoy the splendid program which was arranged for this occasion. Rev. Fr. Eardley of Belmond gave a very outstanding address at this meeting. Those who had the pleasure of hearing his address were very much pleased with his discussion of our present day problems. Rr. Eardley's address was very timely and it brought out many interesting points in connection with the industrial conditions thruout the nation. A short program of readings, recitations, and musical numbers by the Luick orchestra and other local talent was also given at this meeting.

Miss Viva Rourk who taught in the Belmond schools the past two years was engaged to teach there again this year and left Sunday afternoon to take up her duties.

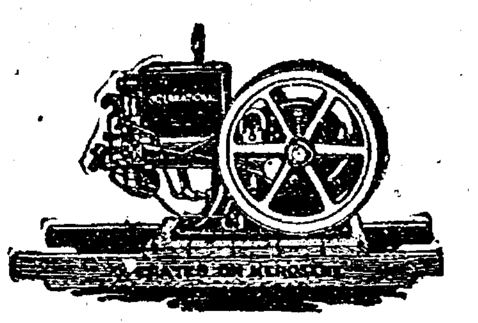
Blowing Some!

Senator Capper says that whenever there's a debate in the Senate it furnishes enough agitation of atmosphere to turn every windmill in the country.



But, when Senate adjourns, what are you going to do for fresh water? Get an International Kerosene Engine, of course. It's as faithful and willing a helper as you can find in a lifetime of searching. The powerful 1 1-2 H. P. International will do almost anything that no one else wants to do, and for only 3 cents an hour—no overtime pay. Larger sizes too, if you need more power. Come and see them.

Keep The Boys At Home

The International manure spreader takes drudgery out of a disagreeable job, and it does its full share in keeping boys on the farm. It saves labor, saves time of a man and team and makes the manure go farther. It increases yields and makes more money for you. You can't afford to be without a machine that will do all these things. So why not come in and talk it over while the price is lower than it ever will be again?

A Milkhouse Queen

A "handsome blue machine" set up in the center of your milkhouse is a "crown of glory" considering the many things it will do for you. It is the sentinel-queen carefully guarding the milk and cream so that each is separated to the last drop. Otherwise known as the Primrose Cream Separator, this "handsome blue machine" will save enough cream to make three cows worth as much as four. It will give you an income all the year around and supply sweet, warm skimmilk for the calves, pigs and chickens. Truly, the Primrose is a queen.

Art Cuppett came Monday night of this week for a few days' visit with old friends and relatives here, while he attends to some business matters. Art is now located on a 200-acre farm at Ft. Ripley, Minnesota, where he is making a splendid success as a farmer.

MR. HENNING IS RIGHT

Having failed to break down the too few immigration restrictions with pleas to sympathy the time-worn appeal to selfish interest is being attempted thru powerful business insitutions.

The increase in production has brought a scarcity of labor in some quarters, and corresponding demand for higher wages. The suggestion, therfore, is made to repeal the three percent law to permit the hordes from southeastern Europe to enter.

The interests constantly at work on behalf of the undesirable aliens believe that powerful manufacturers have more influence with Congress than have the great mass of real Americans who are seldom aroused from their state of inarticulate unobtrusiveness. They hope by waving the flag of cheap labor before influential manufacturers that Congress may be induced to open wide again the doors.

E. J. Henning, assistant secretary of commerce, who has been most active in safeguarding the country against the undesirables, in an address in New York, gave voice to some facts regarding the cheap labor fallacy which deserve general attention.

If you have labor that will do fairly well for a year or two or five, but thereafter goes on the shelf into the poorhouse, the jail, the cost of that individual to the community will be greater than any asset he may have produced," said Mr. Henning. "When you talk of filling the country with cheap labor, largely because it is mentally not capable of reaching a high stage, you are putting on an overhead that you cannot shake off for centuries to come, because the same people will reproduce their like.

"The cheapest labor in the world is the labor that is educated to the equivalent of a high school, has learned a trade, that is patriotic, and that has citizenship in the country. The man who is married and owns a home and is rearing a family, and who takes an active part in government, will ultimately be your cheapest labor, instead of the ignorant, illiterate labor, which big business often says we need in this country to compete with the world.—Dearborn Independent.

GRADE CROSSINGS

The C. B. & Q's. propaganda department, always active and on the job, has been making a little survey at a grade crossing and reports that out of 1,500 drivers of autos only two heeded the railroad's anxious request to come to a dead stop before crossing the track, and adduces this as sufficient reason why it kills so many on its grade crossing. Let's see: How many of its trains come to a dead stop at grade crossings? That's unreasonable, perhaps; so is the railroad idea that autos must come to a stop. But this can be depended upon: If the C. B. & Q. wrecked as many trains at grade crossings as it destroys autos, and killed as many trainmen as it kills auto passengers, it would devise some plan that would save its rolling stock and its employees. As little damage results to trains and employees it contents itself with foolish and impractical requests designed to relieve it from the appearance of blame when the anticipated and inevitable calamity occurs. And while the argument goes on the grade crossing reap their thousands of lives. And the C. B. & Q. is only one of the many railroads equally to blame. What do the railway commissions think, if anything?—Knoxville Express.

How Far Will Your Dollar Go Today

What you get for a dollar determines its value. Every week this newspaper contains information. The man or woman who is best informed is the one who buys to best advantage.

Every week this newspaper contains information that you should have in order to increase your buying power. The advertisements are intimate little lessons in economy. They are notices of how---where---when and for what your dollar will go farthest.

This advertising awaits your pleasure. It does not force itself upon you. At your convenience you can study it to learn where to go for the product or service you require---to discover where and how you can buy most easily and to best advantage.

It's a fascinating and worth-while practice to see just how you can make your dollar do its best for you.

SHOWER FOR MISS GRUIS

Miss Mildred Gealow entertained at a miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Kate Gruis, at the A. J. Nissen home, last Friday evening. Owing to the inclement weather only a few were able to be present, but an enjoyable evening is reported. The surprise on Miss Gruis was a complete success, making it the more pleasant for those who had planned it so. Miss Gruis will be married soon to Rev. Eilert Dirks, when they leave for the east where Mr. Dirks has accepted a pastorate. The evening was spent in the usual manner. Games were indulged in. When the bride-to-be was asked to unwrap the various gifts showered upon her, she was told to guess the contents of each package and state what she would use them for, causing much merriment. A mock wedding was had, but we will withhold the names of the groom and minister. Refreshments consisting of ice cream and cake were served, after which the guests departed wishing Miss Gruis a long and happy wedded life.

Word was received here Sunday by Rev. Schlesselman that his father had passed away Saturday night. Grandpa, as he was called by those who knew him and loved him best, has been in poor health for several years past, and had grown very feeble before leaving this place last fall, for his old home in Ohio. Rev. Schlesselman and family had the privilege of spending several weeks with him a short time ago, for which they feel grateful at this time.

Mrs. Crist Enabnit of Des Moines spent last Thursday at the Kolb home, accompanied by her son Mervin. They stopped here enroute to Manly where they visited at the home of her son Albert.

Last Saturday Henry Frey became violently ill from ptomaine poisoning, caused by eating sardines. Two doctors were in attendance and after considerable efforts on their part he was pronounced out of danger. Monday he was about his duties as janitor of the school again as usual.

Last Sunday as Higo Goeman and wife and Kate Gris were returning from church to the Gruis home, his car became unmanageable thru a faulty steering gear, causing it to swerve into the ditch just east of town, turning the car completely over. Mr. Goeman suffered a broken collar bone, while the ladies escaped injury aside from a thoro shaking up.

Joe Smith and daughter Mary have been spending several weeks with relatives at Indianola. They made the trip in a car and were accompanied by a nephew of Mr. Smith who had been visiting at their home or a number of weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Reif and guests from Greeley, Colo., spent Tuesday sightseeing at Mason City.

Mrs. H. K. Pals accompanied her niece Elsie Pals, to Mason City, on Tuesday, where the latter had her tonsils removed.

Miss Alma Walters and Irene Guth were motor passengers to Mason City Tuesday.

School opened here last Wednesday with an enrollment of about 150, and everything started out well in the new school year. Let us all co-operate with the teachers, thus making this school year a successful and satisfactory one.

Earl Jacobs, farming northwest of Meservey has one of the best herds Poland China spring shoats in this part of the country. Among them are several that will weigh 200 pounds, which speaks well for Mr. Jacob's ability as a hog raiser.

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!

On and after Sept. 1 the Blacksmith of Meservey is CASH! Here's why: I'm asking you good friends for help. Last week some of my friends paid what they could; others paid up; some turned me down cold. I ask every one of you to help me go home that I may see my old mother. She is 70 years old, and I haven't seen her for 8 years. She wants me to come home once more, to have us all together once more. She has a heart, the same as your mother has. I want you to have a heart too. I had planned to go Saturday, but with only $18 collected how could I? There is $250 more on the books; all I ask is that you who owe me pay 75 per cent. With all the boys home but me what will mother say? I can't go unless you pay me what you owe. From now on everything is CASH—when I go I'll have the money in my pocket, not on the books. Friends, have a heart; you may need help too some day; pay me what you owe, then I can go home to see my mother once more before it is too late.

RADIO

AUDIO FREQUENCY AMPLIFIER UNITS

Construction of Two Is Described, With the Materials That Must Be Purchased.

Theoretically any number of transformer coupled stages of audio frequency amplification can be used. However, due to the amplification of static disturbances, power line induction, tube noises, etc., three stages are about the practical limit. If more than three stages are used the noises become so loud in comparison with the signal that it is difficult to hear the signal.

Since audio frequency amplifying transformers can be purchased at any radio shop and the simplest method of coupling, the construction of two audio frequency amplifier units will be described.

The first unit will be arranged to be used in conjunction with the vacuum tube receiver mounted on the eight-inch square horizontal base board, previously mentioned in this column. The second unit will be mounted on a vertical panel four inches wide and six inches high to "match up" with the six-by-eight vertical panel vacuum tube described recently in this column.

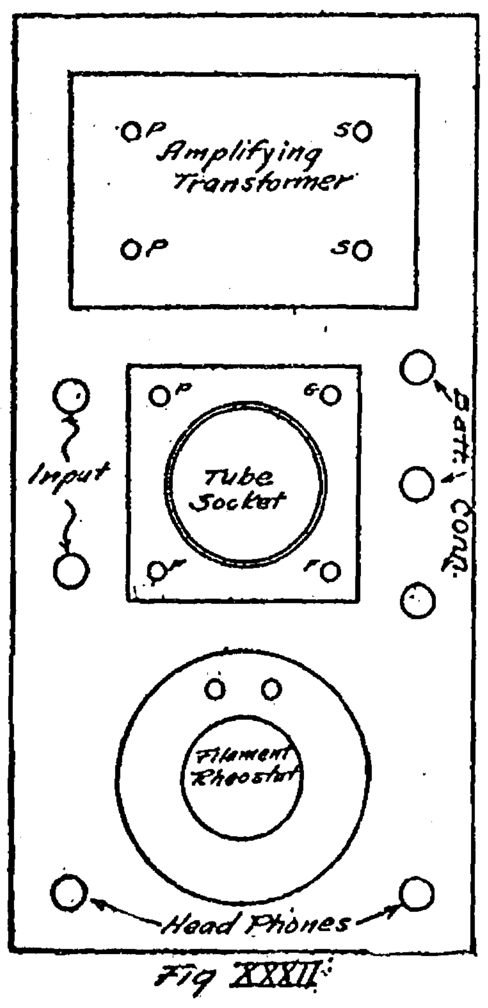

Fig XXXII

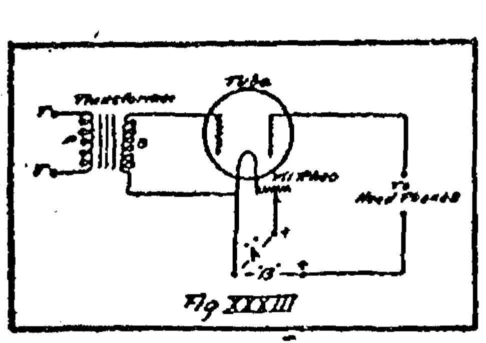

Fig XXXIII

The following standard apparatus will have to be purchased at a radio supply store in order to construct an amplifier unit to be used in conjunction with either receiver.

One amplifying transformer, cost about $5.

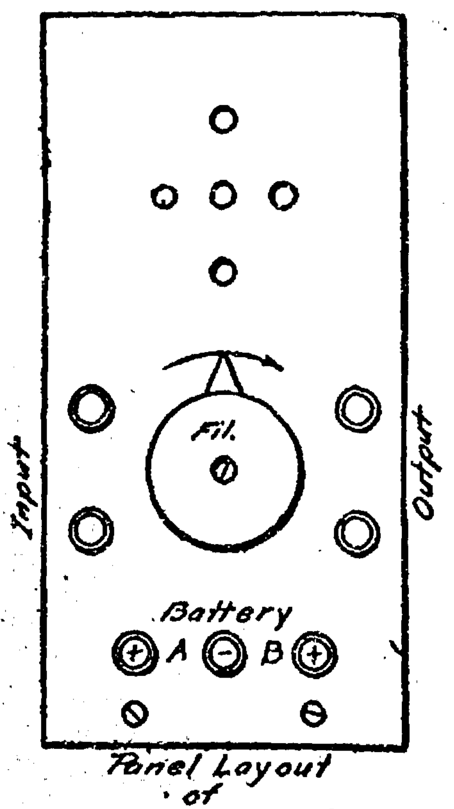
One vacuum tube (for amplifier), cost $6.50.

One vacuum tube socket, cost $1.

One filament rheostat, cost about $1.

Seven binding posts, cost about 70 cents.

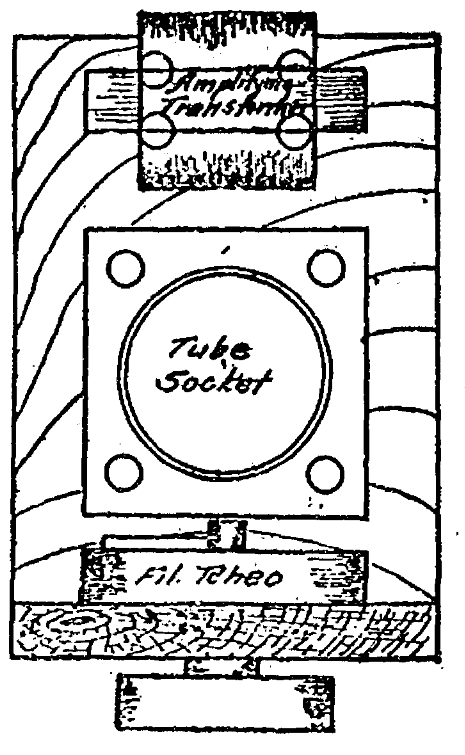
The amplifier unit to be used with the eight-inch square horizontal baseboard is mounted on a base three inches wide and six inches long. The tube filament rheostat is mounted in the front, the amplifying transformer in the back and the tube in the center.



Panel Layout of Amplifier Unit
Fig. XXXIV

Fig. XXXII shows the relative position of the transformer tube socket and filament rheostat when mounted on the baseboard. A diagram of connections of the amplifier unit is shown in Fig. XXXIII. The input coming from the terminals of the receiver that were originally connected to the telephone receivers is connected to the terminals of the amplifying transformer. One side of the secondary of the amplifying transformer is connected to the grid, and the other side of the secondary to the filament and common battery lead. The filament rheostat is in series with the positive side of the filament. The plate terminal on the tube socket is connected to one side of the phone, the other side of the phone being connected to the positive side of a 45-volt "B" battery. Use a "hard" tube as an amplifier.

When using the amplifier unit for the first time, tune the receiver with the detector only. To connect the terminals T-T from the amplifier unit in place of the phones in the plate circuit of the amplifier, adjust both the filament rheostats until the signal strength is maximum.



Amplifier Unit
Fig. XXXV

If it is desired to still further amplify the incoming signal two amplifier units can be constructed, the output of each unit being connected to the input of the next, and the phones being placed in the plate circuit of the last amplifier tube.

In constructing the second unit make the panel and the baseboard of the same thickness, kind of wood, and finish as used for the receiver. The panel should be four inches wide and six inches high, the baseboard three inches wide and four inches deep to "match up." Use the same kinds of binding posts and filament rheostat that were used on the receiver.

Fig. XXXIV is a plan view of the amplifier unit, and Fig. XXXV is an elevation of the front view of the panel. The diagram of connections is, of course, the same as for the previously described unit and is shown in Fig. XXXIII.

These amplifier units can be used in conjunction with any radio receiver. The same units connected electrically as shown in Fig. XXXIII can be mounted to suit the builders' own taste.

National Radio Chamber of Commerce Is Negotiating With Federal Departments.

The National Radio Chamber of Commerce is negotiating with the various government departments, such as the bureau of standards, Department of Commerce, United States signal corps and United States Navy department, with a view to co-operating with these departments in the standardization of radio apparatus, methods of manufacture, methods of testing, etc. The National Radio Chamber of Commerce intends to work with these departments and assist them in their radio problems.

TIPS FOR FANS

A radio amateur in France has tough luck. He can't send at all and is not permitted to listen in on certain government transmitting stations.

A condemned murderer in a Boston jail is spending his remaining hours in the construction of a radio receiving set so that the inmates may enjoy programs during their hours of unemployment.

Despite all advice to the contrary, people still insist on using dry cells for the filament supply of vacuum tubes. The batteries will hold up for about five minutes and then they will slowly die down, until nothing at all can be heard.

Secretary Wallace has announced completion of plans for broadcasting weather, crop and market news by radiophone from Memphis, Tenn.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Roswell, N. M., and Milwaukee, Wis., thus giving the Department of Agriculture 41 stations throughout the United States from which agricultural news may be disseminated.

A radio aerial well grounded will take all of the joy out of lightning rod salesmanship. Run a No. 4 copper wire down from your lightning arrester, as specified by the new regulations of the underwriters' code compiled in Washington recently, and your home will be amply protected from lightning—if you have gone deep into the earth in making your ground.

AT STAR THEATRE

FRIDAY & SATURDAY
September 15 and 16
"HELIOTROPE"

A new Cosmopolitan production. A stirring story of a parent's love for a child. While mother love is the primal motif in "Humoresque", it is the sacrifice made by a father to insure his daughter's happiness that makes the chief appeal in "Heliotrope" The story centers about a convict who is known to his pals as Heliotrope Harry, do to his fondness for that plant and its perfume. His lovely daughter, Alice, has never known her father and mother. The latter is an unscrupulous woman with a greed for gold.

WILSON HIGHWAY MEETING AT DES MOINES LAST WEEK

A meeting was held in Des Moines Saturday forenoon of last week of the Board of Directors of the Wilson highway association. There were not a sufficient number of the members present to hold a general meeting of the association, hence the present officers and directors hold over until such time as a general meeting can be held. At the present time the association does not have funds to pay the expenses of delegates from each county to a general meeting, hence a large attendance of members of the association seems impossible.

The meeting Saturday was well attended by directors—each paying his own expenses, and a worth while session was held. A financial report was received from Treasurer Wittmer and was approved and accepted. The report showed that the treasury of the association has an over draft of about $60 and some small unpaid bills are outstanding and by the end of the summer it will doubtless be possible to have accounts squared up for the year so that the association may be able to begin the new year's work next spring with a clean slate. It is also hoped that, with funds in sight, it may be possible to complete further marking of the highway yet this season.

The Board of Directors decided after thoroly discussing the situation that it is not for the present feasible for the Wilson highway to continue to attempt to keep a paid manager on the road as has been done for the past year and three months. The older, better established highway associations, which have fixed receipts from annual membership dues at various towns traversed by their routes, do employ salaried managers the year around whose duties are to collect the membership dues, look after marking the routes, and marking detours, advertising the highway, etc. The Wilson has tried out the employment of a manager for the past fifteen months but the experiment has not been successful.

In the state of Iowa the location of the route is definitely established and it is located on primary roads the entire distance across the state. The only prospects of future change will be in he event that in taking up road improvement work in any county in the state the Highway commission decides to make any changes in the location of the primary roads followed by the Wilson highway. In such events the Wilson will of course be changed to conform with the location of the primary roads.—Garner Signal.

IDLE AND MISCIEVIOUS

"In 1920 we, as a people, made up our minds that we would not permit a billion dollars a year of our hard earned money to be thrown away upon paying war wages to shirkers and running railroads at a loss. We, as a people, have not changed our minds, but the conspiracy to force us to do so is palpable."—Wall Street Journal.

Whatever your policy for the future may be, we can at least afford to face the facts of our past experience candidly. It is not really worth while to face them in any other way if we expected to learn anything of value for the future.

The theory on which war railroading was done was plainly stated by Mr. Hines many times and nobody will question that Mr. Hines was a railroad man of standing. War railroading was treated as a war emergency, to be paid ofr out of war emergency taxes and not out of freight and passener rates advanced, as they must have been, almost prohibitively.

We shall learn nothing at all from our war experience with the railroads so long as the Wall Street Journal and others like it insisit on. Everybody of any intelligence knows that it cost something to mobilize the railroads to move men and munitions and supplies as we moved them during the war years, and somebody had to pay. Mr. Hines and the others in control put the burden on the war emergency tax fund along with the other unusual costs of war. To talk of this as "a billion dollars thrown away" is merely to darken counsel with words, something we have always been warned not to do.—Des Moines Register.

THE FARMER'S WIFE

PLUM BUTTER: Wash the plums, place them with a little water in a preserving kettle, and cook until soft. Then separate the skins and the pits by rubbing the pulp thru a colander or a coarse wire sieve. In the case of large freestone plums it will probably be easier and quicker to dip the fruit into boiling water a few seconds until the skins crack, then dip into cold water so that the skins can be readily slipped off, the flesh split open, and the pits removed.

If the plums are very juicy, the pulp put thru a colander will be quite thin and ought to be boiled down to thicken it somewhat before the sugar is added. For each measure of pulp, whether put thru the colander or not, use a half to three-fourths of a measure of sugar and cook slowly with frequent stirring until the butter is as thick as desired. If a tart butter is favored, less sugar should be used. Cinnamon, allspice and cloves should be added to suit the taste when cooking is finished.

UNEARTH MAMMOTH STILL AT LUVERNE

Hambolt Republican: A special from Algena states that the Kossuth county sheriff and his deputy unearthed thirty-one gallons of hooch and some mash on a farm occupied by a man named Brandt near LuVerne. The story is that the officials had had the man up before, and they were on his trail. They raided his farm and discovered the tracks of a stone boat that they trailed to a meadow where a hay stack was, under which was stored the hooch and mash. The bootleggers had dug a pit under the stack and covered it with poles to hold up the hay, and in this they had their hooch. The still was not in evidence, and Brandt was not arrested. He took them, after some persuasion, to the still which was hid in another part of the farm. This is reported to be Brandt's third offense.

GETS HIGH POSITION

Hampton Chronicle: W. B. Barney, state food and dairy commissioner in Iowa for 12 years, until his resignation a few months ago, has been elected a director of the National Holstein-Friesian Cattle Association and also engaged as head of the extension department of that association. The position will pay him a salary of $6,000, considerably larger than he received as food and dairy commissioner of Iowa, and the work will be of a much more pleasant nature as he will not be subject to the whims of every one with an imaginary grievance which they want to take out on public officials.

Mr. Barney is well qualified for the place. He is an expert with Holstein cattle and his recognized business qualifications and experience along general lines will make him a valuable man in this new position. Mr. Barney will continue his residence in Des Moines, altho his Hampton friends still have hopes that he will return to Hampton later to make his home.

"Nice? Well, but whom has she got to blame for it?"

"Why, Ninian," said Ina.

Dwight threw out his hands. "Herself," he said. "To tell you the truth, I was perfectly amazed at the way she snapped him up there in that restaurant."

"Why, but, Dwight—"

"Brazen," he said. "Oh, it was brazen."

"It was just fun, in the first place."

"But no really nice woman—" he shook his head.

"Dwight! Lulu is nice. The idea!"

He regarded her. "Would you have done that?" he would know.

Under his fond look, she softened, took his homage, accepted everything, was silent.

"Certainly not," he said. "Lulu's tastes are not fine like yours. I should never think of you as sisters."

"She's awfully good," Ina said, feebly. Fifteen years of married life behind her—but this was sweet and she could not resist.

"She has excellent qualities." He admitted it. "But look at the position she's in—married to a man who tells her he has another wife in order to get free. Now, no really nice woman—"

"No really nice man—" Ina did say that much.

"Ah," said Dwight, "but you could never be in such a position. No, no. Lulu is sadly lacking somewhere."

Ina sighed, threw back her head, caught her lower lip with her upper, as might be in a hem, "What if it was Di?" she supposed.

"Di!" Dwight's look rebuked his wife. "Di," he said, "was born with ladylike feelings."

It was not yet ten o'clock. Bobby Larkin was permitted to stay until ten. From the veranda came the indistinguishable murmur of those young voices.

"Bobby," Di was saying within that murmur, "Bobby, you don't kiss me as if you really wanted to kiss me, tonight."

VI

Septembe..

The office of Dwight Herbert Deacon, Dentist, Gold Work a Specialty (sic) in black lettering, and Justice of the Peace in gold, was above a store which had been occupied by one unlucky tenant after another, and had suffered long periods of vacancy when ladies' aid societies served lunches there, under great white signs, badly lettered. Some months of disuse were now broken by the news that the store had been let to a music man. A music man, what on earth was that? Warbleton inquired.

The music man arrived, installed three pianos, and filled his window with sheet music, as sung by many ladies who swung in hammocks or kissed their hands on the music covers. While he was still moving in, Dwight Herbert Deacon wandered downstairs and stood informally in the door of the new store. The music man, a pleasant-faced chap of thirty-odd, was rubbing at the face of a piano.

"Hello, there!" he said. "Can I sell you an upright?"

"If I can take it out in pulling your teeth, you can," Dwight replied. "Or," said he, "I might marry you free, either one."

On this their friendship began. Thenceforth, when business was dull, the idle hours of both men were beguiled with idle gossip.

"How the dickens did you think of pianos for a line?" Dwight asked him once. "Now, my father was a dentist, so I came by it natural—never entered my head to be anything else. But pianos—"

The music man—his name was Neil Cornish—threw up his chin in a boyish fashion, and said he'd be jiggered if he knew. All up and down the Warbleton main street, the chances are that the answer would sound the same. "I'm studying law when I get the chance," said Cornish, as one who makes a bid to be thought of more highly.

"I see," said Dwight, respectfully dwelling on the verb.

Later on, Cornish confided more to Dwight: He was to come by a little inheritance some day—not much, but something. Yes, it made a man feel a certain confidence. . . .

"Don't it?" said Dwight, heartily, as if he knew.

Every one liked Cornish. He told funny stories, and he never compared Warbleton save to its advantage. So at last Dwight said tentatively at lunch:

"What if I brought that Neil Cornish up for supper one of these nights?"

"Oh, Dwightie, do," said Ina. "If there's a man in town, let's know it."

"What if I brought him up tonight?"

Up went Ina's eyebrows. Tonight?

"Scalloped potatoes and meat loaf and sauce and bread and butter," Lulu contributed.

Cornish came to supper. He was what is known in Warbleton as dapper. This Ina saw as she emerged on the veranda in response to Dwight's informal halloo on his way upstairs. She herself was in white muslin, now much too snug, and a blue ribbon. To her greeting their guest replied in that engaging shyness which is not awkwardness. He moved in some pleasant web of gentleness and friendliness.

They asked him the usual questions, and he replied, rocking all the time with a faint undulating motion of head and shoulders: Warbleton was one of the prettiest little towns that he had ever seen. He liked the people—they seemed different. He was sure to like the place, already liked it. Lulu came to the door in Ninian's thin black-and-white gown. She shook hands with the stranger, not looking at him, and said, "Come to supper, all." Monona was already in her place, singing under-breath. Mrs. Bett, after hovering in the kitchen door, entered; but they forgot to introduce her.

"Where's Di?" asked Ina. "I declare that daughter of mine is never anywhere."

A brief silence ensued as they were seated. There being a guest, grace was to come, and Dwight said, unintelligibly and like lightning, a generic appeal to bless this food, forgive all our sins and finally save us. And there was something tremendous in this ancient form whereby all stages of men bow in some now unrecognized recognition of the ceremonial of taking food to nourish life—and more.

At "Amen" Di flashed in, her offices at the mirror fresh upon her—perfect hair, silk dress turned up at the hem. She met Cornish, crimsoned, fluttered to her seat, joggled the table and, "Oh, dear," she said audibly to her mother, "I forgot my ring."

The talk was saved alive by a frank effort. Dwight served, making jests about everybody coming back for more. They went on with Warbleton happenings, improvements and openings; and the runaway. Cornish tried hard to make himself agreeable, not ingratiatingly, but good-naturedly. He wished profoundly that before coming he had looked up some more stories in the back of the Musical Gazettes. Lulu surreptitiously pinched off an ant that was running at large upon the cloth and thereafter kept her eyes steadfastly on the sugar bowl to see if it could be from that. Dwight pretended that those whom he was helping a second time were getting more than their share and facetiously landed on Di about eating so much that she would grow up and be married, first thing she knew. At the word "married" Di turned scarlet, laughed heartily and lifted her glass of water.

"And what instruments do you play?" Ina asked Cornish, in an unrelated effort to lift the talk to musical levels.

"Well, do you know," said the music man, "I can't play a thing. Don't know a black note from a white one."

"You don't? Why Di plays very prettily," said Di's mother. "But, then, how can you tell what songs to order?" Ina cried.

"Oh, by the music houses. You go by the sales." For the first time it occurred to Cornish that this was ridiculous. "You know, I'm really studying law," he said, shyly and proudly. Law! How very interesting, from Ina. Oh, but won't he bring up some songs some evening, for them to try over? Her and Di? At this Di laughed and said that she was out of practice and lifted her glass of water. In the presence of adults Di made one weep, she was so slender, so young, so without defenses, so intolerably sensitive to every contact, so in agony lest she be found wanting. It was amazing how unlike was this Di to the Di who had ensnared Bobby Larkin. What was one to think?

Cornish paid very little attention to her. To Lulu he said kindly, "Don't you play, Miss—?" He had not caught her name—no stranger ever did catch it. But Dwight now supplied it: "Miss Lulu Bett," he explained, with loud emphasis, and Lulu burned her slow red. This question Lulu had usually answered by telling how a felon had interrupted her lessons and she had stopped "taking"—a participle sacred to music, in Warbleton. This vignette had been a kind of epitome of Lulu's biography. But now Lulu was heard to say, serenely:

"No, but I'm quite fond of it. I went to a lovely concert—two weeks ago."

They all listened. Strange, indeed, to think of Lulu as having had experiences of which they did not know.

"Yes," she said. "It was in Savannah, Georgia." She flushed, and lifted her eyes in a manner of faint defiance. "Of course," she said, "I don't know the names of all the different instruments they played, but there were a good many." She laughed pleasantly as a part of her sentence. "They had some lovely tunes," she said. She knew that the subject was not exhausted and she hurried on. "The hall was real large," she superadded, "and there were quite a good many people there. And it was too warm."

"I see," said Cornish, and said what he had been waiting to say: That he, too, had been in Savannah, Georgia.

Lulu lit with pleasure. "Well!" she said. And her mind worked and she caught at the moment before it had escaped. "Isn't it a pretty city?" she asked. And Cornish assented with the intense heartiness of the provincial. He, too, it seemed, had a conversational appearance to maintain by its own effort. He said that he had enjoyed being in that town and that he was there for two hours.

"I was there for a week." Lulu's superiority was really pretty.

"Have good weather?" Cornish selected next.

"Oh, yes. And they saw all the different buildings—but at her "we" she flushed and was silenced. She was coloring and breathing quickly. This was the first bit of conversation of this sort in Lulu's life.

After supper Ina inevitably proposed croquet, Dwight pretended to try to escape and, with his irrepressible mien, talked about Ina, elaborate in his insistence on the third person—"She loves it, we have to humor her, you know how it is. Or no! You don't know! But you will"—and more of the same sort, everybody laughing heartily, save Lulu, who looked uncomfortable and wished that Dwight wouldn't, and Mrs. Bett, who paid no attention to anybody that night, not because she had not been introduced, an omission which she had not even noticed, but merely as another form of "tantrim"—a self-indulgence.

They emerged for croquet. And there on the porch sat Jenny Plow and Bobby, waiting for Di to keep an old engagement, which Di pretended to have forgotten, and to be frightfully annoyed to have to keep. She met the objections of her parents with all the batteries of her coquetry, set for both Bobby and Cornish and, bold in the presence of "company," at last went laughing away. And in the minute areas of her consciousness she said to herself that Bobby would be more in love with her than ever because she had risked all to go with him; and that Cornish ought to be distinctly attracted to her because she had not stayed. She was as primitive as pollen.

Ina was vexed. She said so, pouting in a fashion which she should have outgrown with white muslin and blue ribbons, and she had outgrown none of these things.

"That just spoils croquet," she said. "I'm vexed. Now we can't have a real game."

From the side door, where she must have been lingering among the waterproofs, Lulu stepped forth.

"I'll play a game," she said.

* * * * * * * *

When Cornish actually proposed to bring some music to the Deacons', Ina turned toward Dwight Herbert all the facets of her responsibility. And Ina's sense of responsibility toward Di was enormous, oppressive, primitive, amounting, in fact, toward this daughter of Dwight Herbert's late wife, to an ability to compress the offices of stepmotherhood into the functions of the lecture platform. Ina was a fountain of admonition. Her idea of a daughter, step or not, was that of a manufactured product, strictly, which you constantly pinched and molded. She thought that a moral preceptor had the right to secrete precepts. Di got them all. But of course the crest of Ina's responsibility was to marry Di. This verb should be transitive only when lovers are speaking of each other, or the minister or magistrate is speaking of lovers. It should never be transitive when predicated of parents or any other third party. But it is. Ina was quite agitated by its transitiveness as she took to her husband her incredible responsibility.

"You know, Herbert," said Ina, "if this Mr. Cornish comes here very much, what we may expect."

"What may we expect?" demanded Dwight Herbert, crisply.

Ina always played his games, answered what he expected her to answer, pretended to be intuitive when she was not so, said "I know" when she didn't know at all. Dwight Herbert, on the other hand, did not even play her games when he knew perfectly what she meant, but pretended not to understand, made her repeat, made her explain. It was as if Ina had to please him for, say, a living; but as for that dentist, he had to please nobody. In the conversations of Dwight and Ina you saw the historical home forming in clots in the fluid wash of the community.

"He'll fall in love with Di," said Ina.

"And what of that? Little daughter will have many a man fall in love with her, I should say."

"Yes, but, Dwight, what do you think of him?"

"What do I think of him? My dear Ina, I have other things to think of."

"But we don't know anything about him, Dwight—a stranger so."

"On the other hand," said Dwight with dignity, "I know a good deal about him."

With a great air of having done the fatherly and found out about this stranger before bringing him into the home, Dwight now related a number of stray circumstances dropped by Cornish in their chance talks.

"He has a little inheritance coming to him—shortly," Dwight wound up.

"An inheritance—really? How much, Dwight?"

"Now isn't that like a woman. Isn't it?"

"I thought he was from a good family," said Ina.

"My mercenary little pussy!"

"Well," she said with a sigh, "I shouldn't be surprised if Di did really accept him. A young girl is awfully flattered when a good-looking older man pays her attention. Haven't you noticed that?"

Dwight informed her, with an air of immense abstraction, that he left all such matters to her. Being married to Dwight was like a perpetual rehearsal, with Dwight's self-importance for audience.

A few evenings later, Cornish brought up the music. There was something overpowering in this brown-haired chap against the background of his negligible little shop, his whole capital in his few pianos. For he looked hopefully ahead, woke with plans, regarded the children in the street as if, conceivably, children might come within the confines of his life as he imagined it. A preposterous little man. And a preposterous store, empty, echoing, bare of wall, the three pianos near the front, the remainder of the floor stretching away like the corridors of the lost. He was going to get a dark curtain, he explained, and furnish the back part of the store as his own room. What dignity in phrasing, but how mean that little room would look—cot bed, washbowl and pitcher, and little mirror—almost certainly a mirror with a wavy surface, almost certainly that.

"And then, you know," he always added, "I'm reading law."

The Plows had been asked in that evening. Bobby was there. They were, Dwight Herbert said, going to have a sing.

Di was to play. And Di was now embarked on the most difficult feat of her emotional life, the feat of remaining to Bobby Larkin the lure, the beloved lure, the while to Cornish she instinctively played the role of womanly little girl.

"Up by the festive lamp, everybody!" Dwight Herbert cried.

As they gathered about the upright piano, that startled, Dwightish instrument, standing in its attitude of unrest, Lulu came in with another lamp.

"Do you need this?" she asked.

They did not need it, there was, in fact, no place to set it, and this Lulu must have known. But Dwight found a place. He swept Ninian's photograph from the marble shelf of the mirror, and when Lulu had placed the lamp there, Dwight thrust the photograph into her hands.

"You take care of that," he said, with a droop of lid discernible only to those who—presumably—loved him. His old attitude toward Lulu had shown a terrible sharpening in these ten days since her return.

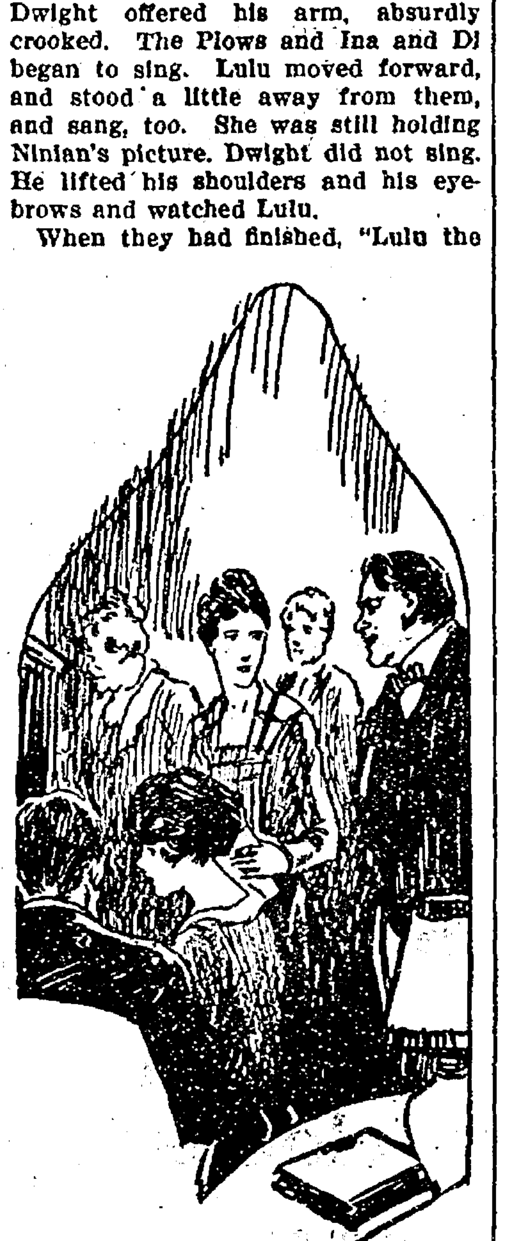
She stood uncertainly, in the thin black and white gown which Ninian had bought for her, and held Ninian's photograph and looked helplessly about. She was moving toward the door when Cornish called:

"See here! Aren't you going to sing?"

"What?" Dwight used the falsetto. "Lulu sing? Lulu?"

She stood awkwardly. She had a piteous recrudescence of her old agony at being spoken to in the presence of others. But Di had opened the "Album of Old Favorites," which Cornish had elected to bring, and now she struck the opening chords of "Bonny Eloise." Lulu stood still, looking rather piteously at Cornish. Dwight offered his arm, absurdly crooked. The Plows and Ina and Di began to sing. Lulu moved forward, and stood a little away from them, and sang, too. She was still holding Ninian's picture. Dwight did not sing. He lifted his shoulders and his eyebrows and watched Lulu.

When they had finished, "Lulu the mocking bird!" Dwight cried. He said "ba-ird."



"Miss Lulu Bett, the Mocking Ba-ird!" Dwight Insisted.

"Fine!" cried Cornish. "Why, Miss Lulu, you have a good voice!"

"Miss Lulu Bett, the mocking ba-ird!" Dwight insisted.

Lulu was excited, and in some accession of faint power. She turned to him now, quietly, and with a look of appraisal.

"Lulu the dove," she then surprisingly said, 'to put up with you."

It was her first bit of conscious repartee to her brother-in-law.

Cornish was bending over Di

"What next do you say?" he asked. She lifted her eyes, met his own, held them. "There's such a lovely, lovely sacred song here," she suggested, and looked down.

"You like sacred music?"

She turned to him her pure profile, her eyelids fluttering up, and said: "I love it."

"That's it. So do I. Nothing like a nice sacred piece," Cornish declared.

Bobby Larkin, at the end of the piano, looked directly into Di's face.

"Give me ragtime," he said now, with the effect of bursting out of somewhere. "Don't you like ragtime?" he put it to her directly.

Di's eyes danced into his, they sparkled for him, her smile was a smile for him alone, all their store of common memories was in their look.

"Let's try 'My Rock, My Refuge,'" Cornish suggested. "That's got up real attractive."

Di's profile again, and her pleased voice saying that this was the very one she had been hoping to hear him sing.

They gathered for "My Rock, My Refuge."

"Oh," cried Ina, at the conclusion of this number, "I'm having such a perfectly beautiful time. Isn't everybody?" everybody's hostess put it.

"Lulu is," said Dwight, and added softly to Lulu: "She don't have to hear herself sing."

It was incredible. He was like a bad boy with a frog. About that photograph of Ninian he found a dozen ways to torture her, called attention to it, showed it to Cornish, set it on the piano facing them all. Everybody must have understood—excepting the Plows. These two gentle souls sang placidly through the Album of Old Favorites, and at the melodies smiled happily upon each other with an air from another world. Always it was as if the Plows walked some fair, inter-penetrating plane, from which they looked out as do other things not quite of earth, say, flowers and fire and music.

Strolling home that night, the Plows were overtaken by some one who ran badly, and as if she were unaccustomed to running.

"Mis' Plow, Mis' Plow!" this one called, and Lulu stood beside them.

"Say!" she said. "Do you know of any job that I could get me? I mean that I'd know how to do? A job for money. . . . I mean a job. . . ."

She burst into passionate crying. They drew her home with them.

* * * * * * * *

Lying awake sometime after midnight, Lulu heard the telephone ring. She heard Dwight's concerned "Is that so?" And his cheerful "Be right there."

Grandma Gates was sick, she heard him tell Ina. In a few moments he ran down the stairs. Next day they told how Dwight had sat for hours that night, holding Grandma Gates so that her back would rest easily and she could fight for her faint breath. The kind fellow had only about two hours of sleep the whole night long.

Next day there came a message from that woman who had brought up Dwight—"made him what he was," he often complacently accused her. It was a note on a postal card—she had often written a few lines on a postal card to say that she had sent the maple sugar, or could Ina get her some samples. Now she wrote a few lines on a postal card to say that she was going to die with cancer. Could Dwight and Ina come to her while she was still able to visit? If he was not too busy. . . .

Nobody saw the pity and the terror of that postal card. They stuck it up by the kitchen clock to read over from time to time, and before they left, Dwight lifted the griddle of the cooking-stove and burned the postal card.

And before they left Lulu said: "Dwight—you can't tell how long you'll be gone?"

"Of course not. How should I tell?"

"No. And that letter might come while you're away."

"Conceivably. Letters do come while a man's away!"

"Dwight—I thought if you wouldn't mind if I opened it—"

"Opened it?"

"Yes. You see, it'll be about me mostly—"

"I should have said that it'll be about my brother mostly."

"But you know what I mean. You wouldn't mind if I did open it?"

"But you say you know what'll be in it."

"So I did know—till you—I've got to see that letter, Dwight."

"And so you shall. But not till I show it to you. My dear Lulu, you know how I hate having my mail interfered with."

She might have said: "Small souls always make a point of that." She said nothing. She watched them set off, and kept her mind on Ina's thousand injunctions.

"Don't let Di see much of Bobby Larkin. And, Lulu—if it occurs to her to have Mr. Cornish come up to sing, of course you ask him. You might ask him to supper. And don't let mother overdo. And, Lulu, now do watch Monona's handkerchief—the child will never take a clean one if I'm not here to tell her. . . ."

She breathed injunctions to the very step of the 'bus.

In the 'bus Dwight leaned forward: "See that you play post office squarely, Lulu!" he called, and threw back his head and lifted his eyebrows.

In the train he turned tragic eyes to his wfie.

"Ina," he said. "It's ma. And she's going to die. It can't be. . . ."

Ina said: "But you're going to help her, Dwight, just being there with her."

It was true that the mere presence of the man would bring a kind of fresh life to that worn frame. Tact and wisdom and love would speak through him and minister.

Toward the end of their week's absence the letter from Ninian came.

Lulu took it from the post office when she went for the mail that evening, dressed in her dark red gown. There was no other letter, and she carried that one letter in her hand all through the streets. She passed those who were surmising what her story might be, who were telling one another what they had heard. But she knew hardly more than they. She passed Cornish in the doorway of his little music shop, and spoke with him; and there was the letter. It was so that Dwight's foster mother's postal card might have looked on its way to be mailed.

Cornish stepped down and overtook her.

"Oh, Miss Lulu. I've got a new song or two—"

She said abstractedly: "Do. Any night. Tomorrow night—could you—"

It was as if Lulu were too preoccupied to remember to be ill at ease.

Cornish flushed with pleasure, said that he could indeed.

"Come for supper," Lulu said.

Oh, could he? Wouldn't that be . . . Well, say! Such was his acceptance.

He came for supper. And Di was not at home. She had gone off in the country with Jenny and Bobby, and they merely did not return.

Mrs. Bett and Lulu and Cornish and Monona supped alone. All were at ease, now that they were alone. Especially Mrs. Bett was at ease. It became one of her young nights, her alive and lucid nights. She was there. She sat in Dwight's chair and Lulu sat in Ina's chair. Lulu had picked flowers for the table—a task coveted by her but usually performed by Ina. Lulu had now picked Sweet William and had filled a vase of silver gilt taken from the parlor. Also, Lulu had made ice cream.

"I don't see what Di can be thinking of," Lulu said. "It seems like asking you under false—" She was afraid of "pretenses" and ended without it.

Cornish savored his steaming beef pie, with sage. "Oh, well!" he said, contentedly.

"Kind of a relief, I think, to have her gone," said Mrs. Bett, from the fullness of something or other.

"Mother!" Lulu said, twisting her smile.

"Why, my land, I love her," Mrs. Bett explained, "but she wiggles and chitters."

Cornish never made the slightest effort, at any time, to keep a straight face. The honest fellow now laughed loudly.

"Well!" Lulu thought. "He can't be so very much in love." And again she thought: "He doesn't know anything about the letter. He thinks Ninian got tired of me." Deep down in her heart there abode her certainty that this was not so.

By some etiquette of consent, Mrs. Bett cleared the table and Lulu and Cornish went into the parlor. There lay the letter on the drop-leaf sidetable, among the shells. Lulu had carried it there, where she need not see it at her work. The letter looked no more than the advertisement of dental office furniture beneath it. Monona stood indifferently fingering both.

"Monona," Lulu said sharply, "leave them be!"

Cornish was displaying his music. "Got up quite attractive," he said—it was his formula of praise for his music.

"But we can't try it over," Lulu said, "if Di doesn't come."

"Well, say," said Cornish shyly, "you know I left that Album of Old Favorites here. Some of them we know by heart."

Lulu looked. "I'll tell you something," she said; "there's some of these I can play with one hand—by ear. Maybe—"

"Why, sure!" said Cornish.

Lulu sat at the piano. She had on the wool chally, long sacred to the nights when she must combine her servant's estate with the quality of being Ina's sister. She wore her coral beads and her cameo cross. In her absence she had caught the trick of dressing her hair so that it looked even more abundant—but she had not dared to try it so until tonight, when Dwight was gone. Her long wrist was curved high, her thin hand pressed and fingered awkwardly, and at her mistakes her head dipped and strove to make all right. Her foot continuously touched the loud pedal—the blurred sound seemed to accomplish more. So she played "How Can I Leave Thee," and they managed to sing it. So she played "Long, Long Ago," and "Little Nell of Narragansett Bay." Beyond open doors, Mrs. Bett listened, sang, it may be, with them; for when the singers ceased, her voice might be heard, still humming a loud closing bar.

"Well!" Cornish cried to Lulu; and then, in the formal village phrase: "You're quite a musician."

"Oh, no!" Lulu disclaimed it. She looked up, flushed, smiling. "I've never done this in front of anybody," she owned. "I don't know what Dwight and Ina'd say. . . ." She drooped.

They rested and, miraculously, the air of the place had stirred and quickened, as if the crippled, halting melody had some power of its own, and poured this forth, even thus trampled.

"I guess you could do 'most anything you set your hand to," said Cornish.

If we could have the roses without the thorns we probably wouldn't want them.

Sunday we went to Swaledale to eat chicken dinner with our sister, Mrs. Wm. Leonard. Returning home a few miles out of Thornton, we passed a Ford with several young people. As they came abreast they threw something at us. We could hear it strike the car, but searched in vain for evidence. However, when the occupants got out of the car we found a beautiful mess of sqashed grapes in the seat. The road was rather narrow, the ditch wide and deep, and had one of the grapes happened to hit the river in the eye someone in the car would have been hurt or killed. We'd give considerable to know who those half-wits were.

COUNTY'S PRIZE WINNING JUDGING TEAM

Issues $172,000 In Drainage Bonds

County Issues Largest Amount Of Bonds In History For Clarion Storm Sewer.

TAXES DUE SEPTEMBER 31

The largest single issue of drainage bonds ever put out by Wright county was signed up last week by Chairman Grattige and Auditor Walker. The aggregate amount was $172,000, the bonds being issued for the payment of drainage district officially known as No. 196 or more commonly called the Clarion storm sewer.

Nine of the interested parties owning shacks and land at Wall Lake have appealed from the awards made by the sheriff's jury on August 18 to the October term of the district court. Notice of appeal was served on Sheriff Lang on September 13th.

W. S. Hagen of Belmond asks judgment against Christian Sorenson on his $1,350 note issued to J. M. Berry and later purchased by plaintiff.

A settlement has been effected between the Great Western and the Board of Supervisors in company's appeal from an assessment of $5,449.50 on account of the construction of the Clarion storm sewer. The amount of the assessment was reduced to $3,980.

The inheritance tax appraisers were in session again this week for the purpose of fixing the valuations in the following estates: J. E. Johnson of Dows, which consists of a half interest in one of the best qarter section farms in Wright county and a goodly amount of notes and mortgages. At Belmond Mrs. Nancy Davenport also owned a 160 acre farm besides personal property and money in the bank. The third estate was that of Fred Frohling, who owned two good residence properties in Belmond and about $20,000 worth of personal property.

Many people are under the impression that taxes, the second half, are due Oct. 1. Treasurer Allen says this is a mistake as they are due on September 1st and thirty days later a penalty of one per cent per month attaches. If one would avoid this penalty payment must be made within the next ten days.

Johnson & Wright ask the foreclosure of mortgage on one Jenney silo filler and husker to collect the sum of $370 from a farmer near Rowan.

Burton Page Co. of Chicago vs. Chas. Moon of Rowan is a suit to collect the sum of $123 for a two-cow model milking machine.

Louise Clemens of Clarion has filed suit for a divorce from her husband Clyde Clemens, to whom she was married in October, 1919, at Lewisburg, West Virginia. Cruel and inhuman treatment is charged.

The Rawleigh Co. vs. Simon DeWaard is a suit to collect a balance of $53.44 on account.

A suit for separate maintenance has been filed by Mrs. Hazel Frank of Boone township against her husband Roy Franks, in which she asks judgment for $150 per month for the support of herself and son.

Otis Whiteside of Clarion seeks to collect the sum of $524, interest and costs, on a promisory note given by G. L. Mechem to J. B. Snyder, in 1919, now the property of plaintiff.

There will be a change in the county agent's office October 1st at which time Miss Henrjetta Lundy, who is now completing her third year as stenographer and assistant to Mr. Edwards, expects to go to Sioux City to accept a similar position with the Woodbury County Farm Bureau. The new position is a deserved promotion and carries a substantial increase in salary. J. R. Hanson is the county agent and Mrs. Hanson was formerly Miss Grace Richards, home economics agent for Wright rounty. Miss Hope Pardun will take Miss Lundy's place.

Sheriff Lang had the Waterloo blood hounds brought to Goldfield on Saturday for the purpose of running down the burglar who entered the Whyte Motor Co. office the night before. The intruder evidently had a key as no locks were broken. Once inside the building he secured a small pinch bar and in attempting to force the office door open broke the glass in the same. The crashing of the glass on the cement floor was heard nearly a block away by the nightwatch and at the same time threw a scare into the thief, who was leaving the building when the marshal rounded the corner. The officer called to him and he answered back, but kept on going. The direction being in the neighborhood where Mr. Whyte lived the incident was dismissed for the time being, it being presumed that one of the men had just returned from a night drive. Later the outside door was found open and Mr. Whyte notified of what had happened. As soon as he arrived in Goldfield the owner of the hounds said there was no chance of detection and so it proved for iron and glass will not retain the scent of human hands more than forty minutes at the most. The dogs worked hard for nearly three hours. The owner brought them to Clarion where they took the evening train for Waterloo. —Monitor.

TWO FIRES IN THE PAST WEEK

Belmond was visited with two fires within the past week, the first occuring last week Thursday evening about 7:30, when the pop corn stand conducted by Wm. Dempsey caught fire. The blaze was caused by a broken gasolene pipe. Dempsey was generating the machine for the evening's business when a pipe broke, the gasolene catching fire. The entire inside of the building, with all the contents including the popping machine, was destroyed. Dempsey and his wife, who were inside at the time, had a narrow escape but got out without injury. A two-gallon can of high test gasolene in the building luckily did not explode. The loss will run to several hundred dollars, with no insurance, and is an especially unfortunate one as Dempsey had acquired the business but a few weeks previous. However, "Bill" is a rustler and immediately set about repairing the damage so that by Saturday evening he was ready for business again. He has purchased a popper from a party at Kanawha to take the place of the one destroyed in the fire.

Monday morning about 9:30 an electric motor in the basement of the Earn Luick home in East Belmond caught fire. The fire company was on the scene in short order but the blaze had accomplished no damage other than to the motor, the excitement being mostly smoke.

ANOTHER BELMOND CAR TAKEN BY CAR THIEVES

A. J. Dorr had his Overland car stolen in broad daylight one day last week, from the school grounds, and a few days later the missing car was picked up in Pocahantus. The auto had been driven to school by the children and left parked near the school yard while the children were in school. Three men are reported to have calmly appropriated the vehicle and driven off with it. A day or so later the car was found at Pocahantus, where it is reported the thieves had abondoned it and stolen another to continue their journey. Mr. Dorr was notified and went down after it. So far as known there is no clew to the identity of the thieves.

Top Row—Clyde Knight, County Agent Edwards, Clarence [illegible]

Bottom Row—Ross Mechem, Everett Denby.

This picure shows the Wright county boys who made up the Champion livestock judging team which won first place in the state wide judging contest at the state fair this year. Clarence Clark, at the extreme right in the upper row, is the young man who won first at Des Moines in the individual livestock judging contest. Clarence has decided to take advantage of the scholarship which was awarded in the state contest and will attend Iowa State College this year where he will specialize in animal husbandry. These boys are in Sioux City this week judging at the Interstate fair.

TO YOUNG PEOPLE OF TRINITY AND LUTHERAN

Don't forget the Eagle Grove circit young peoples' convention to be held in Eagle Grove, Sept. 22-24. The first session will be held Friday evening with the Rev. H. C. Holm as speaker. Do your best to attend. It will benefit you and the League to which you belong.

Hon. L. A. Jensen gave a very good address at the Trinity church last Sunday evening on prison work. The address was timely, full of information and wholesome advice to young and old. Those who failed to hear Mr. Jensen lost something good.

ST. OLAF

Wednesday afternoon the North Ladies Aid will meet at the home of Mrs. Andrew Olson.

Cottage prayer meeting will be conducted Wednesday evening at the home of H. Michallson. You are welcome.

Sunday morning Sunday school will be conducted at 10:30. You are welcome.

CONGREGATIONAL NOTES

The Ladies Aid will meet in the parlors of the church to quilt on Thursday afternoon.

Let all be at Sunday school next Sunday for we need the united help to keep up to our mark.

The regular services at 11 a. m. and in the evening.

The quarterly business meeting of the Congregational church will be held next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. All are invited to attend this meeting as items of importance are to come before us.

We certainly miss the large number of our young people who are away to College and teaching. We wish them a great year in school as well as in religious activities.

COMMUNITY CLUB TO MEET AT AUDITORIUM

The Community Welfare club will meet in the school auditorium next week Friday, September 29th. Miss Mary Foster from Ames will give a talk and demonstration to the ladies on clothing for school children. This will be well worth hearing and every lady of the community is cordially invited to attend. The high school girls will give a little play in connection with the demonstration. The business meeting will start at 2:30 o'clock promptly.

KALKWARF-GEALOW

September 6, at high noon, at the St. John's Luthern parsonage, occured the marriage of Miss Bertha Gealow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Gealow of Meservey, to Peter Kalkwarf, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Kalkwarf. Rev. Wippermann performed the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate families of the contracting parties. After congratulations they left by auto for different points in Illinois. They will reside on the Church farm seven miles south of Belmond. The Independent joins in extending congratulations to the happy couple.

The Belmond High School will give an old time box supper at the high school gymnasium, Friday night Sept. 29. The proceeds are to be used for the benefit of the foot ball team.

JASPER JOHNSON WRITES

The editor is in receipt of a letter from Jasper Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lud Johnson, who is teaching in an American college in Japan, and we quote in part from his letter as follows:

7 Shindaiku-machi, Nagasaki, Japan.
August 28, 1922.

At last I have arrived in the land of Japan, after a trip of two weeks on the boat. We had very fine weather on the way over; no storms, and very little choppy weather. I was very fortunate as I did not get sick, tho a lot of the passengers were not able to be on deck the first few days out at sea.

The trip over the Rockies on the C. P. R. (Canadian) was sure a treat to me. I have crossed the mountains on the east coast a number of times, but they do not hold a candle to the Rockies when it comes to rugged beauty. The last day of the trip to Vancouver was ideal, as we were riding in open top cars so that we could see in all directions, and the mountain streams water falls, gorges, glaciers and trees were too grand to be true. The only thing that marred the beauty was the smoke from the forest fires that had been burning in that part of the country for a long time, so that some of the mountains were very hazy even by using a glass.

I sighted the first of the fires about six o'clock at night, burning on the hill across from the train, a distance of several miles, but about seven o'clock we ran right into one of them. It was burning from the right-of-way clear up to the top of the mountain, which was about 2,500 feet above us. It was just dusk so that it showed p [illegible]. You could see some of the big trees catch on [illegible] light up like a big candle and flare for a few minutes and then go down in a shower of sparks. The whole side of the mountain was covered with burning bushes and trees so that it looked like the lights of a city in the distance. I heard later that there were a large number of fires all over the country and as it had not rained in those parts for about three months everything was very dry.

On the way over we took a rather northern course, and some days it was so cold and raw that I wore my winter overcoat with a great deal of comfort, but it is far from cool here. I think it gets up to about 95 every afternoon, but the evenings are rather cool as we are right on the coast, so one can sleep well nights. As soon as we get settled we are going to go to the mountains or to some beach where there is good swimming and stay a week or so until school begins, just to get away from the heat here.

I suppose you want to hear about some of the things here so will tell you of a few that I have seen. I have been here but a short time, three days, so I have not seen so very much of the life of the people. I will begin with our house. My friend Davis had the house rented and had moved in before I came so that all I had to do was to unpack and make myself at home. The house is a Japanese house in every sense of the word, except that it was built for an Englishman and so is of better material than most of the natives use. It has six rooms, four down stairs and two large ones upstairs. There is a veranda that runs around the house which is about four feet wide. This veranda has slides on the edge of it so that in cold weather they can be shut to keep out the cold. On the inside edge of the veranda is another set of slides made partly of paper on wooden frames and partly of glass, so that the whole side of the house can be open to the outside in warm weather.

The floors are covered with mats, and they are very soft to walk upon. Of course we have to take off our shoes, not so much because it is the custom of the country, but the leather shoes are hard on the mats on the floors. We sleep in one of the rooms upstairs and as we have no screens on the house we use a net which we hang over the "futons," which are soft mats that we spread out on the floor. We do not use wooden pillows tho a large number of the Japanese do use them. However, there is a

Jensen, of Parole Board, Gives Talk

Gives Fine Address On Workings Of State Board Of Parole—Gives Example.

NOTORIOUS CROOK HERE

L. A. Jensen of Forest City, a member of the Iowa Board of Parole, gave an inspiring address in the Norwegian church Sunday evening, his talk, in answer to an invitation extended by Rev. Jensen, pastor of the church, dealing with the workings of the parole board. Mr. Jesen gave some examples of the cases which have come under the jurisdiction of the board, and stated that the good people of Belmond and community would have been greatly surprised had they known last year that a man with one of the worst criminal records in the country was in their very midst, paroled by the board to a farmer near Belmond. This man, by name Harvey Lee, was a yeggman, a bank robber, who had served many terms, had broken out of jail by blowing it up, and had a criminal record in several different states. Yet this man made good and today holds a responsible position with one of the largest furniture companies in the country.

Mr. Jensen explaned why in many cases the board considered that the prisoner would be better off thru a parole, giving him a chance to make something of himself, instead of at the expiration of his sentence coming out of prison shunned, without a job or a chance to go straight. Statistics from the records showed that the big majority of men released on parole made good, and only a few had to be brought back to serve out their sentence.

Before a man is released on parole the board has a job for him. He has to live up to certain rules, must hand in a report to the board at specified times, and above all he must make good on the job.

The address was pronounced intensely interesting by all who heard it, and many things regarding the parole system were made plain which heretofore had been larely guess work.

DR. STEELE TAKES SECOND IN BOONE VALLEY GOLF

The Boone Valley golf association held a tournament at Eagle Grove last Thursday and Friday, with players from Iowa Falls, Webster City, Rolfe, Eagle Grove and the Clarmond club entored.

The first play was for the elimination with the result that Eagle Grove placed seven players, Webster City three, Iowa Falls four, Rolfe one, and Clarmond one, Dr. G. H. Steele of Belmond. Three rounds were then played which eliminated all but M. E. Hall of Eagle Grove and Dr. Steele, who played in the finals Friday with the result that Mr. Hall won by a score of 4 up and 2 to play. —Monitor.

RANKINS-GEALOW

Roy A. Rankins, editor of the Belmond Independent, and Miss Mary Gealow, were united in marriage on Thursday, September 14th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Leonard, at Swaledale, Iowa, Rev. R. N. Burress of Madrid, Iowa, formerly of Belmond, performing the ceremony.

The attendants were Mrs. William Leonard, sister of the groom, and Mr. Cortland M. Morse of Belmond.

White asters and goldenrod were used in the decorations. A bountiful wedding dinner was served after the congratulations.

Those are the main facts in the case. We have written up many weddings in our newspaper career, but writing our own is something else again. The bride of course is the best ever, and the groom is just an ordinary fellow like the rest.

The Independent, naturally, extends congratulations.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

GIVING A MAN A CHANCE

The recent publicity given the parole of John Berg of Belmond seems to have been cause for much comment, favorable and otherwise, about the Parole Board in releasing Berg after having served but a few months of his sentence. Notably among the adverse comments has been the News of Clarion, which, in a recent issue, said:

"Such actions as in the Berg case actually do more to add to the growing disrespect of law and court than any other one thing."

The News says that the parole board was not very well informed. Yet the board had a record of Berg's life for years back; it had the records of the trial; and it had in its' files letter after letter advocating a parole, and not a one against it. It would seem that the board knew what it was about.

As a matter of fact, had Berg been able to carry thru his plans, no one would have been out a cent; he would have been pronounced a shrewd business man. As they used to say in the army, "it isn't what you do, it's what you get by with." Because he couldn't carry the load, Berg is given the devil; successful, the same people who today holler over his parole would have been the first to shake his hand.

There is not a county in the state of Iowa but what has had at some time or other bank employees who have violated the laws, but they got by with it because they were able to carry it thru. Berg had a perfect life history, he had been a trusty from the day he enter prison, he went unaccompanied to prison from his trial, the board had scores of letters asking for parole and not a one against it, it was his first offense, will someone kindly tell us why, in the name of all that is sensible, humane and fair, he should not have been granted a chance? He is just as much a prisoner now as if he was within the walls, he is still in the legal custody of the warden and under the supervision of the Board of Parole. The object of the parole was to give him a chance to help straighten out his affairs, to look after his motherless daughter still in her teens, and to enable him to get a start in life that will enable him of take care of that little girl in the years to come.

Berg's friends do not deny that he broke the law, that he committed a crime against society, nor do they deny that he should be punished for that offense. But they do say that in being convicted and sentenced, John Berg was punished just as much as tho he had served every day of the sentence alloted him. To a man of his sensitiveness the fact of conviction was the greatest punishment that could have been given him. To have kept him in the penitentiary for the full term would not add one whit to what he has already suffered.

That there may be other cases where a parole is justified cuts no ice in this particular case. If Berg was entitled to a parole he should have been given it. And we believe he was entitled to it.

Because a man has wealthy and influential friends is no reason why he should not have justice, and because there are other cases deserving of attenton is no reason why one certain case should be held up. If, as the News claims, there is another case more deserving, why do not those aware of the fact do something about it? Is it because the man in question has not, God wot, the wealth and influence which they decry on the part of Berg? We believe that the Iowa Board of Parole is a fair body of men, doing what they think best, and if there is a deserving case as the News claims, they will give it attention if notified. The mob sees no justice to the man of position, and he who sides with the mob curries favor, but the man of independent opinion will look at all sides of the question before forming his judgments.

CLIPPINGS

In attempting to play a practical joke on the Bohlen boys, who live near Rockford, Joe Walskey, young tiler, had the joke turned on himself in a way that almost cost him his life.

The Bohlen boys were preparing to load oats from the bin into a wagon, preparatory to taking them to town to sell. Walskey climbed into the bin, thinking to stop the oats from running into the chute, and thus playing a joke on the boys. Instead when the chute was opened the oats descended with such force as to make a suction which drew the young man down and covered him about three feet deep with oats. Realizing his danger he screamed loudly enough to attract attention, and then began a lively scramble to rescue the young man before he met death by smothering. To do so the walls of the bin had to be torn out, and when he was finally extricated he was unconscious. —Exchange.

A Meservey man writing to the Sheffield Press, complains about the "high" wages for teachers. Teachers for years worked for about the same price the farmer now gets for his grain, and we believe that when a teacher spends several years preparing for her work, and also spends a lot of money to secure her training, it seems that she ought to be paid wages that would at least harmonize with the wages paid a man who becomes an "expert" in tightening up a bolt or doing like work. The teacher has a great responsibility in this world, and the better she imparts her knowledge the better for civilization generally. Some fellows always did think that the teacher was worth no more than a section hand.—Hampton Chronicle.

So many students entered our school this year in the high school department that the teaching staff could not find seats for all of them. Something had to be done at once and so the schools, being closed this week, it was an opportune time for the board to have some necessary remodeling done.

In order to take care of the overflow of high school students, the eighth grade room and the recitation room to the south of it are being made into one large room for the high school.—Klemme Times.

Walt Bloom arrived in Klemme from his home at Las Angeles, Cal., Friday morning. Walt mixes business with visiting when he comes to make his annual trip to the old home town. He is having some repairs done on is farm and the rest of the time he is busy shaking his right hand in te grasp of old time side-kicks. Walt reports that everybody in California from this vicinity are well and happy. —Klemme Times.

reason for their use, the fact that the wooden pillow, which rests under the neck instead of the head, is to protect the hair dress of the Japanese ladies. The art of dressing hair is carried out to the Nth degree by most of the ladies, and by the use of a wood pillow they can preserve the "waves" for several days without having to go to the hair dresser. On the boat coming over I saw some of the steerage passengers using pillows made of some kind of enamel ware.

The streets in the towns of Japan vary from about ten feet up to the width of our modern streets, and the buildings from single story to seven or eight-story buildings. However, most of the business is carried on in small shops which serve for the living rooms as well as the shop. I will try to tell you of a visit to a little shop across the street from us. The shop is on the same level as the street. You enter thru a drape of some kind of cloth, and walk into the house on a walk made of stone and clay. The front of the shop is a sort of a soft (?) drink parlor, back of which is a raised platform about 18 inches high. This platform is covered with mats and serves as a bedroom at night, a dining room at meal times, and as a parlor in the afternoon. In fact, it combines in one room the uses of several in America. Mr. Davis is well acquainted with the people and we went back into the living room, which is separated from the front by only a drape of some sort. We got a dish of shaved ice flavored with orange. In Japan this is a very popular dish. The ice is shaved on a grater similar to the one we use to shave up cabbage for sourkraut, a syrup is then poured on it and the dish is served. They do have ice cream but it tastes very much different from the ice cream at home. We sat down on the platform to eat our ice and the lady of the house came forward, got down on her knees and bowed her head nearly to the floor, proceeded to take out a Japanese pipe which holds, when the bowl is full, about 1-5 of a thimble; this she lighted and gave to Mr. Davis, then repeated the same performance for me. The tobacco here is very mild, so the Japanese do not like our tobacco as it is too strong. I had a package of Herbert T. smoking and I let some fellows try it, but they didn't come back for any more. We stayed in the shop and carried on a conversation by means of our pocket dictionaries and signs until we had finished our ice and then took our departure amid profuse bows and goodnights.

Clarion Corn Carnival

The city of Clarion is planning a monster fall festival and corn show which will be held in the court yard at Clarion, Wednesday, October 18. The business men of Clarion in holding this corn carnival have granted the Clarion Post of the American Legion exclusive concession rights and the Legion boys will be given opportunity to co-operate with their home city in putting on this community affair.

A parade with vehicles decorated appropriately for the occasion will be staged by farmers only and prizes of $25.00, $10.00 and $5.00 will be awarded the best decorated automobiles or other vehicles. $145 is to be awarded in prizes for the best corn in the various classes and the corn exhibits are to be limited to Wright county. The prizes in the corn show will be as follows:

Best 10 white ears $15, $10, $5, $3, $2.

Best 10 yellow ears $15, $10, $5, $3, $2

Best 10 (either color) Sweepstakes $50.00.

Best single ear (either color), $25.00.

Best two ears on stalk $10 and $5.00.

Tallest stalk of corn $10.

Liberal prizes are also being arranged for exhibits in the ladies' department.

Judging Team At Sioux City

The Wright county livestock club judging team accompanied by the county agent is spending this week in Sioux City representing the state of Iowa at the Interstate fair in the livestock club judging contest of eight middle west states.

The boys and the county agent have worked unceasingly since the state fair contest and have left nothing undone in an effort to learn all of the fine points of judging which are so necessary in an interstate contest where the competition is so keen. The home folks in Wright county should bear in mind that the boys are judging against the state champion teams of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri. It is hoped that the Iowa boys who will go from one of the best counties in the state will bring honors back to the best state in the union.

Boys' and Girls' Clubs

Plans are being made for carrying on a more extensive program of club work next year. The Wright county boys and girls the most valuable crop we have, will be given all the attention possible next year. The county agent's time is quite well taken up with farmers' problems but an effort will be made to see that the youngsters are given all encouragement that is possible.

The developement of club work, the training of the young minds along agricultural lines cannot be over emphasized at this time when there seems to be a growing tendency on the part of the younger generation to leave the farm to work in the city where, as they are told, they will have better pay and shorter hours, and statistics show that the rural population is decreasing. By interesting the youngsters in club work, by having him actually feed and care for a calf or pig of a flock of chicks and at the same time keep an accurate account of the cost of the feed and all work connected with the project, is the one way of keeping the boy or girl interested in things which concern the farm and farm life.

An effort will be made during the fall months to organize calf clubs, pig clubs, poultry clubs, garment clubs, sewing clubs, canning clubs, livestock judging clubs and others which may interest the boys and girls. All boys and girls between the ages of ten and eighteen who are interested in becoming a member of one of the above named clubs should write or call the county agent at Clarion who will mail an enrollment card for the signature of the club members and the parent.

Farm Crops Specialist

Prof. B. E. Heitzman, farm crops specialist from Ames, will be in Wright county Friday, September 29, to assist in conducting clover demonstrations.

Considerable attention has been given to the growing of Hubam clover in Wright county this year and Prof. Heitzman will probably conduct this demonstration on the Al Watkins' farm, three miles east of Eagle Grove where an experiment plot of 20 acres of Hubam clover was planted this spring.

Available Bulletins

The agricultural extension department at Ames has sent the county agent a list of several hundred bulletins which are available to all farmers of the state. This list includes bulletins on many subjects of vital interest to farmers of this section of the state.

Membership Drive Planned

The annual membership drive of the Wright county farm bureau will be staged some time during the forepart of October. It has been customary in the past to set aside one day in the fall of the year for a state wide membership drive but this plan will be changed somewhat and county will set its' own day for the the membership drive. The date will be set and final plans made for the membership drive at the next regular meeting of the board of directors of the farm bureau which will be held Saturday, September 30.

The plan which is usually followed in conducting the drive is to appoint a team of two or three men in each township who are able to call upon the non-members on the date which is set for the drive. In this way the non-member is solicited personally and given opportunity to ask any questions he may wish to about the organization before signing for membership. The present membership in Wright county Farm Bureau numbers about 1250. There has been a steady increase in membership and it is hoped that the small percent of farmers who have not already joined hands with their neighbors in supporting their own organization, will cast their lot with those who have carried the load since the farm bureau was organization.

Lively Social in Grant

The N. H. Cooper home, six miles northeast of Clarion, was the scene of a lively community social last Friday evening when the good people of Grant township gathered at this farm home for their regular monthly farm bureau meeting.

The evening's entertainment consisted of community singing and two addresses. Rev. Oscar Ulstad gave the principal address of the evening. Mr. Ulstad explained what great influence the Farm Bureau had in a legislative way in the passage of some of the bills, particularly along agricultural lines, which came up for consideration during the last session of the state legislature. He said that quite a number of the agricultural bills which came up last winter were passed without the usual amount of investigation because they had the endorsement of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation. Mr. Ulstad is a member of our local Farm Bureau and according to his own statements he expects to work for the interests of this organization when he sits in the halls of legislature during its next session. Mr. E. G. Kill, representative of the Iowa Farm Credit Corporation gave a short talk on this corporation and explained its purposes and how it expects to function in this state. The official business of the township organization was also considered and the program closed by doughnuts, sandwiches and coffee being served by the good housewives.

Clothing Specialist Coming

Miss Martha Foster, clothing specialist will spend three days in this county, September 26, 27, 28, in demonstrating "Renovation of clothing and hats." A schedule of Miss Foster's meetings was worked out by the ladies at the last regular board of director meeting and it was planned to hold the meetings for Miss Foster as follows:

Boone township, September 26, Mrs. Bert Siemen's home.

Iowa township, September 27, Mrs. Albert Fetrow home.

Troy township, September 28, Mrs. Arne Helleland home.

Service To Bee Keepers

Farmers who are interested in bee business will be interested to know that the state department at Ames has prepared a blue print for the constructtion of a four colony packing case for bees. These plans and specifications are the work of the agricultural engineering section of the Iowa Experimental station in co-operation with the farmers of the state. Those who are interested in receiving this blue print should write A. W. Clyde, agricultural Ext. Service, Ames, Iowa.

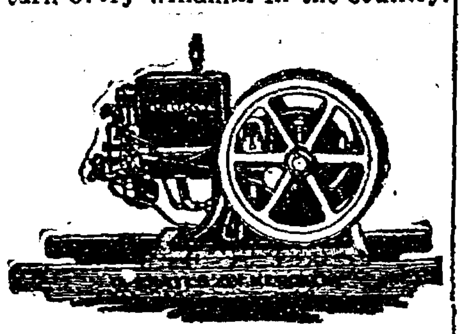
Blowing Some!

Senator Capper says that whenever there's a debate in the Senate it furnishes enough agitation of atmosphere to turn every windmill in the country.



But, when Senate adjourns, what are you going to do for fresh water? Get an International Kerosene Engine, of course. It's as faithful and willing a helper as you can find in a lifetime of searching. The powerful 1 1-2 H. P. International will do almost anything that no one else wants to do, and for only 3 cents an hour—no overtime pay. Larger sizes too, if you need more power. Come and see them.

Keep The Boys At Home

The International manure spreader takes drudgery out of a disagreeable job, and it does its full share in keeping boys on the farm. It saves labor, saves time of a man and team and makes the manure go farther. It increases yields and makes more money for you. You can't afford to be without a machine that will do all these things. So why not come in and talk it over while the price is lower than it ever will be again?

A Milkhouse Queen

A "handsome blue machine" set up in the center of your milkhouse is a "crown of glory" considering the many things it will do for you. It is the sentinel-queen carefully guarding the milk and cream so that each is separated to the last drop. Otherwise known as the Primrose Cream Separator, this "handsome blue machine" will save enough cream to make three cows worth as much as four. It will give you an income all the year around and supply sweet, warm skimmilk for the calves, pigs and chickens. Truly, the Primrose is a queen.

EAGLE GROVE STARTS MOVE FOR ITS FAIR

Clarion News: That Eagle Grove would, at the earliest opportunity, take over the county fair proposition in the event that Clarion dropped it, was the repeated statement of the News last fall. Since Clarion did drop the fair, the Eagle Grove business interests have gone ahead on the proposition and last week appointed a committee to get facts as to the cost of fair buildings and operation. This committee has already spent time in visiting neighboring fairs, and will report at the first coming meeting of the Commercial club.

The members of the park board at Eagle Grove have voiced a willingness to turn over the park grounds for fair purposes, and the nature of the improvements necessary will be taken up in regular order. Already the park has a neucleus for the fair ground buildings; the track has been maintained, and the available space is ample for a start on the fair at a minimum expense. The citizens of Eagle Grove expect to stage a race meeting in July, preliminary to the opening of the fair next fall. They plan a four days' program.

ATTEMPT ROBBERY OF GOLDFIELD GARAGE

On last Friday night about two o'clock as night watchman Anderson was making his usual rounds, he heard something that sounded like breaking glass. He immediately started an investigation and by the time he reached the Whyte Garage Ed. Hinton drove in to put away his car and unlocked the door and went in, followed by the night watchman, but he not thinking of there being anyone in the building the car was put into its usual place and they went out, locking the door, Edwin going home and the night watchman going down the alley north from the garage. He had only proceeded a short distance when he heard someone walking on the sidewalk west from the garage, and he immediately called to the party and as is customary among the boys he answered back and proceeded on west and to the rear of the Whyte, Sr., residence, and he thinking it was Kenneth Whyte thought no more about it until he happened to notice the west door of the garage standing open. Then he started an investigatiotn and soon discovered the door leading from the main garage to the display room and office had been pried open with a bar taken from the repair bench. In working at the door the bar must have slipped thus breaking the glass in the door which explains the sound of breaking glass heard by the night watch a few moments previous.—Chronicle.

BABY KILLED IN AUTO CRASH AT HAMPTON

Chronicle: H .W. Schroeder of Raymond, Minnesota, and who was driving a Maxwell touring car, went into the ditch off the grade just north of the August Brandt home at the northwest edge of Hampton last Friday morning about 8:30 o'clock, and the accident resulted in the death of his nine months old baby daughter. Mrs. Schroeder, wife of the driver, also suffered a broken left arm just above the wrist.

Mr. Schroeder was accompanied by his wife and several children, and also by his wife's sister. The car was heavily loaded with passengers and also with considerable luggage. The party was on its way home from a visit with relatives at Ackley, and were said to be traveling at a very moderate rate of speed.

The tracks could easily be seen where Mr. Schroeder turned the car to the right and it ran dircetly off the grade, and tipped over when running along the side of the high bank. None of the passengers were injured except Mrs. Schroeder and the baby daughter. The child was riding in the front seat with its parents and in the crash it was caught under the frame of the windshield.

CORWITH'S THIRD FIRE

The people were aroused about 4 o'clock this morning by the fire alarm. They responded with alacrity but by the time they got on the grounds and got the fire hose at work the Houston & Gee blacksmith shop was doomed. Everything was dry as tinder and the blacksmith shop burned rapidly, as did the frame of the ice house. Just how the fire started is not known but it is surmised that it started in the sawdust surrounding the ice house and spread to the buildings. The sawdust between the two buildings had been on fire the first of the week and had been put out. The shop and contents were insured for $3,000. Jess Hullinger had an automobile stored in the shop. His loss is $250. Mr. Houston did not know about the fire until a neighbor told him just as he was ready to start to work. Had the Whetsler garage building been a frame structure it too would have gone. The only loss to this building is a cracked window light. As this is our third fire this year it is hoped it is the last.—Corwith Hustler.

ADVERTISE TO SELL PRODUCTS

"I've got more apples than I know what to do with; they're rotting on the ground. How can I sell them?"

"Advertise!" That was the answer to the apple grower who wrote in distress to the agricultural journalism department at Iowa State College

In every community in Iowa there are farmers who have a surplus of apples, or honey or vegetables suitable for canning, or other food products. Also in every community there are many folks who do not have them, but want them and do not know where to get them. Advertising brings them together, to their mutual advantage.

"Advertising has been proved an efficient and economical way of selling special farm products by more than one farmer," says F. W. Beckman, head of the work in agricultural journalism at Ames. "Right near Ames is a farmer with a good sized orchard who disposes of all his early and late apples, cider, vinegar and other products by advertising. Moreover, his advertising brings customers to his farm, and he has to deliver only a small part of his sales. Four families out of five in town can readily get to his orchard because they drive automobiles. His advertising bills run up pretty well, but it saves him many times its amount in time and trouble and gasoline.

"This particular farmer uses both small 'for sale' ads and larger display space. However, any farmer who has special products to sell can get splendid help from his local newspaper man in working out a advertising campaign and advise as to the best kind of advertising for his selling problem.

FARM FIRE NEAR HAMPTON

Fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the home of Mr. and Mrs Elmer J. Philpott on what is known as the William Seegar farm, two and a half miles southeast of Hampton, Saturday evening while members of the household were away from home. Two Hampton young men were motoring home at about 8:30 and noticing flames and smoke issuing from the residence stopped to investigate. The youths entered the strucure by breaking thru one of the front windows and reaching the telephone gave the alarm to the central office in Hampton and to several neighbors. While waiting for the arrival of the chemical truck from town the two boys and girl friends began to carry out furniture and through their efforts quite a number of articles were saved. —Hampton Recorder.

COMMERCIAL CLUB TO BACK CORN CARNIVAL

A great many will be glad to learn that the business men of Clarion have revived the annual corn carnival which was held with success, and profit a few years ago. The matter will be in the hands of the commercial club which is a garantee of its success. The soliciting committee was out the first of the and already have $1000 pledged. It is hoped to raise at least $1200 for this event. Such a sum would make some attractive premiums and prizes, the latter to be awarded in the sporting events. The carnival will be held early in October, full details of which will be given later.

Since corn is the main article of production in this locality there should be plenty of material for a successful carnival. With the merchants cooperating there are unlimited possibilities in connection with an event of this kind. Since the fair is a thing of the past let's all boost for the corn carnival.—Monitor.

Auto Truck Accident

Last Saturday just before noon, Levi Anderson, one of the truck drivers who is hauling gravel for the Wilson highway, came nearly being killed. He was going north with a loaded truck. Mr. Larson the Klemme meat man, was just ahead of him. Larson suddenly slowed down to turn into the Frank Quigley place. Mr. Anderson, to avoid running over the meat truck, quickly turned his truck to the east. The speed of the truck was so great and the turn so sharp that the truck turned upside down, hitting the meat truck and pinning Anderson under his own car. The cab was smashed beyond repair, the steering wheel and gear was broken, the gravel box knocked all out of shape Another truck with which Donald Estle was riding soon came up. They with Mr. Larson lifted up the truck and took Anderson out. He was taken to Goodell where he was attended by Dr. Snearley. His collar bone, two ribs, and an arm were broken and his face and jaw bruised. On Monday he was getting along as well as could be expected, with good chances of recovery.

GRUIS-DIRKS NUPTIALS

Last Wednesday evening at 7:00 o'clock occured the marriage of Miss Kathryn Gruis to Rev. Eilert Dirks, at the home of the bride's father, Herman Gruis. Rev. H. Pannkuk read the service, which was simple and impressive. The bride was beautiful in a gown of white silk canton crepe, and wore a corsage bouquet of bride's roses. The groom wore suit of dark blue. Miss Mildred Gealow was bridesmaid and looked charming in a dress of white Swiss organdy. Mr. Herman Dirks, brother of the groom, was best man and wore a dark suit.

Only immediate relatives and a few close friends of the bride were present to witness the ceremony.

The rooms were decorated in pink and white. After the ceremony a three-course dinner was served to the guests, in the dining room, where the color scheme of pink and white was also carried out.

Miss Gruis is the eldest daughter of Mr. Herman Gruis, and is a splendid type of womanhood, possessing winsome qualities. She taught in our public schools several years ago, and the past year she has been bookkeeper at the Klemme Lumber office.

Rev. Dirks is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Harm Dirks, and has worked hard for the past 11 years to qualify himself for the ministry. Thru his eforts he has become eligible to ordination as a minister of the Reformed church, and we are proud to claim him as one from our midst. All join in wishing them well in their new undertaking. They left Thursday evening for Long Island City, and will make their home in that vicinity where Mr. Dirks has accepted a pastorate.

FARMERS MUST HAVE ORGANIZATION

The following is taken from the Farm Bureau department of The Traer Star-Clipper, and we believe is well worth reprinting:

"Farmers must have an organization in order to insure the prosperity of their business. We are in better condition today than we have been for a long time, and I believe we are on the road to permanent improvement.

"I want to say right now that we can prove that the Farm Bureau was largely the reason for keeping agriculture from getting entirely snowed under and I want to say that if we had an organization with the influence of the farm bureau when the depression commenced that we would not have been grovelling around in the mire.

"Without this organization coming when it did, Iowa would have been overrun with bankrupt farmers, much more than she was. Some say the farmers are entirely to blame for the condition they worked themselves into. I admit they spent too much money, I admit that land went too high, but at the same time we must admit that we had banker after banker right on our heels, just begging us to borrow their money at a cheap interest rate, and then when they took $500,000,000 of our profits away from us they said it was our own fault that we were so sick financially. If we had had our organization then they wouldn't have done that.

"Some people say that any fool can be a farmer. Let me tell you something. If you have a son who is a bit weak minded or not as bright as the rest of the boys educate him to be a doctor or a lawyer, or something other than a farmer. It takes the keenest brains of all to farm."

Leader: The money has been subscribed—about $1600.00 of it, and Garner is to have a Baseball Tournament Thursday and Friday, September 14 and 15. The time is short, and the affair will need to be put over with a bang The contesting teams have been selected and while contracts have not yet been signed there is not much doubt but what they all will attach their names to the dotted line. The Bayside Cubs, Dows, Hampton and some other aggregation of about the same class will probably be the teams in the contest. Our town has the reputation of being the best baseball town in Northern Iowa, and the array of talent that will appear this year, should make it possible to maintain this reputation. As we understand it, there will be two seven-inning games on the afternoon of the first day, the 14th. The losers of the first day's encounter will play in the forenoon of the second day. The winners of the first day will play in the afternoon of the second day. The time for the holding of the tournament seems opportune. Farm work will be well out of the way, and Garner should have a real lot of baseball fans out to her 1922 tournament.

Leader: Among the probabilities in the way of new enterprises for Garner is a grist mill. The first days of the week, J. P. Mellenger of Plainsfield, Iowa, visited Garner, and was so very favorably impressed with our city that he has about decided to locate one of his grist mills here. He already has a couple of such mills in operation within the state. One of these is at Waverly. He called upon Mr. Conway, president of the Garner Commercial Club, and together they went over the matter in detail. From him Mr. Conway learned the advantages of a power mill such as Mr. Mellenger contemplates installing. One thing that Mr. Conway found out is that grain ground by the process employed by Mellenger, contained twenty-five per cent more food value than the same grain ground by the ordinary farm grinding outfit. This mill, if it is located in Garner, will be for the grinding of feed for stock only. Nothing in the way of milling flour will be attempted. All the gentleman from Plainsfield asks is that right-of-way be granted him and this matter the Commercial Club will take up with the proper railway authorities. Let us hope that nothing happens to block the advent of the new enterprise into our city.

MISS LULU BETT

"Oh, no," Lulu said again.

"Sing and play and cook—"

"But I can't earn anything. I'd like to earn something." But this she had not meant to say. She stopped, rather frightened.

"You would! Why, you have it fine here, I thought."

"Oh, fine, yes. Dwight gives me what I have. And I do their work."

"I see," said Cornish. "I never thought of that," he added. She caught his speculative look—he had heard a tale or two concerning her return, as who in Warbleton had not heard?

"You're wondering why I didn't stay with him!" Lulu said recklessly. This was no less than wrung from her, but its utterance occasioned in her an unspeakable relief.

"Oh, no," Cornish disclaimed, and colored and rocked.

"Yes, you are," she swept on. "The whole town's wondering. Well, I'd like 'em to know, but Dwight won't let me tell."

Cornish frowned, trying to understand.

"'Won't let you!'" he repeated. "I should say that was your own affair."

"No. Not when Dwight gives me all I have."

"Oh, that—" said Cornish. "That's not right."

"No. But there it is. It puts me—you see what it does to me. They think—they all think my—husband left me."

It was curious to hear her bring out that word——tentatively, deprecatingly, like some one daring a foreign phrase without warrant.

Cornish said feebly: "Oh, well. . . ."

Before she willed it, she was telling him:

"He didn't. He didn't leave me," she cried with passion. "He had another wife." Incredibly it was as if she were defending both him and herself.

"Lord sakes!" said Cornish.

She poured it out, in her passion to tell some one, to share her news of her state where there would be neither hardness nor censure.

"We were in Savannah, Georgia," she said. "We were going to leave for Oregon—going to go through California. We were in the hotel, and he was going out to get the tickets. He started to go. Then he came back. I was sitting the same as there. He opened the door again—the same as here. I saw he looked different—and he said quick: 'There's something you'd ought to know before we go.' And, of course, I said, 'What?' And he said it right out—how he was married eighteen years ago and in two years she ran away and she must be dead, but he wasn't sure. He hadn't the proofs. So, of course, I came home. But it wasn't him left me."

"No, no. Of course he didn't," Cornish said earnestly. "But, Lord's sakes—" he said again. He rose to walk about, found it impracticable and sat down.

"That's what Dwight don't want me to tell—he thinks it isn't true. He thinks—he didn't have any other wife. He thinks he wanted—" Lulu looked up at him. "You see," she said, "Dwight thinks he didn't want me."

"But why don't you make your husband—I mean, why doesn't he write to Mr. Deacon here, and tell him the truth—" Cornish burst out.

Under this implied belief, she relaxed and into her face came its rare sweetness.

"He has written," she said. "The letter's there."

He followed her look, scowled at the two letters.

"What'd he say?"

"Dwight don't like me to touch his mail. I'll have to wait till he comes back."

"Lord sakes!" said Cornish.

This time he did rise and walk about. He wanted to say something, wanted it with passion. He paused beside Lulu and stammered:

"You—you—you're too nice a girl to get a deal like this. Darned if you aren't."

To her own complete surprise Lulu's eyes filled with tears, and she could not speak. She was by no means above self-sympathy.

"And there ain't," said Cornish sorrowfully, "there ain't a thing I can do."

And yet he was doing much. He was gentle, he was listening, and on his face a frown of concern. His face continually surprised her, it was so fine and alive and near, by comparison with Ninian's loose-lipped, ruddy, impersonal look and Dwight's thin, high-boned hardness. All the time Cornish gave her something, instead of drawing upon her. Above all, he was there, and she could talk to him.

"It's—it's funny," Lulu said. "I'd be awful glad if I just could know for sure that the other woman was alive—if I couldn't know she's dead."

This surprising admission Cornish seemed to understand.

"Sure you would," he said briefly.

"Cora Waters," Lulu said. "Cora Waters, of San Diego, California. And she never heard of me."

"No," Cornish admitted. They stared at each other as across some abyss.

In the doorway Mrs. Bett appeared.

"I scraped up everything," she remarked, "and left the dishes set."

"That's right, mamma," Lulu said. "Come and sit down."

Mrs. Bett entered with a leisurely air of doing the thing next expected of her.

"I don't hear any more playin' and singin'," she remarked. "It sounded real nice."

"We—we sung all I knew how to play, I guess, mamma."

"I use' to play on the melodeon," Mrs. Bett volunteered, and spread and examined her right hand.

"Well!" said Cornish.

She now told them about her log-house in a New England clearing, when she was a bride. All her store of drama and life came from her. She rehearsed it with far eyes. She laughed at old delights, drooped at old fears. She told about her little daughter who had died at sixteen—a tragedy such as once would have been renewed in a vital ballad. At the end she yawned frankly as if, in some terrible sophistication, she had been telling the story of some one else.

"Give us one more piece," she said.

"Can we?" Cornish asked.

"I can play 'I Think When I Read That Sweet Story of Old,'" Lulu said.

"That's the ticket!" said Cornish.

They sang it, to Lulu's right hand.

"That's the one you picked out when you was a little girl, Lulie," cried Mrs. Bett.

Lulu had played it now as she must have played it then.

Half after nine and Di had not returned. But nobody thought of Di. Cornish rose to go.

"What's them?" Mrs. Bett demanded.

"Dwight's letters, mamma. You mustn't touch them!" Lulu's voice was sharp.

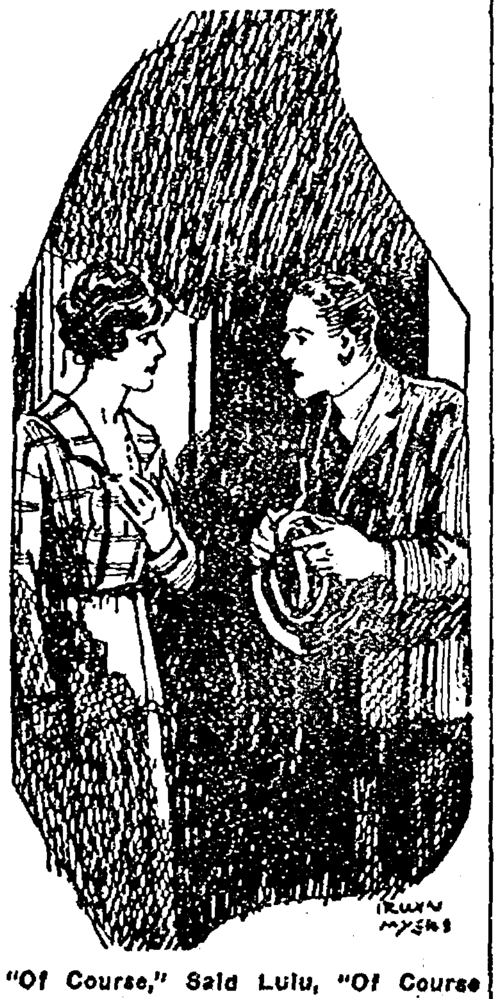
"Say!" Cornish, at the door, dropped his voice. "If there was anything I could do at any time, you'd let me know, wouldn't you?"

That past tense, those subjunctives, unconsciously called upon her to feel no intrusion.

"Oh, thank you," she said. "You don't know how good it is to feel—"

"Of course it is," said Cornish heartily.

They stood for a moment on the porch. The night was one of low clamor from the grass, tiny voices, insisting.



"Of Course," Said Lulu, "Of Course You Won't—You Wouldn't."

"Of course," said Lulu, "of course you won't—you wouldn't—"

"Say anything?" he divined. "Not for dollars. Not," he repeated, "for dollars."

"But I knew you wouldn't," she told him.

He took her hand. "Good-night," he said. "I've had an awful nice time singing and listening to you talk—well, of course—I mean," he cried, "the supper was just fine. And so was the music."

"Oh, no," she said.

Mrs. Bett came into the hall.

"Lulie," she said, "I guess you didn't notice—this one's from Ninian."

"Mother—"

"I opened it—why, of course I did. It's from Ninian."

Mrs. Bett held out the opened envelope, the unfolded letter, and a yellowed newspaper clipping.

"See," said the old woman, "says, 'Corie Waters, music hall singer—married last night to Ninian Deacon—' Say, Lulie, that must be her. . . ."

Lulu threw out her hands.

"There!" she cried triumphantly. "He was married to her, just like he said!"

* * * * * * * *

The Plows were at breakfast next morning when Lulu came in casually at the side door. Yes, she said, she had had breakfast. She merely wanted to see them about something. Then she said nothing, but sat looking with a troubled frown at Jenny. Jenny's hair was about her neck, like the hair of a little girl, a south window poured light upon her, the fruit and honey upon the table seemed her only possible food.

"You look troubled, Lulu," Mrs. Plow said. "Is it about getting work?"

"No," said Lulu, "no. I've been places. I guess the bakery is going to let me make cake."

"I knew it would come to you," Mrs. Plow said, and Lulu thought that this was a strange way to speak, when she herself had gone after the cakes. But she kept on looking about the room. It was so bright and quiet. As she came in, Mr. Plow had been reading from a book. Dwight never read from a book at table.

"I wish—" said Lulu, as she looked at them. But she did not know what she wished. Certainly it was for no moral excellence, for she perceived none.

"What is it, Lulu?" Mr. Plow asked, and he was bright and quiet too, Lulu thought.

"Well," said Lulu, "it's not much, but I wanted Jenny to tell me about last night."

"Last night?"

"Yes. Would you—" Hesitation was her only way of apology. "Where did you go?" She turned to Jenny.

Jenny looked up in her clear and ardent fashion: "We went across the river and carried supper and then we came home."

"What time did you get home?"

"Oh, it was still light. Long before eight, it was."

Lulu hesitated and flushed, asked how long Di and Bobby had stayed there at Jenny's; whereupon she heard that Di had to be home early on account of Mr. Cornish, so that she and Bobby had not stayed at all. To which Lulu said an "of course," but first she stared at Jenny and so impaired the strength of her assent. Almost at once she rose to go.

"Nothing else?" said Mrs. Plow, catching that look of hers.

Lulu wanted to say: "My husband was married before, just as he said he was." But she said nothing more, and went home. There she put it to Di and, with her terrible bluntness, reviewed to Di the testimony.

"You were not with Jenny after eight o'clock. Where were you?" Lulu spoke formally and her rehearsals were evident.

Di said: "When mamma comes home, I'll tell her."

With this Lulu had no idea how to deal, and merely looked at her helplessly. Mrs. Bett, who was lacing her shoes, now said casually:

"No need to wait till then. Her and Bobby were out in the side yard sitting in the hammock till all hours."

Di had no answer save her furious flush, and Mrs. Bett went on:

"Didn't I tell you? I knew it before the company left, but I didn't say a word. Thinks I, 'She wiggles and chitters.' So I left her stay where she was."

"But, mother!" Lulu cried. "You didn't even tell me after he'd gone."

"I forgot it," Mrs. Bett said, "finding Ninian's letter and all—" She talked of Ninian's letter.

Di was bright and alert and firm of flesh and erect before Lulu's softness and laxness.

"I don't know what your mother'll say," said Lulu, "and I don't know what people'll think."

"They won't think Bobby and I are tired of each other, anyway," said Di, and left the room.

Through the day Lulu tried to think what she must do. About Di she was anxious and felt without power. She thought of the indignation of Dwight and Ina that Di had not been more scrupulously guarded. She thought of Di's girlish folly, her irritating independence—"and there," Lulu thought, "just the other day I was teaching her to sew." Her mind dwelt, too, on Dwight's furious anger at the opening of Ninian's letter. But when all this had spent itself, what was she herself to do? She must leave his house before he ordered her to do so, when she told him that she had confided in Cornish, as tell she must. But what was she to do? The bakery cake-making would not give her a roof.

Stepping about the kitchen in her blue cotton gown, her hair tight and flat as seemed proper when one was not dressed, she thought about these things. ..nd it was strange: Lulu bore no physical appearance of one in distress or any anxiety. Her head was erect, her movements were strong and swift, her eyes were interested. She was no drooping Lulu with dragging step. She was more intent, she was somehow more operative than she had ever been.

Mrs. Bett was working contentedly beside her, and now and then humming an air of that music of the night before. The sun surged through the kitchen door and east window, a returned oriole swung and fluted on the elm above the gable. Wagons clattered by over the rattling wooden block pavement.

"Ain't it nice with nobody home?" Mrs. Bett remarked at intervals, like the burden of a comic song.

"Hush, mother," Lulu said, troubled, her ethical refinements conflicting with her honesty.

"Speak the truth and shame the devil," Mrs. Bett contended.

When dinner was ready at noon, Di did not appear. A little earlier Lulu had heard her moving about her room, and she served her in expectation that she would join them.

"Di must be having the 'tantrim' this time," she thought, and for a time said nothing. But at length she did say: "Why doesn't Di come? I'd better put her plate in the oven."

Rising to do so, she was arrested by her mother. Mrs. Bett was eating a baked potato, holding her fork close to the tines, and presenting a profile of passionate absorption.

"Why, Di went off," she said.

"Went off!"

"Down the walk. Down the sidewalk."

"She must have gone to Jenny's," said Lulu. "I wish she wouldn't do that without telling me."

Monona laughed out and shook her straight hair. "She'll catch it!" she cried in sisterly enjoyment.

It was when Lulu had come back from the kitchen and was seated at the table that Mrs. Bett observed:

"I didn't think Inie'd want her to take her nice new satchel."

"Her satchel?"

"Yes. Inie wouldn't take it north herself, but Di had it."

"Mother," said Lulu, "when Di went away just now, was she carrying a satchel?"

"Didn't I just tell you?" Mrs. Bett demanded, aggrieved. "I said I didn't think Inie—"

"Mother, which way did she go?"

Monona pointed with her spoon. "She went that way," she said. "I seen her."

Lulu looked at the clock. For Monona had pointed toward the railway station. The twelve-thirty train, which every one took to the city for shopping, would be just about leaving.

"Monona," said Lulu, "don't you go out of the yard while I'm gone. Mother, you keep her—"

Lulu ran from the house and up the street. She was in her blue cotton dress, her old shoes; she was hatless and without money. When she was still two or three blocks from the station, she heard the twelve-thirty "pulling out."

She ran badly, her ankles in their low, loose shoes continually turning, her arms held taut at her sides. So she came down the platform, and to the ticket window. The contained ticket man, wonted to lost trains and perturbed faces, yet actually ceased counting when he saw her:

"Lenny! Did Di Deacon take that train?"

"Sure she did," said Lenny.

"And Bobby Larkin?" Lulu cared nothing for appearances now.

"He went in on the Local," said Lenny, and his eyes widened.

"Where?"

"See." Lenny thought it through. "Millton," he said. "Yes, sure. Millton. Both of 'em."

"How long till another train?"

"Well, sir," said the ticket man, "you're in luck, if you was goin' too. Seventeen was late this morning—she'll be along, jerk of a lamb's tail."

"Then," said Lulu, "you got to give me a ticket to Millton, without me paying till after—and you got to lend me two dollars."

"Sure thing," said Lenny, with a manner of laying the entire railway system at her feet.

"Seventeen" would rather not have stopped at Warbleton, but Lenny's signal was law on the time card, and the magnificent yellow express slowed down for Lulu. Hatless, and in her blue cotton gown, she climbed aboard.

Then her old inefficiency seized upon her. What was she going to do? Millton! She had been there but once, years ago—how could she ever find anybody? Why had she not stayed in Warbleton and asked the sheriff or somebody—no, not the sheriff. Cornish, perhaps. Oh, and Dwight and Ina were going to be angry now! And Di—little Di. As Lulu thought of her she began to cry. She said to herself that she had taught Di to sew.

In sight of Millton, Lulu was seized with trembling and physical nausea. She had never been alone in any unfamiliar town. She put her hands to her hair and for the first time realized her rolled-up sleeves. She was pulling down these sleeves when the conductor came through the train.

"Could you tell me," she said timidly, "the name of the principal hotel in Millton?"

Ninian had asked this as they neared Savannah, Georgia.

The conductor looked curiously at her.

"Why, the Hess house," he said. "Wasn't you expecting anybody to meet you?" he asked, kindly.

"No," said Lulu, "but I'm going to find my folks—" Her voice trailed away.

"Beats all," thought the conductor, using his utility formula for the universe.

In Millton Lulu's inquiry for the Hess house produced no consternation. Nobody paid any attention to her. She was almost taken to be a new servant there.

"You stop feeling so!" she said to herself angrily at the lobby entrance. "Ain't you been to that big hotel in Savannah, Georgia?"

The Hess house, Millton, had a tradition of its own to maintain, it seemed, and they sent her to the rear basement door. She obeyed meekly, but she lost a good deal of time before she found herself at the end of the office desk. It was still longer before anyone attended her.

"Please, sir!" she burst out. "See if Di Deacon has put her name on your book."

Her appeal was tremendous, compelling. The young clerk listened to her, showed her where to look in the register. When only strange names and strange writing presented themselves there, he said:

"Tried the parlor?"

And directed her kindly and with his thumb, and in the other hand a pen divorced from his ear for the express purpose.

In crossing the lobby in the hotel at Savannah, Georgia, Lulu's most pressing problem had been to know where to look. But now the idlers in the Hess house lobby did not exist. In time she found the door of the intensely rose-colored reception room. There, in a fat, rose-colored chair, beside a cataract of lace curtain, sat Di, alone.

Lulu entered. She had no idea what to say. When Di looked up, started up, frowned, Lulu felt as if she herself were the culprit. She said the first thing that occurred to her:

"I don't believe mamma'll like your taking her nice satchel."

"Well!" said Di, exactly as if she had been at home. And superadded: "My goodness!" And then cried rudely: "What are you here for?"

"For you," said Lulu. "You—you—you'd ought not to be here, Di."

"What's that to you?" Di cried.

"Why, Di, you're just a little girl—" Lulu saw that this was all wrong, and stopped miserably. How was she to go on? "Di," she said, "if you and Bobby want to get married, why not let us get you up a nice wedding at home?" And she saw that this sounded as if she were talking about a tea-party.

"Who said we wanted to be married?"

"Well, he's here."

"Who said he's here?"

"Isn't he?"

Di sprang up. "Aunt Lulu," she said, "you're a funny person to be telling me what to do."

Lulu said, flushing: "I love you just the same as if I was married happy, in a home."

"Well, you aren't!" cried Di cruelly, "and I'm going to do just as I think best."

Lulu thought this over, her look grave and sad. She tried to find something to say. "What do people say to people," she wondered, "when it's like this?"

"Getting married is for your whole life," was all that came to her.

"Yours wasn't," Di flashed at her.

Lulu's color deepened, but there seemed to be no resentment in her. She must deal with this right—that was what her manner seemed to say. And how should she deal?

"Di," she cried, "come back with me—and wait till mamma and papa get home."

"That's likely. They say I'm not to be married till I'm twenty-one."

"Well, but how young that is!"

"It is to you."

"Di! This is wrong—it is wrong."

"There's nothing wrong about getting married—if you stay married."

"Well, then it can't be wrong to let them know."

"It isn't. But they'd treat me wrong. They'd make me stay at home. And I won't stay at home—I won't stay there. They act as if I was ten years old."

Abruptly in Lulu's face there came a light of understanding.

"Why, Di," she said, "do you feel that way, too?"

Di missed this. She went on:

"I'm grown up. I feel just as grown up as they do. And I'm not allowed to do a thing I feel. I want to be away—I will be away!"

"I know about that part," Lulu said.

She now looked at Di with attention. Was it possible that Di was suffering in the air of that home as she herself suffered? She had not thought of that. There Di had seemed so young, so dependent, so—asquirm. Here, by herself, waiting for Bobby, in the Hess house at Millton, she was curiously adult. Would she be adult if she were let alone?

"You don't know what it's like," Di cried, "to be hushed up an laughed at and paid no attention to everything you say."

"Don't I?" said Lulu. 'Don't I?'

She was breathing quickly and looking at Di. If this was why Di was leaving home. . . .

"But, Di," she cried, "do you love Bobby Larkin?"

By this Di was embarrassed. "I've got to marry somebody," she said, "and it might as well be him."

"But is it him?"

"Yes, it is," said Di. "But," she added, "I know I could love almost anybody real nice that was nice to me." And this she said, not in her own right, but either she had picked it up somewhere and adopted it, or else the terrible modernity and honesty of her day somehow spoke through her, for its own. But to Lulu it was as if something familiar turned its face to be recognized.

"Di!" she cried.

"It's true. You ought to know that." She waited for a moment. "You did it," she added. "Mamma said so."

At this onslaught Lulu was stupefied. For she began to perceive its truth.

"I know what I want to do, I guess," Di muttered, as if to try to cover what she had said.

Up to that moment, Lulu had been feeling intensely that she understood Di, but that Di did not know this. Now Lulu felt that she and Di actually shared some unsuspected sisterhood. It was not only that they were both badgered by Dwight. It was more than that. They were two women. And she must make Di know that she understood her.

"Di," Lulu said, breathing hard, "what you just said is true, I guess. Don't you think I don't know. And now I'm going to tell you—"

She might have poured it all out, claimed her kinship with Di by virtue of that which had happened in Savannah, Georgia. But Di said:

"Here come some ladies. And goodness, look at the way you look!"

Lulu glanced down. "I know," she said, "but I guess you'll have to put up with me."

The two women entered, looked about with the complaisance of those who examine a hotel property, find criticism incumbent, and have no errand. These two women had outdressed their occasion. In their presence Di kept silence, turned away her head, gave them to know that she had nothing to do with this blue cotton person beside her. When they had gone on, "What do you mean by my having to put up with you?" Di asked sharply.

"I mean I'm going to stay with you."

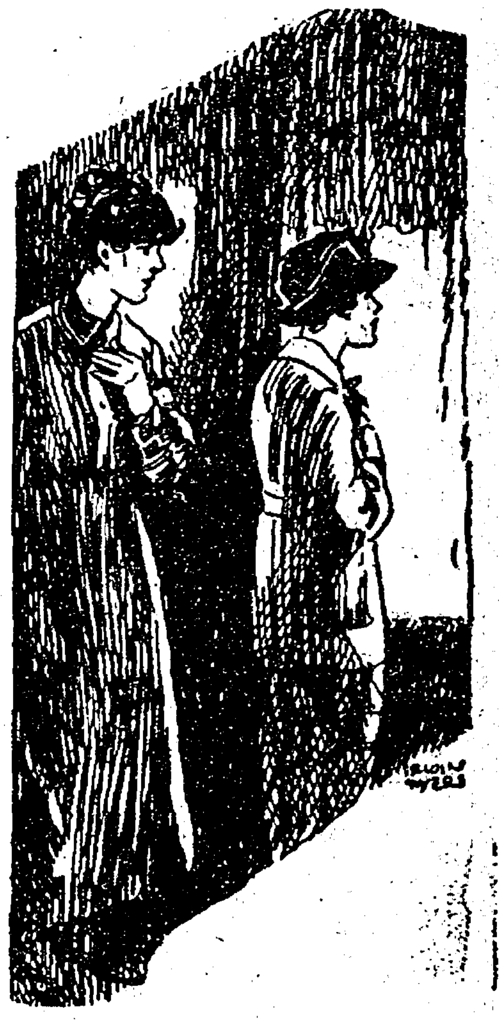
Di laughed scornfully—she was again the rebellious child. "I guess Bobby'll have something to say about that," she said insolently.

"They left you in my charge."

"But I'm not a baby—the idea, Aunt Lulu!"

"I'm going to stay right with you," said Lulu. She wondered what she should do if Di suddenly marched away from her, through that bright lobby and into the street. She thought miserably that she must follow. And then her whole concern for the ethics of Di's course was lost in her agonized memory of her terrible, broken shoes.

Di did not march away. She turned her back squarely upon Lulu, and looked out of the window. For her life Lulu could think of nothing more to say. She was now feeling miserably on the defensive.



She Turned Her Back Squarely Upon Lulu and Looked Out of the Window.

They were sitting in silence when Bobby Larkin came into the room.

Di flew to meet him. She assumed all the pretty agitations of her role, ignored Lulu.

"Bobby! Is it all right?"

Bobby looked over her head.

"Miss Lulu," he said fatuously. "If it ain't Miss Lulu."

He looked from her to Di, and did not take in Di's resigned shrug.

"Bobby," said Di, "she's come to stop us getting married, but she can't. I've told her so."

"She don't have to stop us," quoth Bobby gloomily, "we're stopped."

"What do you mean?" Di laid one hand flatly along her cheek, instinctive in her melodrama.

Bobby drew down his brows, set his hand on his leg, elbows out.

"We're minors," said he.

"Well, gracious, you didn't have to tell them that."

"No. They knew I was."

"But, Silly! Why didn't you tell them you're not?"

"But I am."

Di stared. "For pity sakes," she said, "don't you know how to do anything?"

"What would you have me do?" he inquired indignantly, with his head held very stiff, and with a boyish, admirable lift of chin.

"Why tell them we're both twenty-one. We look it. We know we're responsible—that's all they care for. Well, you are a funny . . ."

"You wanted me to lie?" he said.

"Oh, don't make out you never told a fib."

"Well, but this—" he stared at her.

"I never heard of such a thing," Di cried accusingly.

"Anyhow," he said, "there's nothing to do now. The cat's out. I've told our ages. We've got to have our folks in on it."

"Is that all you can think of?" she demanded.

"What else?"

"Why, come on to Bainbridge or Holt, and tell them we're of age, and be married there."

"Di," said Bobby, "why, that'd be a rotten go."

Di said, oh, very well, if he didn't want to marry her. He replied stonily that of course he wanted to marry her. Di stuck out her little hand. She was at a disadvantage. She could use no arts, with Lulu sitting there, looking on. "Well, then, come on to Bainbridge," Di cried, and rose.

IT BRINGS THE CROWD

R. H. Reed, of the Wadsworth & Reed Dept. Store says: "I find it pays to let yor customers know what you have in stock. I believe in advertising. We never run a big advertisement but what we notice an increase in the lines advertised. This week we wish to make our fall announcement. Make our advertisement prominent, don't be stingy with the space, as the more people that notice and read our ads, the bigger business we get." We like to hear our advertisers talk this way. We think no one will be able to overlook the big ad. we set for this store in this issue." —Lake Mills Graphic.

And sure enough, we looked for the ad. and found it to be a 72 inch ad, on the back page of the Graphic, and Reed & Wadsworth are not to quote prices when they advertise as nearly every article in the ad was followed by the price. The Pleasant Township Farm Bureau will hold its next meeting on next Monday evening, October 2nd., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kaufman, on the Hal Luick farm just southeast of town. The usual good program will be provided, and refreshments served. Those attending will have the pleasure of hearing a fine address from the speaker of the evening, E. G. Kill, representing the Iowa Credit Corporation, who will have much of interest to those who are connected with agriculture. Every one is invited.

COURT HOUSE NOTES

Monitor: The foreclosure of a $2,700 mortgage is asked by Alma LeBarron against W. A. and Martha Montgomery of Dows.

D. H. Atwood of Eagle Grove vs. R. .S Woodward is a suit to collect on a $430 note.

Martin & Son ask judgment for $249 against Parker Smith and wife of Eagle Grove on a grocery account.

Mina B. Mills of Eagle Grove seeks a divorce from her husband Joseph W. Mills, whom she alleges deserted her July 30, 1917.

Ed. Tighe alleges he has worked for F. C. Johlman of Eagle Grove since July, 1914, and during all that time has received but $500; that his record of payments was destroyed by defendant; that defendant agreed to furnish him board and room and pay him a reasonable wage; that his services were reasonably worth $40 per month; that after deducting the $500 which has been paid there is yet due $3,140, for which he asks judgment.

Because of their failure to pay principal installment and interest on a note for $11,500, Wm. Troendle asks judgment against the makers thereof, Fred and Clara Madson, Marquis and Minnie Madson, all of Goldfield.

A dental bill for $82 is the basis of a suit filed by A. F. Schultz of Webster City vs. Mr. and Mrs. F. E. King.

Audotor Walker reports a total of 223 hunters' licenses issued so far this season. These licenses were taken out by persons residents of this locality for the most part and do not include those of other towns in the county, which are handled thru the home banks.

Geo. W. Potts of Belmond is made defendant in a suit brought by the Continental Credit Trust of Chicago for the sum of $168.53. Potts is alleged to have signed an advertising order in favor of the Doty Publishing Co., who transferred the same to the above trust company. When the order was presented for payment at the Belmond Savings Bank same was protested.--Monitor.

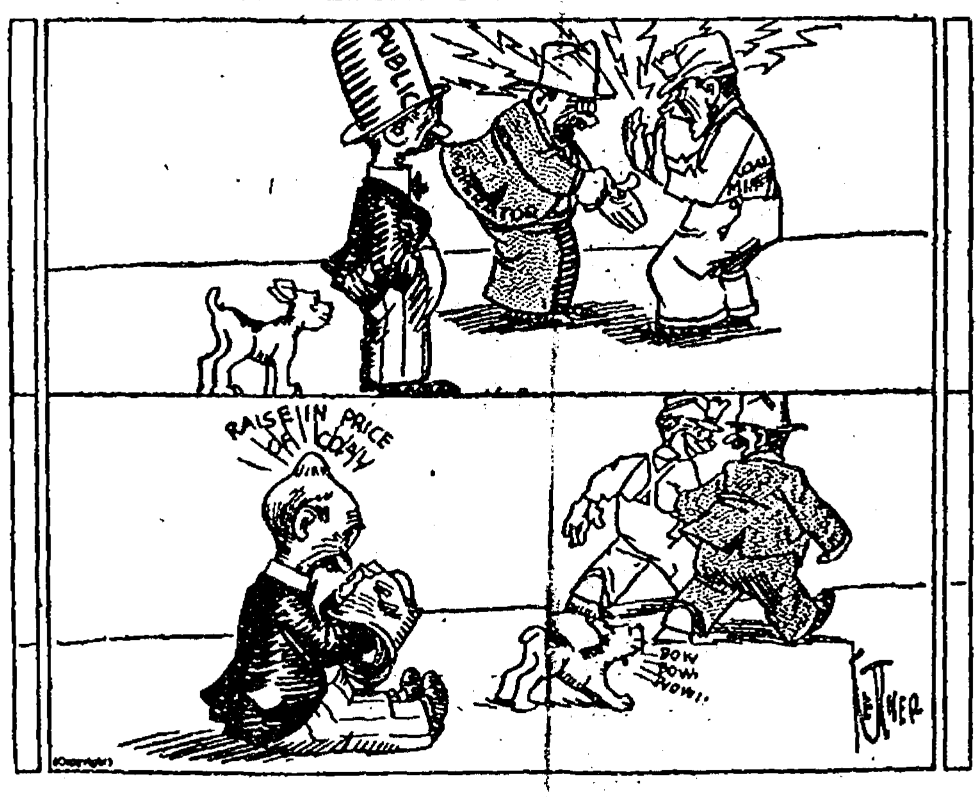
U. B. Church Notes

The promotion day of the Sunday school was observed last Sunday with appropriate exercises. The morning preaching hour used for the service at which time each department of the Sunday school took part in various ways. The attendance was large. The average attendance for the past year has been higher than the preceeding year. The teachers have done faithful work, and are now organized for the work, and are now on. We wish that every child that is not attending Sunday school elsewhere would meet with us next Sunday as that is Rally Day. Also we have a place for every adult where he can be interested in Bible study. Let every adult come next Sunday.

The pastor is beginning his fourth year and wishes to make this year better than the last. Sunday school at 9:45. Preaching at 11:00 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Prayer meeting at 7:30 Thursday evening.

Eugene Kinney has been at Spirit Lake trying his luck fishing. He returned this week, bringing some fine specimens of the finy tribe with him. During his absence Mrs. Kinney was visiting at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Nagle, at Clarion.

The Innocent Bystander



DOWS BOOTLEGGERS GET HIT HARD

Selling Hooch Costs One $1,000 And Partner $200—Capture Much New Booze.

Nick Good and Guy Moore, who reside in and near Dows, were taken into custody last week by federal officers, who had been on their trail for the past three weeks. The officers passed themselves off as land agents and succeeded in buying some of the bootleggers' stock, which resulted in the raid. A whole truck load of booze and two big stills were captured at the farm occupied by Moore, says the Clarion Monitor. It is estimated that there were fully 50 gallons of booze and about five barrels of mash. With the evidence at hand there was only one thing to do and that was to plead guilty and take their medicine. Judge Thompson fined Moore $500 on one count and $200 on the other, which with the costs totalled almost $1,000. Good drew a fine of $300 and costs.

It is generally believed these fellows have been selling booze in and around Dows for the past several years and it goes without saying that from the size of the two stills captured they have cleaned up a small fortune in their unlawful operations. Under all the circumstances a small fine is no punishment for such fellows. A year or two in jail would soon put a crimp in such business.

NOTICE OF CLAIM FOR STORAGE CHARGES AND NOTICE OF SALE

To Fred Francis:

You are hereby notified that the undersigned Belmond Furniture Company of Belmond, Iowa, have filed an affidavit with W. H. Purdy, a Justice of the Peace in and for Pleasant Township, Wright County, Iowa, alleging that on or about the 1st day of March, 1921, you left with said Belmond Furniture Company of Belmond, Iowa, for storage and care a piano, described more particularly as follows:

A cabinet upright Walworth Piano, golden oak finish.

That said piano has remained with said Belmond Furniture Company at Belmond, Iowa, unclaimed for more than 3 months, and that there are now charges against said piano for 18 1-2 months' storage at $3.00 per month or the sum of $55.50, and that said storage charges are due and unpaid.

You are therefore notified that unless you claim said property on or before the 21st day of October 1922 and pay the storage charges against said piano together with the costs and expenses of said sale, said piano will be sold at public auction upon said date the 21st day of October 1922, at two o'clock p. m. of said day, for the highest price the same will bring, and said storage charges together with costs and expenses of the sale will be first paid from the proceeds derived from said sale.

Dated at Belmond, Iowa, this 27th day of September 1922.

CITY MAKES RAID ON AUTO VIOLATORS

Marshal Harberts Invites 'Em In And "Rufe" Tells 'Em The Visit Is Two Dollars.

Marshal Herb Harberts under orders from Mayor R. C. Morse, made a raid on the drivers of autos in town and country who have been violating the various traffic laws of the city last week, and a number were surprised to find a tag on their steering wheel advising them that they were invited to appear before His Honor on Friday and enjoy the festivities of the occasion. It's a good thing, and while some were "pulled" on what they might term technicalities, the fact that the governing forces are on the job and up and doing may have a tendency to make the drivers who have been doing as they pretty well pleased watch their step somewhat closer. It cost us two bucks, but we aren't kicking. Go to it, Rufe, we're with you. If the law is there, make them obey it.

LOSES SIGHT OF EYE

Kanawha Reporter: Mrs. M. A. Barrett, a daughter of Mrs. Rose, who came here from California last spring to spend the summer, suffered the loss of the sight of her right eye last week, the accident occuring while she was in the act of breaking wood with which to kindle the fire for the evening meal. In striking a piece of wood, one end flew up and struck her squarely in the eye. She was brought to town for medical attention and the same evening was taken to an eye specialist at Fort Dodge. The eye ball was saved.

NOTICE!

All subscribers to the Independent who have recently received statement on their subscription, will have the paper stopped Oct. 1. if not paid up by that date.

The town of Klemme has been undergoing a siege of dyptheria the past couple of weeks. School was closed for a week to prevent the spread of the disease, but the reports of the epidemic have been greatly exaggerated, the disease only appearing in light form and the closing of the school being merely a precautionary measure.

The Community club will meet on Friday afternoon in the school auditorium. Miss Martha Foster from Ames will be present to give a talk and demonstration on clothing for school children.

HOG SALE

Public sale of Big Type Chester White and Poland China Hogs, on Thursday, October 5th. 60 head of Boar gilts and sows. Write for catalogue. R. C. Ludeke, Klemme, Ia.

We understand that H. C. Thompson of Fort Dodge, who is moving back to Belmond, has purchased the lot between Will Kent's and Willard Morses' and expects to build a home there.

CORNELIA REVIVAL

Rev. Lewis of Clarion began a meeting at Cornelia, Monday evening and will continue it indefinitely. Rev. Lewis has been a very successful evangelist and no doubt he will be a great help and blessing to this community. The services will begin at 7:45 each evening. We understand that a church is to be organized at Cornelia.

MISS LIDDLE GOES TO IOWA COUNTY

Miss Kate Liddle left Friday evening for Chicago, where she spent the week end with relatives. Monday of this week she reported for duty as Red Cross nurse in Iowa county, with Williamsburg as headquarters. Miss Liddle has been in Wright county about two and a half years, coming here for the Red Cross and remaining when the county took over the work. Her work during that time is immeasurable and numerable boys and girls in the various schools of the county will thank her all their lives for what she has done for them. Likewise many adults are grateful for her services. It is to be hoped that the cause which has been so well started will not be abandoned. —Monitor.

REPORTED DOWS MINISTER ASKED TO RESIGN?

Clarion News: The News has it on excellent authority that Rev. Mr. Belsheim, of the Luthern church at Dows, is going to be asked to resign by his congregation there, and in the event he refuses, will be dismissed as pastor of the congregation. It is said the smouldering embers of the row which grew out of his alleged refusal to preach a funeral sermon for an American Legion man, last winter, has been fanned to flames by his actions of the past week, in which he is alleged to have threatened Editor Janssen of the Dows Advocate. Janssen was printing some bills for the American Legion doings at Dows and Rev. Mr. Belsheim called on him and ordered him not to print the bills according to the copy furnished him. Janssen, point blank, refused to make any changes.

RADIO BRINGS WORLD TO YOUR DOOR

Since the hot weather is over, and the interference from static is less, the radio receiving station of the Independent and the Belmond Storage Battery Co. has been catching some fine programs. Among the stations heard recently have been Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Atlanta, Ga., Louisville, Kentucky, the Twin Cities, and many others closer by. Some very fine musical programs are being received, and complete returns of the markets from Omaha and Fort Dodge, weather reports from Ames, and base ball scores in the major leagues from St. Louis and Fort Dodge. During the Worlds Series it is planned to get the games by innings, and the complete score at 6:30 p. m. Come in some noon or evening and "listen in."

BOX SUPPER AND SOCIAL AT AUDITORIUM FRIDAY

A real old time box supper and social is to be held this week Friday evening at the school auditorium, in the gymnasium, starting at eight o'clock. The boxes will be sold to the highest bidder, and the proceeds of the affair are to go toward financing the foot ball team. A good program is to be given in addition to the supper. A royal good time is assured to all who attend. Plan to be there that evening and have a good time at the same time you help the foot ball team.

SHOWER

The ladies of the Rebekah lodge gave a shower in honor of Mrs. R. A. Rankins, on Friday evening. Many useful present were presented the recent bride, and a social evening was enjoyed. Refreshments were served.

The M. E. Ladies Aid society will serve a chicken dinner on Thursday evening, September 28th, in the church basement, beginning at 5:30 and continuing until all are served.

For Benefit Of Foot Ball Team

Come Out And Have A Good Time And Help The Boys On The Team.

OTHER SCHOOL NEWS ITEMS

The first Business meeting of the Literary Society was held Sept. 15, The High School songs and yells were practiced. Miss Mary Brown was elected critic teacher. Miss Barrow and Miss Sharon were appointed faculty supervisors of the two Literary divisions. The two divisions met and elected their program committees. Division 1 elected Grace Quigley, Chairman; Bill Butts and Gladys Johnston as other members of committee. Division 2 elected Cecil Riley, chairman; Valda Robinson and Harvey Chapman as the other members. Miss Thomas is general supervisor of both Literary Divisions.

Football practice is held every night. Mr. Pals is coaching the team. The whole High School is looking forward with much enthusiasm to the game scheduled for October 6.

A box social is to be held in the gym Friday night for the purpose of raising money to equip the Football team. We urge all those who are interested in having Belmond have a Football team to come out and make this social a success.

Lois Reed of the Senior Normal Training Class substituted in the fifth grade last Friday.

THE NEXT WAR

If sobeit that America should ever be drawn into another war—and may God forbid it—then radical changes should be made in the way it is to be carried on. In the late war, the finest manhood of the nation was drafted to fight, while the man who wasn't as physically fit as his brother stayed at home, went to work in the munition plant or the factory turning out war material, and drew a fat daily wage. In the next war, if the best are to be drafted to face bullets and bayonets at a dollar a day and board, then by the same right and token the man who stays at home should be drafted to work in the factories at a dollar a day and his board.

If it is fair to take a man from his home to fight it is equally fair to draft him to work in the factory; both are for the government. Had America run its factories and munition plants and shipyards with drafted men at the same wage the man drew who faced the enemy, then we would have had money to pay the bonus now. But we paid the man who made bullets ten dollars a day, and the man who faced them a dollar. It should have been the other way about to have been fair.

HARDING AND THE BONUS

President Hardings veto of the soldier bonus bill has been the chief subject of conversation the country over the past week, and by the time the bill is settled in the minds of the people we believe Harding will come out of the small end of the horn.

The President's veto, on the technicality of no provision having been made for supplying the funds wherewith to pay the bonus, was, the Independent believes, justified; certainly if the bonus is to be paid there must be some money to pay it with, and the makers of the bill pulled a "boner" when they failed to include such a provision in the bill. But the President, had the bill contained such a provision, would have had a mighty difficult task. With no such provision he had things easy.

There is no need of arguing whether a bonus is justified or not; we are too prone to forget how we cheered the boys on in 1918, with promises of anything and everything; we are too apt to forget that the government paid out hundreds of millions to fulfill war contracts after the war was over; we do not think that the waste in running the country one year will take care of the bous; these things bring no argument, they are "necessary." At the same time that the President vetoed the bonus bill there was the rivers and harbors appropriation bill—75 per cent simon pure graft and waste—which, of course, it was "necessary" to pass and to have signed. How many thousands of absolutely useless employees are on the government payroll in one way or another? If we can run our government in this fashion, with hundreds of millions worse than wasted, then let us forget this plea that we can't afford the bonus. If we can waste one way we can just as well "waste" another.

Harding was justified in vetoing the bill under the technicality that he did, but he was not justified in not sending the bill back wth instructions to finance it. For the bonus is going to come—it should come—and the President has lost the sympathy and support of a vast number of American people. Along with his handling of the strikes, the veto of the bonus bill has killed Harding's chances of another term as dead as Bryan's chances of ever filling his shoes—and that is some dead.

CLIPPINGS

A Cadillac coupe, belonging to Dr. H. E. Meyer of this city, was stolen in broad daylight from in front of Hotel Hanford at Mason City Friday evening. Dr. Meyer, accompanied by his friend Dr. Cory Hand of Hartley, was on his way home from a motoring trip to northern Minnesota. After parking the car and locking the doors the two doctors went into the hotel for dinner and during the time that they were engaged in eating, some one evidently skilled in the art of auto stealing, took possession of the machine and quietly drove away. The car was a 1920 model, in excellent condition and valued at approximately $2,500. Dr. Meyer carried insurance on the machine to the amount of $1,200.—Hampton Recorder.

The game wardens either have had orders or have decided to help swell their fees, for they declare that any hunter found near a lake or other water before sunup, with a gun, will be arrested and prosecuted for hunting before sunup. They won't take your word that you're out there waiting for the sun to come up before you go gunning for game. It is also an offense to kill a mudhen without picking it up. There are so many twists to the law now that a hunter should consult an attorney or take one along when he goes out for a little sport.—Clarion News.

Clarence Clark Champion

Clarence Clark of Lake township has the distinction of being the best livestock judge in the nine northwest states which were entered at the Interstate livestock judging contest at Sioux City last week. Clarence showed his superior judging ability in competiton with the state champion livestock judges from Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. The Wright county boys won second place in the team judging contest while the first honors went to North Dakota.

The boys and girls livestock judging contest was held at the livestock judging pavilion at the Interstate fair grounds and was under the direction of Prof. E. G. Billing of the North Dakota agricultural college. The men who made the placings and heard reasons on the various classes of livestock were Prof. H. H. Kildee of Iowa State college, hogs; Dr. Thompson of North Dakota, beef cattle and sheep; Prof. Graemisch of Nebraska agricultural college, horses; and Mr. Gillette from Spencer, Iowa, former professor of dairy husbandry at Ames on dairy cattle. The judging contest continued thruout the week and the contestants were given some very good classes of livestock to work upon. The Interstate fair association made a special effort to furnish good livestock and arranged the judging contest in such a way that it wouuld be interesting as well as instructive to the contestants. An interesting feature of the judging contest was a girl judge on the team from Minnesota which state took third in the contest.

The Wright county boys will make the trip to the International Livestock show in Chicago in December, where they will compete in the international contest between the various states of our union and teams from Canada, Mexico and other countries. The state fair and the Sioux City fair furnished some excellent experience for the boys and with what training they will get between now and December they will be in first class training for the Interational livestock judging contest at Chicago. Clarence Clark, the Iowa man on the state champion team started to Ames this week where he enrolled as a regular student in the animal husbandry department of the college course.

Clover Demonstration Postponed

The clover demontration by Prof. B. E. Heitzman which was scheduled and advertised for Wright county for Friday, September 29th, has been postponed on account of changes which have been made in the schedule at the agricultural extension department office at Ames. Word was received by the county agent that this demonstration would have to be postponed for the time being.

Since it has been necessary to postpone this clover demonstration arrangements have been made to conduct the clover demonstration on the same day and in connection with the farm tour which is scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday, October 11 and 12.

Clothing Specialist in County

Miss Martha E. Foster, clothing specialist, from Ames, is in Wright county this week demonstrating renovation of clothing and hats. Miss Foster is demonstrating to the ladies simple and practical methods of cleaning and remodeling of old clothing and hats. The work as presented by Miss Foster seems very practical and great interest is being taken in the work by the ladies who have opportunity to attend. Various pieces of clothing and several old hats are brought to these meetings and the ladies have actual experience in the cleaning operation.

To Have Home Demonstration Agent

Arrangements have been made with the agricultural extension department at Ames for sending a home demonstration agent into this county or work during the entire month of November. Miss Bertha Huber, who has for several years experience as a home demonstration agent, will give full time to the Wright county ladies during November in dealing with problems of the farm home. Wright county at one time had one of the best demonstration agents in Iowa and it will be interesting to the ladies of this county to know that they are to have a demonsration agent for a full month this fall to look after the ladies' problems of the home. The schedule for Miss Huber's work in the county will be worked out later by a committee appointed for that purpose.

Farm Bureau and Others

Many critics of the farm bureau accuse it of being friendly with other industries such as banks, merchants, railroads and other commercial organizations. If these critics refer to a readiness and willingness to confer, and if possible to co-operate, with other legitimate and necessary industries the farm bureau pleads guilty and is not ashamed of it.

We must recognize the fact that farming is not the only industry essential to the well being of our country. We should cultivate the acquaintance of people in other lines of work. We will find almost invariably that they are made of the same kind of clay as we and that in reality they are better than we had thought. As a rule they have the same ambitions the same ideals and usually about the same degree of honesty.

Let us get the habit of talking to each other more and about each other less.

What Shall We Do In 1923?

Wide awake farmers already have in mind the things which they feel will be most profitable for 1923, and are laying their plans as to how they can most effectively carry out their work. This is true of other lines of business as well as farming and most successful business men not being content with past achievements are studying carefully how they can improve their business during the coming year.

The farmers also have another program to work out in addition to the tilling of their soil. We refer to the farm bureau work for 1923. This is the farmer's problem because it is the farmer's organization and the plans and policies carried out by the farm bureau and the projects taken up by the county agent duing the coming year will be those which the farmers themselves feel the need of.

Many of our readers who have not been in the habit of attending farm bureau meetings, particularly the annual meetings at which the program of work is laid out may not realize that it is necessary, if the county agent is to serve the county most effectively to have arrangements made for his work a year in advance. But it is for this reason that we are asking our members to be thinking of the different projects that could most successfully be used in your township next year.

The extension service is in position to give help on approximately one hundred projects during the coming year. They include every phase of agricultural enterprises and effect not only the regular farming operations, but the homes as well.

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign nation of many sovereign states; a perfect Union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of Freedom, Equality, Justice and Humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I, therefore, believe it is my duty to my country to love it; to support its constitution, to obey its laws; to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

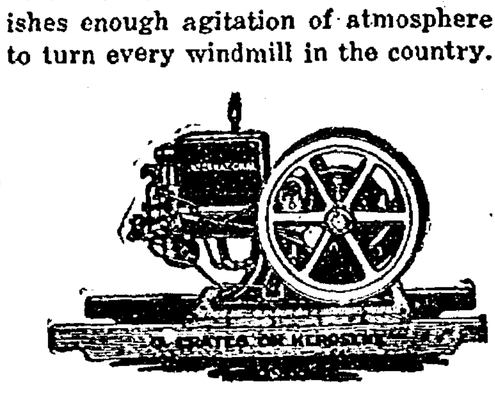
Blowing Some!

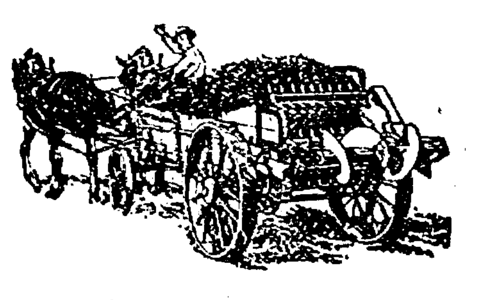
Senator Capper says that whenever there's a debate in the Senate it furnishes enough agitation of atmosphere to turn every windmill in the country.



But, when Senate adjourns, what are you going to do for fresh water? Get an International Kerosene Engine, of course. It's as faithful and willing a helper as you can find in a lifetime of searching. The powerful 1 1-2 H. P. International will do almost anything that no one else wants to do, and for only 3 cents an hour—no overtime pay. Larger sizes too, if you need more power. Come and see them.

Keep The Boys At Home

The International manure spreader takes drudgery out of a disagreeable job, and it does its full share in keeping boys on the farm. It saves labor, saves time of a man and team and makes the manure go farther. It increases yields and makes more money for you. You can't afford to be without a machine that will do all these things. So why not come in and talk it over while the price is lower than it ever will be again?



A Milkhouse Queen

A "handsome blue machine" set up in the center of your milkhouse is a "crown of glory" considering the many things it will do for you. It is the sentinel-queen carefully guarding the milk and cream so that each is separated to the last drop. Otherwise known as the Primrose Cream Separator, this "handsome blue machine" will save enough cream to make three cows worth as much as four. It will give you an income all the year around and supply sweet, warm skimmilk for the calves, pigs and chickens. Truly, the Primrose is a queen.

EDUCATION AND MONEY

What is Education?

Ask a hundred people and you will get a hundred different answers.

But they will all express this thought:

Education is a process of training whereby the powers of an individual are made to function in their highest form of usefulness.

In simpler language this means that education broadens, strengthens, widens—that it enables a person to use in the best way possible whatever power, mental, physical and moral, nature may have given him.

Most young people go to school with no definite idea of what going to school means. They know that to be graduated they must spend so many months, or years in study. They know that they will then receive a certificate or a diploma stating that they have finished their course, but most of them do not know what it means.

Now here are some of the things that the right kind of an education will do for a young person.

First of all it will enable him to evaluate himself—to determine what he is worth in the world and where his powers may be exercised to the best advantage.

Secondly, it qualifies him to take responsibility—to act upon his own initiative—to know what to do and when and how to do it.

In the fourth place, it qualifies him to render a better type of service to humanity than would be possible without an education. It is estimated that about 1per cent of the people of this country have been trained in college, yet almost 85 per cent of the prominent men and women of America are drawn from this 1 per cent. There are many occupations to which entrance is absolutely impossible to the uneducated; as, for instance, the professions, such as engineering, law, medicine, the ministry, teaching, journalism, etc., and and what is true of these professions is, in a large measure,true of certain phases of business.

In the fifth place, an education should prepare a young person to make a living—to make more than a living, for a person who earns only enough to support himself fails to do his share in supporting society.

Some interesting statistics have been compilled to show the money value of a education. For instance, a study of 10,000 men holding jobs in the city of Brooklyn requiring no special education were found to earn an average yearly wage of $657.00 while 1,579 holding places requiring some education beyond the common school, were found to be earning average salaries of $1,597.00.

This difference of $940.00 for a period of forty years, which is the average earning period of the ordinary man, shows an education to be worth $37,600.00. In New York City, statistics were compiled to show that the boy or girl who has been educated beyond the common schools was receiving an amount in excess of that earned by an uneducated boy or girl, that would be represented by the investment of $19,000.00 at 5½ per cent.

Other estimates made in various communities show the value of a day in school to range from $24.00 to $30.00 and from these figures there is but little variation.

Many other interesting facts have been brought out by careful, unbiased surveys. For instance in a certain county it was found that the earnings of the educated farmers was $300.00 a year more than those of the uneducated ones.

In another instance it was found that the wages of uneducated men gradually rose to $510.00 a year and became stationary, while in the same community the average wages, of technically trained men reached $2,150.00.

So an education has a money value—a definite cash-in-hand value that can be enjoyed every day in the year.

It is sometimes argued that the young person who wants to follow business as a profession requires no special education—such a conclusion is utterly foolish. To start with, every man is in business at least to some extent and in order to make the most of his time, his talent and his effort he needs to understand the fundamentals of business.

In the second place, experience, figures, and observation prove beyond question that the educated man in business is a leader, just as the educated man in any other walk of life.

The educated man in business rises rapidly. He is not tossed about at the mercy of circumstances, for he has the power to shape his own course. He is broader, than any position that he may occupy; he is always ready to take an upward step.

The big men in business are all educated. Perhaps not all of them have gone to college, for it is not always necessary to go to college to get an education, but they are trained for their jobs—and that's what education is—trainin for a worth-while job.

Of course there are many uneducated men in business—and generally they are selling soda pop or peanuts, or are holding little positions that require only experience.

Ask any real business man—any man who has succeeded and is a leader—whether a business education pays and you will always get an enthusiastic "yes!"

And by the way. one big factor in business success is that wonderful quality known as leadership. The successful business man is an executive, he knows how to think, to plan, to operate. He knows how to make other men work for him; he knows the laws of business—the laws of cause and effect in merchandising, in banking, in manufacturing. He understands the basic things of political economy, of business organization, and of management.

The business man of today must constantly meet keen and exceedingly intelligent competition, for there more trained minds in business than ever before in the world's history.

Now these are facts, hard, indisputable facts.

Every mature person knows these are facts.

But boys and girls do not understand—they cannot be expected to understand because only experience gives us real understanding.

But if everybody were educated, who would do the hard, irksome tasks of life? Who would be the drudges and slaves that seem to be necessary to make up a world like this?

And besides what premium would be placed upon initiative, and hard work and sacrifices? But the fact we face is that there are too many drudges and slaves—and not enough educated men and women. Today the most pronounced call in all departments of our industrial and business life is for more boys and girls who can be made to appreciate, at the right time, the fact that going to school is the most important thing in the world—for them.

Young friend, you want to get thru life comfortably, honorably, and fairly easy. You can't do it without an education. Nobody ever has.

Stay in school. Learn everything you possibly can—you'll need it. Finish your high school course then go to college, university or technical school.

Write it upon your very soul—you must have an education if you are to amount to anything in the world. —Exchange.

THE STRIKE IS LOST

The suggestion of the Vindicator and Republican that the striking shop men go back to work was made in good faith and for what this paper considered was the best interests of those who desired to retain their jobs. It was made in the interest of the shopmen, as well as in the interests of the public and the railroad organizations. It was not taken in a kindly spirit by some of the more radical employees, but by most of them it was believed good advice, and now that the strike is practically lost it is known to a certainty that what this paper has said all along was correct. From the very start we have felt that the strike was too hasty, and could have been avoided if there had been a cool and considerate leader at the head of the shopcraft organization. Not only would there not have been a strike, but a settlement could have had made that would have been much more satisfactory to the union men than were the terms which they afterwards were willing to acept, after it was too late. The whole affair was very unfortunate, not only for the union men but for the entire country, and this paper is of the opinion that it was nothing less than criminal for a so-called labor general to lead an army of 400,000 working men out of employment into a wage battle without first being practically sure that there was no chance for a Waterloo. —Estherville Vindicator and Republican.

THE DUCK HUNTERS' STORY

Two local hunters, one a veteran and the other a tenderfoot, returned from Lake Thompson, S. D., where they had been in quest of ducks.

We cannot vouch for their statements, but will give them as they were given to us by the "tenderfoot."

Lake Thompson is 316 miles to the northwest and covers about 14,000 acres. The water is quite shallow, the deepest being about four feet, but the general average is two feet. Several thousand acres are covered with very light rushes and the balance with medium to heavy rushes and canebreak, some being eight feet high. It was almost impossible to find the game in these heavy rushes after they were killed, so a path was made and the dead ducks were supposed to drop into this path and the shots were made with this in mind.

The lake is so large and all shore objects look alike after dark, so warning was given to be near the shore at dusk as many a hunter has been lost, and was compelled to spend the night in his boat.

We were unable to get a definite statement of game brought down. The tenderfoot claims to have shot the first two mallards, and stated that his gun became so hot that it had to be dipped in the lake to keep it cool.

The veteran, being a heavy eater, did his best shooting right after a big meal. One morning he shot ten ducks straight, without a miss. The next morning the 14th shot was the first to miss the mark. The ducks were very plentiful and had there been more it would not have been sport, altho some of the sport was taken out of the trip when two have 40 ducks to pick and clean after 7 p. m., cook the meals, wash the dishes, besides other kitchen duties which the good wife usually performs. (Take a tip: take her along the next time.)

The people of the newer countries are much more obliging than they are in the older settled districts. Much plowing remains to be done as they have not had a rain since July 5th. The corn crop is a failure, but potatoes are fair and retail for 60 cents at the stores.

They were also effected with the land boom, but in addition many went in for fancy Hereford cattle which are now selling low, compared with what they cost two years ago.

We had excellent roads with the exception of a short stretch of new grading and new gravel, the poorest were from Ventura home.

The corn crop was frozen in places and thin in others, and will not average up as well as ours here at home.

We had a good time and do not regret our trip, but have never slept in a bed that seemed as good as the one at home. And then, too, the coffee tasted very good at the breakfast next morning; possibly the Dakota water will not make good coffee.

TEST ASSOCIATIONS PROGRESS

Since the organization of the first cow testing assocation in Iowa in 1909 considerable improvement in the herds of the state has been made. According to the extension service at Iowa State College the testing of cows has increased the production of many herds until it is double that of the ordinary herds of the state.

While the production has thus been increased, the cost of production has been lowered and a greater return has been given to the owner of the herd.

Members of the cow testing associations have been given instruction as to the better methods of feeding, selecting cows and of grading up their herds so that the state has a much higher class of dairy cattle than before.

Cow testing associations have been maintained at a cost so low as to be less than the loss incurred in a previous year due to one poor cow kept in the herds.

LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE

Spencer News-Herald: All this talk about whether prohibition is a success or a failure goes wide of the mark, largely. Prohibition might be the most dismal failure on earth, veiwed under the present conditions, but that it will be a grand and glorious success when our babies grow up there can be no doubt. It is true that the present generation, used to its booze and its beer, is going after the hooch and the moonshine, and bootleggers now drive better cars than bankers, but just the same it is a little harder to get all the time, and as the next generation comes on there won't be the temptation to learn the drink habit that there was when we were boys, and so prohibition will be a grand success in the long run, if it is not already. It is not the present generation we want to reform. It's the boys and girls of the future we are interested in.

Young men are admonished not to waste their money on good times, yet when they are old, those good times are their cherished memories.

MISS LULU BETT

Zona Gale

Lulu was thinking: "What shall I say? I don't know what to say. I don't know what I can say." Now she also rose, and laughed awkwardly. "I've told Di," she said to Bobby, "that wherever you two go, I'm going too. Di's folks left her in my care, you know. So you'll have to take me along, I guess." She spoke in a manner of distinct apology.

At this Bobby had no idea what to reply. He looked down miserably at the carpet. His whole manner was a mute testimony to his participation in the eternal query: How did I get into it?

"Bobby," said Di, "are you going to let her lead you home?"

This of course nettled him, but not in the manner on which Di had counted. He said loudly:

"I'm not going to Bainbridge or Holt or any town and lie, to get you or any other girl."

"Come on, Aunt Lulu," said Di grandly.

Bobby led the way through the lobby, Di followed, and Lulu brought up the rear. She walked awkwardly, eyes down, her hands stiffly held. Heads turned to look at her. They passed into the street.

"You two go ahead," said Lulu, "so they won't think—"

They did so, and she followed, and did not know where to look, and thought of her broken shoes.

At the station, Bobby put them on the train and stepped back. He had, he said, something to see to there in Millton. Di did not look at him. And Lulu's good-by spoke her genuine regret for all.

"Aunt Lulu," said Di, "you needn't think I'm going to sit with you. You look as if you were crazy. I'll sit back here."

"All right, Di," said Lulu humbly.

* * * * * * *

It was nearly six o'clock when they arrived at the Deacons'. Mrs. Bett stood on the porch, her hands rolled in her apron.

"Surprise for you!" she called brightly.

Before they had reached the door, Ina bounded from the hall.

"Darling!"

She seized upon Di, kissed her loudly, drew back from her, saw the traveling bag.

"My new bag!" she cried. "Di! What have you got that for?"

In any embarrassment Di's instinctive defense was hearty laughter. She now laughed heartily, kissed her mother again, and ran up the stairs.

Lulu slipped by her sister, and into the kitchen.

Dwight had come home. Lulu could hear Ina pouring out to him the mysterious circumstance of the bag, could hear the exaggerated air of the casual with which he always received the excitement of another, and especially of his Ina. Then she heard Ina's feet padding up the stairs, and after that Di's shrill, nervous laughter. Lulu felt a pang of pity for Di, as if she herself were about to face them.

There was not time both to prepare supper and to change the blue cotton dress. In that dress Lulu was pouring water when Dwight entered the dining room.

"Ah!" said he. "Our festive ball gown."

She gave him her hand, with her peculiar sweetness of expression—almost as if she were sorry for him or were bidding him good-by.

"That shows who you dress for!" he cried. "You dress for me. Ina, aren't you jealous? Lulu dresses for me!"

Ina had come in with Di, and both were excited, and Ina's head was moving stiffly, as in all her indignations. Mrs. Bett had thought better of it and had given her presence. Already Monona was singing.

But no one noticed Monona, and Ina did not defer even to Dwight. She, who measured delicate, troy occasions by avoirdupois, said brightly:

"No, Di. You must tell us all about it. Where had you and Aunt Lulu been with mamma's new bag?"

"Ina," said Lulu, "first can't we hear something about your visit? How is—"

Her eyes consulted Dwight. His features dropped, the lines of his face dropped, its muscles seemed to sag. A look of suffering was in his eyes.

"She'll never be any better," he said. "I know we've said good-by to her for the last time."

"Oh, Dwight!" said Lulu.

"She knew it, too," he said. "It—it put me out of business, I can tell you. She gave me my start—she took all the care of me—taught me to read—she's the only mother I ever knew—" He stopped, and opened his eyes wide on account of their dimness.

But eventually they were back again before that new black bag. And Di would say nothing. She laughed, squirmed, grew irritable, laughed again.

"Put an end to this, Lulu," he commanded. "Where were you two—since you make such a mystery?"

Di's look at Lulu was piteous, terrified. Di's fear of her father was now clear to Lulu. And Lulu feared him, too. Abruptly she heard herself temporizing, for the moment making common cause with Di.

"Oh," she said, "we have a little secret. Can't we have a secret if we want one?"

"Upon my word," Dwight commented, "she has a beautiful secret. I don't know about your secrets, Lulu."

Every time that he did this, that fleet, lifted look of Lulu's seemed to bleed.

"I'm glad for my dinner," remarked Monona at last. "Please excuse me." On that they all rose. Lulu stayed in the kitchen and did her best to make her tasks indefinitely last. She had nearly finished when Di burst in.

"Aunt Lulu, Aunt Lulu!" she cried. "Come in there—come. I can't stand it. What am I going to do?"

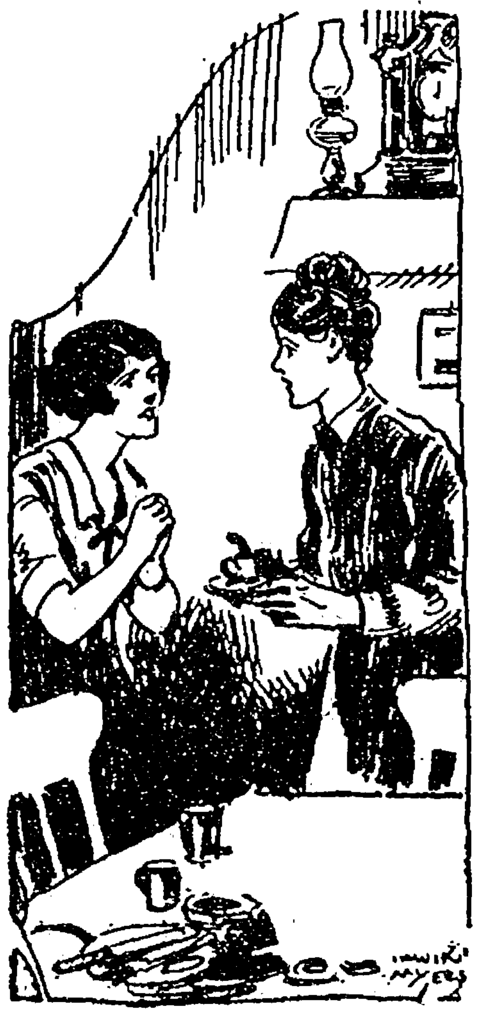
"Di, dear," said Lulu. "Tell your mother—you must tell her."

"She'll cry," Di sobbed. "Then she'll tell papa—and he'll never stop talking about it. I know him—every day he'll keep it going. After he scolds me it'll be a joke for months. I'll die—I'll die, Aunt Lulu."

Ina's voice sounded in the kitchen. "What are you two whispering about? I declare, mamma's hurt, Di, at the way you're acting . . ."

"Let's go out on the porch," said Lulu, and when Di would have escaped, Ina drew her with them.

It was a warm dusk, moonless, windless. The sounds of the village street came in—laughter, a touch at a piano, a chiming clock. Lights starred and quickened in the blurred houses. Footsteps echoed on the board walks. The gate opened. The gloom yielded up Cornish.



"Di, Dear," Said Lulu. "Tell Your Mother—You Must Tell Her."

Lulu was inordinately glad to see him. To have the strain of the time broken by him was like hearing, on a lonely winter wakening, the clock strike reassuring dawn.

Cornish, in his gentle way, asked about the journey, about the sick woman—and Dwight talked of her again, and this time his voice broke. Di was curiously silent. When Cornish addressed her, she replied simply and directly—the rarest of Di's manners—in fact, not Di's manner at all. Lulu spoke not at all—it was enough to have this respite.

After a little the gate opened again. It was Bobby. In the besetting fear that he was leaving Di to face something alone, Bobby had arrived.

And now Di's spirits rose. To her his presence meant repentance, recapitulation. Her laugh rang out, her replies came archly. But Bobby was plainly not playing up. Bobby was, in fact, hardly less than glum. It was Dwight, the irrepressible fellow, who kept the talk going.

"Mamma!" Monona shouted from her room. "Come and hear me say my prayers!"

Monona entered this request with precision on Ina's nastiest moments, but she always rose, unabashed, and went, motherly and dutiful, to hear devotions, as if that function and the process of living ran their two divided channels.

She had dispatched this errand and was returning when Mrs. Bett crossed the lawn from Grandma Gates', where the old lady had taken comfort in Mrs. Bett's ministrations for an hour.

"Don't you help me," Mrs. Bett warned them away sharply. "I guess I can help myself yet awhile."

She gained her chair. And still in her momentary rule of attention, she said clearly:

"I got a joke. Grandma Gates says it's all over town Di and Bobby Larkin eloped off together today. He!" The last was a single note of laughter, high and brief.

The silence fell.

"What nonsense!" Dwight Herbert said angrily.

But Ina said tensely: "Is it nonsense? Haven't I been trying and trying to find out where the black satchel went? Di!"

Di's laughter rose, but it sounded thin and false.

"Listen to that, Bobby," she said. "Listen!"

"That won't do, Di," said Ina. "You can't deceive mamma and don't you try!" Her voice trembled, she was frantic with loving and authentic anxiety, but she was without power, she overshadowed the real gravity of the moment by her indignation.

"Mrs. Deacon—" began Bobby, and stood up, very straight and manly before them all.

But Dwight intervened, Dwight, the father, the master of his house. Here was something requiring him to act. So the father set his face like a mask and brought down his hand on the rail of the porch. It was as if the sound shattered a thousand filaments—where?

"Diana!" his voice was terrible, demanded a response, ravened among them.

"Yes, papa," said Di, very small.

"Answer your mother. Answer me. Is there anything to this absurd tale?"

"No, papa," said Di, trembling.

"Nothing whatever?"

"Nothing whatever."

"Can you imagine how such a ridiculous report started?"

"No, papa."

"Very well. Now we know where we are. If anyone hears this report repeated, send them to me."

"Well, but that satchel—" said Ina, to whom an idea manifested less as a function than as a leech.

"One moment," said Dwight. "Lulu will of course verify what the child has said."

"If you cannot settle this with Di," said Lulu, "you cannot settle it with me."

"A shifty answer," said Dwight. "You have a genius at misrepresenting facts, you know, Lulu."

"Bobby wanted to say something," said Ina, still troubled.

"No, Mrs. Deacon," said Bobby, low. "I have nothing—more to say."

In a little while, when Bobby went away, Di walked with him to the gate. It was as if, the worst having happened to her, she dared everything now.

"Bobby," she said, "you hate a lie. But what else could I do?"

He could not see her, could see only the little moon of her face, blurring.

"And anyhow," said Di, "it wasn't a lie. We didn't elope, did we?"

"What do you think I came for tonight?" asked Bobby.

The day had aged him; he spoke like a man. His very voice came gruffly. But she saw nothing, softened to him, yielded, was ready to take his regret that they had not gone on.

"Well, I came for one thing," said Bobby, "to tell you that I couldn't stand for your wanting me to lie today. Why, Di—I hate a lie. And now tonight—" He spoke his code almost beautifully. "I'd rather," he said, "they had never let us see each other than to lose you the way I've lost you now."

"Bobby!"

"It's true. We mustn't talk about it."

"Bobby! I'll go back and tell them all."

"You can't go back," said Bobby. "Not out of a thing like that."

She stood staring after him. She heard some one coming and she turned toward the house, and met Cornish leaving.

"Miss Di," he cried, "if you're going to elope with anybody, remember it's with me!"

Her defense was ready—her laughter rang out so that the departing Bobby might hear.

When Di had gone upstairs, Ina said to Lulu in a manner of cajoling confidence:

"Sister,"—she rarely called her that—"why did you and Di have the black bag?"

So that after all it was a relief to Lulu to hear Dwight ask casually:

"By the way, Lulu, haven't I got some mail somewhere about?"

"There are two letters on the parlor table," Lulu answered. To Ina she added: "Let's go in the parlor."

Dwight lighted the gas. "Better turn down the gas jest a little," said he, tirelessly.

Lulu handed him the two letters. He saw Ninian's writing and looked up, said "A-ha!" and held it while he leisurely read the advertisement of dental furniture, his Ina reading over his shoulder. "A-ha!" he said again, and with designed deliberation turned to Ninian's letter. "An epistle from my dear brother Ninian." The words failed, as he saw the unsealed flap.

"You opened the letter?" he inquired incredulously. Fortunately he had no climaxes of furious calm for high occasions. All had been used on small occasions. "You opened the letter" came in a tone of no deeper horror than "You picked the flower"—once put to Lulu.

She said nothing. As it is impossible to continue looking indignantly at some one who is not looking at you, Dwight turned to Ina, who was horror and sympathy, a nice half and half.

"Your sister has been opening my mail," he said.

"But, Dwight, if it's from Ninian ——"

"It is my mail," he reminded her. "She had asked me if she might open it. Of course I told her no."

"Well," said Ina practically, "what does he say?"

"I shall open the letter in my own time. My present concern is this disregard of my wishes. Why did you do it?"

Lulu smiled faintly and shook her head.

"Dwight," said Ina, reasonably, "she knows what's in it and we don't. Hurry up."

"She is," said Dwight, after a pause, "an ungrateful woman."

He opened the letter, saw the clipping, the avowal, with its facts.

"A-ha!" said he. "So after having been absent with my brother for a month, you find that you were not married to him."

Lulu spoke her exceeding triumph. "You see, Dwight," she said, "he told the truth. He had another wife. He didn't just leave me."

Dwight instantly cried: "But this seems to me to make you considerably worse off than if he had."

"Oh, no," Lulu said serenely. "No. Why," she said, "you know how it all came about. He—he was used to thinking of his wife as dead. If he hadn't—hadn't liked me, he wouldn't have told me. You see that, don't you?"

Dwight laughed. "That your apology?" he asked.

She said nothing.

"Look here, Lulu," he went on, "this is a bad business. The less you say about it the better, for all our sakes—you see that, don't you?"

"I want the people to know the truth," Lulu said.

"But it's nobody's business but our business! I take it you don't intend to sue Ninian?"

"Sue him? Oh no!"

"Then, for all our sakes, let's drop the matter. Tell you, Lulu, here are three of us. Our interests are the same in this thing—only Ninian is our relative and he's nothing to you now. Is he?"

"Why, no," said Lulu in surprise.

"Very well. Let's have a vote. Your snap judgment is to tell this disgraceful fact broadcast. Mine is, least said, soonest mended. What do you say, Ina—considering Di and all?"

"My poor, poor sister!" Ina said. She struck together her little plump hands. "Oh, Dwight—when I think of it: What have I done—what have we done that I should have a good, kind, loving husband—be so protected, so loved, when other women. . . . Darling!" she sobbed, and drew near to Lulu. "You know how sorry I am—we all are. . . ."

Lulu stood up. Her white shawl slipped to the floor. Her hands were stiffly joined.

"Then," she said, "give me the only thing I've got—that's my pride. My pride—that he didn't want to get rid of me."

They stared at her. "What about my pride?" Dwight called to her, as across great distances. "Do you think I want everybody to know my brother did a thing like that?"

"You can't help that," said Lulu.

"But I want you to help it. I want you to promise me that you won't shame us like this before all our friends."

"You want me to promise what?"

"I want you—I ask you," Dwight said with an effort, "to promise me that you will keep this, with us—a family secret."

"No!" Lulu cried. "No. I won't do it! I won't do it! I won't do it!"

It was like some crude chant, knowing only two tones. She threw out her hands, her wrists long and dark on her blue skirt.

"Can't you understand anything?" she asked. "I've lived here all my life—on your money. I've not been strong enough to work, they say—well, but I've been strong enough to be a hired girl in your house—and I've been glad to pay for my keep. . . . Well, then I got a little something, same as other folks. I thought I was married and I went off on the train and he bought me things and I saw the different towns. And then it was all a mistake. I didn't have any of it. I came back here and went into your kitchen again—I don't know why I came back. I s'pose because I'm most thirty-four and new things ain't so easy any more—but what have I got or what'll I ever have? And now you want to put on to me having folks look at me and think he run off and left me, and having 'em all wonder. . . . I can't stand it. I can't stand it. I can't. . . ."

"You'd rather they'd know he fooled you, when he had another wife?" Dwight sneered.

"Yes! Because he wanted me. How do I know—maybe he wanted me only just because he was lonesome, the way I was. I don't care why! And I won't have folks think he went and left me."

"When a family once gets talked about for any reason——" said Ina and shuddered.

"I'm talked about now!"

"But nothing that you could help. If he got tired of you, you couldn't help that." This misstep was Dwight's.

"No," Lulu said, "I couldn't help that. And I couldn't help his other wife, either."

"Bigamy," said Dwight, "that's a crime."

"I've done no crime," said Lulu.

"Bigamy," said Dwight, "disgraces everybody it touches."

"Even Di," Lulu said.

"Lulu," said Dwight, "on Di's account will you promise us to let this thing rest with us three?"

"I s'pose so," said Lulu quietly.

"You will?"

"I s'pose so."

Ina sobbed: "Thank you, thank you, Lulu. This makes up for everything."

"You'll be happy to think you've done this for us, Lulu," said Dwight.

"I s'pose so," said Lulu.

Ina, pink from her little gust of sobbing, went to her, kissed her, her trim tan tailor suit against Lulu's blue cotton.

"My sweet, self-sacrificing sister," she murmured.

"Oh, stop that!" Lulu said.

Dwight took her hand, lying limply in his. "I can now," he said, "overlook the matter of the letter."

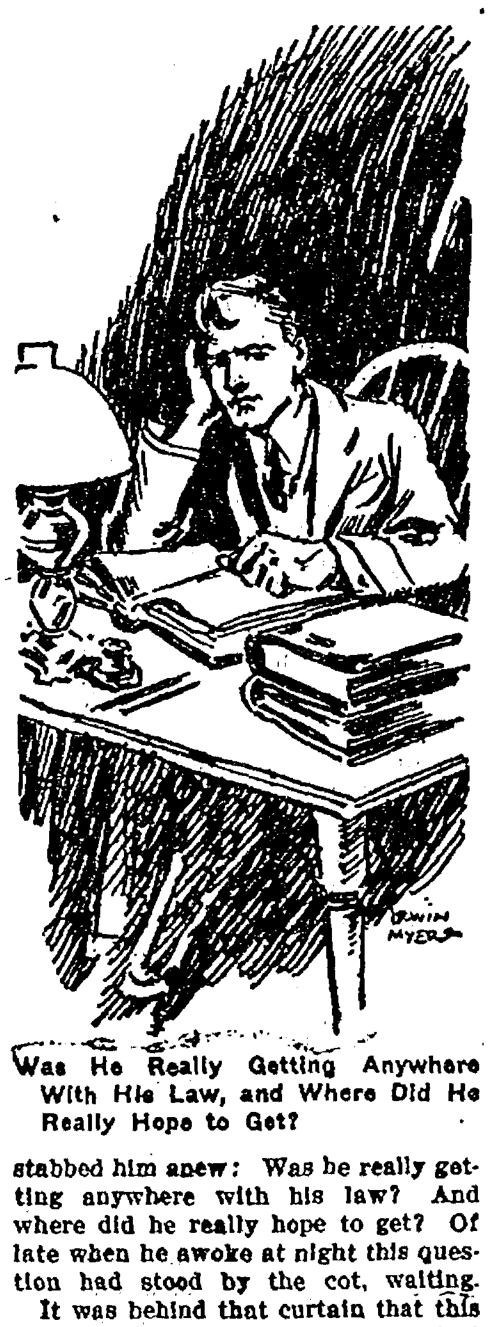
Lulu drew back. She put her hair behind her ears, swallowed, and cried out.

"Don't you go around pitying me! I'll have you know I'm glad the whole thing happened!"

* * * * * * *

It was not yet nine o'clock of a vivid morning. Cornish had his floor and sidewalk sprinkled, his red and blue plush piano spreads dusted. He sat at a folding table well back in the store, and opened a law book.

For half an hour he read. Then he found himself looking off the page, stabbed by a reflection which always stabbed him anew: Was he really getting anywhere with his law? And where did he really hope to get? Of late when he awoke at night this question had stood by the cot, waiting.



Was He Really Getting Anywhere With His Law, and Where Did He Really Hope to Get?

It was behind that curtain that this unreasoning question usually attacked him, when his giant, wavering shadow had died upon the wall and the faint smell of the extinguished lamp went with him to his bed; or when he waked before any sign of dawn. In the mornings all was cheerful and wonted—the question had not before attacked him among his red and blue plush spreads, his golden oak and ebony cases, of a sunshiny morning.

A step at his door set him flying. He wanted passionately to sell a piano.

"Well!" he cried, when he saw his visitor.

It was Lulu, in her dark red suit and her tilted hat.

"You're out early," said he, participating in the village chorus of this bright challenge at this hour.

"Oh, no," said Lulu.

He looked out the window, pretending to be caught by something passing, leaned to see it the better.

"Oh, how'd you get along last night?" he asked, and wondered why he had not thought to say it before.

"All right, thank you," said Lulu.

"Was he—about the letter, you know?"

"Yes," she said, "but that didn't matter. You'll be sure," she added, "not to say anything about what was in the letter?"

"Why, not till you tell me I can," said Cornish, "but won't everybody know now?"

"No," Lulu said.

At this he had no more to say, and feeling his speculation in his eyes, dropped them to a piano scarf from which he began flicking invisible specks.

"I came to tell you good-by," Lulu said.

"Good-by!"

"Yes. I'm going off—for a while. My satchel's in the bakery—I had my breakfast in the bakery."

"Say!" Cornish cried warmly, "then everything wasn't all right last night?"

"As right as it can ever be with me," she told him. "Oh, yes, Dwight forgave me."

"Forgave you!"

She smiled, and trembled.

"Look here," said Cornish, "you come here and sit down and tell me about this."

He led her to the folding table, as the only social spot in that vast area of his, seated her in the one chair, and for himself brought up a piano stool. But after all she told him nothing. She merely took the comfort of his kindly indignation.

"It came out all right," she said only. "But I won't stay there any more. I can't do that."

"Then what are you going to do?"

"In Millton yesterday," she said, "I saw an advertisement in the hotel—they wanted a chambermaid."

"Oh, Miss Bett!" he cried. At that name she flushed. "Why," said Cornish, "you must have been coming from Millton yesterday when I saw you. I noticed Miss Di had her bag—" He stopped, stared. "You brought her back!" he deduced everything.

"Oh!" said Lulu. "Oh, no—I mean ——"

"I heard about the eloping again this morning," he said. "That's just what you did—you brought her back."

"You mustn't tell that! You won't? You won't!"

"No. 'Course not." He mulled it. "You tell me this: Do they know? I mean about your going after her?"

"No."

"You never told!"

"They don't know she went."

"That's a funny thing," he blurted out, "for you not to tell her folks—I mean, right off. Before last night. . ."

"You don't know them. Dwight'd never let up on that—he'd joke her about it after a while."

"But it seems—"

"Ina'd talk about disgracing her. They wouldn't know what to do. There's no sense in telling them. They aren't a mother and father," Lulu said.

Cornish was not accustomed to deal with so much reality. But Lulu's reality he could grasp.

"You're a trump anyhow," he affirmed.

"Oh, no," said Lulu modestly.

Yes, she was. He insisted upon it.

"You've been a jewel in their home all right," said Cornish. "I bet they'll miss you if you do go."

"They'll miss my cooking," Lulu said without bitterness.

"They'll miss more than that, I know. I've often watched you there—"

"You have?" It was not so much pleasure as passionate gratitude which lighted her eyes.

"You made the whole place," said Cornish.

"You don't mean just the cooking?"

"No, no. I mean—well, that first night when you played croquet. I felt at home when you came out."

That look of hers, rarely seen, which was no less than a look of loveliness, came now to Lulu's face. After a pause she said: "Well, I must be going now. I wanted to say good-by to you—and there's one or two other places. . . ."

"I hate to have you go," said Cornish, and tried to add something. "I hate to have you go," was all that he could find to add.

Lulu rose. "Oh, well," was all that she could find.

They shook hands, Lulu laughing a little. Cornish followed her to the door. He had begun on "Look here, I wish . . ." when Lulu said "good-by," and paused, wishing intensely to know what he would have said. But all that he said was: "Good-by. I wish you weren't going."

"So do I," said Lulu, and went, still laughing.

Cornish saw her red dress vanish from his door, flash by his window, her head averted. And there settled upon him a depression out of all proportion to the slow depression of his days. This was more—it assailed him, absorbed him.

He came back to his table, and sat down before his lawbook. But he sat, chin on chest, regarding it. No . . . no escape that way. . . .

A step at the door and he sprang up. It was Lulu, coming toward him, her face unsmiling but somehow quite lighted. In her hand was a letter.

"See," she said. "At the office was this. . . ."

She thrust in his hand the single sheet. He read:

* * * * * * * *

". . . just wanted you to know you're actually rid of me. I've heard from her, in Brazil. She ran out of money and thought of me, and her lawyer wrote to me. . . . I've never been any good—Dwight would tell you that if his pride would let him tell the truth once in a while. But there ain't anything in my life makes me feel as bad as this. . . . I s'pose you couldn't understand and I don't myself. . . . Only the sixteen years keeping still made me think she was gone sure . . . but you were so downright good, that's what was the worst . . . do you see what I want to say . . ."

Cornish read it all and looked at Lulu. She was grave and in her eyes there was a look of dignity such as he had never seen them wear, incredible dignity.

"He didn't lie to get rid of me—and she was alive, just as he thought she might be," she said.

"I'm glad," said Cornish.

"Yes," said Lulu. "He isn't quite so bad as Dwight tried to make him out."

It was not of this that Cornish had been thinking.

"Now you're free," he said.

"Oh, that . . ." said Lulu.

She replaced her letter in its envelope. "Now I'm really going," she said. Good-by for sure this time. . . ."

Her words trailed away. Cornish had laid his hand on her arm.

"Don't say good-by," he said.

She looked at him mutely.

"Do you think you could possibly stay here with me?"

"Oh!" said Lulu, like no word.

Sugar Factory To Start Cutting Soon

Factory In Shape And Men For Campaign Employed—To Start About Saturday.

HAVE 70,000 TONS BEETS

The Iowa Valley Sugar Co.'s factory will probably begin the 1922 sugar making campaign about Saturday or Sunday of this week, according to present plans. Everything has been placed in readiness, the men to operate have all been employed, the factory gotten into shape, and the beets are beginning to roll into the plant by trainloads. The company has some 3,800 acres of beets for the present campaign, which it is expected will turn out about 70,000 tons of beets. To cut these will require in the neighborhood of two months and a half of continuous day and night operation.

The factory is being operated this year by the Iowa Valley Operating Co., a company composed of practically the same men as the sugar company. Every indication points to a successful season; the costs of operation are down to reason, the cost of the necessary supplies are greatly the price of sugar has been stabilized so that here is no danger of the tremendous drop experienced during the first campaign, and the operators of the plant this year, together with the stockholders of he company, confidently expect to have the factory return a profit.

BELMOND RADIO HEARD IN MASSACHUSETS

Caryl McIntyre recently received a postal card from W. F. Osborn of Marlboro, Mass., stating that he had heard Caryl's station clearly one evening when Caryl was calling a station in New Jersey. Mr Osborn also stated that he heard Caryl with an inside antennae, or without any outside wires whatever, simply those in his room. Marlboro is about 1,200 miles from Belmond. Certainly looks like Caryl was stepping out some in the wireless line.

Rev. Chapler was in town last week Thursday greeting old friends here. He was minister of the Methodist church in Belmond a number of years ago when he made many friends. He is now located at Fort Worth, Texas, where he has a large church.

The people of Cornelia extend an invitation to Belmond to attend their revival meeting which is now in progress. Services begin at 7:45 each evening. Rev. Lewis is a good speaker and the people are well pleased with the proportions this revival has assumed.

SALVATION ARMY ADVISES TURN DOWN SOLICITORS

The following advice has been sent out by the Salvation Arym Adivosry Board regarding solicitors for funds by men and women in uniform posing as representatives of some religious army:

"Do not only look before you give, but also investigate. Because of the established position of the Salvation Army in the public esteem and affection, numerous religious "Armies" have been promoted with a view apparently, of representing themselves to be the Salvation Army. These "Armies" send their solicitors over the entire states of Iowa and Nebraska and in fact almost every state in the union. These solicitors usually dress in uniforms similar to those of the Salvation Army and invariably carry the tambour'ne—the old-time collecting method of the Salvationists, but which has now been discarded for the more business-like and efficient Advisory Board system.

Only the other day a news clipping from the Cedar Falls Record came to hand to the effect that a woman claiming to be a solicitor for the "Rescue Army of Des Moines," presenting credentials that were apparently bogus, and giving her name as "Mary Ellen," yesterday fled the city following the questioning of her ccredentials by Mayor Refshauge upon whom she had called for a contribution to her cause. She left her credential papers with the mayor and removed the ribbon from her hat before leaving.

The papers ppresented by the Des Moines woman were nicely "signed" by Secretary of State Ramsay and had a notarial seal that was notoriously deficient in appearance. When asked to show the papers more closely the woman picked them up and started for the door of the mayor's office. He in turn restrained her and called the marshal.

"If my husband was here you'd let me go," she cried.

"Where is he then?" returned the mayor.

"Out on the street somewhere and I wish you'd let me go so that I can find him," she replied.

But the woman was held until the papers had been examined and found to be woefully unsatisfactory, if not fradulent. Marshal Enlow allowed her to go free upon making a promise to remove the band from her hat, hide her tambourine and leave town until she could provide better qualifications for solicitation.

We publish this incident because complaints are made that this solicitation is done by Salvationists, and because it is our desire to keep faith with our many friends who so generously supported us at the time of our Annual Home Service Appeal. In any case look before you give, and be sure you are giving to the Salvation and not to one of the many "Armies" whose imitation of the Salvation Army is not at all flattering to that well-known organization.

OIL EXCITEMENT NEAR LINN GROVE, IOWA

Geologists have been surveying the land near Linn Grove and Sioux Rapids, and pronounce it ideal for the production of oil. A meeting of citizens of those places, headed by J. H. Bauber of LeMars, are preparing to promote a company that will develope the district and seek to find what there is that lies below the surface, says the Humboldt Republican.

The geologists state that their findings indicated oil in vast quantities. There was a consderable seepage of oil also, which indicated great pressure from below. The domes, breaks, structures and all other oil indication formations are there the same as they are found in the great oil producing centers. There is a belief that it will be but a short time until the oil industry will boom in that section, and the promoters recommend that the home people reap the benefit instead of allowing expert oil men from a distance to come in and get the cream of the cash. Enough leases, says the Humboldt Republican, will be secured in the territory to drill a 3,000 foot well. Enthusiasts declare that the territory will develope into one of the greatest oil-producing territory in the world.

GIANTS BEAT YANKEES IN THE FIRST GAME

Radio Report From Fort Dodge Gives Details Of Game As It Is Played Yesterday.

The New York Giants defeated the New York Yankees 3 to 2 in the first game of the worlds series played on Wednesday afternoon. Complete reports of the game were received by the Independent, play by play, ball by ball, as the game progressed, as broadcasted by the Standard Radio Equipment Co. of Fort Dodge. The Giants were held to nothing for the first eight innings, the Yanks having a two to nothiing lead on them up to the eight inning. The Giants outbatted the Yanks, particularly in the latter part of the game, when in the seventh inning they secured three straight singles, having the bases full with two strikes and ball three on the next batter, but a double play lost their chance of scoring, and in the eight inning getting four singles in a row for three runs. The Independent and Belmond Battery Co. will receive the games daily and anyone interested may get the results as the game is played by dropping in at the Independent office.

RAIL GUARDS COMPLETED

The rail guards on Primary road No. 10, west of Rowan, have been completed. These safeguards along the high grades west of there and across the Iowa river valley will be of inestimable value to motorists and the traveling public as well as an ornament to the highway. Highway engineers and road builders say this is one of the best pieces of work in the state. F. L. and F. J. Kercheval of Rowan did the work.

TRINITY CHURCH

Wednesday evening the choir will meet in the church for practice at seven thirty.

Thursday afternoon the Ladies Aid meets in the church parlors.

Thursday evening prayer meeting will be conducted at the church at seven thirty.

Saturday morning at ten o'clock classes meet at the church.

Sunday morning service will be conducted in the Norwegian language. Communion will be observed. Sunday school at the usual hour. Sunday evening the league will take up its work after a lay off of rest at seven thirty.

As every one knows the Franklin county Agricultural society is practically defunct. Its equity in the fair ground is dwindling. Mortgaes against the property, long past due, with acrued interest, amount to approximately $6,500 and the debt must soon be cancelled or the tract will pass into private ownership. Sentiment is crystalizing for the county to own the ground; petitions asking the board of supervisors to submit the question to a vote at the November election are being circulated and so far as we are able to learn, are being generally signed by farmers and business men.—Hampton Recorder.

WHAT'S DOING IN THE DISTRICT COURT

News Of The Trials As They Are Reported—Stealer Of Chickens Gets Fine.

Monitor: The state has taken up the case against Julius Puls of Eagle Grove, who was mixed up in an attempt to burn a striker breaker's home in that city a few weeks ago. Puls was fined $100 and given a thirty days' jail sentence by the federal court at Sioux City. He paid the fine and on being released from jail the state took up the case. Justice Triggs of Clarion held him to the grand jury under a $4,000 bond.

An error was made in these notes last week when it was stated that the City of Eagle Grove had appealed its case against John Soren for intoxication. The defendant is John Dorem of Eagle Grove.

A forty-five ton car of soft coal was stored away in the court house basement last week by janitor McGrath.

Lester Routh, alias Jack Wilson, is confined in the county jail in default of $2,000 bonds. He was held to the grand jury Monday by Justice Triggs, charged with adultry. Defendant came to Clarion a short time ago from Des Moines, being accompanied by a woman who is said not to be his wife.

Game warden Greiner appeared in Justice Triggs' court against D. A. Ross and W B. Wilson, charged with illegal fishing. Both plead guilty and were fined $5 and costs.

The following were issued marriage licences the past week: Clarence Saunders of Goldfield and Nadine Schultz of Corwith, Jake Thomas of Rowan and Margaret Smith of Williams, Frank B. Woods of Williams and Stella A. Peck of Blairsburg, Herman F. Hemming and Kathryn Evelyn Garland of Huron, S. D., William Larson and Floy Elizabeth Keister of Goldfield, George Dewey Beisell and Mary Olive Miller of Goldfield, Eric W. Hutchinson and Orpha Baesley of Webster City, Alfred Lindaas of Eagle Grove and Nellie Weltha of Hardy.

Seven marriage licenses were issued at the clerk's office Tuesday afternoon between the hours of two and four-thirty. This is a record breaker.

Miss Bock has been visiting the rural schools of the county the past few weeks, having called at nearly one half of the schools at this time.

Auditor Walker, in company with H. J. Barr, departed last evening on a two weeks' pleasure trip into the southland, their objective point there they go to Palm Beach, Miami Key West and Havana, Cuba.

Conrad Knudson of Eagle Grove accused of stealing chickens on three counts entered a plea of guilty before Judge McCall the first of the week. He is credited with taking four or five dozen chickens. He was sentenced to three months in the county jail on one count and the others dismissed.

E. Bock and the Misses Nellie and Mary Barry and Irene Hunter went to Mason City Wednesday to hear Fiske O'Hara.

SHEFFIELD BANK FORCED INTO BANKRUPTCY

Hampton Recorder: Bankruptcy proceedings against the Sheffield bank will proceed. This decision was reached by a committee of ten, headed by Frank Jenegan, representing the creditors of the institution, which closed about five weeks ago.

The committee met to reach a final decision on the plan submitted by the Carhart management whereby between $100,000 and $125,000 in brick and tile stock would be laid down by Mrs. C. C. Carhart for collateral security in case the bank was unable to liquidate. The committee had been named at a meeting of the creditors held in the Sheffield city hall Monday.

Bankruptcy proceedings had already been started in the federal court at Fort Dodge and it was the desire of the management of the bank that they be halted.

One of the principal stumbling blocks to the proposition is understood to have been the demand of the Carharts for a joint receivership while full control was demanded by the committee.

Pappers are to be served on Mrs. L. B. Carhart, president of the bank, within a day or two by a federal marshal, it is expected. She will have opportunity to show reason why the institution should not be declared bankrupt, but inasmuch as insolvency has already been admitted this is not expected.

PILOT KNOB

The people of Iowa will never regret their purchase of this wooded hill and the surrounding acreage as a state park. While it presents no freak of nature to whet the curiosity no striking or imposing features of scenic beauty, it furishes delightful picnic grounds and an ideal place for enjoying the pleasures and beauties of outdoor life. The native timber, mostly hard wood, which still covers most of the region, takes one back to the days of the pioneers. During the heated months of the summer it provides a cool retreat for the weary, and in the fall days it takes on a riot of gorgeous colors which no painter's brush can rival. The little lake at the foot of the mound gives an added touch to the beauty of the picture. Sleeping quietly in the midst of its sylvan beauty its unruffled surface reflecting the skies, it bears upon its bosom the Nile lotus, a plant which is said to flourish no where else in the United States.

The view from the top of the mound is magnificent, and is well worth going a long distance to see. It is a typical Iowa landscape that unrolls itself before the observer's eyes, but one that can rarely be seen to such good advantage as from the top of this elevation. For 25 miles in every direction, sheltering groves, green meadows, golden stubble fields, waving corn, ample barns and comfortable farm houses form a panorama such as few other parts of our great country can duplicate. The visitor gets an idea of the inexhaustible wealth and incalculable possibilities of Iowa such as he never had before. A good slogan would be "Climb Pilot Knob and See Iowa."

One agreeable feature of the mound is that the declivity is nowhere so great but that it can be easily negoiated by automobile. Even now many cars drive to the top, altho for short distances there are some steep grades in a number of places. In places, too, the roadway is so narrow that cars cannot pass each other. But all this can be remedied at no very great expense and no doubt will be in time. One need be no great prophet to predict that with a good road to the top, Pilot Knob will become one of the most attractive points in the state.—Forest City Republican.

Belmond Meets Britt Team Then

First High School Foot Ball Game Of History Should Draw Big Crowd.

GAME CALLED AT 3:30 P. M.

We play our first game of football with Britt on Friday, October 6th. The boys of the football squad have been practicing hard. Every one in school is anxiously waiting for the great event. If "pep" is what is needed to win, the game is ours.

The basket social held on the evening of Sept. 29 in the high school auditorium to raise money for football proved a great success. A short program was given, including a talk by Mr. Guthrie, yells lead by former yell leader Morey Nelson and high school song lead by Miss Hill.

Coffee was sold during the evening. The coffee and sugar was donated by Bohnings', Jacobson's, Kinseth's, Robinson's, Parsons' and Mr. Ely. The high school wish to send thanks to the above business houses. They wish to thank the members of the Alumni who were unable to atend the social but sent money to help.

Ninety nine baskets were sold which brought the sum of $130.

The first division of Literary will give its first program Oct. 4th at 3:20.

Sylvia, Harvey and Elmer Chapman are absent from high school on account of being quarantined for dipthería.

Helen Hildebrand was absent from school Thursday on account of sickness.

Carl Whittaker was absent from school Thursday on account of sickness.

Doris Bailey substituted in the 6th grade Monday morning for Miss Watterman.

The Seniors of the Normal Training class are going to institute at Clarion, Thursday.

Miss Jewell, the Commercial teacher, spent the week end at her home in Waterloo.

Mrs. Schultz and Mrs. Goelz visited the first and second grades on Friday.

Miss Ella Walker of Shaller visited the kindergarten last week.

Mrs. Guthrie, Mrs. Saucke, Mrs. Sampson, Mrs. Davenport, Mrs. M. C Barry, Mrs. McAlpine and Mrs. Courtney visited the fourth grade on Friday.

The Commercial department are awarding a pin to the classes in beginning typewriting. The pupil having the most number of perfect lessons for one week is privilged to wear the pin the following week. After a week of hard competition, Genevieve Starnes as awarded the medal.

There will be no school Thursday and Friday of this week as the teachers will attend the county institute at Clarion.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT"

The Iowa Falls Electric Company stirred up a bunch of citizens last Saturday when they cut said citizens off from service because they had not paid their bills within the alloted time. The "ultimatum" was not taken seriously by the patrons, but on Saturday evening when they turned the button and got no results they went up in the air a mile—some of 'em farther. We uderstand that this is to be the policy of the company from now on, and those who do not whack up on time will go without lights or pay $1.60 to get connected up again.

The box social held at the school gymnasium last Friday night was a howling success from all angles. It was attended by a large crowd, there being some 99 girls represented in the baskets. The baskets sold for good prices and a nice sum was realized for the foot ball team. A very fine time is reported.

A WINTER CARNIVAL

It may be pretty early to suggest it, but why not hold a winter carnival in Belmond this winter? Make it a "big day" in the winter. Can't be done? Why not? It is in other places. We have the natural facilities for such an occasion; all that is needed is a little pep and push to do it. Think it over.

THE UNSPEAKABLE TURK

Whether the present crisis in Europe brings about a war or not, one thing remains unchanged: The Turk should either be civilized or wiped off the map. Just why civilized and Christian nations have tolerated the atrocities of the Turks for centuries remains a riddle. We went to war on Germany because of the heathenish methods of warfare used, yet we have for centuries sat idly by and let the Turks massacre christians by the millions, kidnap into worse than slavery hundreds of thousands of christian girls, and done nothing about it.

Just as sure as there comes a war with Turkey, just so sure will Russia jump in, France back them up, Austria take a pot shot, Bulgaria set in, and when this comes about, you can bank your last dollar that the United States will be drawn in. It stands to reason. And when it does come, then may the unspeakable Turk get what he has had coming to him for hundreds of years.

THE PRICE OF BUTTER

Hampton's estimable newspaper, the Chronicle, generally has many things on tap, much knowledge of conditions in and about that city. The Independent wants to make an inquiry: Why is creamery butter in Hampton selling at 52 cents a pound, while in Belmond it is retailing at 39 cents—a difference of 13 cents a pound?

Perhaps it is because Hampton has no creamery, and ship their butter in from Minnesota. Better buy butter in Belmond, it's cheaper.

CLIPPINGS

Hazel Olsen, seven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Olsen, living west of the city was struck by a car driven by Herman Woodard on Broadway Saturday evening about ten o'clock. The little girl was running back and forth in the street and apparantly was blinded by the lights of the car. Mr. Woodard was driving slowly and did not see the child and was not aware that he had struck her until after the accident. The child suffered severe bruises and cuts about the head but was not internally injured and no bones were broken. At the present time she is getting along nicely.—Eagle Grove Times.

H. J. Klemme of Belmond was a visitor in this city Wednesday. Mr. Klemme should feel right at home in Klemme.—Times

Two amateur thieves stole a Buick car from Pocahantas last week, and also pilfered a box of cigars from an eating house, and then after being apprehended in the cigar theft, left town with the car they had stolen. They were caught at Indianola, and held pending the arrival of Pocahantas county officers, when they were returned to that town and are now in jail awaiting trial.

They tell a confused story of their homes, stating that they are from Montana, Wiconsin and other states. —Humboldt Republican.

.Perhaps these men may be the same ones who stole A. J. Dorr's Overland car here, later abandoning it at Pocahantas where they were reported to have stolen a Buick car.)

August Greiner of Wall Lake, Federal Fish and Game Warden, Del Walwroth, Will Streveler and Everet McCarthy of Blairsburg are in Webster City and vicinty this week where they are seining the ponds and bayous in the Boone Valley for game fish which will be placed in Wall Lake, Bass, catfish and pickeral are being taken from the ponds and bayous and placed in the lake. The game warden stated that the fish which are caught in the small ponds are killed by the cold weather but if placed in the lake they will survive the winter. Since Wall Lake has been made a state park an effort is being made to make it a veritable sportsman's paradise.—Eagle Grove Times.

He went on, not looking at her. "I haven't got anything. I guess maybe you've heard something about a little something I'm supposed to inherit. Well, it's only five hundred dollars."

His looks searched her face, but she hardly heard what he was saying.

"That little Warden house—it don't cost much—you'd be surprised. Rent, I mean. I can get it now. I went and looked at it the other day, but then I didn't think——" he caught himself on that. "It don't cost near as much as this store. We could furnish up the parlor with pianos——"

He was startled by that "we," and began again:

"That is, if you could ever think of such a thing as marrying me."

"But," said Lulu. "You know! Why, don't the disgrace——"

"There's only this about that," said he. "Of course, if you loved him very much, then I'd ought not to be talking this way to you. But I didn't think —"

She said: "I wanted somebody of my own. That's the reason I done what I done. I know that now."

"Look here," he said, "I'd ought to tell you. I'm awful lonesome myself. This is no place to live. And I guess living so is one reason why I want to get married. I want some kind of a home."

IRWIN MYERS

His Look Searched Her Face, but She Hardly Heard What He Was Saying.

"Of course," she said.

"Could you risk it with me?" Cornish asked her. "There's nobody I've seen," he went on gently, "that I like as much as I do you. I—I was engaged to a girl once, but we didn't get along. I guess if you'd be willing to try me, we would get along."

"Isn't there somebody——"

"Look here. Do you like me?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Well enough——"

"It's you I was thinking of," said Lulu. "I'd be all right."

"Then!" Cornish cried, and he kissed her.

* * * * * * *

"And now," said Dwight, "nobody must mind if I hurry a little wee bit. I've got something on."

He and Ina and Monona were at dinner. Mrs. Bett was in her room. Di was not there.

"Anything about Lulu?" Ina asked.

"Lulu?" Dwight stared. "Why should I have anything to do about Lulu?"

"Well, but, Dwight—we've got to do something."

"As I told you this morning," he observed, "we shall do nothing. Your sister is of age—I don't know about the sound mind, but she is certainly of age. If she chooses to go away, she is free to go where she will."

"Can't you get mother to come out?" Dwight inquired.

"I had so much to do getting dinner onto the table, I didn't try," Ina confessed.

"You didn't have to try," Mrs. Bett's voice sounded. "I was coming when I got rested up."

She entered, looking vaguely about. "I want Lulie," she said, and the corners of her mouth drew down. She ate her dinner cold, appeased in vague areas by such martyrdom. They were still at table when the front door opened.

"Monona hadn't ought to use the front door so commonly," Mrs. Betts complained.

But it was not Monona. It was Lulu and Cornish.

"Well!" said Dwight, tone curving downward.

"Well!" said Ina, in replica.

"Lulie!" said Mrs. Bett, and left her dinner, and went to her daughter and put her hands upon her.

"We wanted to tell you first," Cornish said. "We've just got married."

"Forevermore!" said Ina.

"What's this?" Dwight sprang to his feet. "You're joking!" he cried with hope.

"No," Cornish said soberly. "We're married—just now. Methodist parsonage. We've had our dinner," he added hastily.

Dwight recovered himself in a measure. "I'm not surprised, after all," he said. "Lulu usually marries in this way."

Mrs. Bett patted her daughter's arm. "Lulie," she said, "why, Lulie. You ain't been and got married twice, have you? After waitin' so long?"

"Don't be disturbed, Mother Bett," Dwight cried. "She wasn't married that first time, if you remember. No marriage about it!"

Ina's little shriek sounded.

"Dwight!" she cried. "Now everybody'll have to know that. You'll have to tell about Ninian now—and his other wife!"

Standing between her mother and Cornish, an arm of each about her, Lulu looked across at Ina and Dwight, and they all saw in her face a horrified realization.

"Ina!" she said. "Dwight! You will have to tell now, won't you? Why I never thought of that."

THAT'S WHERE THE TALL CORN GROWS.

The Klemme Times says, To prove to a Minnesota farmer (who had never been south of the Twin Cities) Art Wellemeyer of Klemme recently spent eighty cents for express to ship a couple of Iowa corn stalks to the farmer. The stalks were over 12 feet high. Art had told the man that corn really grew tall in Iowa, and lest the farmer would think him a liar, Art sent the corn. In that part of Minnesota corn only grows up about hip high. The ears on the stalk Art sent were seven feet from the ground. Wonder what that backwoodsman thought as he gazed on that Iowa corn?

WHY HE CAN'T PAY.

For the following reasons I am unable to send you the check for I have been held up,held down,sandbagged, walked on, sat on, flattened out and squeezed.

First by the United States government for federal war tax, the excess profit tax, the Liberty Bond Loans, Thrift, Capital Stock, Merchant's license and auto tax, and by every society and organization that the inventive mind of man can invent to extract what I may or may not have in my possession. From the Society of St. John the Bap'st, the G. A. R., the Women's Relief, the Navy League, the Red Cross, the Black Cross, the Purple Cross, the Double Cross, the childrens' homes, the Dorcas Society, the Y. M. C. A., the Boy Scouts, the Jewish Relief, the Belgium Relief and every hospital in town.

The government has so governed my business that I don't know who owns it. I am inspected, suspected, examined, and re-examined, informed, required and commended, so I don't know who I am or why I am here. All that I know is that I am supposed to be an inexhaustible supply of money for every known need, desire, or hope of the human race, and because I will not sell all I have and go out and beg, borrow or steal money to give away, I am cussed, discussed, boycotted, talked to, talked about, lied to, lied about, hung up, robbed and nearly ruined and the only reason that I am clinging to life is to see what in hell is coming next.

FARM BUREAU NEWS

County Farm Tour

Farmers of Wrigtht county are invited to join the party which will tour the county Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 11 and 12. Arrangements have been made to secure three specialists from Ames to address the farmers where the stops are made on the tour. Prof. F. G. Churchill on farm crops and soils, and Miss Avis Talcott on household subjects.

The first day's tour, October 11, will begin at the H. N. Denby farm one mile north and two and one-half west of Clarion at nine a. m. and all planning to make the tour are requested to assemble at the farm promptly at 9 o'clock and bring well filled baskets for the picnic dinner. The second stop of the first day's tour will be made at the Al Watkin's farm three miles east of Eagle Grove where inspection will be made of the Hubam clover plot and the corn yield plot. From here the party will proceed to the A. L. Middleton farm, four miles south, one and one-half west of Eagle Grove. Those planning to make the second day tour, Oct. 12, are asked to meet at 9 a. m. at the Chas. Overbaugh farm, two miles east and three and one-half south of Clarion, where inspection will be made and lectures given on Hubam and Alfalfa. From here the party will tour to the A. E. Martin farm, one-half mile northwest of Belmond, where the corn yield plot will be inspected. From here the party will proceed to the N. L. Wanderlip farm, three miles northwest of Dows.

Clarion Corn Carnival

Plans are being completed for the monster corn carnival and poultry show which will be held in Clarion, Wednesday, Oct. 18. The business men of Clarion have spent considerable time and a lot of money in preparing for this occasion, which undoubtedly will be one of the biggest days of the year for Clarion.

The prizes which are being offered for the corn exhibits are unusually attractive—in fact they are considerably higher than the premiums which are being offered any other place in Iowa. A grand sweepstakes prize of fifty dollars is being offered for the best ten ears of corn, either white or yellow variety, and twenty-five dollars will be given for the best ear of corn entered in the single ear class. All exhibits of corn will be returned to the exhibitor if he cares for them. The Wright County Poultry Association is co-operating with the Clarion business men in putting on a poultry show in connection with the corn carnival. Those planning to exhibit poultry at the show are urged to get in touch with the committee as soon as possible, because the number of coops is limited and those who apply first will, of course, be served first.

This carnival is to be made an annual affair with Clarion and the people of the surrounding community. It has been suggested that since we are in the heart of the corn belt, a corn carnival or fall festival of this kind could be made an interesting feature for a yearly affair. All farmers of Wright county and particularly those living in the vicinity of Clarion are urged to bring their exhibits and help in making this a real community get-to-gether.

Monster Membership Drive

The annual farm bureau membership drive for Wright county will be conducted this year on Monday and Tuesday, October 9th and 10th. Farmers who have not already cast their lot with this organization will be solicited on one of those dates and will be given opportunity to become members of one of the largest organizations which is in existance today.

Two teams consisting of two men and one or two ladies will make the drive for members in each township. The solictitors will be prepared to answer any and all questions regarding the farm bureau organization and will be equipped with membership blanks for taking memberships. All farmers are familiar with the farm bureau, its aims and purposes; also with the accomplishments which have been made by the organization during the past few years, and he should not hesitate to give his support to the farm bureau which has done so much in the interests of agriculture. The farm bureau asks nothing but what is fair and equitable. It believes in the policy of "live and let live" and is asking nothing but that which it is perfectly willing that should be granted to other organizations. It aims to co-operate with all other organizations which have the interests of agriculture at heart.

Doing Valuable Research Work

For three years, now, the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation has been co-operating with the agricultural economics section of Ames college in conducting research work to determine the actual cost of producing grain and live stock in Iowa.

The first year's work in 1920, covered the production of wheat, corn and oats only. In 1921 the plpans were amplified to include the growing and feeding of cattle, hogs and poultry.

Shelby county was chosen as the best place to carry on the study of live stock production. It lies in the western part of the state and is the center of the cattle feeding section. In undertaking the project last year a list, or circle of 30 represenative farmers was made up, all producers of live stock and about half of them feeders. The period covered was from January 1, 1921 to January 1, 1922.

The figures presented in the first report from this county made recently to the federation officials, are very exhaustive, covering every possible item of income and outgo connected with the subject. And they make it very clear, that, under present conditions and measured by the same rules that govern other lines of business, farming and stock raising is an exceedingly hazardous business

This is the first systematic attempt ever made by a farm organization in Iowa to get at the cost of production of farm crops in a way that would be accepted by the business world as authenic. There have been estimates and guess work without end, but when put to the test figures of this sort always fall flat as actual evidence.

Right here lies the value of this work that is being carried on by the Iowa Federation. And each succeeding year will add to its value because of the background furnished for purposes of comparison, one year with another, under shifting values and changing conditions.

FARMERS!

Are you interested in your Business?

If so, you should be a Farm Bureau Member, because---

1. It is a national, state, county and township organization.
2. It reaches into the field to the individual and keeps in touch with him on all questions.
3. It is nation wide in scope, membership and influence, and includes all lines and branches of agriculture.
4. Because of its large membership and influence, it is able to accomplish many things denied to smaller, weaker organizations.
5. It is the biggest, strongest and most popular farm organization in existence today.
6. It is the one outstanding Farm Organization that is giving real service to the farmers of the country as a whole.
7. It has the membership, the will, the power, and above all it has the confidence of the public.
8. A boost for the Farm Bureau is a boost for your own business.

The membership in the Farm Bureau is only $5 per year. It is divided, $4 to your county organization, 50c to the State Federation, and 50c to the American Federation; thus giving you membership in all three organizations for the single fee.

You can join any time, but a special opportunity will be given you to get into the organization on

The Meservey representation and representatives remain as before. H. F Reif having the business end and Mrs. A. E. Muller the correspondence. The policy from this on with the Independent is to be cash in advance on subscriptions; it is essential to good business. We hope you have enjoyed the paper and that you will continue with it, and assure you of our best efforts to give you satisfaction.

THE PUBLISHER.

AN EXPLANATION

Some of the school notes and a number of the locals in this issue are left from last week. The copy was held at the post office in Belmond and did not reach the Independent in time for last week's publication.

Mrs. A R. Johnke of Long Prarie, Minn., returned to her home after visiting with her parents, Mr. and Mrs Wm. Prelipp a short time

Gar Raecker received the sad intelligence on Tuesday of last week of the death of his niece, only daughter of his sister Sadie and husband. Mr. and Mrs. Fillenworth of Sanborn Mrs. Fillenworth will be remembered by many here, having at one time lived here with her parents, Rev. and Mrs. Raecker.

Interment was made in Roseland cemetery, Sanborn, last Friday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Gar Raecker, accompanied by Rev. and Mrs. H Raecker of Waverly and Rev. H. Raecker, Jr, of Gilbert, motored to Sanborn last Thursday to attend the funeral. Following is an account of the little girl's sickness and death taken from "The Sanborn Reporter":

"Many friends here were surprised and made sorrowful when on Tuesday afternoon the news of the death of Faith Fillenworth became known. Last July, while spending the summer with her parents at the lakes, she was taken with an attack of scarlet fever, and was bro't to her home here. The disease ran its course and the little girl had apparantly recovered. Later she suffered another illness, and after a month's illness closed her young life.

"Faith Fawn Fillenworth was born Dec. 7, 1914 in Sanborn, Ia. and passed away Sept. 26, 1922, being 7 years, 9 months and 19 days old. She was a little one who attracted people to her on account of her winning ways and was a favorite among her playmates. Many of those who were accustomed to notice her on her way to school realize to a small extent the sorrow which must be in the hearts of the parents at this loss of their little one. The sympathy of the community goes out to Mr and Mrs. Fillenworth in the great sorrow which has come to them."

ROWAN NEWS

Obituary

John Brinkman was born in Hardin Co. Iowa, Oct. 10 1863. He resided near Ackley, Iowa, until 29 years ago, when he moved with his family to Rowan. The last three years of his life were spent in Long Beach, Cal.

In 1887 he was married to Annie Sleight, also from Ackley. To this union 11 children were born, three of whom have gone on to the shore above. One daughter, Flora, died at the age of 19 years, two boys died in infancy.

Brother Brinkman was converted in his early life, the man who led him to the alter was present at his funeral, Mr. Lister of Ackley. Later on in life he saw the need of a clean heart experience. He sought this experience with his whole heart and he testified many times he knew that God had santified his soul and knew that the Holy Ghost was abiding within him. He was a member of the M. E. church at Powan and also a member of the Wright Co Holiness Association. While at Long Beach he was a regular attendant of Bethel Mission where he reveled in the spiritual things of God. The last year and a half he was a real intercessor in prayer with God. He spent from five to eight hours in prayer and study of God's word daily. These were the things that gave him a real rich experience in his soul

He was taken sick Sept 11, and was taken to Seaside Hospital where two operations were performed. All that medical aid and care could do was done to prolong his life but the dear Lord did not see fit to spare him any longer. He left for the Better Land Sept. 19, just eight years to the day from the time his wife passed away. He died triumphant in the faith of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. He testified only a few hours before he passed away that he was till trusting in the Lord. He had behind him a band of praying people who interceded at the throne of Grace for his recovery and while the Lord wonderfully blessed in prayer yet the Lord saw best to take him home.

Funeral services were held in Bethel Mission, Long Beach, Sept. 22. At this service one soul found Jesus to be the Great Burden Bearer. If Brother Brinkman could have been there and seen that scene, some of his dear ones know that nothing would have pleased him more, for his whole aim was to do the whole will of God and be true to lost souls. He left a testamony that he knew that if he never uttered another prayer, he had that assurance from High Heaven that some souls would be in glory because he was faithful in prayer. He often said, "I have no other desire only to do the will of God."

He leaves to mourn his death four boys and four girls, John and Jurden of Mankato, Minn., Harm of Latimer, Ia., and Martin of Klemme, Ia., Mrs. Earl Carpenter (Nettie) of Smith Mills, Minn., and Anna, Ida and Helen of Long Beach. One brother, one sister and many nieces and nephews and other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services were held in the M. E. church at Rowan, Sept. 28, Rev. Harold Tomkinson presiding. Burial was made in Graceland cemetery.

The out of town guests at the funeral were Henry Brinkman and wife and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. Uhlenopp, Mrs. Harm Ludeman, all of Aplington, Ia. Mr Liester and son, of Mr. Heike Miller ad daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Miller, Mr and Mrs. John Miller, Mr. and Mrs. R Hartman of Ackley, Mr and Mrs. R. Behrends and daughter of Bristow, Mrs. Ed. Miller and daughter of Clarion, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Jacobs of Goodell, Mr. Hall and Mr. Trager of Eagle Grove

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to the friends and neighbors who so kindly showed their sympathy and love to us in this hour of sorrow in this the death of our dear father. Also for the floral offerings that were brought. May the Lord reward each one.

BUSINESS PERSONALS

The Belmond Candy Kitchen has started serving lunches, now that the hot weather is over. Steve's cooking is good.

The Belmond Furniture Co. are conducting a special sale on sewing machines, as may be seen from their ad in this issue of the Independent. Forty cents gets a machine. The results are reported good by Mr. Trafford, manager of the store.

J. P. Larsen and Son opened their new business here, the Cash Market, which they recently purchased of Thomas Tyrrell, on Monday of this week and are enjoying a good patronage. Mr. Larsen, the manager in the shop here, goes by the nickname of "Scoop," according to the Times of Klemme. He is a live wire at any rate and is out to scoop up business.

D. L. Mallory agains enters the jewelry business, and opens his shop this week for business in the building formerly occupied by the Schultz Jewelry Co.

Wm. Dempsey attended the Pleasant township Farm Bureau meeting at the Pete Kaufman farm Monday night, and with his pop corn machine "fed the multitude" hot buttered corn. He had a splendid business, and is very thankful to the Farm Bureau for permission to attend.

Johnson & Wright have been investigating a contrivance to burn oil in the furnace, and if found to be practical will handle them. The Independent is awaiting their investigations with the idea of installing such an outfit if it proves practical.

Matt Holtzbauer recently made and has in use now at the Candy Kitchen, a machine for turning gasolene into the next thing to city gas. It does away with priming, lighting as does gas, there is no soot, and it seems to work to perfection with a hot blaze. Matt is going to make one on a smaller scale as an experiment for the linotype burner of the Independent. If he can make it practical he certainly will have a fortune made.

F. J. Tuffree is developing quite a nice business in cleaning and pressing from the nearby towns. He has an agent in most of them and makes trips there himself by car.

H. N. Hill is remodeling the interior of his jewelry store this week, improving in several ways.

The Case and The Girl

by Randall Parrish

COPYRIGHT 1922 by ALFRED A. KNOPF INC.

CHAPTER I

The Lady in the Limousine.

West, still attired in khaki uniform, but wearing the red chevron of honorable discharge on his left sleeve, sat in the club writing room, his feet comfortably elevated, endeavoring to extract some entertainment from the evening paper. The news was not particularly interesting, however, and finally, obsessed with the feeling that it would soon be time for him to seriously contemplate the procuring of suitable employment, the young man turned the sheet about rather idly, and ran his eyes down the columns devoted to classified advertising.

Half way down the first column, under the head of "miscellaneous," he paused and read a paragraph with some interest; then read it over again, emitting a soft whistle between his teeth.

"Well, by Jove!" he said to himself slowly, "That doesn't sound so bad, either; out of the ordinary, at least. Say, Thompson," and he turned to a tall young fellow busily writing at the adjoining desk, and shoved the paper under his eyes, pointing at the paragraph which had attracted attention, with one finger, "What do you make out of that, old man?"

The other, rather sober-faced, and slow of speech, read the advertisement word by word, with no change of expression.

"Rot," he said solemnly. "Either a joke, or some scheme on. Why? Interested in it?"

"In a measure, yes. I've a good mind to answer, and take a chance."

"You're a fool if you do, Matt," decisively, and turning back to his writing. "That is some game being pulled off. Likely as not it means blackmail. Besides there is no address."

"That's one thing I like about it," retorted the other; "They are in earnest, and taking no chances of having their purpose guessed at. By Jove, I don't see how any one can get in bad, merely by finding out what it all means."

"Well, do as you please; you would anyhow. Only you have my advice."

West read the item again. He had been eighteen months in France, and his discharge from the army had left him bored and dissatisfied with the dull routine of civil life. He dreaded to get back into the harness of a prosaic existence; even his profession as a civil engineer had someway lost its charm. He had tasted the joy of adventure, the thrill of danger, and it was still alluring. This advertisement promised a mystery which strangely attracted his imagination.

> "Wanted: Young man of education and daring for service involving some personal peril. Good pay, and unusual reward if successful. May have to leave city. Purpose disclosed only in personal interview."

As Thompson had pointed out, this was not signed, nor any address given.

West crossed over to an unoccupied desk, and wrote a reply, changing the wording several times, and finally making a clean copy. The answer read:

> To Advertiser: Am 26; late captain of Engineers; university graduate, adventurous disposition. Would be glad to consider your proposition. Address, Box 57, University club."

He placed this in an envelope, called a club messenger, and, handing the boy a sum of money, sent him over to the newspaper office.

Two days elapsed before an answer appeared in his box; a small envelope, addressed in a lady's handwriting apparently, and mailed from one of the sub-postoffices. The brief note read:

"Box 57, University club.

"Your answer to advertisement makes a good impression, and I am willing to put you to the further test of a personal meeting. If you are in earnest in this matter, and quite prepared to assume the necessary risk, you will be at the northwest corner of Spaulding park at 5:30 tomorrow afternoon. Do not come in uniform, but it will be well to bring evening clothes in a bag. Be sure of yourself, and be prompt.

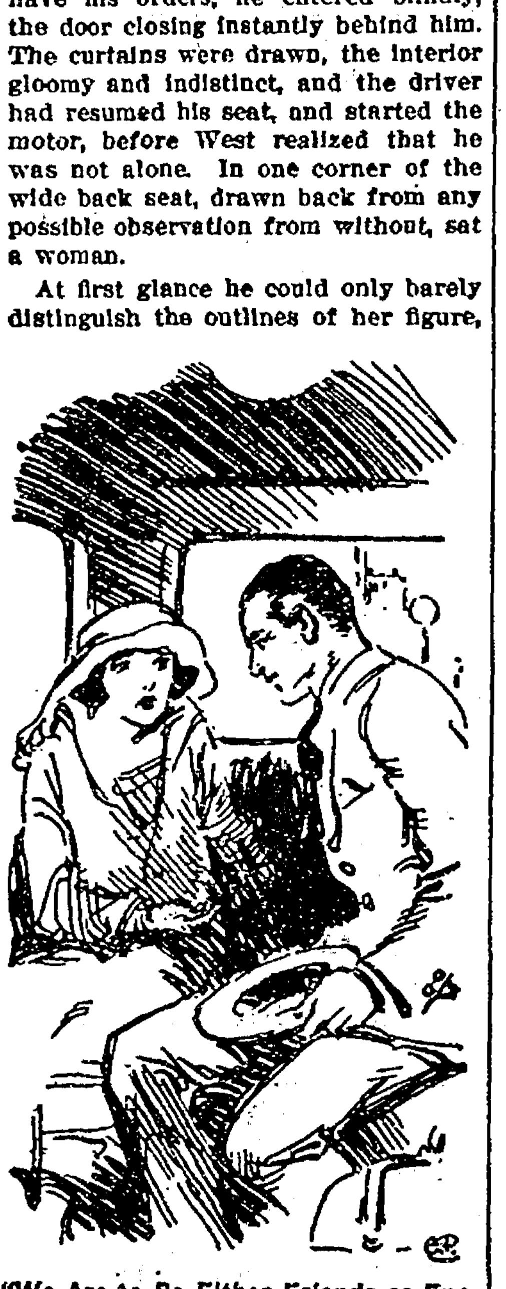
"Very truly yours,
"The Advertiser."

West read this over, again and again, smoking furiously, and endeavoring to weigh each word. The letter sounded honest and sincere; the writer evidently had a purpose in view, and was selecting an agent with great care and secrecy. No hint as to what that object was would be revealed blindly—he must be tried in every way first; thoroughly tested as to both character and courage. Undoubtedly steps had already been taken to do this. The delay in reply would have afforded opportunity for some investigation, as his address would give the necessary clue to his identity. The request for evening clothes, however, rather reassured him; evidently his first plunge into this mystery was not to occur in any stratum of low society; no vast amount of personal danger could be involved in such preliminaries. The advertiser was a woman! This fact also stimulated his imagination, and rendered him the more eager. By Jove! he would see the thing through!

His decision was reached. He would go, but would make every effort to protect himself against any possible treachery. He had a room at the club, and wrote a letter or two before proceeding to dress, arranging for their personal delivery in case he failed to return at a designated time; carefully examined his service revolver, and deposited it in the pocket of the business suit he decided to wear. Satisfied with these arrangements, he dressed rapidly, and then packed his bag, bearing it in his hand as he departed in ample time for the point of rendezvous. A cab took him to the place designated, and he found himself alone in a rather desolate spot, with which he was in no way familiar. He had no knowledge of how he was to be approached, or identified, but his being requested to bring a bag containing evening clothes, somehow suggested riding, rather than walking, and consequently his eyes followed more or less intently the constant stream of automobiles.

He grew restless and doubtful as the moments slipped past. Then suddenly, without the slightest warning, a black limousine whirled in alongside the curb, and came to a stop immediately in front of where he waited. The chauffeur, dressed in plain dark livery, stepped out, and threw open the rear door, without asking so much as a question. Except that the fellow stood there, looking directly toward him, his fingers on the latch, expectantly, West would not have known that he was wanted. Yet it was all so obvious he could not question. Silently he picked up his bag, and stepped forward. He saw no one within, but firm in the belief that the chauffeur must have his orders, he entered blindly, the door closing instantly behind him. The curtains were drawn, the interior gloomy and indistinct, and the driver had resumed his seat, and started the motor, before West realized that he was not alone. In one corner of the wide back seat, drawn back from any possible observation from without, sat a woman.

At first glance he could only barely distinguish the outlines of her figure, dimly discernible against the dark background of the upholstery, but, as his eyes accustomed themselves to the faint light, her features also became dimly visible—enough so, at least, to convince him that she was young. Neither spoke for some moments, while the automobile gathered speed, and West had an uncomfortable feeling that the lady was watching him with great intentness. He could only quietly await her explanation of this strange situation. The delay was not a long one. She laughed, nervously perhaps, yet with a sense of humor at the awkward position.



"We Are to Be Either Friends or Enemies."

"Quite melodramatic, is it not, Captain West?" she asked, in a decidedly pleasant voice. "I trust it appeals thoroughly to that disposition for adventure of which you wrote."

"Nothing more could be desired, I am sure," he confessed, surprised at her tone, and glancing toward her, "I certainly am left completely in the dark, unable even to clearly distinguish my mysterious companion in adventure."

"And there really is no longer any occasion for such concealment," She lifted the heavy curtain beside her, permitting the grey light to rest upon her face. "I preferred not to be seen at the park for obvious reasons; but here, alone with you, such precaution is quite unnecessary. We are to be either friends or enemies, so frankness is the best course."

He saw the face of a young woman of twenty-four, or five, with dark eyes and hair, her cheeks flushed with health and excitement, her lips smiling. It was a face of unusual attractiveness, not regular, perhaps, in any of its features, yet filled with character, and glowing with life. He liked the girl, and believed in her.

"I can only thank you," he said, rather lamely. "Although I do not understand now how we could ever become enemies. Surely, that is not a threat?"

"Oh, no, it is far too true. You have yet to learn what I require. Yet that was very nicely said. I take it to mean your first impression of me is not unfavorable?"

"Very far from it. I am already deeply interested in my task. If I lacked an incentive before, you have furnished it."

She laughed again softly, her eyes still on his face.

"Really, I had not anticipated such a sincere compliment. No doubt you learned these delightful speeches in France," she answered, a very faint tinge of sarcasm in the words. "However, this is a very serious matter, Captain West, and really has nothing to do with my personal appearance. I am seeking neither flirtation nor compliment; merely a trustworthy agent. First of all, it is necessary that you comprehend this."

He bowed, impressed by her manner, and somewhat ashamed of his impetuosity.

"I accept the reproof," he said quietly, "and will endeavor henceforth not to offend in any way. I am entirely at your service."

"There is no offense; I merely thought it best there should be no misunderstanding. Now, I am sure, we can proceed intelligently. Indeed, I am going to frankly confess, I also like your appearance. This mutual liking ought to be half the battle. We have quite a ride before us yet; you may question me if you wish."

"You mean I am to question you freely."

"Assuredly; while I am to remain quite as free in my answers. That is perfectly fair, is it not?"

"At least, it sounds so. Where am I being transported, then? And why the dress suit?"

His questions evidently amused, for her eyes sparkled.

"Naturally that query comes first; and especially the dress suit. You have the prejudices of your sex, I see, and without regret. I shall endeavor to reply categorically, yet with reservations. We are going to a country home, where we dine, in company with a few guests."

"I see; I am first of all to be projected into society. Are any of these guests known to me?"

"God forbid; and I may even venture to predict that you will never care to know any of them again. You are to be present as my guest, and will so be welcomed."

"I feel the honor; but would it not be well under these circumstances for me to know more clearly whose guest I am? Suppose, for instance, I had to refer to our long friendship, it would be extremely awkward not to even be able to mention your name."

"My name! Why, of course, you do not know what it is. Well, really I am not altogether certain that I do, either. We will therefore compromise on the one I am known by, which will be safer. Allow me, Captain West, to present to you Miss Natalie Coolidge."

She held out frankly a neatly gloved hand, which he as instantly took, and retained in his own, the girl making no immediate effort to withdraw it.

"This is very kind of you, Miss Coolidge," he acknowledged, adapting himself to her present mood, "But it seems there is no necessity for me to present myself. Apparently my identity is already known."

"Otherwise you would not be among those present," she admitted frankly.

"Then, I judge you have not accepted me blindly?"

"No, I have not," earnestly, and now releasing her hand, "I do not think we ever really know any one except through personal intercourse; but I do know who you are, and something of what your life thus far has been."

"But how could you? I signed no name."

She smiled, again quite at her ease.

"The box number at the club was amply sufficient. I have friends there; once possessed of your name and army rank, the department records at Washington furnished all further information. So you perceive, Captain, I am not altogether reckless. Are you interested in learning what I know?"

"I am; will you tell me?"

"Willingly," and she checked the points off on her gloved fingers. "You are Matthew West, the only son of Judge Robert Peel West, of Atlanta, Georgia. Your mother, who was of the well-known Bullock family, died when you were about fifteen, and her widowed sister has since been the housekeeper. You are a graduate of the University of Virginia, being fourth in your class in scholarship. Your engineering course was completed in Massachusetts, and you later became connected with the Wyant Contracting company, of Chicago. You were here, however, only a very brief time, making but few acquaintances, when the war broke out. You immediately entered the first officers' training school at Fort Sheridan, graduating with the rank of first lieutenant, and were assigned to a regiment of engineers, among the earliest to sail for France. While there you were wounded twice, and cited once for special gallantry in the rescue of a seriously injured private. Your last wound caused your return to the United States on a special mission, and also won you the rank of captain. Since then you have been honorably discharged, but have made no effort to resume professional work. You are twenty-six, and unmarried. Is there anything else you care to know?"

"I think not; really your agency has been most efficient. And so this review satisfied you that I was really the man you sought?"

"No, it did not wholly satisfy, but it looked promising. You were evidently courageous, and a gentleman. These qualities were essential; whether in other respects you measured up to my purpose, could only be ascertained through a personal interview. There was no other way."

"And now?" he persisted.

"Still encouraging, I must admit although the test is not yet complete. However, we are now approaching the end of our journey. Before we turn in I am going to ask a favor of you—call me Natalie."

"Natalie; that will be easy."

"And also forgive me if I fail in always addressing you formally as Captain West. I presume your friends say Matt, do they not?"

"Some have that habit."

"Then I claim also the privilege."

She bewildered him, left him in wonderment as to what she would do next, but there was scarcely time in which to answer before the speeding limousine turned abruptly into a private driveway, curving gracefully to the front of a rather imposing stone mansion, set well back from the road. Soon they were at the side entrance, and a servant, in the same unobtrusive livery as the chauffeur, was quietly opening the door. He turned and helped his companion to emerge.

"Take the gentleman's bag to the blue room, Sexton," she said calmly, "and then lay out his evening clothes."

"Yes, miss."

"I will be in the hall when you come down, Captain, but there is no hurry."

West followed the servant up the softly carpeted stairs, finding the apartment assigned him not only extremely comfortable, but even elegant in its furnishing. Evidently he was in a home of wealth and refinement. Who could this strange girl be? this Natalie Coolidge? And what could she possibly desire of him? He stood immersed in these thoughts, when Sexton spoke.

"Shall I assist you, sir?"

"No; it will not be necessary. What is the hour for dinner?"

"Seven o'clock, sir."

"I have ample time, then. That will be all."

The man retired noiselessly, closing the door after him, and West began slowly to dress, rather amused at the care he took, that all details should be as correct as possible. Unquestionably the girl interested him oddly, He endeavored to analyze what constituted her peculiar attractiveness, but without arriving at any definite conclusion. She was young, of course, and undeniably pretty, with eyes really remarkable, and a smile not to be easily forgotten. Then she was so self-poised, so confident of herself, so naturally informed. All these things had their charm, and, coupled with her undoubted beauty, left his brain in a whirl.

He was satisfactorily dressed at last, and descended the broad stairs, conscious of a thrill of expectancy; nor was he doomed to disappointment.

Miss Coolidge met him in the dimly lighted vacancy of the hall with smiling eyes of welcome. She was in evening dress, a creamy satin, revealing white shoulders, and rounded, beautifully molded arms, visible beneath folds of filmy lace. If he had dreamed the girl attractive before in the plainness of street costume, he now beheld in her a new vision of loveliness. His heart throbbed at the sight, every nerve tingling to the intimate tones of her voice. She was apparently in the highest spirits, eager to overstep all conventionality.

"Again you please me," she said, surveying him critically. "Really this is too much, the wonderful way in which you meet every test."

"You mean in clothes?"

"In everything, so far. Clothes—yes; do they not reveal the very soul of a man? I hardly think I could ever have forgiven if you had come down not looking the part you are to play."

"Nor could I have forgiven myself, if I am to enjoy the pleasure of taking you in to dinner."

"That privilege is yours even without the asking. But," quizzically, and glancing up frankly into his eyes, "You may not care when the time comes. For the great test arrives first. So, buck up, Captain, for you are going to have the shock of your life. Whatever you do, even if you feel that you are about to faint, don't, for my sake, let your face show it."

"But," he protested, "give me some warning, some opportunity to prepare for such an emergency."

"No," she laughed gaily, "there is no time; it is ordained to fall upon you like a thunderbolt. They are all in there waiting for us now. You will offer me your arm."

He accompanied her, amused, yet bewildered, through the wide archway into the more brilliantly lighted drawing room. It was a magnificent apartment, containing a half dozen people. The one nearest the entrance was a man of middle age, exceedingly pompous and dignified, who immediately arose to his feet, expectantly. Miss Coolidge cordially extended her hand in greeting.

"So glad to learn you could be out, Judge," she said, the least perceptible hesitancy in her voice. "Permit me to present Judge Cable, of the Supreme court; Captain West, my fiance."

CHAPTER II

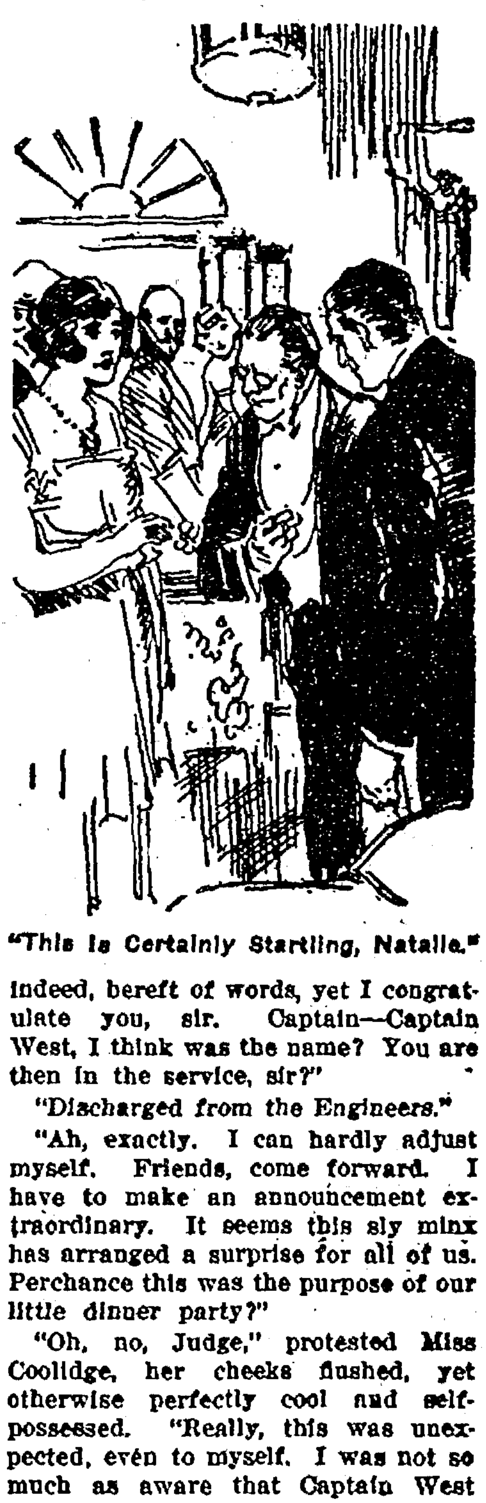
Miss Coolidge Explains.

For an instant West was absolutely helpless to assert himself. The calm assurance of the girl's voice in this unexpected introduction left his brain paralyzed with bewilderment. Yet his features did not betray his condition, nor did he entirely lose control over himself. Fortunately he was not compelled to speak, as Cable voiced his own surprise fluently.

"Well, well," he exclaimed. "This is certainly startling, Natalie. I am, indeed, bereft of words, yet I congratulate you, sir. Captain—Captain West, I think was the name? You are then in the service, sir?"

"Discharged from the Engineers."

"Ah, exactly. I can hardly adjust myself. Friends, come forward. I have to make an announcement extraordinary. It seems this sly minx has arranged a surprise for all of us. Perchance this was the purpose of our little dinner party?"



"This Is Certainly Startling, Natalie."

"Oh, no, Judge," protested Miss Coolidge, her cheeks flushed, yet otherwise perfectly cool and self-possessed. "Really, this was unexpected, even to myself. I was not so much as aware that Captain West was in the city until a very short time ago. I am sure he will bear me out in this statement."

"I could not do otherwise, and be truthful," West felt compelled to admit.

"But what is this all about?" asked a female voice eagerly. "Remember we have not heard, Judge Cable."

"It is my pleasure then," he said gallantly, bowing, and at once instituting himself as master of ceremonies, "to introduce to you, Miss Natalie's fiance, Captain West—Mrs. Lonsdale, Professor Scott, Miss Margaret Willis, Colonel LeFranc, Mrs. Wilber Somers. Possibly there may be no necessity of my presenting the next gentleman—Mr. Percival Coolidge."

"Oh, but there is," the last mentioned interposed, a tall, rather portly man, with grey hair and mustache, "I must confess this is as much a surprise to me as to any one present. However," he grasped West's hand with apparent cordiality, "I hasten to add my congratulations, and to wish Natalie all the happiness possible."

The group slowly broke up, the members still discussing the undoubted surprise of this announcement. West found himself confronting Colonel LeFrance and Percival Coolidge, the latter instantly engaging him in conversation, evidently seeking more definite information.

"This engagement with my niece," he said uneasily, "must have been rather sudden? Even your name is quite unfamiliar to me."

"It was, indeed," admitted West, who had now completely recovered his nerve, and even begun to enjoy the situation. "Since my return from abroad."

"You were with the army in France?"

"In an engineer regiment. I have been in America only two weeks."

"Ah, indeed. And this is your home?"

Realizing that the elder Coolidge was diligently searching for information, West decided the best method would be a full confession.

"Oh, no," he said candidly, "I am from the South—Atlanta, Georgia. My father is a district judge, Robert Peel West, quite widely known, and my mother belonged to the Bullock family. I am a graduate of the University of Virginia, and also of the Massachusetts Polytechnic. Before the war I was connected for a short time with a well-known firm of engineers in this city, but, since my return, I have not resumed professional work. Having been wounded in France, I have felt entitled to a little rest after my return."

"Quite interesting, I am sure." Coolidge turned to the colonel. "You are southern also, I believe?"

"Very much so," was the quick response. "And I chance to know the name of Judge West rather well. I congratulate your niece on her choice of a life companion. There is no better blood in Georgia."

West passed the ensuing evening rather pleasantly, although obliged to be always on his guard against any incautious remark. Mr. Percival Coolidge was outwardly cordial enough, yet his manner continued distinctly reserved, and somewhat cold. West, however, attributed this largely to the nature of the man, and finally dismissed the thought from his mind altogether. The person who continued to puzzle him most was Natalie Coolidge, nor was he able to approach her in any way so as to obtain a whispered private word of guidance. He ventured upon thin ice once or twice most carefully, but the information obtained was infinitesimal, although it bore to some extent on the problem confronting him. The colonel innocently lifted the veil slightly, permitting him to learn that this was a week-end party, and that Miss Coolidge was the mistress of the place, her parents having been dead for two years. Percival Coolidge, her father's brother, and a manufacturer in the city, was her guardian, and the affairs of the estate were not yet entirely liquidated. Beyond this he apparently knew nothing of the family history, which he felt at liberty to communicate.

West was assigned to escort Miss Willis, a tall willowy blonde, and quite talkative, into dinner, but her conversation ran largely to the theatrical offerings in town, and he found it impossible to change her trend of thought into other channels. Once the smiling Natalie appealed to him, familiarly calling him "Matt" across the table, and he responded with equal intimacy, yet her eyes avoided his, and it was plainly evident to his self-consciousness, that her remark was merely part of the play. More and more her actions mystified and perplexed; he could not discover the key to her hidden motive, or guess at her purpose in this masquerade. Nothing remained but for him to go quietly forward, playing the part assigned. She coolly and deliberately defeated every effort he made to get her alone, and yet this was accomplished in a manner so as not to attract the attention of others. Even Percival Coolidge, who, West felt, was watching them both shrewdly, never suspected the quiet game of hide and seek being played under his very eyes. As the evening progressed West became almost convinced that Natalie's principal object was to deceive this gentleman; that she really cared nothing for what the others might think, or say. It was all a masterpiece of acting, so exceedingly well done, as to finally convince the young man that she was greatly in earnest as to its success. She desired Percival Coolidge to have no lingering doubt of her engagement. And, finding all opportunity of explanation denied him, West yielded to the inevitable, and, for the evening at least, silently accepted his fate.

Nor did circumstances favor him when the company finally broke up, and retired for the night. He had thought this moment might be propitious, but she calmly outgeneraled him again, suddenly bidding the men remain and smoke as long as they pleased, and disappearing herself up the stairway with Miss Willis. West, convinced that her retirement was final, soon sought his own room. It was eleven o'clock of a bright, moonlight night, and, feeling in no degree sleepy, he seated himself at the window to finish his cigar. Again and again his mind reviewed the strange events of the evening, unable to arrive at any definite conclusion. The harder he sought to delve into the mystery, the more obscure it became.

He had, indeed, reached some conclusions already. These might not be correct, yet they were already implanted in his mind. The guests of the night were mere puppets, having no real connection with the game being played, utterly ignorant of what was going on behind the scenes. The only one present having any real part was Percival Coolidge, and West had taken an instinctive dislike to this man. Only one explanation flashed into his mind to account for Miss Coolidge's unexpected announcement of an engagement between them—this would excuse any future intimacy; would enable them to meet alone freely without arousing comment. This appealed to him as the most reasonable explanation of the situation. But beyond this vague guess, it was impossible to delve.

KANAWHA-BELMOND GAME HERE ON FRIDAY

Farmers Buy High Grade Dairy Stock

Purchase Fifty Head Of High Grade Animals From Wisconsin And Minnesota.

PAY FROM $75 TO $105 EACH

Five progressive farmers of this locality, Guy Baker, Glenn Baker, Jas. Kurtz, Ralph Jenison and Mike Luick, Jr., returned the first of the week from Minnesota and Wisconsin where they had been to purchase high grade dairy stock. They bro't back three carloads of fine dairy cattle to add to their herds. Luick and Kurtz bought a carload of Guernseys while the two Bakers and Jenison bought Holsteins, all of them of both breeds the best they could get. They paid from $75.00 to $105.00 apiece for the animals, and they got real ones.

Part of the stock was purchased at Wilton, Wisconsin, and half a carload at Dover, Minnesota. They brought back in all 50 head, 24 of Guernseys and 26 Holsteins. Kurtz took 15 of the Guernseys and the balance were Luick's. Glen Baker took ten Holsteins, Guy eight, and Jenison eight. One full blood bull was purchased by Kurtz, one by Jenison, and one by the Baker brothers.

The addition of this high grade stock to the herds about Belmond is a fine thing, and the men who are improving their herds are certainly to be complimented on their move. High grade stock eats no more, costs no more to keep, and requires little more time to care for than ordinary stuff, and it brings in a far greater return. High grade dairy cows will produce an average of 10 quarts to a milking; the ordinary scrub does well to do better than half as well. The addition of more high grade animals to the herds of this vicinity would do much to add to the wealth and betterment of the farmers. The Independent hopes that the day is not far distant when there will be no scrubs in this community; better stock has always meant better farming and better living.

BELMOND NOW HAS A BROADCASTING STATION

Belmond has been placed on the Radio map with a broadcasting station, with which everything that can be sent by the larger stations of this character can be sent thru space. Caryl McIntyre last week added to his equipment a new microphone attachment, which enables him to send the human voice out into the ether. In tests conducted last Thursday morning, he talked to the Independent, and his voice came in clear, with every word distinguishable to the listener. Caryl has talked with several radio friends in other towns since then and after he has experimented further with it there seems little doubt but what he may reach a long ways. Owing to government regulations, he cannot send over a 200 meter wave length; the broadcasting stations giving concerts all send on 360 or 485 meters; if he could "step 'er up" he could broadcast concerts the same as the rest. Caryl is fast becoming an expert in the radio line, and now has one of the most complete receiving stations and amateur sending stations in the middle west.

CAR "RUNS AWAY"

Last Friday, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Cook stopped at the creamery to deliver their cream. Mr. Cook got out of the car to take the cans in and when he did so the car started down the incline to the driveway. Mrs. Cook pushed down on the foot brake but it did not hold and the car hit an electrolier with sufficient force to knock it down, breaking the casting at the base, the large globe and the bulb.

This is not the first car that has "run away" down this incline but the others have been fortunate in not hitting anyone or anything.—Reporter.

MESERVEY DOCTOR HELD UP

Sunday evening while driving an auto, accompanied by a patient, on the highway four miles north of Alexander, Dr. F. S. Alger, of Meservey, was the victim of an attempted hold-up. Two men approached his car and thinking they wanted assistance of some kind he stopped the machine but did not throw the engine out of gear. One of the men thrust a shotgun under the doctor's nose and his companion told him to hold up his hands. However, instead of complying to the request the brave country physician pushed the gun away with his left hand, stepped on the accelerator and speeded away.

The would be hold ups fired one shot at the disappearing car. Dr. Agler says that his patient, a woman, fainted at the sight of the gun but he was so busy getting away from the bandits that he did not give her any attention until he was certain that he had reached a safety zone.—Hampton Recorder.

FIRST SUGAR TURNED OUT BY FACTORY

Campaign Now In Force And Beets Coming Rapidly—Of Fine Quality Too.

The first sugar of the 1922 campaign of the Belmond sugar factory was turned out yesterday, Wednesday. This sugar was standard stuff, fit for the market. Other sugar has been made since the plant began operations this fall, but it was not up to standard and was turned back. The plant is now running continuously night and day. The force is not yet quite up to requirements, a few more men being needed, but sufficient are on hand to nicely operate the plant at present. The factory is not running to capacity as yet, and probably will not be for a few days. The beets are coming in by carloads, and in the immediate vicinity are being hauled by wagon. They are of very good size and quality, and altho the acreage this year was not as large as that of the first campaign, yet it is believed the yield will very nearly equal the first campaign's.

DIES ON CALIFORNIA TRIP

Word was received Tuesday by the Martin families of the sudden death of A. D. Martin, brother of S. D. Martin. Mr. and Mrs. Martin were on their way to California, after a visit with the Martin families here but a few weeks ago, by auto. They had gotten as far as Albuquerque, New Mexico. There Mrs. Martin, who is an invalid and for whose health the trip was being made, had been in the hospital for some time, and as soon as she was better they were to continue their journey. It is not known whether they had started on the rest of their trip or not, the message announcing his death coming from Albuquerque. He will be buried at Aurora, Illinois.

FOOTBALL FRIDAY WITH KANAWHA TEAM

The first football game of the season scheduled for last Friday with the Britt team was postponed on account of the rain. A game has been arranged for this week Friday with Kanawha, which will make it the first game for the local school. Come out to the game and give the boys a proper send off.

PRIZE OFFERED FOR MOST SUGAR BEETS

The Independent offers to the man who grows the largest number of sugar beets to the acre, one hundred letter heads and one hundred envelopes to match, printed to order. This offer is made for just one purpose, to do what can be done toward encouraging the raising of sugar beets. It is in line with that of the State bank, which offers $5.00 to the one who raises the largest beet. The one who raises the most beets per acre will be determined from the records of the Iowa Valley Operating company as soon as the acreage has been figured.

$1,000 DAMAGE CASE FROM BELMOND UP

Former Nightwatch Sued For Damages For Alleged Assault Year Ago Here.

A $1,000 damage case from Belmond has occupied the attention of the court since Monday and will probably be concluded today (Wednesday). Danny Solazza brings action against H. Rierson, who as marshal is alleged to have abused the plaintiff while placing him under arrest a year or more ago.

The grand jury completed its labors Tuesday afternoon, having been in session most of the time for two weeks. Several indictments were returned, three being made public. Thos. Merris of Woolstock is held on the charge of obtaining goods under false pretenses; Julius Puls of Eagle Grove, a shop striker, who is charged with an attempt to burn the home of Frank Fisher, a strike breaker; J. D. Longworth of Storm Lake is held to answer the charge of carrying concealed weapons. He is a man nearly fifty years of age and was paying attentions to a young girl in Eagle Grove, yet in her teens, when her parents objected. Longworth is said to have pulled a gun and made dire threats. This affair took place at the Fort Dodge fair, where the parents of the girl had followed them. The members of the grand jury are as follows, the first named being foreman: D. McBride, A. W. Moseley, H. J. Whitten, J. H. Meyer, Albert Schroeder, James Flurer, J. H. Mechem.

After being in session three days last week Judge McCall adjourned court until Monday of this week. The time was spent in hearing defaults and arranging business for the balance of the term. The third week of the term has been set aside for the trial of criminal cases of which there are twenty or more in addition to any new ones the grand jury may create.

For the purpose of dividing the estate the court has ordered 120 acres of land in Norway township sold, thus granting the petition of Chas. Reese vs. Gertrude Busse et al. D. W. Stewart, D. H. Eyler and J. T. Jensen have been appointed appraisers of the land which is located in Section 24 Norway township. Chas. Birdsall, who was named referee, is directed to sell the real estate at public or private sale. The land has been appraised at $20,000 since the above was written.

State aid to the amount of $2,088 was received the past week to be used for the standardizing of the schools of the county.—Monitor.

Marriage licenses were issued the past week to George Smith and Mattie Pals of Belmond, Alvin Engstrom of Renwick and Katherine Beatrice Campbell of Goldfield, Eugene A. Jones and Gertrude Reasoner of Dows.

Clyde Blau of Alexander and T. A. Davenport had a collision with their autos last week on the road east of town. Little damage was done to either car.

TWO SAVED FROM DEATH IN FLAMES AT GOODELL

At about 9 o'clock Monday night, Mrs. Buer living in the south part of Goodell noticed flames and smoke coming from the roof of Minton Cline's residence, knowing that Mrs. Cline and her 6 year old grandson were alone, she at once gave the alarm The two were found asleep and nearly overcome with smoke. They escaped in their night clothes.

The chemical fire engine was promptly on the scene and smothered the fire out, saving the main part of the building, the kitchen and the porch were burned.

The loss was covered by insurance. Mr. Cline was out in the country at the time doing chores for a farmer who is away on a vacation.

OBITUARY

Little Adeline Kessler, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Kessler, passed away Friday morning, October 6th, at the age of only nine months. She was born on January 7th, and thus covered only a brief span of life. Yet that brief span fitted in most perfectly with the plan of the Almighty and Allwise Creator. She was laid to rest Sunday afternoon in the Franklin Grove cemetery. "Except ye become as little children ye shall in nowise enter the Kingdom of Heaven."

We need love's tender lessons taught
As only weakness can;
God hath his small interpreters;
The child must teach the man.
Of such Thy kingdom Teach then us
O Master most divine,
To feel the deep significance
Of these wise words of thine.
The haughty eye shall seek in vain
What innocence beholds;
No cunning finds the key of heaven,
No strength its gate unfolds.
Alone to goodness and to love
This gate shall open fall;
The mind of pride is nothingness,
The childlike heart is all.

WORLD'S SERIES GOES TO GIANTS, FOUR STRAIGHT

America's annual classic, the well known world's series, went to the New York Giants, who walked on the Yankees for four straight games, if you don't count the second game of the series, which was a tie. The Independent received each game play by play over the radio, and entertained a large number of local fans each afternoon while the series was on. The games were received in detail, play by play, balls, strikes, fowl balls, put outs and runs, and was highly interesting. The local crowd was 99 per cent Yankee in sentiment and thruout the games were on edge waiting for the radio to announce that "'Babe" Ruth gets a home run!" Nothing of the sort occured, however; the Giants completely outclassed the Yankees from beginning to end.

Many fine concerts are being heard over the radio receiving station of the Independent and the Belmond Storage Battery company. The recent stations heard have been Fort Worth, Texas. Wicita, Kansas, and Denver, Colorado. While listening in to Fort Worth the other evening, a Mr. Grant asked if Tulsa, Oklahoma, was listening, and requested that if so they tell his mother that he would be unable to be home to dinner with her Sunday. Many unusal things are caught. Saturday the foot ball game between Ames and Coe was received play by play. The game was broadcasted from the field of play, and the cheers of the crowd, the yells of the two colleges, were plainly audible. If you haven't listened in yet, just call either the editor or Joe Scott, who will gladly arrange for you to hear a fine concert any evening.

COMMUNITY CLUB'S ANNUAL RECEPTION FOR TEACHERS

The Community Welfare club will hold its annual reception for the teachers of the Belmond schools this (Thursday) evening, at the public library, the reception to take place at eight o'clock. Everyone is cordially invited to be present and meet the teachers who are on the faculty this year. A good time is assured by the committee in charge.

First Foot Ball Game Here Then

First Game Postponed On Account Of Rain—Kanawha To Be First Game.

COME OUT AND SEE IT OFF

The first football game which was scheduled for last Friday with Britt, was postponed on account of the rain.

A game will be held against Kanawha next Friday, October 13, at 3:20 on the local field. This will be the first game of the season and a large crowd is expected. Everyone is invited to come out and boost for B. H. S.

No school was held last Thursday and Friday because of the Teachers' Institute at Clarion. All the local teachers attended.

The Senior Normal Training class attended the teachers' institute at Clarion.

The first Literary program of the year was given Monday, Oct. 9, at 3:20 by Division I. A very interesting program was given. The next program will be held Oct. 20, by Division II. Everyone is cordially invited to attend. The following football program will be rendered:

This is fire prevention week and fire drills are in order.

The call for "debaters" has been issued. We are in hopes that we may work up a winning team.

The six weeks examinations are being held this week at the high school and in the grades.

Grant Chapman is absent from the 6th grade on acount of sickness.

Viola Quigley visited the 4th grade Monday Oct. 9.

On Teusdauy evening of last week Miss Jewel entertained the members of the Commercial department at a picnic at Tyrrell Park. The last course was a large kettle of fudge which apparantly was much enjoyed.

Miss Jewel's mother and father, brother and wife drove up from Waterloo to visit her Monday night.

The Junior class have taken over the ticket sale for the lecture course this winter. Next week they will be put on the campaign so be prepared when their representatives visit you.

This year we have the best talent for the lecture course that we have ever had. Belmond does not have a chautauqua, but surely we can support a lecture course.

CAR TURNS OVER—UNHURT

A. Loning, residing west of town, was the victim of a lucky accident last Saturday afternoon, when he escaped without injury an automobile mishap. He was driving home and as he crossed the town bridge his car became unmanageable, going over the grade into the ditch at the side of the pavement, about 15 feet, and turning over into the barb wire fence. The car turned over. pinning him beneath it. Fuller Bailey, who happened along just then, extricated him. He escaped with but a few minor scratches and bruises.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

INSPECT YOUR CHIMNEY

The wise householder right now is the one who gives his chimneys and smokepipes a thoro inspection. Cold weather will soon be with us, and big fires will be built. Are your chimneys and smokepipes in shape? The first big fire may cost you a good deal more than the time necessary to look things over first. Pipes especially if they are of metal will rust and corrode, and the big blaze you build when the cold snap hits may go right thru. Look them over now; an ounce of prevention may be seemingly unnecessary, but the big blaze which may result later will make it seem mighty small.

LET GEORGE DO IT

Everybody of course has their own ideas as to how this or that or the other should be run; the city officials should do this, and the school board ought to do that, and the fire company has a plain duty in the other, or this business man or that professional man or that teacher is this, that or the other. You've heard 'em—and you've doubtless done it too. That's all right; everyone has a perfect right to their own opinions and ideas—it would be a poor world if they didn't—but why, if they have them, don't they take them where they'll do some good? Why do they invariably, if they have a brick to throw, bring said piece of building material to the newspaper to do the heaving act for them? The whole idea appears to be that they know just how it should be done, but they don't want to take the responsibility of starting something. So they pick on the newspaper—"Let George do it." That may be reasonable enough in some ways, but did you ever hear of a newspaper named George?

BROOKHART

The papers the state over, weekly, semi-weekly and daily, are more or less filled with "dope" and opinions on Brookhart, the republican nominee for U. S. Senator. For and not for, favorable, unfavorable and otherwise, democratic, republican and socialist. Brookhart has been, is being and probably will continue to be, called everything in the English vocabulary. He's a socialist, a non partisan, I. W. W., radical, socialist and plain nutt. Somehow, mid all this flurry, fuss and flopping around over Brookhart, one gathers the idea that there is a tremendous amount of jealousy, personal bitterness, fear, and politics mixed in the mess, and a little honest opinion too.

The Independent has not mixed in politics much, and does not intend to either, but just viewing things from the sidelines, so to speak, desires to ask one question: If Brookhart was chosen by a majority at the primary, where people are supposed to have a little say as to who they want to be governed by, then why all this fuss and bolting? The Indepenaent is neither republican nor democrat, its' politics is absolutely independent of strict party lines, and it is not boosting either Brookhart, the republican nominee, or Herring, the democratic choice. But it would like to see the people have a say in those things which concern them, such as this. To read the spiels put forth upon the autumn breeze by some of the most rabid of the politicians of the state, one would be lead to think that the people—so bloomin' handy at certain times—really do not know enough to vote, are incapable of deciding what they want.

The trouble with Iowa is not so much too much Brookhart as it is too much politics.

Last Sunday evening when Guy Work was returning home from Belmond, his horse and buggy were struck by an auto, knocking the horse down and overturing the buggy. Guy went down with his "ship," receiving a badly sprained shoulder, but fortunately no bones were broken. The horse received a few bruises but is coming along fine. The auto was a large one containing four men unknown to Mr. Work. They never stopped to see what damage they had done or to offer assistance—Kanawha Reporter.

An Essex touring car with license numbers removed and gasoline tank drained was found burned up on an unfrequented road southwest of the city on Saturday. As yet the owner of the car has not been found ad it is thought that the car was stolen and then saturated with gasoline and set on fire to hide its identity. Saturday afternoon, Chief of Police Reynolds and Scotty Ellsworth drove out with a truck and returned with the car, which is being held by the police for investigation. The engine and factory numbers have been sent to the state house at Des Moines to determine the owner of the car.—Eagle Grove Times.

Rev. Charles Elmer Chapler, former pasor of the Methodist church was calling on friends here Wednesday. He is now pastor of the First M. E. church at Fort Worth, Texas.

Mr. Chapler enjoys his work in the south and has been very successful, but naturally would prefer a northern pulpit, preferably in good old Iowa. Fort Worth is an important charge. The city has 150,000 inhabitants and his church owns 'bout $100,000 worth of property there. His many friends here were pleased to see him and glad to learn of his continued success.—Eagle.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Interesting Farm Bureau Socials

Farmers of Pleasant township spent a most enjoyable evening at the Peter Kaufman home last Monday, October 2, when the regular monthly meeting of the Pleasant township farm bureau was held at this farm home. An interesting school program arranged by Miss Grace Gartz was given, and a short address by Rev. Waalkes. A short talk was given by the county agent, after which ice cream and cake were served by the ladies of the community.

The regular monthly meeting of the Belmond township farm bureau was held at the Adolph Thompson home last Thursday evening, October 5th. An interesting program consisting of musical numbers, dialogues and recitations and an address was given. Representative Oscar Ulstad gave an interesting address at this meeting in which he brought out some interesting points with regard to the state legislature and the method of procedure in making our Iowa laws. In speaking of the farmers' interests and how they are regarded by our state legislature, he emphasized the fact that many laws which were drafted and passed at the last session of our state legislature were supported simply because they had the endorsement of the legislative committee of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation. This proves to the Iowa farmer that his interests are being cared for in the state legislature by the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, which is supposed to be, and is, their champion in all problems which have a bearing upon agriculture, the basic industry of our great country. The feature of this meeting was the serving of doughnuts and hot coffee after the evening's entertainment.

County Agent To Attend Conference

The tenth annual conference of field workers of the agricultural extension service has been called by Merle McDonald, state leader of county agents, and director R. K. Bliss of the extension service, to meet at Morrill Hall, Iowa State College, from October 17 to 20th. Our local county agent has arranged to attend one or two days of this conference. The conference begins on Tuesday, October 17, with a conference with newly appointed agents, in order to theroly acquaint them with the work. The meeting is an annual affair and brings into contact the field workers from every county in the state. The purpose of the conference is to discuss all problems of common interest to the field agents It is here that county agents have opportunity to swap notes with one another as to best methods of conducting the county agent work in the farm counties.

Twenty Dollars in Prizes

The committee in charge of the poultry department of the Clarion Corn Carnival has arranged to give prizes amounting to twenty dollars to the boys and girls of the Wright County Poultry club who make the best showing at the poultry show.

There are about fifty boys and girls in the Wright county poultry club and the committee in charge of the poultry work has decided that by giving prizes to these youngsters greater interest will be developed in the poultry work thruout the county.

The prizes as arranged by the committee for club exhibits are as follows:

$5 best bird in club exhibit
$3 best trio (2 pullets and 1 cockeral)
$2 2nd best trio
$1 3rd best trio
$3 best pullet in show
$1 2nd best pullet
.50c 3rd best
$3 best cockeral in show
$1 2nd best
.50c 3rd best

Prof. Wentz to Judge Corn

Those who are planning to exhibit corn at the Clarion Corn Carnival will be pleased to know that arrangements have been made thru the county agent office for securing Prof John B. Wentz of the farm crops department at Ames to judge the corn exhibits.

Arrangements have been made to exhibit corn at the C. L. Speight Implement building and exhibitors should enter their corn some time before six o'clock p. m. on October 17. The committee in charge of the corn exhibits has made arrangements for taking care of all entries but, of course, those who come earliest will be given the best places for their exhibits.

Professor W. H. Lapp of the poultry department at Ames has been secured as judge of the poultry exhibits. Prof. Lapp is conceded to be the best poultry judge in Iowa and those who are planning to exhibit at this show are very fortunate in having a judge with the ability that Prof. Lapp is known to have

Urge Amendment of Farm Loan Act

The farm bureau is beginning a drive to amend the federal land bank act so that the maximum of $10,000 for federal farm loans may be abolished.

President J. R. Howard of the American Farm Bureau Federation points out that March 1, 1923, will be settlement day throughout the whole country on land deals. It will be remembered that five years ago many land purchases were made so that March 1 next will hold the greatest opportunity for service which the federal land banks have had. Since it requires about sixty days to secure action on a federal farm loan application, it is contended that the legislation to be effective must be passed before January 1, 1923.

Farm bureau members in Wright county are urged to sign their names to the petitions which are being circulated throughout the county by township directors of the farm bureau, each of which has been provided with a petition directed to James R. Howard, president of the American farm bureau federation, urging him to use every effort and all the influence of the organization to have the federal farm loan act amended by raising the maximum loan to $25,000 or removing it entirely. These petitions from this county, as well as from all parts of the United States, with the farmers names attached, will be used by President Howard in presenting this matter at the special session of Congress which will be called in November in an effort to have the federal farm loan act amended.

Corn Picking Situation

An effort is being made by the county agent to furnish laborers for the corn picking work. Those who are expecting the county agent to secure corn pickers for them should make application as soon as possible because it is not always possible to secure men upon short notice. Men are beginning to come in slowly, looking for corn picking work, and if applications are made early all of those needing help can probably be accomodated.

Although no definite price for corn picking has been decided upon the matter has been discussed freely at various township farm bureau meetings and all farmers seem to agree that with the farm products selling as they are today and taking into consideration the price paid by the husker for his clothing, etc., a price of three and one-half to four cents per bushel would be reasonable for both the farmer and the corn picker. This matter has been taken up by the farm bureau in various other counties and three and one-half to four cents is the price decided upon.

Home Economics Bureau

An announcement of unusual significance to both farm and city women was made today by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, in which he said: "We have in mind to greatly strengthen the scientific work of the department as it may be related to home economics. Ultimately I have in view making home-economics work an independent bureau, ranking with the other bureaus of the department, and placing at the head of it a woman of executive ability, thorough scientific training and a broad and sympathic understanding of what is needed to make such a bureau most helpful to the women of the country."

The woman chief of this new bureau will rank with the chiefs of the other bureaus of the department of agriculture, attend the weekly conferences in the Secretary's office and thus bring the women's viewpoint into the general work of the department.

FRANKLIN CO. FARM BRINGS $390 AN ACRE

Chronicle: Franklin county land selling right now in the month of September in the year 1922 at the fabulous sum of $390 an acre! Who said that good old Iowa soil was going back? Not very many people ever thought it would, and it will not, either. Iowa land, the best on earth, is the only place in the world where a crop failure is never known. Last week, George Abbas of Osceola township sold his farm to Charles O. Ryan of Eldora at $390 an acre, and a few days later Mr. Abbas purchased the farm of Henry Weiner, also of Osceola townnship, at an even $300 an acre. The farms contain only usual improvements.

GARNER LADY AND DAUGHTER WITNESS TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

Mrs. G. R. Lockwood and daughter Gladys drove to Cresco last Friday to take Mrs. Lockwood's mother, Mrs Martha Cameron, home. They returned Sunday. On the way home when they were but a short distance from the town of Newhaven they came upon an overturned car, and underneath the car was a man, woman and child. Another man, woman and a girl were trying to lift the car that they might get the people from under the car, but this they could not do. They called to Mrs. Lockwood to rush to the nearest town for help. She stopprd at three farm houses on the way to Newhaven, but there was nobody at home at any of these places. She went on to town and there secured help for the people. She did not return to the scene of the accident, and does not know how seriously the people were hurt.

The woman was lying on the road with the side of the car across her chest. Her face was upturned and covered with blood, and Mrs. Lockwood feared she was dead. The car was a large touring car and was almost in the center of the road. Mrs. Lockwood was but a short distance behind the car and as she came over a slight rise in the road she saw it. She thinks that she reached it but a few seconds after it turned over.

IOWA TO VOTE ON BONUS AT NOVEMBER ELECTION

Twenty-two million dollars in cash will be paid to the citizens of Iowa who fought in the world war, if the soldiers' bonus act, passed by the 39 general assembly, is approved by the voters of the state at the general election this fall.

By the terms of the bonus law, every person who saw service, except those who were members of the Student Army Training Corps at the colleges, will receive pay at the rate of 50 cents a day for every day of service, the total individual bonus not to exceed $350.

Since strong bonus sentiment has been prevalent in the state ever since the close of the war, it is not thought that any possibility exists of the act being turned down by the voters this fall, says the Hampton Recorder. Numerous organizations, including both the republican and democratic parties, chambers of commerce, farmers' organizations and the state bankers' association have gone on record as favoring the bill.

The provisions of the bill state that application for the bonus shall be filed with the clerk of the district court of the county in which the applicant resides, on special forms provided by the adjutant general, such applications to be filed not later than December 31, 1924. A penalty of $500 fine and one year's imprisonment is fixed for those who make false statements regarding the service, besides the penalty of forfeiting all benefits of the act.

Under the terms of the act a "bonus board", consisting of the state treasurer, the adjutant general of the Iowa Department of the American Legion, is provided, whose duty it shall be to examine the applications, approve or disapprove them. Approved applications are submitted to the state auditor who will issue a warrent in payment of the bonus claim.

After the payment of all the approved claims, if any funds remain in the hands of the bonus board, now in excess of two millions, this sum will be used as an additional bonus for disabled veterans. All money in excess of two million dollars will be used in paying the debt acquired by the bonus bill.

To provide for the payment of the bonds issued to obtain money for the bonus, a direct annual tax sufficient to raise $1,100,000 each year for 20 years, will be levied on all taxable property in the state.

The act also provides that the husband or wife, child or children, mother, father, sisters or brothers, in the order named, and none other, shall receive the bonus due to any person who died while in service or who has died since the close of the war.

The bonus act will take effect immediately upon its adoption by the voters at the general election this fall.

In compliance with the law, the bonus act is now being published in the papers of the state, to inform the citizens of its provisions before they vote upon it this fall.

About the only congressman who looks forward to November 7 with indifference is Uncle Joe Cannon.

Whoever is the richest man in the world, nobody has given as much to the world as John D.

PEAT BOG ON FIRE

The fire in the peat beds about four miles southwest of Hayfield, which have been burning for the past three months, broke out in a dangerous blaze last week on account of the high winds and dry weather, and several gangs of men were fighting the fire to keep buildings and haystacks from catching on fire.

Three hay stacks on the C. C. Geddes farm were burned and G.P. Harper had to haul his hay to the barnyard to save it. The large set of buildings of the E. J. Newman farm were reported as being in danger Friday, but faithful work of the fire fighters kept the flames from spreading. The fire burned across plowing and fire guards by burning in the peat and then getting a start in stubble and corn fields.

Peter Trosoff, a beet worker on the Peter Green farm, was badly burned while plowing, a fire guard. He fell into a hole where the peat was burned to a depth of several feet and before he could be rescued had his arm badly burned.

Saturday's rain helped get the fire under control, but as the fire has covered an area of about 200 acres. it is difficult to keep it from spreading.

BEAT UP HIS KIDS: JAILED

William Liekweg, who lives in Ross ownship, northeast of Sheffield, was arrested last Sunday night by Sheriff Atkinson and Deputy Sheriff Millett and arranged before Judge Sharpe Monday morning on a charge of intoxication and assault and battery. Liekweg was given the limit on both charges, thirty days in jail, and he is now serving his sixty days' sentence.

Last Saturday afternoon Liekweg started drinking at his home and continued to imbibe in the intoxicants until late Sunday night. His drink was a mixture of home made wine and Jamaica ginger. Liekweg not only become drunk as a result of his drinking, but he was crazed by the alcohol and began to swear and storm around the house and finally he began to beat up his children. When he started to attack them the older childrenphoned some of the neighbors for help and when the help arrived Liekweg was amusing himself by beating his four year old son, Harold, with a shoe. When he saw that outsiders were coming to help the children he got down his shotgun and shot at his little daughter, Ella, eight years old, and barely missed her. Then he shot at one of the neighbors, shouting crazily all the while.

The children went away with the neighbors and the sheriff was called to arrest Liekweg. When he heard of this he got down another shotgun and loaded both guns, saying that he would kill the officers when they came. However, when Sheriff Atkinson and Deputy Millett arrived at the house they found Liekweg in a drunken stupor and they had no trouble in making the arrest. They brot him to town and also his two shotguns and about a quart of booze that was found in the house.

At the time of the disturbance Mrs. Liekweg, the wife and mother, was at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Floyd Shear, near Hampton, caring for Mrs. Shear, who was ill.

Liekweg was sentenced to thirty days in jail in August 1921, for beating his wife while he was drunk, but was released after twenty days on good behavior.

A BAD EXPLOSION

On Wednesday evening of last week, at about 6:30, while Crist Wendel was empting a barrel of high test gasolene into his gas plant, which is located in a room adjoining the basement at his home, the fumes ignited, causing an explosion that was heard by a number of people in different parts of town. Everything in the basement that was inflamable, caught fire, but by fast work with fire extinguishers the flames were held under control until the hosecart arrived and it was soon extinguished. Considerable damage was done to the windows, dishes, fruit, etc., by the force of the explosion. Fortunately none of the family were injured aside from the terrible shock they experienced.

Miss Billie Loats, the efficient clerk at the Hulsebus-Muller store, usually spends Sunday at her home. Circumstances made it necessary to spend last Sunday in Meservey.—No doubt someone besides her parents were lonely at Palsville.

TO MY FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS:

I want to extend to you all in this way my most sincere thanks for your help and assistance in the fire at my home. Such friendly help makes a man glad to live in a community containing that kind of people. I assure you that your assistance will never be forgotten, and I again thank you all for what you done.

CRIST WENDELL

The community program given on Saturday night by the school pupils drew a good crowd. The program was well rendered and the teachers and pupils are to be congratulated on their first efforts of this year. Rev. Schlesselman gave a very able address in plain language, and told the boys and girls that if they did not make the best of their school opportunities they would always be at the bottom like a bean in a can. He also denied that he was a descendant of the monkey family, and handed the Darwin followers some pretty hard jolts.

Word has been received from Harry T. Smith that he arrived at his old home in Maryland a week ago Saturday. He advised that the old Ford behaved well on the 1,500 mile trip which was made in less than a week. He is expected home the last of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. J D Studer and their daughter of Waseca, Minn., visited here last week at the home of their daughter Mrs. Albert Wendel, and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Muller left on the midnight train Saturday night for Harlan to attend the funeral of Mr. Muller's uncle.

OBITUARY

Miss Bertha Hartwig, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hartwig, succumbed after six weeks of illness with typhoid fever. All that loving hands could do was done in an effort to restore her health. Miss Hartwig was of a lovable disposition, attractive because of her various qualities.

Funeral services were held in the Evangelical church, attended by a large number of friends and relatives and many beautiful floral offerings were given. Rev. Yingst of Ackley had charge of the services, assisted by Rev. Schlesselman. Suitable music was rendered by a chosen quartette consisting of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Raecker, Rev. Schlesselman and Mrs. Muller. Interment was made in the Meservey cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their sympathy and help in the long illness and death of our beloved daughter, Bertha, and for the many beautiful floral offerings which were given. Your kindness will never be forgotten.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hartwig.

Miss Mary Koenen of Latimer, who has been assisting with the work at the John Ruiter home for the past few weeks, left for her home last Thursday.

Peter H. Pals was a Mason City caller last Wednesday. In the recent pumpkin contest held by Patton Bros., Clothiers, Henry Pals, son of Peter H. Pals, won second prize, receiving a five dollar sweater. The pumpkin weighed 77 1-2 pounds, which goes to show that the efforts on Henry's pumpkin growing was not futile.

TAKES MANY PRIZES

Mr. S. H. Schmalle has just returned from the Dairy Congress and Belgian Horse show at Waterloo, with ribbons as follows:

2nd on Quinperlette in aged mare class.
6th on mare in foal.
1st on June Farcuer, 3 year old mare.
Reserve Senior Champion.
Reserve Grand Champion.
7th on Lion, a 2 year old in a class of 11.
3rd on produce of dam.

There were a total of 140 horses exhibited and Mr. Schmalle feels quite proud to think that every one of his horses came home with a cash premium.

The Iowa Homestead of Oct. 5th makes special mention as follows:

Comment at the ringside regarding the way the final alignment resulted was brought out. The class was made very interesting by the manner in which June Farceur, a chestnut, owned by S. H. Schmalle, Thornton, Iowa, advanced from place to place until she stood first. Action, symmetry and excellence of feet and legs assisted her. She had a winning way with those who watched the show.

School children returning from school had a narrow escape from a bolt of lightning during the rain storm last Friday. Three of Albert Kuhler's children were driving home from school when a bolt instantly killed the horse they were driving. They were just a short distance east of the Paul Hapkey home when the flash came. They were unhurt except for severe pains in their heads, but the next morning they were as well as ever except for the scare they received.

The Way it Happens

Here is one cause of automobile collision on the county roads as it occurred in Story county: It is bad enough for one lightless auto to be traveling around in the dark, but when two of 'em try to navigate the same road, going in opposite directions, then something is bound to happen. And it happened to Merrill Severeid and Otis Eggland the other night. They ran head-on into each other. With no lights to show how the speedometer was working they evidently went beyond the speed limit. The first thing the occupants of the cars knew they had struck an immovable object and were hurtling through space with nothing to hang onto.

Merill and Otis held their seats all right, being under the steering wheel, but their unlucky passengers performed an aero flight that landed each in the other's car. Miraculously, nobody was killed, but the concusions and bumps and bruises will remind them for some time that it's dangerous to ride in an automobile on a dark night without any headlight. Yea, verily.—Story City Herald.

Wm. Ebbing was on the streets Monday with two specimens of large beets raised on his highly developed acreage on the south city limits. One specimen was left on display at the Schoonover & Zeh grocery store and one brought to the Eagle office. They weighed in the neighborhood of twenty pounds apiece.—Eagle Grove Eagle.

WHITE SOX BATTERY TO PLAY IN FORT DODGE

On Sunday, October 15th, Ray Schalk, who is classed as the greatest catcher in the base ball game today, and Blankenship, one of his pitchers, will play with Fort Dodge at Fort Dodge against Eagle Grove. Eagle Grove and Fort Dodge played a scoreless tie game of 11 innings two weeks ago, and the fans attending this game will see some mighty interesting base ball.

Lefty Wilson, the southpaw pitcher of Clarion and who has been beating the best clubs in this part of the state, will be on the mound for the Eagle Grove team.

Plans are being made to take care of a record breaking crowd at this game.

SMOKE AND FURNACE PIPES

In the fall and early winter special attention should be paid to stove pipes, furace pipes, smoke vents and flues. Where these are of metal they frequently rust, come apart or deteriorate during the summer, and when fires are started up in the fall, or they are put to a severe test during the first very cold weather, a blaze is likely to result. Now that fire prevention and safety first have become national slogans, the importance of careful supervision of heating apparatus and flues should be recognized by every good citizen, and a thoro inspection should always precede the first use of heating apparatus.

There is special need of unusually careful attention to flues, smokepipes and heating apparatus generally this season, because of the abormal fuel conditions. Millions of householders will be compelled to use soft coal who have heretofore used hard coal, and the change will necessarily introduce many serious fire hazards, unless great care is taken to see that flues and smokepipes are kept clear proper safeguards are provided for the other dangers which will develope.

Fires due to faulty furnace pipes and smokepipes have been unusually numerous this season, especially where there was dampness. Where the surface was already corroded by the heat and flames, the dampness soon rusted the metal so that a pipe which looked all right on the outside would collapse with the slightest strain. The danger of such pipes in basements, often near wooden partitions and ceilings, is evident but only an inspection would reveal the interior weakness.

These warnings should be especially emphatic as to dwellings, for basement fires are apt to get under dangerous headway before they are discovered, and when they occur at night life as well as property is endangered. Special attention should also be paid to furnace pipes and smoke vents in churches and schools, because of the large numbers of people whose lives are at risk. School boards and church trustees, working on the theory of personal responsibility for preventable fires, should pay special attention to these danger points, and if necessary, the metal smoke pipes leading from the furnace to the chimney should be replaced each year to insure safety. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of fire extinguishment.

ELECTRIC COMPANY PLANS FOR BETTER SERVICE

The Iowa Falls Electric Co. is preparing to give its patrons the best of service in the future, according to a statement from the local office Wednesday.

The company has purchased 2,000 tons of coal from the Illinois fields that will cost f. o. b. Iowa Falls, $7.30 per ton, which will be placed in storage and will only be used in case of an emergency, and they are also buying coal from the Iowa fields for their current needs, which will result in the company being in a position to maintain their services thruout the wintter, unless the transportation system breaks down entirely.

Another big improvement the company is making at the present time is the construction of the 33,000 volt line from Cedar Rapids to Iowa Falls and the new substation at the local power house, which will cost over $50,000, and this with the $25,000 spent for new stokers makes a total of $75,000 spent by the company in improvements which will not bring in one cent more revenue, but on the contrary will add about $10,000 to operating cost yearly in interest, depreciation and mantainance charges which is all expended for the betterment of service.

When this improvement is completed the city will be assured continuous light and power even if for some reason the local plant would fail to operate. This is a big thing for Iowa Falls, for in case of a flood such as city will be assured of light and city willbe assured of light and power.—Adv.

HUMBOLDT FIRE CO. NOT TO ANSWER RURAL CALLS

The Humboldt fire company while it is anxious to extend every courtesy to the farmers in the country surrounding Humboldt, must refuse to answer country calls in the future. The reason is that the equipment and fire hose is provided for by Humboldt people, and the pay of the members comes out of the city treasury. When the company answers a country call it leaves the city without protection. Further, the Humboldt equipment is not fitted for work outside the waterworks limits and the company with the present equipment can do little good at a country fire. The company has, however, a proposition to make to the four townships surrounding Humboldt. It is that they join and buy a truck with a chemical equipment of tanks and ladders for use in fighting country fires. The Humboldt fire department will store and keep this equipment in order all ready for use whenever called. When there is a fire in the country certain members of the company will be designated to fight the fire, while the other members of the company will remain in Humboldt to man this equipment and fight any fire that might occur here. The Case and The Girl

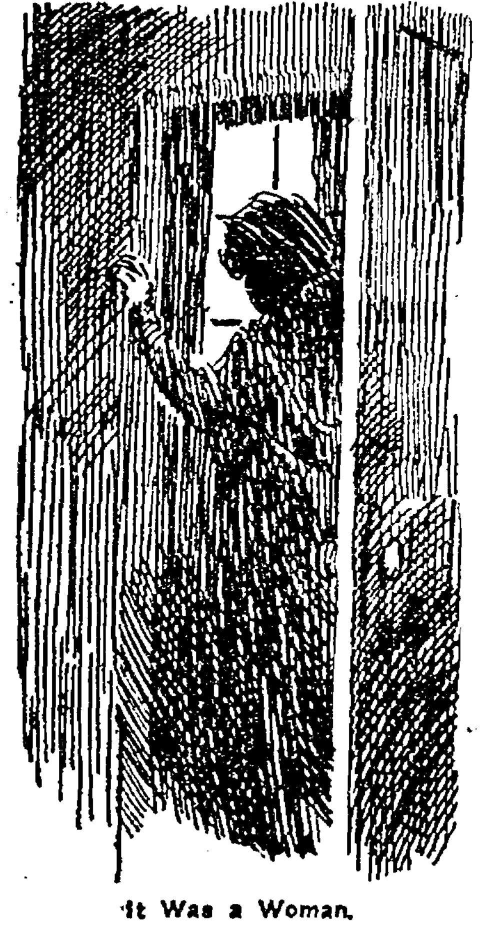
by Randall Parrish

COPYRIGHT 1922 by ALFRED A. KNOPF INC.

Tired by the uselessness of such thinking West finally sought the bed, and must have slept, although scarcely aware that he had closed his eyes. Some slight noise aroused him. The door leading into the hall, which he had failed to lock, stood partially ajar, and his eyes caught the vague glimpse of a figure gliding swiftly through the opening. With one bound he was upon his feet, springing recklessly forward. The hall was dark, but for a patch of moonlight at the further end. Against this he caught an instant, flitting glimpse of the intruder. It was a woman, yet even as his eyes told him this, she seemed to vanish into thin air—the hall was empty.

Vague and indistinct as was that fleeting vision in the moonlight, West felt no doubt as to the identity of his visitor—the woman was Natalie Coolidge. His one glimpse of her vanishing figure assured him of this fact, and he drew back instantly, unwilling to follow. Where she had gone he neither knew, nor cared. She had come to his room secretly, supposing him asleep, and this surprising knowledge dominated his mind. What could such an act mean? There was mystery here, at least, a mystery beyond his power of discernment. However, this recognition rather hardened him to his task, than otherwise.



It Was a Woman.

This time he locked the outer door carefully, and lay down on the bed, wondering if there would be any further developments. As he attempted to think, he was listening eagerly for the slightest sound of movement in the hall. There was none. He could only wait, and watch for the next move. Perhaps the morning would bring full explanation. With this conception in his mind, his head sought the pillow, and he lapsed into unconsciousness.

The long training of army service caused West to awaken early, while the house was yet quiet, but with the dawn already red in the east. He crossed to the window, and looked out, caught the flutter of a white skirt, and realized instantly that, early as the hour was, Natalie Coolidge was already up and about. He wondered if her presence might not be an invitation for him? Perhaps she had deliberately chosen this early hour, before the others awoke, to explain her strange conduct of the previous evening? At least, here was an opportunity to see and talk with her alone.

He dressed swiftly, and slipped noiselessly downstairs, unlocking the front door, and emerging into the fresh air, without encountering any stray members of the household. He passed beyond a vine-draped arbor before she realized his approach, and straightened up, welcoming him with a little laugh, her eyes full of demure mischief.

"I rather suspected army discipline had not entirely worn off," she said pleasantly, "and that you might still prove to be an early riser."

"And does this expectation account for your presence?"

"Not wholly; it has become a habit with me. However, I promised to be very frank with you, did I not? Then I will begin now; this morning I really hoped I might see you for a moment before the others were stirring—we have so much to talk about."

"It certainly seems so to me," he responded honestly, yet not greatly encouraged by the amusement in her eyes. "Surely you cannot expect real service when given so blindly?"

"No, I do not. I mean to trust you fully. It is the only way; but do you still truly wish to serve?"

"I am enlisted in the cause without reserve," he insisted warmly. "While I learned but little last evening, that little was enough to convince me there is something strange under the surface. Your calling me to your assistance is no joke—you actually need me."

"I need some one on whose judgment and courage I can rely," she answered earnestly, "and I believe now that you are the one. It is rather an odd situation, Captain West, but the circumstances surely justify my action. Perhaps I shall have time to partly explain now."

She seemingly found it difficult to begin her story. The flush deepened on her cheeks, and her lips parted.

"It really seems so ridiculous," she explained at last desperately. "Almost like a dream of fancy, and I hardly know how to put the situation into words. If I were ten years younger I would almost be convinced myself that it was all imaginary, yet everything I tell you is true. I wonder if you will believe me?"

"Do not question that. I realize fully your earnestness."

"Yet I am going to test your credulity, just the same. Those people you met last evening have nothing to do with the story—none of them, at least, unless it may possibly be Percival Coolidge. I am rather afraid of him; I always have been. I believe he knows what all this trouble means, but I do not dare go and talk with him about it. That is really what is the matter, I suppose—there is no one I can talk to; they would only laugh at me.

"My father was Steven Coolidge, and was very wealthy. He did not marry until late in life, and, I have reason to believe it was a great disappointment to his brother Percival that a child was born. Perhaps I ought not to make such a statement, but much has occurred to impress me with his dislike—"

"He is your guardian?"

"Yes; you learned that last night?"

"From the colonel; he seemed to enjoy talking, and naturally, I was curious. Has Percival Coolidge wealth of his own?"

"Only what my father left him, which was a considerable sum, and a limited interest in the business. He was very much dissatisfied with his share. Before I was born he had confidently expected to inherit everything."

"The estate then is not settled?"

"Not until I am twenty-five; within a few days now."

"And your mother?"

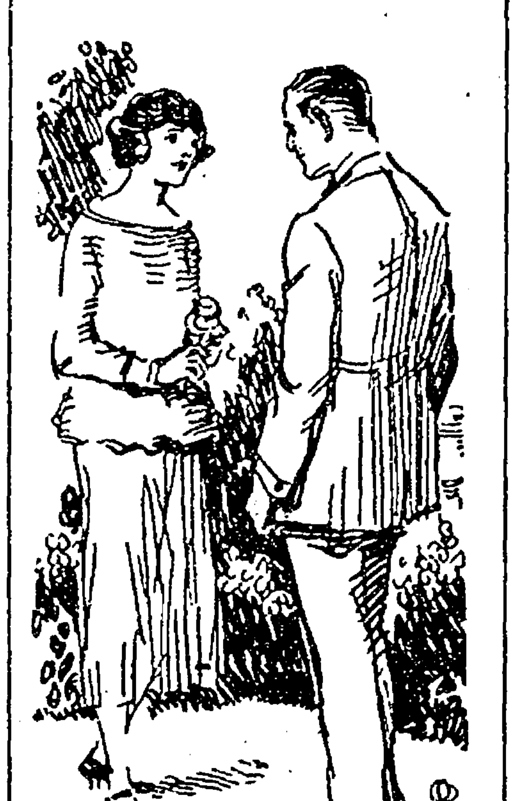
"She died at my birth."

West leaned forward eagerly. "It is the estate then that troubles you?" he asked swiftly. "You imagine it has wasted?"

"No, not at all. They tell me it has increased in value. Percival Coolidge is a good business man, but something strange is going on behind the scenes. I seem to be fighting against a ghost."

"A ghost!"

"Yes; now don't laugh at me! Do you suppose I would ever have done anything as reckless as advertising for help if I had not been actually desperate? Can you imagine a respectable girl performing so ridiculous an act, as putting her whole trust in a stranger, inviting him to her home, introducing him as her promised husband to her relatives and friends? Why, it almost proves me crazed, and, in a measure, I think I must be. But it is because I have exhausted all ordinary methods. I do not seem to be opposing anything of flesh and blood; I am fighting against shadows. I cannot even explain my predicament to another."



"A Ghost!"

"You must try," he insisted firmly, affected by her evident distress. "I must be told everything if I am to be of any value. A half way confidence can accomplish nothing."

"But it sounds so foolish; I am being haunted! I know that, yet that is all I do know."

"Haunted, in what way?"

"I do not even know that; but by a woman, I think—a woman who must strangely resemble me. She pretends to be me—to my friends, to my servants, at my bank. I never see the creature, but I hear of her from others. She has actually drawn checks in my name, imitating my signature, and having them cashed by clerks who know me well. I am constantly reported as being seen at restaurants and hotels where I have not been, and with parties I do not know. This has been going on for a month now. I have endeavored to discuss the situation with a few people, but they only laugh at the strange idea. No one will listen to me seriously."

"And you conceived the thought that perhaps a total stranger might prove more sympathetic?"

"Yes," she admitted, "if he was young and adventurous; provided I interested him at all. It would seem to offer me a chance; and then, if unknown to the party impersonating me, such a one might learn the truth unsuspected. Do you believe me, Captain?"

"I have no reason to doubt what you say. I mean to do my very best to uncover the mystery. You have these fraudulent checks?"

"Yes; one was returned to me only yesterday."

"I shall want them, together with one you drew yourself. You do not mind if I ask you one or two rather direct personal questions?"

"Assuredly not."

"What caused you to announce our engagement?"

She laughed, but from sudden embarrassment.

"It was silly, wasn't it! Really I do not exactly know; a sudden impulse, and the words were spoken. It occurred to me that our intimacy could be accounted for in no other way."

"So I supposed. Well, there is no harm done, but now, you understand, we must play out the game."

"Play it out?"

"Surely; act natural, permit no suspicion to be aroused. Even if I should feel impelled by duty, to kiss you, it is my privilege."

"Why—why, you cannot mean that!"

"Oh, but I do. This is no threat that I shall insist on carrying the matter to such an extreme, yet I must insist on the right if it becomes necessary."

Her eyes fell, the breath pulsing between her lips.

"I am not afraid," she said rather proudly. "Yes, I will play the game."

"Good! I knew you would. And now for the second question; why did you come to my room last night?"

She stared at him incredulously.

"Your room! I come to your room! Assuredly no; what can you mean?"

"Then it must be that I have already encountered the ghost," he declared smilingly. "For the very counterpart of you certainly visited me. I had a clear view of her. I would have sworn she was you."

"A woman?"

"Absolutely a woman; flesh and blood, no doubt as to that."

"When was this?"

"After midnight."

"It was not I, Captain West; please believe that—but hush; there comes Percival Coolidge!"

CHAPTER III

West Wins the First Hand.

The newcomer stood at the edge of the front steps, and paused long enough to light a cigarette before descending. His features were as clear cut as though done in marble, and about as expressive. For the first time, in the glare of the bright morning light, West took stock of the fellow, and realized his true nature. Instinctively he felt that here was the particular antagonist he was to be pitted against. His companion must have sensed the same fact, for she swiftly drew back beneath the shadow of the vines.

"You meet him," she whispered, "alone. I would rather he did not find us together."

She had vanished before he could interpose, slipping away so noiselessly, he was scarcely aware of her swift action. Coolidge strolled on, the blue smoke of the cigarette marking his progress. West stepped carelessly forth from the concealment of the vines, watchful for any change of expression on the face of the other. There was none, not even a look of surprise, or a tightening of the lip.

"Ah! Captain," he said easily, tossing his stub aside, and drawing forth his case for another. "Glorious air this morning; the advantage of early rising; you indulge, I presume?"

"An army habit, I mean to do away with later. Thanks. I suppose breakfast is not ready?"

"Hardly yet," glancing about inquiringly. "My niece is usually out here at this hour, which accounts for my venturing forth. She is not here?"

"Not now, although there are evidences that she has been," indicating the gloves and pruning shears visible beside the walk. "We must have arrived too late."

"So it seems. You are aware of who I am, I presume? the position I hold relative to her property?"

"Certainly; you are her uncle and guardian. Under the terms of the will you remain in full control until she is twenty-five, now almost at hand, except for an annual income, payable to her monthly. Is not that the situation?"

"You have apparently made very careful inquiry," he commented with a perceptible sneer. "No doubt this was a matter of deep interest to you."

"Of some interest, I confess," acknowledged West, controlling his temper. "Although my information has not come from inquiry. Miss Natalie was kind enough to talk to me about her affairs, presupposing my interest in them. My family is far from poverty stricken, and I have a very good profession. It is quite right you should know this."

"What profession, may I ask?"

"Civil engineer."

"But not established, I imagine?"

"I had very good connections before the war. Since returning from France, I have made no effort to renew these, or seek others. I, of course, expect to do so later, and shall be in no way dependent upon Miss Coolidge's fortune."

"Although quite willing to share it, I presume?"

"I think you have insinuated that often enough," returned West, fully aroused by the insolent words and manner of the other. "Perhaps it may be well for us to have a plain understanding without further delay, Mr. Percival Coolidge. As I understand matters, you are her guardian under the special provisions of your brother's will?"

"You are perfectly right, sir, and I should have been consulted previous to this engagement," Coolidge said with dignity. "Even now it is subject to my approval."

"I think not. Your guardianship was merely a special provision of the will, with reference to the estate. So I understand, at least. At twenty-one, she became mistress of her own personal affairs, and no longer needed to consult you."

"I controlled her income."

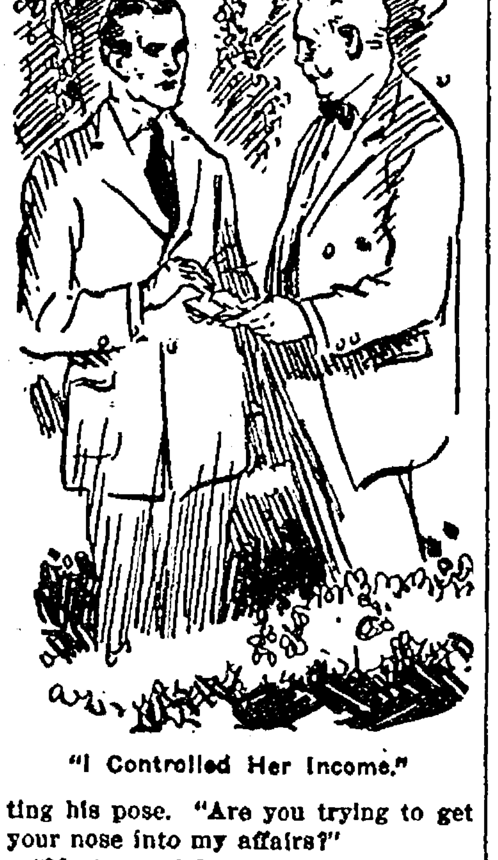
"Only the surplus; a certain sum was to be paid her each month until she was twenty-five; then the entire estate came into her possession. Beyond this you exercised no legal authority."

"You seem well posted."

"The lady herself informed me as to these facts."

Coolidge gave utterance to an oath, which burst from his lips before it could be wholly restrained.

"D—n you! Just what is your game?" he exclaimed roughly, forgetting his pose. "Are you trying to get your nose into my affairs?"



"I Controlled Her Income."

"Most certainly not," returned West coolly, yet facing the other with a steady eye. "But I may be led to investigate those of Miss Coolidge, if she should so request. It seems she possesses no one to represent her at present—not even the family lawyer."

"What do you imply by that remark?"

"That she has gone to you, and to the attorney who represents the estate, relative to some very strange occurrences of late, only to be laughed at. No effort has been made to relieve her anxiety."

"You mean that fool story about some one else pretending to be her? And you propose investigating her wild imaginings, hey? By Gad, you are going to have an interesting time."

"I hope so; at least, I am hoping to discover some truth."

"Good. I wish you well," and his tone was one of decided relief. "Your adventures ought to prove quite amusing."

Coolidge laughed heartily, the whole affair apparently taking on a new aspect, now that he felt he comprehended the real purpose of the other.

"Oh, by the way, West, you must pardon me if I send Sexton into your room for a valise I left there. You see I occupied that suite until you came. I do not know why Natalie decided to change me this time—naturally wished to reserve the best for you, I presume."

"Very kind of her, I am sure. There is Sexton now."

"Which means breakfast is served. Shall we go in?"

The two men walked slowly up the graveled path, leading to the side door. West's thoughts were busy with this new discovery. Had he inadvertently stumbled upon a clue? So he had occupied the room usually reserved for Percival Coolidge. Perhaps here was the explanation of the coming of his strange visitor. West glanced aside at the face of his unconscious companion, deciding quickly to venture a chance shot.

"Were you expecting a caller last night?" he asked calmly.

Coolidge wheeled about, startled out of his self-control.

"A caller! Of course not. What put that in your head?"

"Because I had one, in that room you say you always occupied. The visitor vanished as soon as I was seen, and the thought occurred to me just now that you might have been the one sought."

"Perfectly absurd, West! You must have had a nightmare. What did she look like."

"Oh, I only had a glimpse in the moonlight; resembled a ghost more than anything else."

"And just about what it was," with a laugh of relief. "Some dream you better forget about. Come along; they are waiting on us."

They passed up the steps together; and into the pleasant breakfast room, where the remainder of the company were already gathered. Coolidge was again perfectly at his ease, genially greeting the guests, and had apparently already dismissed the incident from his mind. But West had settled on a point which Coolidge overlooked. He had gained the very information desired. He had carefully refrained from even suggesting the sex of his mysterious visitor. Percival Coolidge knew, without being told, that the caller was a woman. Then he also knew who that woman was.

The morning meal proved delightfully informal, Natalie gracefully presiding, and apparently in the highest spirits. No intimation of anything wrong burdened those present, the single servant silently performing his duties to the constant laughing chatter of those about the table. Even Coolidge, somewhat distant at first, yielded finally to the prevailing humor, and joined freely in the conversation.

This turned at last to the plans for the day, revealing a variety of desires, which Natalie arranged to gratify. Coolidge, rather to the surprise of the lady, suggested that Natalie accompany him into the city on a special errand of mercy. At first, amid the ceaseless clatter of tongues, West was unable to grasp the nature of his plea, or her reply, but finally overheard enough to arouse his personal interest, especially when his own name was mentioned in the discussion.

"I was not aware you ever concerned yourself in such matters," she said soberly. "It must be attended to today?"

"The case is very urgent, I am told."

"But how can I leave my guests—especially Captain West?"

West leaned forward.

"Do not hesitate on my account. I can easily amuse myself; or, if there is room, and it is not disagreeable to Mr. Coolidge, I might enjoy being of the party."

"Why, of course," she coincided eagerly. "Why couldn't he come along? There will be plenty of room if I operate the car. It is a case of destitution of which Uncle Percival has just learned—a widow and three children actually suffering. Surely it can do no harm for Captain West to accompany us?"

Coolidge exhibited no enthusiasm over the proposition; indeed West felt his response almost discourteous; yet this very suspicion aroused his own desire to make one of the party. The man was not pleased with this new proposal, that was evident enough; but the niece unquestionably desired him to accept the invitation. Not only her lips, but equally her eyes, pressed the matter, and West experienced no hesitancy in saying yes.

"Why, of course I will go," he returned heartily, "and I will be ready whenever you are."

"About half an hour then."

He retired to the room upstairs, partly for the purpose of exchanging his coat, but also half tempted to make a hasty examination of the valise which Coolidge had thoughtlessly left overnight. The conception had already taken strong hold on his mind that his visitor of the evening before had been the mysterious impersonator of Natalie Coolidge; and that she had come there with some deliberate purpose—no doubt a secret conference with Percival.

For what purpose? To West's mind only one object appeared probable. The man was too far advanced in life—certainly much above sixty from his appearance—to be involved in a love affair with so young and attractive a woman. Some other purpose, demanding immediate attention, must furnish the reason for her venturing to enter this house at such an hour, and coming directly to the room where she supposed Coolidge to be sleeping. To West's mind there could be but one answer. The two were mutually involved in a conspiracy of some nature, undoubtedly connected with the approaching settlement of the Coolidge estate. This girl, so strangely resembling Natalie, had in some way been discovered by the scheming guardian, who was now using her for his own selfish ends. She had been selected, and trained to act a part—the part of Natalie Coolidge. Her ability to deceive had been tested in various ways. Now the moment approached when they were ready to play out the real game. Yet the nature of that game was in no way apparent. He could only keep quiet, and wait for some further development, even appear indifferent, while he secretly watched every suspicious movement of Percival Coolidge.

It was not at all probable the satchel contained any criminating evidence, yet the temptation was strong to obtain, if possible, a hasty glance at the contents. But for this he was already too late, scarcely reaching the room indeed, before Sexton appeared, announcing his mission.

"Coolidge tells me he usually occupied this room," West ventured curiously, "How did it happen I was put in here?"

"It was upon order from Miss Natalie, sir, but she did not mention the change in time to remove the bag."

"How long have you been here, Sexton?"

"Sixteen years, sir."

"You knew Miss Natalie's father then, and must enjoy the place to remain so long?"

"It has been very pleasant, sir, until the last month or so," regretfully, yet evidently glad of the opportunity to talk, lingering with one hand on the knob of the door. "Since then things haven't been just the same."

"In what way?"

"Well, I don't exactly know, sir. Miss Natalie seems to change her mind, an' we never can please her. That's the trouble, mostly. Last night I waited up until you all went to bed, an' then locked the house, the way she told me to. But that didn't suit her at all, for she stopped me on the stairs, an' made me go back an' leave the side door unlocked—just said she'd attend to that herself."

"Miss Natalie told you? You are sure, Sexton?"

"Oh, it was her, sir; there was a light burning in the hall, an' she was all dressed up as though she was goin' out. 'Taint the first time, either. I ain't got no right to say anything, but it puzzles me what she wants to go out for at that time o' night. And I thought maybe I ought to speak to Mr. Percival Coolidge about it."

"No. I wouldn't, Sexton," said West quietly. "It would likely enough only get you into trouble. Probably she cannot sleep well, and so walks in the garden."

As West made no further effort to continue the conversation, but began to carelessly roll a cigarette, Sexton slipped silently through the opening, the valise in his hand, and closed the door behind him.

This attempt to dig information out of a servant was not a pleasant experience, yet West felt that in this case it was fully justified. If he had retained any lingering doubt to what had occurred the previous night, this doubt had entirely vanished in the face of Sexton's testimony. His visitor, and the one who had ordered the servant to leave the side door unlocked, had been the same—not Natalie Coolidge, but strangely resembling her. Whatever else her purpose would be, one object was clearly connected with the presence there of Percival. Very well! this meant that he already had two distinct lines of investigation opened to him—the woman, and the man. The first was like pursuing a shadow, but Coolidge was real enough. He determined to keep in touch with the fellow, confident that he would thus be eventually led to a discovery of his companion.

CHAPTER IV

A Visit to the Indigent.

The guests had either retired to their rooms, or were wandering about the spacious grounds; at least none were in evidence when West emerged on to the side terrace, where Miss Natalie and Percival Coolidge waited.

It was not a long ride, the point sought being a short submerged street in the southwestern secton of the city. The runabout felt its way cautiously forward through a jostling throng of screaming youngsters, and finally turned into Arch street, only two blocks in length, with low, two storied, wooden cottages on either side. Percival, plainly nervous at the surroundings, indicated the place sought in the middle of the first block, and Natalie ran the car up against the curb.

"Is this the place?" she asked doubtfully, eyeing the rather disreputable cottage, which seemed deserted.

Coolidge unfastened the door, and stepped out.

"Yes, it's all right," he answered sharply. "You might wait here, West; we'll only be gone a few minutes. Come along, Natalie. West won't mind."

Belmond Wins 1st Football Game

Belmond Boys Play Splendidly In First Contest And Win By Good Margin.

OTHER ITEMS OF SCHOOL

Belmond high school played her first football game with Kanawha last Friday, and came out with a lead of 12 to 2. At the beginning of the game it looked pretty dark for Belmond, but when Sam got the ball thru one of Kanawha's numerous fumble, and carried it over for a touchdown, spirits arose. During the last half, especially in the last quarter, Belmond was playing real football, making a gain every time. Come out next time and see a real game.

The line up was as follows:

William Tyrrell—Right end.
Sam Leinbach—Right tackle.
Gerald Treese—Right guard.
Fred Vestweber—Center.
Donald Pech—Left guard.
Winston Thiltgen—Left tackle.
Ray Stapley—Left end.
Lewis Parsons—Right half back.
Edwin Christie—Left half back.
Harvey Chapman—Full back.
Irving Madsen—Quarter back.
Substitutes:
Vere Jenison for Vestweber; Leo McNamara for Parsons.

A pep meeting was held Friday afternoon before the game at the school house and also down town.

The loyal students came to the school house Friday night for a big pep meeting. A big bon fire was the amusement of the evening.

Girls are going to start practicin basket ball this week. All practice will be after school until December 1st.

Leona Reed was substituting for Mrs. Hoganson Monday afternoon.

Genevieve Starnes retains the gold medal of the typing class for the third week. Cecil Riley was a close second and Irving Madsen third.

Mrs. Connor from Hampton visited the 5th grade and kindergarten Oct. 18.

Bernadine Pullen, a member of the 4th grade, moved to Fort Dodge.

Loretta Ersland was absent from school. 2nd grade.

FORMER BELMOND GIRL MARRIED AT WATERLOO

On Tuesday, October 10th, at 10 o'clock a. m. a quiet ceremony was performed at the Cedar Heights Community church, Waterloo, by the Rector. The bride, Grace McAlpin Cook, daughter of W. E. McAlpin, of this city, was united in marriage with W. H. Balow. The only attendant was Miss Ardis Cook, daughter of the bride.

The bride wore a beautiful traveling costume of brown, hat to match, and a corsage of American Beauty roses. The couple left immediately on an extensive motor trip, and will pass the winter in Detroit, Michigan. Returning in the spring, they will reside in their residesce on the Rainbow Drive, Waterloo, where they will be at home to their friends.

Mrs. Balow was office manager for the Waterloo Laundry for eight years, and the past two years has held a similar position with the Black Hawk Fruit Co., both of Waterloo.

Mr. Balow is a buyer of live stock for a Chicago firm. Both are well known in Waterloo, and Grace McAlpin will be remembered as a student of the Belmond schools. Her friends here all join in wishing her joy and prosperity.

ROBINSON HERE MENDING FENCES ON WEDNESDAY

T. J. B. Robinson of Hampton, the republican candidate for Congress in this district, was in town yesterday meeting old friends, and new ones, and mending the political fences prior to the election. The democractic candidate, Hageman, of Waverly, is making a strong campaign, particularly in the eastern part of the state. It is there that he expects to poll his heaviest vote, as he is appealing to the wet element. Hageman was thru Belmond this summer, with his political cards bearing the inscription "I am for light wines and beer." He now has two sets of cards, it is understood, one with this inscription on and one without, for the wets or the drys, as the case may be. The Independent is flatfootedly for Robinson, and if there were no other reason than the wet and dry issue. Every wedge possible is being driven or will try to be driven, in the dry laws this fall, and Hageman appears to be the wedge in the Third District of Iowa. Robinson is a clean-cut, honest-to-goodness Man first of all, absolutely clean morally, and with years of reputation as an honest, straight-forward dealer, with four years experience in the Iowa legislature, and is making his campaign on a dry basis. If the dry vote goes to the polls he will win, but that vote will have to get out for Hageman will carry Dubuque by two thousand, and he will poll a large wet vote in Waterloo. Mr. Robinson was accompanied by Charley Peterson, formerly of Belmond, and Mr. Mott, another Hampton business man.

Norway Township Farmer Is Indicted For Selling Hooch —Other Indictments.

John Groh of Norway township was indicted by the grand jury Last April Justice Brown bound defedant over to the grand jury in the sum of $700 on two counts, bond being furnished by Kanawha parties. At that time Sheriff Lang and Marshal Leonard raided his premises and from rain barrells buried in the ground under his house found several gallons of whiskey. On being indicted last week Judge McCall increased his bond to $1,000. It is probable that he will plead guilty as there is plenty of evidence against him in the shape of jugs and bottles filled with whiskey, which is in the custody of Clerk Goslin.

The general election is less than three weeks away. Absent voters mening those who do not expect to be able to go to the polls on November 7th, may procure this ballot ten days before election by writing Auditor Walker or applying in person. The Saturday before election, November 4th, is the last day upon which such ballots may be obtained.

The $1,000 damage case from Belmond against ex-Marshal Rierson was disposed of by the jury giving the plaintiff a verdict of $1.

Another indictment returned by the grand jury was that of Al Zeihler of Eagle Grove, who is now serving a sentence imposed by the federal court at Sioux City for his part in an attempt to burn the home of Frank Fischer during the shopmen's strike.

The case brought by the Wright & Franklin Breeders' Association against Lee Aldrich, alias James Lord Bennett, has been dismiissed by plaintiff's at their costs. On being solicited to buy stock in the above association defendant refused and on a latter occasion when surrounded by the committee signed one of the applications with the above nom de plume.

This paper erred last week in stating that Ingevald Berg had been awarded judgment against G. H. Jameson in the sum of $3329.10. This judgment should have been cerdited to the next case on the docket, that of W. F. Insel vs. J. T. Johnson et al.

Gov. Kendall has discharged Lars Skouge from further liability under the sentence passed by Judge Wright at the December term of court in 1920. Defendant was convicted of the crime of larceny, which the judge suspended. The parole board, judge and county attorney and a number of representative citizens recommended his discharge.

Marriage licenses were issued last week to Charles Lee Cannon of Fort Dodge and Vera Marivella Smith of Eagle Grove, Leo John Baker of Belmond and Helen Amanda Hyde of Fort Dodge.

Birth Record

Robert Glen, born October 5th to Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Nielsen of Clarion.

Gerald Duane, born October 7th to Mr. and Mrs. Grant Whipple of Grant township.

Alice Elizabeth, born October 6 to Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Morris of Clarion.

The soldiers' bonus ballots are now in the hands of the printer and a word of caution regarding the manner of marking the same may not come amiss. The possibility of spoiling your ballot comes from the fact that two "yes" an "no" squares appear on the same. Make your cross mark in the one appearing at the top of the ballot and ignore the smaller one at the bottom of the ticket, which is placed there for the reason that it is a part of the law.

J. E. Parsons of Galt has been appointed temporary guardian of Mrs. P. A. Axen, his bond being fixed at the sum of $40,000.

Last week the board of supervisors rescinded its action regarding the establishment of drainage improvement No. 107 located in Boone and Norway townships, it being determined that the board had no jurisdiction in the matter. Judge Lee of Ames appeared in behalf of the objectors at the meeting.

After being out about ten minutes the jury found John Dorem of Eagle Grove not guilty. Mayor Baker fined the defendant $25 on the charge of drunkeness and he appealed to the district court for vindication.

The second case for this week is that of the State vs. Roy Fortune, who is being tried for larceny of merchandise from the Goldfield store. The case of Herbert Bige, charged with the larceny of goods from the Woolstock store about the same time, will follow the trial above mentioned.

Judge McCall adjourned court last evening until after Wednesday on account of the Clarion corn carnival.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

It was a delight to see so many in our Bible school last Sunday. If we can keep up to that number during this quarter we will pass the goal for the year.

Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Davenport and Mr. and Mrs. Leinbach attended the Webster City association in its meeting at Humboldt last Wednesday. The churches of the Association are is thriving condition.

The Ladies Aid society will hold their annual bazaar on November the 9th.

We would like to see one hundred and fifty at Sunday school next Sunday. If you are not in Sunday school will you not come and help make up this number. We are now studying the life of Christ and the more that we realize that life is ours the greater our lives will be. Come and let us study together.

Sabbath school at 10:00 a. m. and the morning worship at 11:00. The evening services begin at 7:30 and the first part is conducted by the young people. Our orchestra is furnishing us with some good music at the evening services. There is room for more at the evening services. Why not spend an hour of the closing Sabbath in His house?

"Come thou with us and we will do thee good."

TRINITY CHURCH

Prayer meeting held at the home of Henry Larsen on Thursday evening.

Wednesday evening choir practice at the church at 7:30.

Saturday morning at 10 o'clock the class meets at the church.

Sunday morning Sunday school and Bible class at 10 o'clock.

Divine services at 11 o'clock in the English language, with communion service in the evening at 7:30 in the Norwegian language.

IOWA BEATS YALE SATURDAY BY 6 TO 0

Iowa University took the measure of the famed Yale football team on Saturday when they trimmed them in a 6 to 0 victory. They also took several tons of hardened conceit out of the East. It was certainly "some" game, and the result made all Iowa glad. Chances of victory had been cossidered about even on both sides here in Iowa; in the East of course it was nothing but Yale. The game was received over the radio by the Independent and Battery company. play by play, and the editor was kept busy answering the telephone most of the afternoon giving results of the game as it progressed. The Ames-Missouri game was also received play by play direct from the field of play. The cheers and yells of the crowd were plainly audible. It is expected to get the result of the Iowa-Illinois game next Saturday; should Iowa beat Illinois—and all indications point to it—the 1923 championship will undoubtedly rest on the Old Gold another year.

In the Clarion-Cedar Rapids game Saturday, Cedar Rapids won 16 to 0. Considering all things, this was more of a victory for Clarion than for Cedar Rapids.

COUNTRY CLUB OFFICERS

At the annual election of officers of the Clarmond Country club, held on October 3rd., the following officers were elected: M. F. Birdsall, president; C. J. Nagle, secretary; A. L. Luick, vice president; Hal E. Smith, treasurer; directors, Dr. G. H. Steele, W. C. Tyrrell, Ray Klemme, F. S. Thornley, C. H. Crowe, J. L. Lundblad, G. W. Young, Sr., and Herman Schultz. A resolution was passed whereby no dues will be exacted for the current year from new members joining at any time prior to January 1.—Monitor.

KLU KLUX KLAN ORGANIZING

According to grape vine telegraph Clarion is to have a Klu Klux Klan. An organizer was here some days ago and it is being quietly tipped off that he secured a good many members. Uniforms are being made as fast as possible and it is understood that the hills in the vicinity of Pike timber will be the scene of the initiation ceremonies. The member ship fee is $10 and some of our business and professional men are said to have joined. The fellows who have been beating their wivies or committing other offenses had better have a care. —Monitor

CLARION CORN CARNIVAL ON OCTOBER THE 18

Present indications point to the fact that Wednesday, October 18 —Clarion Corn Carnival day—will witness the most eventful occasion in Clarion for some time. It bids fair to out class our best Fourth of July celebration or any of the big days at the old county fair. It is proposed to make the corn carnival an annual affair and every possible effort is being put forth to make the open event a successful one in every particular. In addition to the parade and the various sports, to which all residents of the county may enter in competition. Then there will be the wrestling match, the circus clowns, the trick mule, etc., in addition to Municipal band, a musical organization second to none in this part of Iowa. This entire fun fest program is entirely free and it is hoped every person in the county will be in Clarion next Wednesday to enjoy it.—Monitor.

Local Clubs To Entertain Ladies

Progress And Priscilla Clubs To Entertain Ladies From All Parts Of County.

ALL LADIES INVITED THEN

The Priscilla and the Progress clubs of Belmond will be hostesses to the members of the County Federation of Women's clubs on Wednesday, October 25th.

The program begins at ten a. m. with an intermission at noon for lunch.

At 2:30 p. m. Mrs. Van Patten of Fort Dodge will give an address on the subject "The Abundant Life." Every woman in the community is invited to hear this address and also the rest of the program, which consists of some of the best talent in the county.

Mrs. H. F. Graepler of Dows is the president of the County Federation, and Mrs. H. F. Luick of Belmond is vice president.

The meeting will be held in the library basement, and each guest is asked to bring sandwiches and cakes for two. The rest of the luncheon will be served by the members of the Progress and the Priscilla clubs.

INSTITUTE IS INTERESTING

The annual Wright county teachers' institute held Thursday and Friday of last week at Clarion was pronounced by many teachers to be the most profitable pedagogical gathering ever attended. About 250 teachers from the rural, town and city schools were enrolled. This number also included the normal training students of the county. The sessions were held in the high school building.

County superintendent, Miss Bock and deputy, Miss Odland, were busy every minute arranging details to help the teachers and make the meetings of the most possible value to them. Miss Bock is to be congratulated on the excellent talent secured for instructors. The lecture and demonstrations given were all practical and applicable, something that will really aid the teachers in their ordinary routine of helping young minds to develop.

Thursday morning Mr. Roadman of Fayette gave a very timely lecture taking as his subject "Hitching Henry's Wagon to a Star." Immediately after this departmental conferences were held, Miss Maulsby of Des Moines had charge of the rural section and gave some valuable suggestions on primary seat work, she demonstrated several models and gave the teachers patterns to use in this work. The grades were in charge of Mr. Knight of Iowa City who spoke on "The Laws of the Learn ing Process." Mr. Roadman talked to the high school teachers on "Citizenship," his lecture gave much food for thought.

Thursday afternoon, Miss Letitia Whitten, music supervisor of Clarion sang an especially pleasing solo. Mr. Roadman explained the Iowa State Teachers' association, its workings, purpose and prestige. He also gave a lecture on "The Four Things."

At this time a Wright county teachers association was organized the officers elected were Miss Bock, president; Robt. Smile of Dows, vice president; W. J. Guthrie of Belmond, secretary and treasurer. —Monitor.

MARRIED

Friends who knew Ruth Walton, formerly of this place, will be interested to know of her marriage to Professor Frank A. Prather, of Mitchell, South Dakota, who is teaching at Camp Crook.

A legal notice published in the Dows Advocate last week wherein Belmond's attorney, J. M. Jensen, is legal advisor, seems to indicate that J. M. is obtaining a reputation of some extent as an attorney. He is a busy man, at any rate.

BELMOND CREAMERY SELLING BUTTER CHEAP

In answer to the article carried last week by the Independent, in regard to the price of butter at Hampton and at Belmond, the Chronicle of Hampton makes a reply as follows:

On investigation the Chronicle finds that the statement is correct. Belmond grocery merchants are buying their butter from the creamery at Belmond. The retail price last week was thirty-eight cents, just as the Belmond Independent states. This week the creamery at Belmond raised the price three cents, and creamery butter is selling in Belmond at forty-one cents.

In Hampton last Monday creamery butter was selling at from forty-seven to fifty-two cents. Minnesota creamery butter was selling at fifty-two cents, and this might be charged a cent higher because of the cost in getting it here.

Butter made at Coulter was retailing in Hampton last Monday at fifty cents a pound, and Coulter butter is known to rank with the best butter made.

Butter made in Latimer was selling in Hampton last Monday at fifty cents a pound, and Latimer butter is known to be good butter.

Butter made in Iowa Falls was selling in Hampton last Monday at fifty-one cents a pound.

Butter made in Hampton, at the Kratz Dairy Company factory, is selling at forty-seven and forty-eight cents a pound, and there being no freight to pay on this butter probably keeps the price down a cent or two below the butter which is shipped in.

Either the Belmond creamery is making money at the price they are charging, or they are losing money we do not know which. The difference between the retail and cost price is about three cents, the same here as it is at Belmond, which is reasonable enough. The question then is why do Hampton merchants pay about ten cents a pound more for creamery butter at one place than they would have to pay at another—providing the quality is about the same? Belmond butter can hardly be bad enough to force a price ten cents less than other creameries are charging.

(The Independent does not know what profit the Belmond creamery is making, but it does know that Belmond creamery butter is good butter, and butter retailing at ten cents a pound more would have to be mighty good butter to be worth that much more than Belmond's product.)

CLIPPINGS

The farmers are pulling their sugar beets, and the crop promises to be good. Some of the farmers are even hauling now. The scales and dumps are all fixed up for the reception of the beets, and the harvest will do a lot to make times a little easier for the people.—Humboldt Republican.

The electricity was turned off several hours yesterday afternoon which caused some delay in getting our paper out this week as we have to depend on electric power to run the linotype machine and presses. A tree had fallen across the high line near Klemme and C. J. Papousek had to come over from Belmond to fix up the line.—Times.

Miss Laura Brooks and Mrs. Harry Brooks returned from Mason City last Thursday where the latter had been for medical examination. Mrs. Brooks will not need an operation.—Klemme Times.

They tell a great joke on some of the Humboldt sports who were betting on the world series base ball games. Fort Dodge sent out its radio report and mixed the winners, giving out a detailed score in which the Yanks won a game. The Humboldt sports collected their bets on the strength of the report. Then came the corrected report showing that the Giants won. In the meantime the sports had spent their bets and they had to dig down and pay their old bets and the money they had collected and spent.—Republican.

Miss Mary Uline, former missionary in Turkey, addressed an audience at the Congregational church last Tuesday evening. In her opinion, Turkey is winning practically everything taken from her in the World war. Thrace has been given back to her. She has won it anyway in the war with Greece. Constantinople, Miss Uline believes, will be retained by the British in order to keep the Dardanelles open. Much of the work of christianizing and educating the Turks has been lost. Practically all the schools and colleges in Thrace have been burned. Everything in Smyrna is lost. No American lives have been lost as the missionaries and teachers were withdrawn or protected. The Turk probably will be kept in Asia but he remains the same constant menace to the world as before the war and his repugnant and repulsive government is being firmly established in its former stronghold.—Eagle Grove Eagle.

The water in the lake is about a foot lower than it has been for many years. But no doubt the fall rains will bring it back to normal soon.—Clear Lake Reporter.

One day the latter part of last week while Joe Anderson was endeavoring to put the drive belt to his shoe polishing machine which is motor driven, his left hand was caught in the belt and both the hand and wrist were quite badly bruised. Fortunately the belt did not stay on or his injury would have been more serious.—Kanawha Reporter.

The sugar beet harvest is on here and beets were loaded onto cars the fore part of the week. They will go to the Belmond factory.—Klemme Times.

William Schellsmidt, of Waukon, Iowa, recently marketed a timber wolf at Auditor Palmer's counter. It was the 20th wolf he had captured this year during the past three months. He states that the wolves are numerous in that locality.—Exchange.

Mrs. Ethel Papousek was up from Belmond last week visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chris Jacobs.—Garner Signal.

H. G. Pritchard of Chicago, a nephew of Mayor Pritchard, was in Garner and vicinity last week on business. He is associated with his father in the commission buiness and was here interviewing the stockmen and farmers.—Leader.

Mrs. Gittie Finch went to Belmond Monday for a visit with her daughters, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Rosecrans, after spending several weeks at the Pritchard home here. Mrs. Finch has spent the past few winters in California, but has not decided yet as to whether she will return to the west for this winter or not.—Garner Leader.

WOULD ESTABLISH PLANT TO HATCH 300,00 CHICKS

There is a real prospect that a commercial hatchery will be started here this season and be delivering baby chicks early next spring. To many this news may not seem of a great deal of importance, however, to anyone who is somewhat familiar with the possibilities of the game, it is a business with great possibilities. It is the present plans of those interested to equip a hatchery here with a season's capacity of 300,000 baby chicks. This location of a hatchery from the fact that the past five years has seen pure bred poultry increase by leaps and bounds. Tentative plans have already been made for a most suitable location and the plans are rounding into shape is a most satisfactory manner. Not only will it be the mission of the proposed hatchery to sell baby chicks but as well to do commercial hatching. Those so desiring, may bring the eggs to the hatchery and at a nominal cost have the eggs hatched and get away from the trouble of setting hens and looking after incubators. The writer visited a hatchery at Fairmont, Minn., a few weeks ago and there gained some idea of the magnitude of the busisess located there. During the hatching season this concern pays in the neigborhood of $5,000 per week for eggs for hatching and pays a premium to the producer for eggs purchased. There is an unlimited field for the output of a hatchery as distance, in a way, only adds to the better results obtained in shipping the baby chicks. The Fairmont hatchery has shipped chicks to Texas, Washington and other far away states and had excellent results long distance shipments really working out better than the short ones, for the reason that the average person is apt to feed the youngsters too soon.—Bancroft Register.

Kinseth's Store News

Every housewife has a brand of flour from which she thinks she can make better bread. In order to supply them with what they want, we have four kinds to offer:

Seal of Minnesota at $2.35.
White Swan at $2.30.
Dynamite at $1.95.
Snobread at $2.00.

If a housewife can't make good bread from one of these four brands, then we are badly mistaken, because they are the real thing in flours, every one guaranteed to please you. No matter what flour you are using try one of these.

This cold weather brings to mind good hot pancakes at the breakfast table. We have the finest pancake flour you ever made cakes from; just try a package once. That's all we ask.

Husking mittens, all sizes. And be sure to look over our line of blankets.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Lincoln Township Social

Farmers of Lincoln township farm bureau were back in old form last Wednesday evening, October 11th, when about eighty to one hundred people of that community gathered at the Lincoln township church for their regular monthly farm bureau meeting.

A program consisting of several musical numbers, a number of addresses, and the election of officers for the coming year was enjoyed by all. A short address by the county agent was given and this was followed by the principal address of the evening, which was given by Miss Avis Talcott, home demonstration agent, who happened to be in the county on the farm tour. Miss Talcott's address surely spurred the people on to better and bigger things in the line of improvement of the farm home. She made a special plea to the ladies of the community for a closer co-operation in the problems of the home, also for a closer study of the things which make the home more beautiful and comfortable. A short talk was given by Ross Meachem on his trip to the Iowa state fair as a member of the champion livestock judging team. A short talk was also given by Everett Denby on his trip to the Interstate fair at Sioux City. These boys told in an interesting manner their experiences in the judging work and the splendid time they had while judging in competition with other boys from the various parts of our state and the states of the middle west.

The election of officers for the ensuing year was held and the following people were chosen to direct the affairs of the Lincoln Township Farm Bureau for 1923: L. W. Collins, director; Irene Norton, vice director; Marvel Weld, secretary-treasurer.

Interesting Farm Tour

The two day farm tour which was held in Wright county Wednesday and Thursday of last week proved to be a great success from the standpoint of the interest which was taken by those who had the opportunity to make the trip; also considering the valuable information which was given out by the three extension specialists, who lectured at the various stops on the tour.

Miss Avis Talcott, home demonstration agent from the extension department, lectured to the ladies in the various homes while the men folks listened to the interesting lectures by Professor Rex Beresford on livestock subjects and the talks on farm crops and soils by Professor Churchill. These specialists brought out a great many vital and interesting problems in connection with their discussions and with the questions which were asked by the people who were in attendance. The tour proved to be very beneficial to every one who took time, off to make the trip.

While the weather was somewhat chilly and the season a little bit late for a farm tour the schedule of stops was followed and a number of extra stops, which were not included in the program, were made. The feature of the tour was the picnic lunch which was enjoyed at noon each day. Everyone seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion and it is needless to say that everyone had a full sized appetite. Everyone who had opportunity to make the trip seems to agree that the information which was given by the specialists and the good fellow ship which was enjoyed with neighbors and friends repaid them for the effort made in planning their work so as to make the tour of the county.

Boys And Girls Clubs

Several kinds of clubs for the boys and girls between the ages of ten and eighteen will be organized this fall. A calf club for boys and girls who wish to feed calves for the state fair next year is now being formed and the younsters will be asked to take calves, born between March 1 and June 1, 1922, and feed them out for showing at the state fair.

A sow and litter club will also be organized this fall and a purebred gilt club next spring. The boys and girls will be asked to keep an accurate record on all feeding operations and make a full report to the county agent at the end of the feeding period. The one showing the best report will be awarded the prize.

All boys and girls who are interested in any kind of club work should get in touch with the county agent at once, because the applications are coming in fast. The boy or girl who starts early will have the best chanre of winning.

Campbell Attends Ft. Dodge Meet

E. W. Campbell, manager of the Clarion Shipping assosiation, attended the two-day short course at Fort Dodge for managers and officers of livestock shipping associations of this section of Iowa. Mr. Campbell gave a very interesting and accurate report of the business of the local association.

Ten counties in northwest Iowa had representatives at this short course. Professors Thompson and Hammons from the Marketing department of the college spoke at the meeting and the managers of the different associations received some valuable suggestions on the marketing of livestock. One day was spent in the discussion of records and office methods, and the other day was spent in dealing with shipping problems and a round table discussion in which all managers and officers took part.

Keeping Books Pays

Farmers on twenty-six representative farms in Marshall county by careful bookkeeping found where they lost money and are ready to check the places where the dollars leaked out. They found by keeping a record of business that their farm business lost them on an average of $1,841.98, which would not allow them to stay in business long at such a leak.

This loss they attribute to the high cost of production and the general slump of market prices which hit the Iowa farmer. The only plan whereby the Iowa farmer can get back onto the better market and increase the profits is to reduce the production costs. This they say can be accomplished by the keeping of books on his operations so that he will know when he is feeding expensive feeds or hiring expensive help that makes the cost of production higher than the selling price.

In corn production in this county it was found that where the labor cost was kept down corn could be sold for forty cents and a profit made, while with a high production cost, such as seventy-three cents on one farm, the farmer had to meet a big loss when he marketed his corn.

Books should be kept on every farm and the amount of labor expended in a crop should be kept accurately, they say, and then at the close of the season a farmer can soon find out where the leaks started.

REFUSED TO RESPECT FLAG

For refusing to lift his hat when the flag passed the place he was standing during the G. A. R. parade, Samnel L. Hiatt, 36 years old, was arrested by Deputy Sheriff George Robb, brother of Sheriff Robb. Hiatt, according to the deputy, become hostile when he was asked to remove his hat and defied "anyone to take it off his head." After three flags had passed and Hiatt had remained covered, Deputy Sheriff Robb snatched the hat from his head. Hiatt replaced it. Another flag went by but the hat was not removed. Hiatt was then taken to thecounty jail. Prisoners occupying the same cell with Hiatt listened to his story and then gave him a severe beating. Before the man could be rescued by turnkeys his forehead was cut and both eyes blackened. He was released on cash bond.—EX

OLD GAME OF FAKING PUBLIC STILL WORKING.

Humboldt Rpublican: The old, old game of faking the public is still working fine. The latest is the game of bringing wrestling touraments to a town and interesting the local fans. One of the latest instances of the art comes from Spencer where a wrestling tournament was shown at the Clay county fair.

One Ben Reeves of Graettinger was known to the wrestling people and he appeared and wanted to go on with the champion at the tourament. Of course the tourament people refused, and there was a great how-de-do. After endless wranglig the tournament peaple allowed Reeves to go on the mat, and the tourament champ began to bite and strike when he failed to down the new-comer. This caused endless wrangling, and finally the principals agreed to put on the gloves and fight it out. Then the local police interfered, but after much persuasion the men were allowed to fight four rounds of one minute each. They went at it hammer and tongs, and were struggling viciously when the referee ralled the end of the last round.

But here is the other side of it:

Wrestling show seemed to be on the bum.
Management sent for Reeves.
Renewed interest.
More interest.
Intense excitement.
Big crods.
Big gate recipts.
Still more excitement.
Still more gate receipts.
Prize fight.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ukro of Ackley spent several days last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. Bier. On Thursday they motored to Swea City and visited at the home of Charles Bier, returning Friday.

Miss Sylvia Blum of Renwick spent a short time here with friends the forepart of last week. From here she departed for Naperville, Ill., to again take up her school work at Northwestern college.

Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Raecker, Mrs. H. K. Pals and daughter Grace, Mrs. E. G. Thomas and daughters Viola, and Evelyn, and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Muller motored to Rockwell last Thursday to attend the afternoon and evening sessions of the third annual county convention of the W. C. T. U. The convention continued over two days and was a success in every way. Miss Louise E. Holliter, National lecturer was the principal speaker and convention guest. On Thursday evening the silver medal contest was held. Mason City, Clear Lake, Meservey, Portland, Plymouth and Rockwell were represented in this contest. All the numbers were rendered. The medal was awarded to Dale Pattschull, of Mason City, whose reading was entitled "The Drunken Engineer." The contestant from Clear Lake was awarded second place and Plymouth third. Rev. Pritchard of Swaledale had charge of the devotions, and gave an inspiring talk, urging all to prepare themselves to be able to "endure hardness." The music by the orchestra was good, and the clarinet solos rendered by one of the number were exceptionally fine, as was the vocal solo given by Miss Williams. Altogether it was a profitable evening for all who attended, and we felt well repaid for having been there.

KEEP UP THE CULLING

October is the time to get the nonproducers out of the farm poultry flock, says H. A. Bittenbender, in charge of poultry work at Iowa State College. It is at this time that the farmer can cull out the hens that are loafing and keep over winter only those hens that will pay their board.

Pullets that show any signs of being poor producers, are stunted in growth, have deformed parts or are slow in feathering should be removed at once from the flock. Birds to be held for winter production should be as near perfect as possible and resemble the breed that is desired by the poultryman.

Hens that have good yellow legs and are glossy and that gave up laying some time ago are loafers, and will probably stay on their vacation. Good layers have bright red combs. Hens that have not molted or are molting now are the ones to save. Good layers are strong, healthy, vigorous, with a thin breast bone and an appearance of quality.

Warm quarters, healthy hens and plenty of feed will keep the flock laying all winter.

A culling campaign recently completed in Humboldt county showed that 42 per cent of the farm hens were being kept at a loss to the poultrymen and over 6,000 loafers were eliminated.

ROWAN NEWS

Friday evening a few girl friends gathered at the home of Evelyn Whitten to help her celebrate her 10th birthday. They surprised her. The evening was spent in games after which refreshments were served and all report a fine time

Thursday afternoon a few relatives and friends of Mrs. Charley Emerson surprised her at her home in honor of her birthday. A very pleasant time is reported. Those present were the Mesdames A. H. Emerson, and daughter Stella, Roy Hyde, C. W. Fowler, B. P. Hadley, Will Bingham, and Harvey Lineweaver. Mrs. Emerson was the recipient of several lovely gifts.

Miss Gladys Whitten went to Hampton Friday evening to visit at the home of Miss Viola Charter, returning home Sunday.

Mrs. Halbert received Friday a letter from her sister in Europe that had been on its way eight weeks. This letter was written just after Miss Eldrige left Granada, Spain, and in it she tells of the death of J. G. Wooley, once candidate for president on the Prohibition ticket. Mystery surrounds his death. He was traveling alone and making the usual tour trip of Spain. He came to Granada from Sevilla already delirious and never regained consciousness His passport gave his name and address, also the name of a pension (hotel) at which he intended stopping and the pension cabled his son in America, who cabled to a sister-in-law in Paris, and she came down the next night. That night the body was temporarily buried at Granada at 10 p. m. That he was the victim of being doped is held by many there.

Mrs. Payne is staying as companion to Mrs. J. D. Brooks at present. Her son lives on the C. W. Fowler farm where she makes her home.

Rowan Congregational Church Notes

Sunday evening, there will be given a program put on by the Woman's Missionary society but given by the young people of the church. There will be a playlet, "Crowded Out," also readings and good music. A free will offering will be taken to help the women meet their apportionment for the W. B. M. I.

Rev. Halbert brought to his people Sunday evening "Echoes" from the Webster City conference, which met at Humboldt last week. One very interesting part was the address of Marvin E. Hall, who is now on furlough from missionary work in Japan. Mr. Hall described graphically a base ball game which was called by the the Buddhists as a test between their god and the God of the christians. It fell to Mr. Hall's lot to pitch for the christian team. He is a born entertainer and the audience sat spell bound as he told of the game from the time he prayed for curves and twists up to the last inning where it stood a tie; and then the mighty effort put forth which won the game for the christians.

The American Legion will hold an auction sale in the Rowan stock pavilion next Friday evening at eight o'clock. There will be for sale chickens, ducks, pigs , etc., as well as fruits and preserves. The Rowan public are asked to stand by the boys with their patronage and presence.

Quite a large number of the Rowan people went over to Clarion last Saturday afternoon to see the Cedar Rapids-Clarion football game and came back not satisfied with the result but with a good game. The Clarion boys put up a strenuous fight against their heaver opponents.

The basket ball teams of the high school are getting ready for the games of the season.

Rowan Methodist Church Notes

10 a. m. Sunday school.

11 a. m. Sermon. Subject: "Lookout Mountain."

6:30 p. m. Epworth League.

7:30 p. m. "A Nation of Readers."

Both these topics that Mr. Tomkinson will discuss are viril and vital. We all ought to have a mountain from which we can look out and see what is going on in the world, and we all ought to be readers. What is wanted in America today is ten million first class readers.

The public of Rowan will have a treat next Friday evening when Corwin Taylor of Korea will speak in the Methodist church. This service is open to all and will be entirely free. Corwin Taylor has a first hand knowledge of the Pacific problem, having 16 years in Japan and Korea. Don't miss this splendid informational and inspiritional treat.

The Epworth League have planned a picnic supper at 6 p. m. in the basement of the church, after which Mr. Taylor wishes to meet the members of the League.

The two supers served by the Congregational and Methodist churches last Thursday were well attended.

WHY HOLD HIM BACK?

Every young man is entitled to a fair opportunity in the business and social world. He is entitled to be judged by his own mental and moral qualifications, and not by the standard of the parents who brought him into the world. Such is sometimes. but not often, the case.

Many a young man of great promise is seriously hampered by the reputation of one or both of his parents. The sins of the father are visited upon the son, and the innocent youth suffers for the acts of the guilty adhlt.

This is true because as a civilized people we are not yet entirely civilized. A polished veneer covers the surface, but often fails to penetrate to the heart. Give the young man a fair chance, and let his own acts make or break him.—Exchange.

GOODELL NEWS ITEMS

Mr. Elmer Kienenberger has gone to Klemme to help gravel the north end of the Goodell-Klemme road.

The gravel hauling at this end of the road is about complete.

Most of the farmers are now busy picking corn. Four and five cents is the price paid for picking this year.

SUPPORT DRY CANDIDATES

Leveling his attacks principally at Fred P. Hageman of Waverly, Ia., candidate for Congress from the Third District, R. N. Holsaple, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League issued a pre-election appeal recently to prohibitionists of the state "to stand by prohibition regardless of party."

"The Hageman candidacy is a test case," Holsaple said. "Whether prohibition is to continue to be an issue at every election in spite of the fact that it was consitutionally recognized three years ago, will no doubt be decided by Hageman's election or defeat.

According to the Anti-Saloon superintendent, who bases his accusation on results of a questionaire sent to every political candidate in Iowa, Hageman has come out flatfootedly on a liquor platform. He is openly appealing to the "wet" element of the Third District for support and has announced that his election will mean the voice of the people in favor of legalized liquor.

The Anti-Saloon League has announced an active campaign in the Third District in behalf of Hageman's opponent T. J. B. Robinson, the Reublican candidate, "who has satisfactorily answered the questionnaire and proved himself in other ways worthy of a public office."

All the present Iowa Congressmen who are candidates for re-election are dry except Harry Hull of the 2nd District who the Anti-Saloon League reports states has a long record of voting with the Wet interests. In three other Congressional cases the Anti-Saloon League is yet undecided, Wayne G. Cook of Davenport, Democratic candidate from Second; G. A. Smith, Democratic candidate from Fifth, and Paul Richards of Red Oak, Democratic candidate from Ninth having refused to commit themselves upon a liquor issue.

Seventeen candidates for Congress, 23 for state senator and 107 for state representative have already replied "dry". Both United States senators have expressed themselves as "dry" sympathizers.

"The ticket is a great boost for prohibition," Supt. Holsaple said. "Practically all of the candidates are dry. Iowa politicians are realizing what sort of men Iowa people demand for public offices.

FROM CHICAGO TO THE SEA

Omaha Bee: When the middle west gets an idea into its head, and is convinced that it is right, nothing can turn it. One of the things this midland country is sure of is that it wants the St. Lawrence waterway Indisputable facts show that an open water lane from the great lakes to the Atlantic ocean would save from 5 to 10 cents a bushel on the cost of shipping grain to Europe. This would mean a saving of $336,000,000 a year. The same ratio of economy would apply to other provisions and freight of all kinds.

The states benefiting from the waterway produce three fourths of America's wheat, seventy per cent of the corn, half the cattle, and half of the hogs, horses, butter, eggs, cheese and wool, and eighty five per cent of the iron ore forty per cent of the copper and coal, seventy five per cent of the zinc, and forty five per cent of the lead.

In spite of all the opposition from eastern port interests, the central west is determined to open the seaway. The campaign is active in every state of this region, with the united backing of farmers and business The Board of Trade in Chicago is now forming an association with a membership fee of $50 to push this cause. This is the spirit that wins The west will not forever be landlocked.

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

The PUBLIC UTILITY that doubtless is of the most importance in Community life today, is the Electric Light and Power company, as its service is universally used and has become of such importance that no community can be without it and thrive.

This fact is self-evident, as shown by comparison of Communities having effecient ELECTRIC SERVICE with those not so fortunate.

The City or Village that has efficient ELECTRIC SERVICE is the better business and residence place, and because of its modern advantages attracts new people, encourages enterprise, and grows.

The scope and diversion of the ELECTRIC COMPANY'S service touches the life of every resident in the Community; it lights your streets, business places and homes; runs your mills and factories; cooks your food, and heats your homes, and generally makes living better, easier, and happier.

Being so VITAL a factor in our daily lives, the business should have the livest interest of all, and be deserving of support.

The business of supplying these essential services is growing rapidly, and to meet the demand for ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER, the Company is constantly extending its lines to serve new homes, additional communities, and to the farms.

The growth of IOWA FALLS ELECTRIC COMPANY which began business on October 4th, 1915, is due to this increasing demand and to the reliability of the Company's service and the efforts of the Management to meet the needs of the Communities.

At the present time the Company is serving 34 cities, and villages, in seven counties in the richest agricultural section of Iowa, and a substantial rural territory having a population of over 16,000 people, and now has over 4,000 Customers.

The Power Plants consist of the large steam generating station at Iowa Falls, with a capacity of 1,343 Horse-Power, and the auxiliary plant at Garner.

The plant at Iowa Falls is connected with the generating station of the Iowa Railway & Light Company, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The largest in the state of Iowa. 185 MILES OF HIGH TENSION lines connects the system which is under capable, careful Management.

The Company's earnings have developed from NOTHING on Oct. 4th, 1915, to over a "Quarter of A Million Dollars" for the year ending March 31st, 1922.
More facts regarding the Company and its business will be given in the following issues of this Newspaper, as we believe you will want to KNOW YOUR ELECTRIC COMPANY.

Respectfully,

IOWA FALLS ELECTRIC COMPANY,

Iowa Falls, Iowa

STRAIGHT OF DOWS FUSS?

(Editor's Note—The following article from the Dows Advocate is reprinted to give Belmond people the full facts of the disturbance at Dows between one of its ministers, and the American Legion and congregation of the Lutheran church.)

In view of the fact that several articles regarding the trouble in the Otis Grove Lutheran Church of Dows have been published in the News-papers of Wright County which gave only a partial account of the difficulty now existing in our church, the writer believes that a fair and full statement of such facts should be published that the public may decide for themselves the right and wrong in the case. First let me say, that I have been a member of the Otis Grove Lutheran Church since my baptism more than fity years ago. That my Father and Mother were Lutherns and no one deplores the strife and conflict which is now going on among the members of our Church in Dows; one faction asking the resignation of Rev. Belsheim and the other that he be retained as Pastor more than I do.

A conflict which if allowed to continue will disrupt the Church and utterly destroy Its power for good in this community as no truer words were ever spoken than by Lincoln when he said "A House Divided Against Itself Cannot Stand." Dissension and ill feeling has already become so bitter among the members of the church that it will take years for the wound to heal. Families are divided and the friendships of many years standing between neighbors and freinds is changed to hatred. Our hitherto quiet and peaceful congregation both in Country and Town who have worked in harmony for so many years is being torn asunder; have forgotten our purpose as Christians and are now quarreling among ourself in a manner which is a disgrace to us and to our Church which was erected and dedicated to Him who taught peace on earth, good Will to Man and who commanded us to "Love One Another."

I believe that the facts which I hereinafter set forth do warrant the statement that the present deplorable condition of our Church is due to the apparent hostility of Rev. Belsheim toward the American Legion. This hostility first came to surface when he refused to take part with the American Legion in the funeral services of Amos Nelson, a soldier boy who died at Oakdale from tuberculosis contracted while in the service of his Country and whose parents live near Dows and are adherents of the Lutheran Faith. The funeral services were held at the Lutheran Church but were conducted by a Pastor from another church and the body warpped in a Flay of our Country for whom he gave his young life was laid at rest by his comrades of the American Legion. His Father Knudt also fought for the preservation of the Union during the Civil war. I asked the members of the Lutheran Church of America and all others who may chance to read this article "Did Rev. Belsheim do right in refusing to co-operate with the Legion boys who at the request of the grief stricken parents performed the last sad rites for their dead comrade? Would it not have been better for Rev. Belsheim as an American Citizen; for the church of which he is pastor and for the community at large if he had taken part in these services and thus brought the boys of the Legion, many of whom are Lutheran parentage, closer to the Church and also avoided the strife and dessension now existing among our congregation? I leave this to the fair minded judgement of my readeers.

Many of Rev. Belsheim's congregation object strongly to the course taken by him upon this occasion but no decisive action was take; altho the question has been constantly coming up in the church and causing trouble among the members. I have also been informed that Rev. Belsheim had a list of names of members who opposed him, before the Trustees, asking them to take action to have these members expelled from the church, but the Trustees refused to act on same.

The Watson-Beach American Legion Post of Dows held their annual Legion Day on Sept. 11th 1922 and some days prior to this date the Lutheran Ladies aid society of Dows held a meeting at the church basement to consider the question of serving meals to the public to raise money for the Church, using the church basement for that purpose which has been their custom since the basement had been fitted up for that use and mainly furnished and paid for by the Ladies Aid society. Rev. Belsheim was invited to attend this meeting but declined the invitation. After the meeting had been in progress for some time and the Ladies had decided to serve meals to the public at noon and evening of Legion Day, Rev. Belsheim came in and when advised of the purpose of the meeting and the decision arrived at, he positively forbid the ladies to use the basement of the church for that purpose on Legion Day; to which I am informed the ladies replied that they could see no harm in using it and proposed to do so.

Rev. Belsheim then called a meeting of the Trustees of the Church for the purpose as I am informed by one who was present, of their taking action to prevent. The trustees did not agree with him and nothing definite was done at this meeting. I am informed however, that Rev. Belsheim did say those present that if they allow the Ladies to use the basement he would resign; the doors of the Church would be closed and the Congregation would be without a Pastor. The next day Rev. Belsheim called upon the Trustees and they signed the following notice with him:

> Mrs. John Jacobson President:
> It has come to our notice that some members of the town Ladies Aid of our Church pian to serve meals and other refreshments at our Church basement on Monday, Sept.11.
>
> Believing as we do that this is planned, in order to cause trouble and disturbance among us and that it will have that effect, we as custodians of our Church property will not permit the use of the church or church basement for this purpose at this time It is therefore plain that such possession can only be had, if at all, thru the action of the congregation assembled in a legally called business meeting. To force an entrance to the church against the will of this board must be considered an act of lawlessness.
> G. G. Belsheim, Pastor
> G. Ingebritson
> O. H. Gardelen
> Ole Jacobson
> H. F. Johnson
> Nelson Bauge
> Trustees.

Form the above notice prepared by Rev. Belsheim it would appear that the church basement cannot be used for any purpose without first calling a meeting of the congregation and obtaining their consent to occupy and use the church basement which ruling I think my readers will agree is most unfair and unreasonable and would psactically prevent the ladies from using the basement for any purpose.

After the above notice was served the Trustees upon more mature reflection decided that it would be unfair to deprive the ladies of the basement on Sept. 11th and they therefore rescinded the above order and gave their written consent to the Ladies who accordingly served meals in the Church basement on Legion day.

In the printed bills advertising the program for Legion day there appeared about midway on such program the announcement that the Lutheran Ladies Aid Society would serve a chicken dinner at noon and in the evening in the basement of the Lutheran Church and at the bottom of program a dance was advertised to take place in the evening. After the Trustees had granted the Ladies the right to use the basement they again met with Rev. Belsheim and upon advising him what they had done I am informedthat he told them that he had no objection to the Ladies serving meals in the basement o n that day and would have eaten his meals there and attended the rest of the morning program if a dance had not been advertised upon the same bills with the chicken dinner. As these bills were not printed until after hisfirst meeting with the Ladies Aid Society. I leave my readers to draw their own conclusions why Rev. Belsheim refused them the use of the basement on that particular day and occasion. I am also informed that Rev. Belsheim made the statement that if the Ladies served meals in the basement over his protest that they would be outlaws. At the request of a number of the members of the church that a congregational meeting would be held at the Lutheran Church in Dows on Sept. 23rd. 1922 at Two o'clock P. M. at which meeting about sixty of the members were present.

Rev. Belsheim opened the meeting with Scripture reading after which it was stated by a member of the congregation that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss the trouble existing in the church and to try to find some solution of the difficulty. That in his judgement the only way to bring harmony and good feeling among the members was thru the resignation of Rev. Belsheim and that he be therefore asked to resign by a vote of those present and to the end that such vote might be taken moved that Andrew Erickson act as Chairman in the place of Rev. Belsheim; to which Rev. Belsheim replied "I am the Chairman" and when asked if the constitution and bylaws of the Lutheran Church did not give the congregation the right to select its own chairman he said "Not when I am here" A free translation of the article referring to the selection of a chairman reads as follows "The Chairman may be the Pastor or any one whom the members may elect" Waiving the question of Chairmanship a motion was made and seconded that a written ballot be cast upon the question of whether Rev. Belsheim should be asked to resign; those in favor voting "Yes" and those opposed "No". Rev. Belsheim refused to put this motion to a vote and stated that if a stack of ballots as high as the church were cast asking him to resign he would not do so; and after some discussion said that a motion to adjourn was in order. This motion by a rising vote of the congregation was lost but the congregation realizing that nothing could be accomplished with Rev. Belsheim as chairman left the church and the situation remains the same as before the meeting. I again ask my readers whether this meeting was fairly conducted by the self elected chairman.

The foregoing is I believe a correct statement of what has caused the trouble in our church and ask my brother and sister members to read this carefully and knowing them to be fair minded men and women I believe that they will agree with me that the future of our church; and the unity, peace and good will among its members can only come thru a change in pastor and that Rev. Belsheim should be asked to resign as our Pastor.

BUSINESS PERSONALS

The Belmond Rendering Works, which were recently acquired by a Mr. Lamb of near Clarion, and his partner, have been doing a very nice business the month of operation A total of fifteen head of animals were handled during the month. Tankage and fertilizer is made from the carcasses of dead animals, which the company will remove free from the premises of local farmers upon being notified. The plant is located in the grove, about two miles from the town, and there is no disagreeable ordor connected with its operation.

Dr. E. A. Allen of Hampton is the new Chiropractor located here. He has made his headquarters here, and his wife, who is also a Chiropractor, has charge of the offices at Hampton.

Mrs. Catherine Rosecrans sent a number of new fall hats and winter hats to Meservey recently, where they were placed on sale at the Hulsebus-Muller store. Very good results were received. The Hat Shoppe has also placed hats at Alexander with equally good results.

Townsan Hardware put on a sudden rush sale of South Bend mallable ranges last week three days, got out some quick advertising, and had a successful sale.

"Scoop" Larsen of the City Market put on a demonstration of the famous "57 Varieties" of Heinz products Saturday, with a special demonstrator from the factory, and entertained scores of the busy housewives during the day with samples of various Heinz products, served hot.

Gus Nissen of the City Market reports business as being very good, and picking up. The City Market has been making quite a hit with their specials.

Matt Holtzbauer has begun work on a gasoline-gas burner for the linotype of the Independent, which was described a few weeks ago in these columns. If Matt perfects this so that it is practical and can be sold for a reasonable price, he has a fortune within reach, for burner trouble is one of the pests of the newspaper man's life. They'll clog up, fail to heat, and pull every "dirty" trick in the catalogue when most badly needed

The Independent is informed that a Mr. and Mrs. Stevens of Hampton are to start a book store in Belmond in the near future, to be located in the Hill jewelry building.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance.

CHAPTER II.—That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her.

CHAPTER III.—Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, apparently is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance, and the feeling of antagonism is mutual. Natalie, Coolidge, and West plan a visit of charity to a poor and remote section of the city.

CHAPTER IV.—Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage, remaining a length of time which causes him some uneasiness. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie, and has ulterior motives.

"Certainly not," the younger man said heartily, "I shall be very comfortable; don't bother about me."

He had a distinct impression that Coolidge did not desire his company any further, yet this suspicion aroused no sentiment. This was a matter with which he was in no way concerned, and the only interest he felt was strictly impersonal. Sinking comfortably back in the seat, his gaze centered on the maze of children playing in the street. Their antics amused him for some time, but, at last, he began wondering at the delay of those within, and his mind drifted to the peculiar conditions with which he was confronted. If some conspiracy was on foot against Natalie, what could be its object? and who were directly involved? Seemingly, Percival Coolidge was the only person who could be directly interested should misfortune occur to his niece; he was the guardian of her inheritance, and responsible for what remained of her father's estate. Undoubtedly he also was the next heir at law. His interest in the matter was therefore easily figured out. West had to learn the condition of the Steven Coolidge estate, and whether or not Percival had administered it justly. Once satisfied upon that point, he would know better what further steps to take.

If Coolidge was engaged in some criminal scheme the man was certainly shrewd enough to carefully cover his trail. It was no sudden temptation to which he had yielded, but a deeply laid plan, formed, perhaps, as long ago as his brother's death, and now just coming to a head.

West's glance took in the surroundings, but with no conception that they would have any direct bearing upon the mystery he was endeavoring to solve. It was a block of irregular houses, a tenement on the corner, a dirty-looking brick, the other houses of wood, mostly two stories in height, rather disreputable in appearance, but the one before which the machine waited was a frame cottage, well back from the street, and rather respectable in appearance, although it must have been some years since last painted. The door was shut. The chimney indicated no sign of smoke, the front yard gave every evidence of long neglect.

An urchin, chasing a ball, plunged recklessly beneath the auto, emerging with the sphere in his grimy fist. West stopped him with a question.

"Who lives in there?"

"I don't know. These folks just come in. They ain't got no kids. Here ye are, Micky!"

"Wait a minute. Here's a dime for you. You say these people just moved in?"

"Yep."

"When?"

"Couple days, maybe. Hooligans moved out 'bout a week ago, an' then, a while after that, these guys moved in. I ain't seen nobody 'round, but a sorter middlin' ol' woman."

West, having abstracted all the information possible, made no further effort. The knowledge thus obtained as to the present occupants of the cottage did not exactly coincide with the story Coolidge had told. He had spoken of a widow with three children in destitute circumstances following the father's death. The boy asserted there were no children in the family. And they had just moved in, within a very few days, during which time the neighborhood had only glimpsed a "middling old" woman. It was strange at least, adding distinctly to the puzzle of the whole affair. West grew nervous, wondering why the two should remain so long within, out of sight and hearing. He had been waiting now for three-quarters of an hour. He opened the door of the car and stepped out upon the curb, almost tempted to investigate the cause of delay. As he stood there undecided, the two emerged from the cottage, and descended the steps together. Through the opened door he caught no glimpse of any one within, yet some unseen hand closed it quickly behind them.

They came down the narrow board walk together, Percival carefully holding the lady's arm to prevent her tripping over the loosened planks, but neither exchanging a word. Natalie appeared somewhat sobered by her visit, and West noticed that she had tied a light veil over her face, which slightly shadowed her features. It was only as they reached the curb that she spoke, her voice rather low and listless.

"Would you mind driving the car back?" she asked Coolidge. "Really I feel quite unnerved."

"No wonder," he returned sympathetically, "I have never witnessed a sadder case; the conditions were even worse than I imagined. I should never have brought you with me, my dear."

"Oh, I am not sorry I came; but it has been a lesson to me. I do not think I ever before realized what such poverty meant. It was most pitiful."

"Do not think of it any longer, Natalie," Coolidge insisted rather gruffly. "They are all right now. I shall telephone for a doctor as soon as we get back, and attend to the rent the first thing tomorrow."

"I know, Uncle, but I cannot forget so easily."

The returning ride seemed very brief, and, almost before West realized it, the car whirled in through the Coolidge gate, and came to a stop at the door. The party separated pleasantly. Natalie disappeared somewhere within, while the two men strolled out to the tennis court where the guests were enjoying a spirited game. All met again at lunch, and then separated, some to motor over to the lake, the others amusing themselves as they saw fit. Both Coolidge and Natalie vanished, while West, finding himself alone, chose a book from the library, and, solaced by a cigar, sought a shady nook on the porch.

The book, however, was but a mark for his thoughts, which continually revolved about the strange surroundings in which he found himself. He was apparently making no progress, was no nearer a solution of the mystery confronting him. Thus far, at least, no direct clue had presented itself. Numerous things had occurred to strengthen suspicion, and to increase interest in the quest. But beyond this—nothing. He liked the girl and was completely enlisted in her service. He disliked Percival, and was convinced the fellow was planning evil. Several incidents had already strengthened this belief; yet there was nothing positive upon which to build; no path of adventure for him to follow. To speculate was easy enough, but real facts eluded him.

Sexton appeared in the door, evidently looking for some one. The man espied him there in the shadow of the vines, and came forward.

"Miss Coolidge requests your presence, sir, for a few moments," he said gravely.

"Why, certainly; did she say where, Sexton?"

"In the library, sir; she is waiting there now."

"Very well. I will join her at once. Thank you, Sexton," and West disappeared into the cool, darkened hall.

CHAPTER V

An Unexpected Dismissal.

The shades had been drawn closely to exclude the sun, and, for a moment after he first crossed the threshold of the library, West was unable to distinguish any occupant. He heard Sexton silently close the door behind him, but it was not until she moved slightly that he was able to perceive her presence directly across from where he stood. Her voice broke the silence.

"You will find a seat next to the window, Captain," she said quietly. "It was very good of you to come."

"The pleasure was mine," he replied. "You wished to speak with me, the servant said."

"Yes." She leaned back against the couch on which she rested, with face now clearly revealed, one hand nervously twirling a fan. "This is a very strange situation in which we find ourselves, Captain West."

"I have felt so," he admitted, surprised at this beginning. "Yet I must confess, I am now becoming quite reconciled."

She sat up suddenly, with eyes searching his face.

"What do you mean by that?"

"Perhaps I ought not to say," he answered boldly. "Yet circumstances seemingly justify frankness between us. I mean that I feel far more deeply interested in the final outcome of this affair today than I did yesterday—it means more to me."

"Indeed! Why?"

"Largely, I imagine, because I am privileged to know you much better. That naturally makes a difference."

"Does it indeed? You imply then an increased interest in myself as an individual brings with it a greater desire to serve me?"

"Assuredly, yes."

"Then you render my task doubly hard," she said soberly, yet with a certain hardness in the tone. "I had not suspected any personal side whatever. You were a total stranger to me, Captain West, and I employed you in this matter merely in a business way, as—as—a detective. Surely you understand this clearly?"

"In a measure that is quite true," feeling the sharp sting of her words. "Yet the comparison is hardly fair, is it? I am not a detective in the sense with which you employ the term. You knew I was not serving you for pay."

"Did I?"

"I should hope you did," his voice hardening slightly.

"But for what other end did you volunteer your services?"

"Perhaps that is not so easily explained. It was a spirit of adventure which first led me to answer your advertisement, I presume. At least, I can give it no other name. Then, when we met, you appealed to me personally; I felt a desire to further our acquaintance and — well, your story aroused my interest.

"Is that all?"

"It might have been had not you chosen methods of procedure which led me to other thoughts."

She laughed.

"Oh, I see! All this has happened because I introduced you to the others as my fiance. Why, that is positively funny. Didn't you know that was only a part of the game being played?"

"Yes," he said, ignoring the humor of it, and feeling oddly sober, "I understood, and was playing, the same as you. Only both of us, I think, forget an important fact."

"What, please?"

"That we were young, socially on a level, and that you were an exceedingly charming young woman."

She laughed again, yet this time with more restraint.

"That is quite ridiculous, Captain West. Surely, you are not actually making love to me?"

"No, I am not. I am merely facing the situation very frankly. It would be useless for me to claim lack of interest in you. From our very first meeting you have appealed to me strongly—more so than any other woman of my acquaintance. I confess I care for you—as a woman."

"Really you are quite flattering. I never dreamed I possessed such marvelous powers." She remained silent a moment, her eyes shaded by their long lashes; then uplifted them again to his face. "This makes it all the more necessary that I now speak plainly," she went on at length, "That I should explain to you it has all been a mistake. That was why I asked you to come here now."

"All a mistake! Not the trouble you were in, surely?"

"Yes. I must have dreamed most of it, I think. I have just had a long, confidential talk with Percival Coolidge, and we understood each other perfectly. Everything has been explained. So there is no necessity for our pretending any longer."

West rose to his feet, comprehending her full meaning, yet unwilling to yield his position without further explanation.

"Your words are certainly plain enough," he said slowly, "yet I trust I may be pardoned if I ask a question or so. Do you mean the mystery is already solved without my further assistance?"

"I am convinced there was no mystery; that it was only imagination, Captain West. My calling you was a mistake."

"There is no one impersonating you?"

"No."

"The checks at the bank; the strange person using your name; all these were myths?"

She laughed.

"Of course. I really believed all I said to you at the time, but everything has been explained since, and I realize how very foolish I have been."

"You sent for me, then, merely to say I was dismissed?"

"Yes."

"And you told Coolidge, of course, how I came to be here?"

"Yes."

"And the others? What will they think?"

"Why, that can make no difference. Let them suppose we had a quarrel, and that our engagement is broken," and she laughed again, evidently vastly amused at the idea.

"But you, personally?" he insisted.

She sobered instantly, also rising, and facing him.

"Captain West, let us be sensible. I invited you here for a certain purpose. You were employed as much as any of my other servants. Is that a sufficient answer?"

"It certainly is. I will depart at once."

"Thank you. The limousine will be at the door. You will return to the club, I presume?"

"Temporarily, until other arrangements are made."

He bowed and left her standing there in the shadows, the expression of her face veiled, but there seemed no response, no softening in the rigid attitude of her figure. She did not care; was only interested in his immediate departure. The change had occurred with such abruptness, West was unable as yet to realize its full significance, but, with no attempt to combat her decision, left the room, closing the door behind him.

CHAPTER VI

The Body of a Suicide.

As the car whirled West down the circling driveway, the only sign of life visible about the house was the motionless figure of Sexton on the steps. If either Miss Natalie, or Percival Coolidge, took interest enough in the proceedings to witness his departure, they chose to remain carefully concealed within. There was no pretense even at speeding the parting guest. He had simply been dismissed, turned out, decently enough, perhaps, considering his status, yet with a certain measure of contempt which rankled nevertheless.

The young man could not altogether reconcile this style of treatment with his preconceived conception of Miss Natalie Coolidge. He had been too deeply impressed by her to easily relinquish his previously formed opinion of her character. This latest action did not at all coincide with her former open friendliness. He had not gone to her as a servant, nor had she in any way treated him as such. What could account for so remarkable a change?

Perhaps it was the influence of Percival Coolidge. This explanation seemed probable. The man had in some way regained her confidence, and then, through trickery, had succeeded in poisoning her mind. From the very first Coolidge had disliked him instinctively, and made no effort to conceal his feelings; he resented the intimacy between him and Natalie, naturally enough, and would use every means possible to get the younger man completely out of the house. No doubt he looked upon him as dangerous. But why? There could only be one answer to this query. His own dishonesty; his secret knowledge of some trickery relative to the funds of the estate. He had convinced the girl of his honesty, but, more than ever, West believed the fellow a rascal.

These thoughts flitted through his mind, yet not consecutively, as the car left the grounds, and turned on to the main road, leading citywards. They were still skirting the Coolidge estate, although the house behind was concealed by shrubbery. Suddenly, just as they cleared the bridge, and began to mount the opposite grade, there came a sharp report, sounding so close at hand the chauffeur clamped on his brake, and glanced anxiously over the side of the car.

"Blow-out, wasn't it, sir?"

"No," said West shortly, staring himself out into the thicket of trees at their left. "It was a shot fired over there; a revolver I should say. Wait a second, Sanders, until I see what has happened."

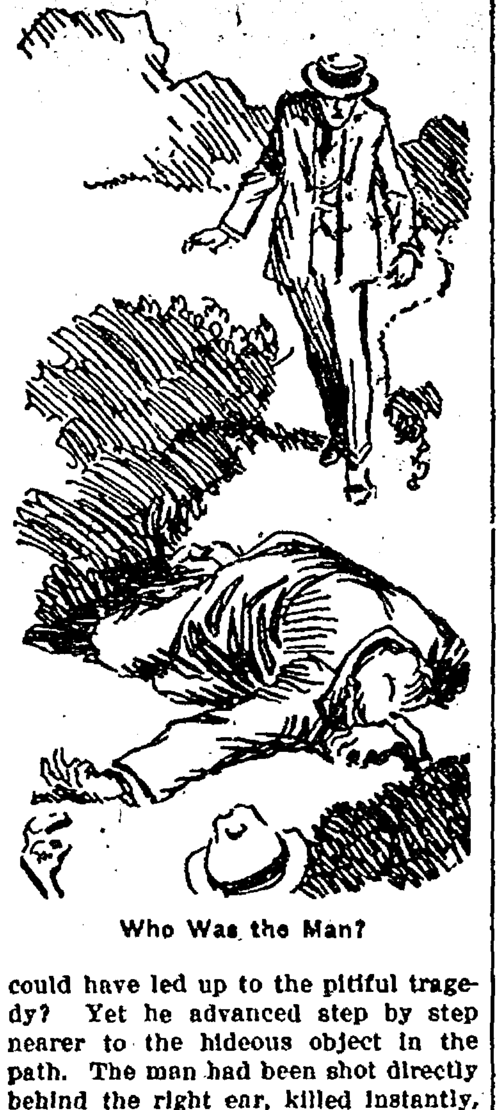
It was largely curiosity which led him to leave the car. The sound of either a rifle or a shotgun in that lonely spot would have been instantly dismissed as natural enough, but a pistol was different. That was no place for such a weapon. It somehow had a grimly sinister sound.

Determined to learn exactly what had happened, West pressed his passage forward through the vines of the fence, and emerged into the field beyond. A half dozen yards and he found the clover trampled, as though a man had passed that way. The trail led into a shallow depression, past a rather large boulder, near which the trampling of the grass was even more plainly revealed, as though the stranger had remained here for some time, had even seated himself, and then, abruptly ended a few yards away. Evidently the fellow had turned back at this point and retraced his steps.

West, now thoroughly puzzled and already convinced that some mystery hovered over the place, began to circle through the untrampled clover, but without any defined purpose. All at once, at the lower end of the gully he came, unexpectedly, upon another trail, this one well marked, apparently frequently used, which led straight across the field, and terminated at a small gate leading through the wire fence. Evidently here was a short cut to the road, well known to the servants on the estate, and possibly others. The discovery, however, told nothing further than this, and contenting himself with another glance about the unchanged field of rustling clover, West proceeded along the course of the path, intending to thus rejoin the automobile, waiting his return behind the trees.

Within a few steps of the gate, which was closed, he came to a sudden, horrified pause, staring ahead at a strange something huddled in the path. It was a shapeless thing, bearing no resemblance to a human being, until he advanced closer; then he recognized the form of a man, curled up as a dog sleeps, face down, hidden by his arm, and limbs drawn up, as if in a sudden spasm of agony. A hat was in the path beyond, where it had fallen, and a revolver lay glittering in the sunlight a few feet away. There was nothing familiar about either figure or clothing, yet unquestionably there lay the body of a suicide. The single shot they had heard, the tell-tale revolver close to the dead man's hand, were clear evidence of what had occurred.

The unexpectedness of this discovery, the peculiar position of the dead man, the loneliness of that deserted field in which he lay, shocked West and, for a moment left him strangely hesitant. Who was the man? What could have led up to the pitiful tragedy? Yet he advanced step by step nearer to the hideous object in the path. The man had been shot directly behind the right ear, killed instantly, no doubt, as the deadly bullet crashed through the brain. West lifted the arm which concealed the face, already shrinking from the suspicion which had began to assail him. Then he knew who the dead man was—Percival Coolidge.



Who Was the Man?

West stood guard beside the body until servants came and bore it to the house, but made no effort to follow. Instead he gave his address to Sexton, and continued his journey into the city. After what had passed between them he had no desire to again encounter Miss Natalie; and under these circumstances, actually shrank from meeting her. Just what this man's death might mean to the girl he could not safely conjecture, yet deep down in his own heart, he felt convinced that this act of self-destruction would later prove to be a confession of guilt. Yet, be that as it may, he was already definitely ruled out of the matter. Not unless she personally sent for him could he ever venture to go to her again in any capacity. To his mind this decision was final.

He was called for the inquest and gave his testimony. The hearing was brief, and the facts ascertained so clear there remained no doubt in the minds of any one but what this was a case of suicide. No particular attempt was made to probe into the cause, the personal affairs of the dead man being left for later investigation. West saw Natalie at the inquest for the very few moments she was upon the stand, but their eyes did not meet, nor did the girl give any evidence of recognition. Somehow the impression the young woman left upon him in those few moments was not a pleasant one. He could not clearly analyze this result, yet she was either acting a part to conceal her true emotions, or else she was really indifferent.

It was not until the following day that reason began to reassert itself, and he succeeded in marshaling the facts of the case more clearly in his own mind. He even began to doubt and question his own testimony, yet, before he reached any real conclusion, one of the club servants approached his chair.

"Captain West, there is a man out here asking to see you."

"A man! Where?"

"I had him wait in the anteroom, sir."

"Very well, Mapes."

It was Sexton, twirling his hat nervously in his hands, and still standing irresolutely in the middle of the floor. As sight of West he took a hasty step forward, eager to explain the cause of his presence.

"You'll pardon me, sir," he burst forth in apology, "But I must see you, sir."

"That's quite all right, Sexton. Let's step in here where we can talk quietly."

He pointed the way into a private card room, closing the door behind his visitor.

"Take the seat over there, Sexton. You came in to see me from Fairlawn?"

"No, sir, I didn't. The fact is, I'm not out there any longer."

"Not there! What do you mean?"

"I've been discharged, sir, with two other servants, since the funeral yesterday."

"Discharged! By whom? Not Miss Natalie, surely?"

"Yes, sir. She didn't give no reason; just said we were not wanted any longer. That's one reason why I came here to see you, sir."

"But I hardly know how I can be of help. I have no house of my own, and—well, the truth of the matter is, Sexton, just at present I am not on very good terms with the young lady myself."

"I know that, sir," more confidently, "and it isn't a position I am seeking, at all. I have quite a tidy bit of money laid away, and could get plenty of work. That's not the point, sir. Why should Miss Natalie tell me to go like that? It isn't a bit like her, sir; she ain't seemed natural at all lately, and I tell you there's something wrong goin' on out there. I'm sure o' that, sir."

"Sure of what?"

"Well, for one thing, it's my opinion that Percival Coolidge never killed himself, sir."

West sat up stiffly, as though struck a blow. These words startled him; drove his own mind into sudden activity.

"What makes you think that, Sexton?" he questioned slowly.

"Well, there's more than one thing," as though glad to have made the plunge, and anxious to justify himself. "But first of all that wasn't his revolver they found lying beside him. He always had one in his valise, an' it's there now, or was when I looked to see."

"You didn't tell that to the coroner."

"No, sir; he never put me on the stand. Besides I didn't know about it then. Did you notice where he was shot, sir?"

"Behind the right ear; the wound was plainly visible."

"Not very easy for a man to do himself, sir."

"No, but possible, nevertheless. The coroner was satisfied on that point."

"Yes, sir, but the coroner overlooked one thing, sir. He was sure it was a suicide case, and wanted to get done with it in a hurry. I and Simmons, sir, washed the body to get it ready for burial, an' I combed the hair down over the bullet wound. There wasn't no powder marks on the skin, an' not a hair was singed, sir. That's what makes me say he never killed himself."

West sat silent and motionless, looking straight at the man opposite, endeavoring to decide on a course of action. Some way in the depth of his earnestness, Sexton no longer appeared a servant. He was a man, voicing a man's heart. West realized the change instinctively; here was an intelligent loyal fellow, to be met frankly, and for the time being, at least, on the ground of equality. It would be useless to try to either mislead, or deceive.

"Sexton," he began finally, "this is a pretty serious charge you make, my man, but since I have been thinking things over, I confess some suspicious circumstances have arisen in my own mind. Of course I was not aware of these facts you have just related, but they fit in nicely with some observations of my own. The truth is," he confessed frankly, "I did not tell all I knew to the coroner's jury. I meant to do so, but the right questions were not asked me, and certain details slipped my memory until too late. Do you recall a boulder of rock out in that clover field?"

"Yes, sir, to the right of the path; it is mostly hidden now by the growth."

"Entirely concealed, a few yards away. Well, when I crawled through the fence after hearing that shot fired, I saw nothing, and heard nothing. I had advanced into the field several rods when I came upon the trail of some one leading directly north. It was not a path; merely evidence that a single person had passed that way. I followed, and came to this boulder. Here there was every proof visible that the previous party had remained for some time, seated and lying on the ground under protection of the stone. The occupancy was a recent one. Then evidently, whoever it was, had advanced to the right in the general direction of the gate through the fence, near where Coolidge's body was found. The marks of advance ended on a little rise, some ten yards from the boulder, where the fellow apparently turned about and retraced his steps."

"How far was that from the gate into the road, sir?" Sexton asked breathlessly.

"Within easy shooting distance for a revolver of that calibre, I should say. Any good marksman could have rung the bell."

"And you saw no one?"

"No; not a sign; the fact is I failed at the time to put two and two together. The thought of a possible murder never occurred to me."

"You think it was murder then, sir?"

"Yes, I do," replied West gravely. "It has all the marks, but who committed the crime? What was the motive? It will never do for us to make such a charge, after the coroner's verdict, without positive proof."

"No, sir."

"And you know of nothing which might clear this up?"

"No, sir; I've been with the Coolidges, sir, ever since Miss Natalie was a little girl, and I ain't heard of any trouble that ought to end in murder, sir."

"How old was Miss Coolidge when her father died?"

"She must have been seventeen, sir."

"And since then Percival Coolidge had full charge of the estate?"

"Practically, yes, sir; there was another trustee, but he died; and then, as I understand, Miss Natalie had some funds of her own."

West took a cigar from his pocket, and lit it. Although not altogether clear in his own mind, he had begun to see light.

CHAPTER VII

Against a Stone Wall.

Was this discovery anything to him? What difference could it make whether Percival Coolidge had died by his own hand, or been treacherously shot from ambush? How would it benefit Natalie Coolidge to have the truth revealed? And, if it would benefit her, why should he devote his time and labor to such an effort? She had cast him off, thrown him aside; her affairs had no further interest for him. Let her lawyer take care of them. These were West's first thoughts.

PRACTICAL USE

Eight year old Walter, reading a book far beyond his years, had just had the word diplomacy defined to him by his father as "doing the right thing at the right time." For a moment he was silent and then explained:

"Well then, I guess I used diplomacy last night. It was dark when mother came in with the castor oil. And I rolled Johnny into my place, and then when she got to the other side of the bed I rolled him back again."

Ku Klux Klan Organized Here?

Rumors Of Business Man Receiving Letter Signed By Famous Initials.

MAY BE JUST A JOKE

The town has been running over the past week with reports of one of the business men receiving a letter recently, containing some severe advice and signed by the "K. K. K." Other parties also received such a communication, this paper understands, of a similar nature, and one or two others are reported as expecting to be favored (?) with letters. On top of these stories, the Independent has been told by a citizen of the community that several nights at 11 to 11:30 several auto loads of men in large cars have passed his place going toward the grove, and around 1 to 2 in the morning they returned. Pipe dreams? Many at least have been expecting to hear of the Ku Klux Klan organizing in Belmond. It is reported that one is being formed at Clarion also.

PLEASANT TOWNSHIP

Rev. Waalkes and the Primary and Junior Sunday School Teachers of the Immanuel Church, attended the conference at Clarion last Saturday afternoon.

School districts No. 3 and No. 5 received their Standardization money last week.

Miss Nora Finn left for Rochester Minn. last Sunday where she will consult a physician. She was accompanied by her sister, Miss Kate Finn.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Boelman and family, were visitors at the Lousie Kramer home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Frohling and children were Sunday visitors at the home of Henry Schulte Sr.

Grandma Loats returned from Ackley last Friday where she has been visiting friends and relatives the past three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter H. Pals of Alexander, were Sunday visitors at the Menno Frohling home.

Gail Thompson spent Saturday at the A. C. Lieuwen home.

ACCIDENT RESULTS IN BROKEN BONES FOR TWO

Guy Bates and Artie Ebie both suffered broken bones Sunday when they experienced an accident with a horse and buggy. They were driving out in the country east of town, and near the Jim Cannon place the horse in some manner fell or threw herself, tipping the buggy over into the ditch. Bates suffered a number of broken ribs, and Ebie sustained a compound fracture of one ankle.

BELMOND ENTRIES IN CLARION CORN CARNIVAL

The following farmers in the vicinity of Belmond had entries in the Clarion corn carnival last Wednesday:

E. G. Reed and R. R. Reed, entries in the 10 ears, yellow; J. F. Henn, entries in the 10 ears, white. E. G. Reed won 5th in the 10 ear yellow. He was also entered in the single ear yellow, as was R. R. Reed. F. M. Henn was entered in the single ear yellow class. H. L. Hadley entered in the single ear white.

ANNUAL RED CROSS ROLL CALL OPENS NOVEMBER 11

Iowa's annual Red Cross Roll Call will open on Armistice Day, November 11, and continue through Thanksgiving.

Every county in the state will have a complete organization of its own for the conduct of the Roll Call, and in most communities all cities and towns will have similar organization. Every resident of the state, men and women alike, will be reached by the membership workers this year, officials declared.

The American Legion, business men's clubs, Boy Scouts, women's organizations and like bodies have pledged themselves in all parts of the state to join in carrying on the Roll Call. Churches of all denominations will hold special services on Nov. 12, Red Cross Sunday, touching upon humanitarian work and the call for service as sounded by the Red Cross.

As in past years, the Red Cross membership will be $1, wih special membership in larger amounts for those desiring them.

The membership fund will be used for a continuation of the work which the Red Cross has carried on for years nursing care and instruction in the schools, relief in great disasters and fmilnes, aid to the suffering in foreign countries and other activities for the good of the nation and the world.

Appointment of county chairmen for the Roll Call is expected to be announced within the coming two weeks.

NEW BANK AT SHEFFIELD

Walter W. Duff, cashier of the First National Bank at Wadden's Grove, Illinois, has been here the past week looking after his proposition of opening up a new bank at Sheffield. He has made application for a national bank charter, and has selected the name of the First National Bank of Sheffield, for the proposed bank. Mr. Duff says that he expects the national banking department to approve his application.

R. G. Wolf and Lavino Jones, of this city, with several well known and substantial residents of Sheffield, have had under consideration the organization of a state bank at Sheffield, but nothing definite has been decided upon.

Other parties have been figuring on opening up a new bank in Sheffield, so whether Sneffield will have a half dozen banks, or two good ones, as many as the town ought to have, will not be known until the financiers have sifted down the mix.—Hampton Chronicle.

WATERLOO MEN NOW WANT A NEW PARK

Sportsmen Who Tried To Stop Park At Wall Lake Now Offer Free Site.

Waterloo sportsmen who some time ago, had their lands condemned at Wall Lake, in order that the public might have access to the hunting and fishing there without paying tribute to them, have asked the state to rescind its action in condemning the lands and accept in lieu thereof a tract of equal size which they promise to give free of charge for the return of their old property. Secretary of State Ramsay has been making a pesonal investigation of the proposition and will report to the state executive council whether, in his judgment, the proposition being made by the Waterloo men is fair.

The Waterloo men had undoubtedly secured the best frontage on Wall Lake for their purpose. Their eagerness to get it back indicates they know a good thing when they see it. The tract offered in exchange for their old sites is said to be far less desirable. Webster City sportsmen are protesting against any change being made, and neighboring towns are asked to back them up.

It was thought that the matter had been definiely settled when the land was condemned by the state and the purchase price was forwarded to local officials more than a month ago, to be paid over to the men whose lands were condemned. But the Waterloo men first appealed the awards and since then have decided to offer the new site free for the return of their old properties.—News.

ALEXANDER SCENE OF MANY ACCIDENTS

Three Year Old Child Run Down By Auto Tuesday And Is Badly Injured.

Alexander was the scene of three quite serious accidents within the past two days.

Eldon Bell, the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bell of Alexander, was struck and seriously injured about 5:00 o'clock Tuesday afternoon by an automobile driven by Will Root. The little tot was crossing the road. Two cars were approaching, from opposite directions and the boy failed to see the one being driven by Root. Root also failed to see the child, and struck him. The boy was badly injured about the head and hip, and was unconscious for some time. He was given immediate attention and is recovering nicely.

Louis Schulte, a farmer, while engaged in corn picking, had his team run away the wagon wheels passing over both legs. He was badly bruised but is recovering nicely.

Jim Walsh, while cutting down a tree, had the misfortune to have his axe slip, the blade cutting deep into his foot, several stitches being required to close the wound.

GOING LIKE —— AND FAIL TO MAKE BRIDGE TURN

Henry Olson of Clarion, accompanied by a companion, and driving a Ford touring car failed to make the turn to the Barry bridge south of town late Saturday afternoon, and as a result crashed thru the fence and over the embankment into a telephone pole at the side of the river. It is said they were going at a very high speed and could not slow down in time to make the turn. They were coming from the north. Neither of the men were injured aside from a few little scratches, and the car for a wonder was but slightly damaged, one wheel being broken and a few other things somewhat disrupted. The windshield was not broken.

GARNER HAVING TROUBLE OVER PAVING TAXES

Wayne F. Fuller et al vs. Town of Garner et al is a suit in the Hancock county court wherein the town is being sued over the paving taxes. The case grows out of an assessment, or rather judgment, against the town for $43,463.42, awarded the Empire Construction Co. as the amount in excess of what could be raised by the regular assessment. The petition alleges that the paving, levies, contract, funding bonds, are illegal, and asks an injunction restraining the levy for taxation. It alleges that the valuation of Garner property in 1920 was $1,500,000, and that in 1921 it was $1,400,000 that on execution of the contract property affected by paving was worth but $800,000, and that therefore any contract in excess of $200,000 was more than the legal limit.

The next football game of the local school will be played Saturday of this week with the Britt team at the Britt field.

"BAD COON" SHOT AND KILLED AT WOOLSTOCK

An unknown negro was shot and instantly killed Wednesday of last week, at Woolstock, by the Woolstock marshal. The coon, with a companion, had been seen in the Great Western railroad yards at Eagle Grove, by a railroad detective, who had ordered them to move on. The dead negro had pulled a 44 calibre revolver and ordered the detective to move on himself, and as the officer did not have a gun with him, he moved. Before he could go up town and secure a gun, the two negroes left, walking toward Woostock. On the way they robbed a farmhouse. The Woolstock marshal was notified that the pair were in the stockyards there, and he went after them. Upon being accosted, the one negro drew his gun and fired. The marshal struck his arm so that the shot went wild, and before the coon could fire again the marshal had his own gun out and with one shot killed him, shooting him thru the head. The dead man's companion denies knowing his name, where he came from, or anything about him, and efforts to establish his identity have been fruitless. The remains therefore, it is reported, are to be sent to the clinic at Iowa City.

SECRETARY FOR HAMPTON COMMERCIAL CLUB

Hampton Chronicle—Lynn L. James of Meshoppen, Pennsylvania, has been engaged as secretary of the Hampton Commercial Club, and also as director of the Hampton Municipal Band for the coming year. Mr. James has been holding a similar position at Meshoppen during the past two years. For eight years previous to that time he held a like position at Bloomington, Pennsylvania. At Bloomington Mr. James developed a band that was considered one of the best in the east.

Mr. James comes to Hampton very highly recommended as a business man and citizen, and ability as a band director is said to be of a very high order. Mr. and Mrs. James have four children, two boys and two girls, and the family is expected to arrive in Hampton some time next week. They have leased the Hartwell residence property on the west side.

The Hampton Commercial Club had under consideration for some time the employment of a secretary who could give the greater part of his time to the interests of the town and community both in a social and business way. Mr. James seems to be well equipped for the position. He will be able to carry out the details of any big day events, thus saving the business men, who usually have to do these things, from a lot of unnecessary work and worry, and neglect their own business.

It is the desire of the Hampton Commercial Club that every active business man in Hampton become a member of the club. It is the desire of the Hampton commercial club that every booster for Hampton who can afford the small annual dues of $15 per year, become a member of the club. Sustaining nembers, which means real booters, can support the club with any amount over the $15 fee that they desire to give. Then there is a place for associate members, and this ought to include a large number of our best citizens whose dues will be only $5 a year.

Some people exploit their own purity by arguing that it is a sin only when found out.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

PEACEFULLY SLEEPING

Does anyone know what has become of the Chamber of Commerce? This organization was once upon a time living in this city, was well and favorably known, up and coming, and its name was familiar to those in far countries. In those days there were stirring times, with much doing, and the name of Belmond was spoken in many places. But alas, the sleeping sickness came upon it, and today it lies peacefully sleeping amid the dust of yesterday, its' hopes for the future dreamily mingling with the ashes of the past. The beauty sleeps, awaiting the magic touch of the fairy prince who shall awaken it to—what? Morelike 'twill be dynamite that awakens it, if, indeed, it ever awakens. Perhaps in sleep it has passed away and now, in other spheres, looks down upon us. Shall we send for Conan Doyle? It is a sad and pathetic case, deserving of the sympathy of all. Cards of condolence should be sent to the town of Belmond.

WHICH SHALL IT BE?

November 6th is election. Among the offices to be filled of particular interest to Belmond people are those of Congressman and county attorney. Of the latter, Belmond's candidate, Attorney J. M. Jensen, has the world "by the tail." His election is a matter of form. But just the same, Belmond people should give him a big vote to show the rest of the county that the town is behind him.

Of the other office, Belmond voters have two candidates to choose from, T. J. B. Robinson of Hampton, the republican candidate, and Fred Hageman of Waverly, the democratic candidate. The issues between them has narrowed down to one thing: Wet or Dry. Robinson is dry, Hageman Wet. Robinson has been endorsed by church people, by the Anti-Saloon League, and by business men the district over; he is a church man, a clean, upright moral citizen, a banker with a splendid reputation as a straightforward dealer and a man of high honor, square to the world, a man whom politics very seldom sees. Of all the candidates in the state, the Independent does not know of one more qualified to fill the position he seeks, or one who will give the people a squarer deal.

Hageman, so far as this paper knows, is a good man, and if elected will doubtless give the district good representation. But Hageman is a wet; it is claimed he has made the statement that his election will mean the voice of the people in favor of light wines and beer. His first campaign cards carried the line "I am for light wines and beer." The Independent, in his visit here last summer, gave him credit for having the nerve to publicly announce the fact that he did favor them. But since then he is said to have gotten out another set of cards without this line on them, one for the drys and another for the wets. This doesn't set well; no man can serve two masters; he cannot be on both sides of the fence at once; either Hageman is dry or he is wet, he can't be dry in Belmond and wet in Dubuque..

The issue plainly is wet or dry, and so far as this paper is concerned it is dry. The voters have the two men to pick from, the issue clearly defined: on the one side light wines and beer, on the other enforcement of prihibition. The Independent believes that light wines and beer is the opening wedge to bring back the stronger stuff, if not the old-time saloons. The voters can decide the issue November 6th. Hageman will carry the eastern end of the district, in and around Dubuque, by heavy majorities, Robinson will have to do his work in this end. Which shall it be? If you believe that prohibition is worth while, your vote for Robinson will decide it.

CLIPPINGS

The train service in this branch isn't like wine, by any means. The service being handed us is hard to take and does not improve with age. Part of the time we have trains and other times we do not. The M. & St. L. has not made a settlement with their striking laborers, hence no service and we are forced to play the part of the "suffering public." We believe a protest would do no harm, and might result to advantage, for as long as we suffer the present inadequate service in silence, just that long will the company permit us to. We received improved service, previous to the walkout of the employees thru efforts of a committee appointed by the commercial club, and we may be able to do it again. It's worth trying.—Kanawha Reporter.

Tell Him Now

If with pleasure you are viewing a work a man is doing,
If you like it, or you love him, tell him now;
Don't withhold your approbation till
the parson make oration,
And he lies with lillies o'er his brow.
For no matter how you shout it, he won't really care about it,
He won't know how many teardrops
you have shed;
If you think some praise is due him,
Now's the time to slip it to him,
For he cannot read his tombstone
when he's dead.

More than fame and more than money is the comment, kind and sunny,
And the hearty, warm approval of a friend;
For it gives to life a savor and it makes you stronger, braver,
And it gives you heart and spirit to the end.
If he earns your praise, bestow it;
If you like him, let him know it;
Let the words of true encouragement be said;
Do not wait 'till life is over and he's underneath the clover,
For he cannot read his tombstone
when he's dead.

Frank Collins of Livermore paid a fine in justice court totalling about $35 for illegal sale of cigarettes. Mr. Collins brought out the fact that the sale was made by a member of his family, but did not release him from responsibility. The illegal sale consisted of selling to a minor.

The Soda Grill in Humboldt was also the victim of an employee selling to one John Rhiner, a minor. It seems that young Rhiner was in Fort Dodge promiscously smoking his cigarettes, and when taken up by the police made a disturbance, and was given a couple of days in the jouvenile ward of the station, and later made affidavit that he bought the cigarettes from the Soda Grill.

There is some doubt of the evidence but rather than fight the matter the proprietor of the Grill paid the fine. It is well known here that the Soda Grill is not catering to illegal sale of cigarettes, but young clerks do not always realize the necessity of knowing to whom they sell. The law places the burden of proof on the business house which makes the sale. It makes no difference that the purchaser declares that he is of age. That is a matter in which no business man can take a chance.—Humboldt Republican.

BELMOND, IOWA

THE ELECTRIC COMPANY

The rapid growth of IOWA FALLS ELECTRIC COMPANY has occurred under the efficient general management of the same men who have for many years so successfully directed the affairs of the Iowa Railway and Light Company. The direct management has been in the capable hands of Mr. H. F. Kellogg, whom most of you know personally.

Mr. Kellogg is constantly endeavoring to help make the service more efficient and striving to please our customers in every way.

Some idea of the important service being rendered by our Company may be had by considering the physical work required to adequately serve 24 communities with their diverse requirements of service, and to realize that there are no "lay-offs," or closing down in the Electric Light and Power business. It must be ON THE JOB 24 hours Every Day in the Year.

The personel of the Company are in every sense of the term, "public servants," who desire to serve you.

They are out in all kinds of weather, under all sorts of conditions, and with the one thought always in mind to have the Power Where and When You Want It, INSTANTLY.

To accomplish this, the generating machinery, the pole lines, the transformers and all the varied equipment must be kept in perfect condition.

This requires frequent inspections and careful, expert work.

When you next Turn A Switch Or Press A Button give the matter a "Moment's Thought."

We will tell you more about the Company next week,

Respectfully,
IOWA FALLS ELECTRIC COMPANY,
Iowa Falls, Iowa

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Clarion Corn Carnival a Success.

From the standpoint of agricultural exhibits, particularly in the poultry department, the Clarion corn carnival was a great success. The weather was ideal, the concessions and all entertainments were of the very highest type, although the attendance at this fall festival was not as high as was expected—especially since so much time and money were spent in making preparations for this great occasion.

Professor John B. Wentz, of the Farm Crop Department at Ames college, who judged the corn, commented upon the splendid showing of corn which was made by the farmers of this county and especially upon the arrangement of the corn in the exhibit. The corn show brought out many splendid samples of corn of the county, although it would seem that with the exceptionally high premiums which were offered that more corn would have been exhibited. The corn carnival came at a time of year this season when farmers of the county were just beginning their corn picking work and they were somewhat reluctant about leaving their fields to attend the show. The farmer is unusually anxious about his corn crop this year for the reason that he is unable to secure pickers to get his crop out of the fields.

According to Professor W. H. Lapp, of Ames, who judged the poultry exhibit, this poultry show was far above the average of the state. This was a fine exhibition of what is being done in our county in poultry production. Those in charge of the poultry exhibit found it difficult to provide pens for all entries. This is evidence that poultry raising is becoming more popular in our community.

Poultry Club Exhibit

A splendid showing was made by boys and girls of Wright county in the poultry exhibit of the Clarion corn and poultry show. There were 20 pens of poultry exhibited in the club department of the show, including 12 entries in the trio class and 3 entries in the single bird class.

Boys and girls who made the best showing in the poultry exhibit and premiums received are as follows:

Earl Michelson, S. C. White Leghorn cockeral, best bird in club.

Earl Mickelson, S. C. White Leghorn trio, best in club.

Edna Hanson, Barred Rock, best cockeral in club.

John Bell, S. C. Rhode Island Red pullet, best in club.

Ruth Dorr, Buff Orpington trio second best in club.

Themla Streveler, White Wyandotte cockeral, second best in club.

Leola Jenison, Buff Rock pullet, second best in club.

Tillie Henn, Barred Rock trio, third best in club.

Will Henn, Barred Rock cockeral, third best in club.

Ruth Dorr, Buff Orpington pullet, third best in club.

This exhibit of poultry by the youngsters of the county shows in a measure what can be done and what has been done during the past year in the club work with boys and girls. This should demonstrate to the boys and girls, as well as to the parents, that it is worth while to take part in club work. Members of the poultry club should bear in mind that there will be another opportunity to show their birds at the Goldfield short course which is to be held December 14 and 15.

Corn Pickers Scarce

There seems to be an unusual scarcity of corn pickers, not only in Wright county, but throughout the state of Iowa, and the farmers are becoming anxious about getting their corn crop out of the fields. The weather has been ideal so far for husking and if this weather continues the corn crop may be husked without a great deal of outside help.

The scarcity of corn pickers this fall is acount for largely by the fact that there are about 250 road gangs working in about eighty-three counties in the state of Iowa, and that the construction work is being pushed forward in the cities and about fifty to sixty per cent of these men are corn pickers. This means that the farmers will not be able to get these men to work in the corn fields until we have cold freezing weather, which will put a stop to the road and construction work.

This is not very encouraging to the farmers, but it is a condition which we find ourselves up against and everyone will have to be patient because there will be plenty of corn pickers later in the season. There are about twenty-five to thirty applications for corn pickers at the county agent's office and it has been imossible to fill a single one on account of the scarcity of help.

Corn Yield Plots

Arrangements are being made for holding demonstrations on the farms where the corn yield experiments were conducted during the past year. Professor B. E. Heitzman, of the Farm Crops Department at Ames, will be in the county November 7th and 8th to assist with the demonstrations for checking up the different varieties of corn which were grown in the experimental plots.

The demonstrations will be held November 7th at the Harry Inners farm two miles northeast of Goldfield, and November 8th at the H. A. Flett farm six miles southwest of Dows. The general plan of the demonstrations will be to have the corn of each man's plot husked and piled at the end of the field where it will be measured, weighed up and a moisture test taken of each variety of corn. In this way the yielding qualities of the different varieties of corn will be brought out.

BUY ADVERTISED FOODS OF STANDARD MAKES

Advertising benefits the consumer most of all. Advertised goods are trade marked to propect the consumer for quality and quantity.

Think of the infinite variety of prepared foods from which the greater part of a wholesome meal may be prepared with almost no work for the housewife.

Think of the household conveniences and business conveniences—the time savers in your office or home—the accessories which make your automobile a greater pleasure.

All of these things are rather intricate. It would cost a small fortune to prepare a few of them for private use.

How do you suppose the man who first thought of these things was able to make them for you at a price you could afford to pay?

It was through advertising of course. Advertising organizes cooperative buying units. The man with a new idea knows that he can tell thousands or millions of people about his ideas through advertising.

He knows that the united buying power of all these people will enable him to produce his idea in practical form at a cost which is only a fraction of what the first article would cost.

One of the best examples of how this is done is Eskimo Pie. Within six months after the inventor first had his idea, everybody in the United States knew about these delicious new chocolate covered ice cream bars.

This was a spectacular demonstration of how advertising can bring a new idea to the American public, But in every advertising success, the same principal holds true.

But advertising does more than introduce new things to you. It safeguards you in the purchase of any advertised product. You can depend upon it—nothing can succeed through advertising unless the article itself has merit. Advertising a bad prodoct will make just as many enemies for that product as advertising a good product will make friends for the good product.

And so, if an article has been widely advertised for a long time, you can be sure that it is good or the public never would have supported it. You know that the advertised and trademarked product must have a deffinite quality—and be fully worth the price You can be sure that you get more real value in an advertised product for every cent you spend than you will in an unadvertised product, because advertising is the cheapest selling method there is.

You know the advantages of cooperative buying. You have heard a lot about the idea in the last two or three years. You belong to a cooperative buying society every time you buy an advertised product. Read advertising. Buy advertised product.

It is the surest way to be certain of satisfaction and money's worth.—Exchange.

PREPARE PULLETS FOR WINTER EGG PRODUCTION

According to J. J. Warren, poultry specialist of the Agricultural Extension Service, "the care and management your pullets receive from now on will determine largely the results you will recieve this winter . One flock owner visited recently had been feeding his pullets on an exclusive oat diet. As a result, they were very thin and in no condition to force for egg production. Several weeks of heavy feeding on corn will be necessary to overcome this diffculty.

"Feeding new corn, oats, wheat or barley which has not been sufficiently dried or "cured" often result in severe bowel trouble and often in heavy losses. It is much better to buy old grain than to take chances with unseasoned grain.

"Many flock owners have more chickens this year than they ever had before. Some of them, however, do not realize that this great increase calls for greater care and system in management, particularty in feeding. A dry mash kept before the chickens constantly will do wonders in developing them.

"At least one full feed a day of corn and oats—equal parts by measure—fed in the evening, will be relished by the birds.

"The sooner the pullets are placed in their permanent laying quarters, the better off they will be. It will be easier to give them better care and they will be accustomed to their quarters before they begin to lay.

"Serious trouble may be escaped by throughly cleaning and disinfecting the laying quarters before putting the pullets in. Treating the birds with some good louse powder, such as sodium fluoride is also advisable at this time.

"Many flock owners are planning on wintering over twice, and in some instances three times as many hens and pullets as their house can safely accommodate. This is one of the most serious mistaks a flock owner can have. It usually results in a lower total winter egg production for the farm, and often in heavy losses from diseases."

BIRD SMASHES TRAIN

C. R. Attig, of Marshalltown, a brakeman on the M. & St. L. railroad, received a bad cut over his right eye, on the nose and on the right cheek, and also was severely bruised on the lips in a unique accident last Saturday evening.

Mr. Attig was running on the north bound evening passenger, No 9, and when the train was about two and one-haft miles northwest of Geneva a beautiful ring-necked pheasant flew against the window pane of the locomotive cab and broke it. Mr. Attig was riding in the engine cab that time and the pieces of flying glass struck him in the face and inflicted the wounds mentioned above. The pheasant was killed instantly when it struck the window pane.

Birds have often been know to fly against window panes at night, attracted by a light from the inside but no one in this vicinity has any record of a pheasant bumping into a moving train.—Hampton Chronicle.

M'NIDER FIGHTS MOVE TO RE-ELECT HIM

New Orleans, La.,—Hanford MacNider, national comdander of the American Legion, Friday declared that uder no circumstances would he be a canditate to succeed himself as national commander, and that he would "bitterly oppose" any proposal to change the national constitution of the legion which would make possible a second term for a national head of the legion.

"I would regard such an action by the legion as a tragic distake," Mr. MacNider said in a state ment.

The announcement was brught forth by repeated rumors, current among delegate here that, in the event of an impending deadlock over the national commandership, friends of MacNider might bring forward a constitutional amendent which would make it possible for him to succed himself, with a view to carrying forward the fight for national legislation and adjusted compensation.

An Every Day Machine

You know the click of the binder is heard for only twenty days in the year while the hum of the cream separator is heard 365 days. Twice a day it is used—750 times a year. Just a slight loss of cream every time a poor separator is used, will soon waste more than enough butter fat to pay for a good cream separator—a Primrose that pays for itself with the increased returns it brings from your cows. The Primrose gets ALL the cream.

ANOTHER ROBBERY IN TOWN

Last Sunday night robbers were again busy in our little burg, breaking into different homes and business houses. Indications are that the party of one or more entered the home of L. B. Hulsebus first, where they got away with two good suits and a bunch of keys. L. B. and wife had left for Clear Lake to take Walter and Herman and Mrs. Bonner and Mrs. Islup back, and Alma and Louise Witt(who were upstairs remember hearing a commotion down stairs shortly after retiring. They gained entrance thru the north window of the bedroom downstairs. It seems the next place was Albert Wendel's home. Here they took sheets tablecloths and pillows besides several articles of wearing apparel, a few pieces of jewelry, and to appease their hunger they took a loaf of bread some butter and jelly. The hardware store was also entered, where knives, razors, glass cutters, flash lights, batteries, bulbs, about 12 dozen mittens, and all husking pegs and hooks that were on the counter were taken. The restaurant was also visited and here they helped themselves to tobacco, candy and bread. Next they broke into the garage and tried to crank Fred Mensel's car, but he was too wise for them this time. He had it fixed so that no one could get away with it. Next they tried cars belonging to H. Fischer, Rev. Pannkuk, L. B. Hulsebus and Heine Waage, but they all refused to work for the miscreants. Up to the present writing the parties have not been found.

H. F. Reif, Harold Blewitt and C. E. Brogan motored last Tuesday evening to Thornton, where they attended a meeting of the Masonic order.

REFORMED CHURCH NOTES

Evening services (German) 8:00.

The church extends a cordial invitation to all who have no church home to attend these meetings.

"I was glad when they said unto me, 'let us go into the house of the Lord.'"

The Ladies Aid met Monday afternoon at the usual hour in the basement of the church. The goodly number of 21 were present. The fact that the ladies tied 5 comforters goes to show that the time was well and profitably spent. Mrs. H. J. Groen served refreshments. The Ladies Aid gladly accepts orders for tying comforters at 65 cents apiece.

Altho the young peoples' meeting is quite well attended, there is still much room for improvement. Let us have a large attendance next Sunday.

Topic for the evening: "A Saloonless World and How to Get It." The world needs no saloon; it's pitiful need, its one need, is The Christ. Let us therefore remember that a saloonless world is not a saved world. A picture of a saved world is given in Rev. 22: 3-4-5. It means something—something great to be a christian. It means not only to take Christ into our name but into our daily experience, to practice His presence at home, in the shop, and office, and in all our relations with those about us. It means the three greatest things in the universe, namely: Salvation, Character, and Usefulness.

She was taken to Belmond where she had an x-ray examination and her arm was attended to. She is getting along as well as can be expected under the circumstances.

Our girls' basket ball team went to Thornton last Friday afternoon, where they played the girls' team a game, which resulted in a victory for Thornton. The score was 14 to 12.

Last Tuesday the Latimer H. S. ball nine came over to play our boys a fast game, but were defeated, altho it was a very close and interesting game. The score ran 17 to 18 in our favor.

The girls' basket ball team also played our girls a game. The score was 6 to 2 in favor of our girls.

Three buildings went up in flames early Friday morning at Thornton. The barbershop, postoffice and warehouse of the Thornton Hardware and Implement Co. were the buildings completely destroyed, and but for the courageous work of the fire fighters the loss would have been more. As it was, the other buildings in the block were saved.

MESERVEY SCHOOL NOTES

The Meservey schools will be closed from Oct. 23 to Nov. 6 in order that the pupils can assist their parents in corn husking.

A number of the children in the grades have been absent from school the past week. However, the only ones absent from high school were Peter Koenen, Gerald Janssen, Oliver and Eva Sprau.

Thursday evening the teachers were entertaned at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Pals. We found that the Pals were royal entertainers and all enjoyed a jolly time.

On Wednesday of last week Meservey went down to Latimer where they crossed bats with the fast base ball team of that place. The boys came back with the short end of the score.

Latimer returned the game Wednesday afternoon and Meservey was successful in winning the game, score 15 to 14. The game was very loosely played with may errors on both sides.

The girls' basket ball team won from Latimer girls by the score of 6 to 2 in the first game of the season. The teams were evenly matched and the game was a fast one. The mmbers of the team are as follows: Ollie Pals and Agnes Fischer, centers; Mildred Koehler and Evelyn Thomas, guards; and Anna Pals and Grace Groen forwards.

The teachers from out of town will spend their vacation as follows: Miss Esher Anderson, primary, will visit with her parents at Story City; Miss Amalia Hueneman, grade teach- will visit her parents at Garner; Miss Hazel Hawthorne, grade teacher, will visit her parents at Renwick; Miss Louise Humke, high school teacher, visits her parents at Ackley; Miss Lois Horoyd, high school principal, will visit her parents at Plymouth; Supt. J. G. Herbster will visit friends at Mason City and Milford, and also attend the State Teachers' convention at Des Moines Nov. 1 to 4.

Several of the high school students have decided to enter the declamatory contest, which will be held sometime in December. These students deserve much credit for going into this contest, for it means much hard work. Each and every one will derive a great deal of good from the experience, whether he wins a prize or not. Those who have entered the contest are Peter Koenen, Mervin Wickersheim, George Brater, Agnes Fischer, Evelyn Thomas, Elma Witt, Donald Muller, Lena Pals, Eva Sprau, Thelma Thomas, Gerald Janssen, Oliver Sprau, Grace Groen, and Molly Zieman.

Six weeks tests are over and work for the second period is well under way. The students who received the highest grades for the period are as follows:

English Literature: Anna Pals, Evelyn Thomas
10th English: Donald Muller, Elma Witt
9th English: Oliver Sprau, Molly Zieman
Commercial Law: Anna Pals, Agnes Fischer.
Physics: Agnes Fischer, Anna Pals.
German II: Anna Pals, Ollie Pals.
German I: Donald Muller, Eva Schluter.
Geometry: Donald Muller, Eva Schluter.
Agriculture: Clarence Pals, Peter Koenen.
General Science: Agnes Fischer, Donald Butz.
Algebra: Molly Zieman, Oliver Sprau.

Harry Lauen and Bert Fry were absent from 6th grade duties the past two weeks.

The following people of the 5th and 6th grades have earned perfect deportment stars every day this week: Mildred Janssen, Arlene Nissen, Wayne Waddingham, Harland Blewitt, Neva Muller, Emma Boelman, Fredona Lemke, Nellie Fry, Laura Bier, Edward Kuhlers, Marie Pals, Lydia Pannkuk, Alma Dorenkamp.

Everybody in the 5th grade had a perfect spelling lesson Tuesday.

Little Myron Blewitt was a 5th grade caller Friday p. m.

Alma Dorenkamp provided her classmates with a good essay on "Petroleum" Thursday. The other members of the class were glad to relax and listen.

The Independent is in receipt of the following interesting item from G. F. Lee, an official of Central College at Pella, Iowa:

Mr. Herman Dirks of Meservey, a student at Central College played in the second half of the football game between Central College and Graceland on the local athletic field. Central defeated Graceland 25 to 0. Dirks substituted Vander Myde at right tackle.

Joe West of Truman, Minn., spent Saturday and Sunday with his family north of town.

ROWAN NEWS

Rowan School Notes

There will be a basket ball game here Saturday evening of this week, Rowan vs. Williams.

Kathryn Harsen missed one day of school last week.

Dale Hiams stayed out of school several days for work.

Walter Barker was not in school last week.

Duane Bingham, who has been suffering the past week from the grippe is in school again.

All who attended the high school Hallowe'en party in the gym last Friday evening have reported it a grand success. The only flaw being that some of the pie had disappeared when it came time for lunch. But the pop corn and apples were plentiful enough to fill all.

The two literary societies were organized last week. The first program will be given on Friday, Nov. 3rd. The names for the societies have not been chosen yet. The officers are as follows: One side, James Kercheval, pres, Clesson Azeltine, vice pres., Edward Campbell, sec. and treas, Marie Hinkley and Esther Emerson, censors, George Utz, sargent of arms; other side, Ruth Emerson pres., Ray Azeltine vice pres, Joe McKinley sec. and treas, Amy Azeltine and Bernice Hanson censors, Harold Moellering, sargent of arms.

Evening service at 7:30.
Mid week prayer service Wednesday evening at 7:30.

The Junior Endeavor will meet to organize Wednesday afternoon at the close of school.

Beginning next Sunday morning the pastor plans to give a ten minute talk to the children at the first of the services

Last Sunday evening the young people of the church gave a three-act playlet entitled "Crowded Out." This was in the interest of the Missionary society. The program was very well rendered after which a free will offering was taken which amounted to ten dollars. This goes to Kobe college in Japan to help provide more room so that more pupils can be accomodated.

The Ladies Aid society will meet at the home of Mrs. Elsie Allen on Thursday afternoon.

D. W. Whitten had the misfortune to fall at his home Sunday morning and break a bone in his right hand. It is very painful.

Mrs. Kleinschrodt was a Belmond caller Wednesday.

Carl Steffens returned from Iowa City on Tuesday. He had a thoro medical examination. His back was put in a cast which will have to remain on for several weeks.

Will Bingham has been seriously ill the past week with the flu. He is thought to be out of danger at the present writing. Duane who was taken sick first is able to be out again and back in school.

Miss Esther Fowler was a Belmond caller Wednesday.

L. D. Bingham motored up from Ia. Falls, Friday, and visited relatives until Sunday afternoon, when he returned home.

Mrs. H. J. Whitten, Clarence and Kenneth and Miss Susan Duffy left for Minnesota early Saturday morning to visit at the Art Walker home over Sunday.

Messrs. R. H. Keith, and F. B. Sheldon went to Emmons, Minn., last Friday on business.

Ed. Baines stopped in Rowan, Friday evening, on his way home to Dows from Spirit Lake, where he had been visiting his three brothers.

Miss Etta Carr returned from Latimer last Friday where she had been visiting relatives.

Almond Drury of Dows, Mrs. L. T. Pascoe of Eagle Grove, and Frank Drury and Mrs. Herb Hadley of this place left Sunday morning by auto for Highmore, S. D., to visit at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Drury.

Miss Anna Brinkman is to have charge of the services at Bethel church south of Galt next Sunday evening, Oct. 29.

Hubbard McCallum was visiting relatives here the first of the week.

Miss Angie Baines taught school in Maple Grove school last Monday for Miss Susan Duffy.

Hattie Ballou returned Wednesday from her visit in Crockston, International Falls and Dodge Center, Minn. She leaves Tuesday for Long Beach where she will spend the winter. Mrs. Viola Tibbets went to Anita last week and will join Mrs. Ballou at Omaha from which place they will go on to California together.

Miss Nora Shaffer has rented the Mrs. Peddle house in the north part of town and expects to move in soon to spend the winter.

Dr. Maker moved to Goldfield the latter part of the week and will practice from that city in the future. We are sorry to lose him from our town and wish that some Doctor might settle here.

J. A. Whitten sells Goodyear tires.

Mr. and Mrs. John Barker from Grundy Center stopped at the Will Whitten home Saturday. They went from here to Goldfield and Armstrong Mr. Barker is an uncle of Mrs. Whitten.

After next Sunday Rev. Tomkinson will have charge of the Latimer charge at 2;30 p. m. instead of 9:00 a. m. He will continue this order for five months. This will give him a chance to attend S. S. here.

Miss Alice Kent of Dows spent a few days the past week with rela- here.

Joe Cowley was on the sick list last week.

Word received from Mrs. Wm. Tresidder who is in the hospital at Iowa City recovering from an operation, states that she was not quite so well the latter part of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Howell and children motored to Humboldt, Saturday evening, and spent Sunday at the home of his parents, Rev. and Mrs. Howell.

Quite a number of Rowan people attended the corn carnival at Clarion last Wednesday.

Last Thursday at Forest City occured the marriage of Miss Carol Hoke and Harry Harson, both of this place. The bride is the younger daughter of W. A. Hoke and is well known around this vicinity, having been raised here. The groom is the son of Mrs. Edith Harson and has spent several years in and around Rowan. Both young people are well liked in the community and a host of friends extend congratulations and best wishes to this couple for a long and happy journey thru life. They were accompanied to Forest City by Mrs Edith Harson and Miss Kathryn Leeper, mother and niece of the groom. They expect to move to the Whitten and Emerson farm now occupied by the Alben Anderson family in the spring.

The Young Ladies Mission Study club met at the home of Mrs. Roy Hyde last Thursday evening. Seven members were present. The new book of study "Ann of Ava", was started. This promises to be a very interesting study and we wish every member would try to be present so as not to miss any of the story. The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Ray Azeltine with Miss Frances Virden as leader.

Mrs. Ray Azeltine was a dental caller at Belmond Thursday where she had a troublesome tooth removed.

Mr. and Mrs. Tice Streveler went to Popejoy Sunday to visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Logan McBurney. When they returned home about 7:30 in the evening they found their home had been entered and all the dresser and buffet drawers had been emptied of their contents and the things scattered around all over the floors. The thief had entered the house thru the cellar. $28 in money and a check which belonged to the two daughters for $5 was taken. Nothing else has been missed so far so it looks like they were after just money. $22 of the money belonged to the man who is working for Mr. Streveler.

Mrs. W. A. Hoke, who has been cooking for the road graveling outfit near Allison, returned home one day last week as it is getting too cold to camp out now.

Mrs. George Whitten and daughter Vinnie, returned from Rochester, last Thursday. Mrs. Whitten is very weak since returning home being unable to sit up much. Her many friends wish for a speedy recovery.

Mrs. Lizzie Brooks has been very sick the past week with the grippe. A nurse from Hampton has been caring for her.

Last Thursday morning as Mr. and Mrs. Herb Ketchum and son were driving to Rowan a truck coming from the west ran into them at the Earl Sellers corner. It struck the Ketchum automobile right in the center and threw it over the fence, practically wrecking the car. Mrs. Ketchum was injured very much and is still very sick from the effects of it. It is feared she was injured internally. However, no bones were broken. Mr. Ketchum and the son escaped uninjured.

Mrs. Will Whitten has been on the sick list the past week with the grippe. She is some improved at this writing.

Last Thursday afternoon the members and friends of the W. C. T. U. were entertained at the home of Mrs. D. W. Whitten. About 50 were present. The program opened with a violin solo by Miss Viola Charter. She was accompanied by Mrs. Clint Kercheval. Mrs. L. A. McCallum read a scripture lesson, followed by prayer by Rev. Halbert. Mrs. Bert Pelley and Rev. Tomkinson sang a very pleasing duet after which Mrs. Holman of Eagle Grove gave a fine address on Citizenship. This was a very instructive talk and was much enjoyed by all present. The ladies served a very nice lunch. The members are starting a course of study in citizenship which will be very beneficial to them as voters. All present at this meeting felt that they had spent a profitable afternoon. Mrs Holman was born across the waters and knows the trials of an alien in becoming a citizen of the U. S. and she has helped many of them to get ready to pass their examinations.

The local post of the American Legion put on a very successful sale last Friday evening at the Stock Pavilion. The boys solicited the friends of the country and town and secured a large quantity of farm products and household goods which went at a good price. There was a large attendance, the pavilion being nearly full. The proceeds of the sale amounted to $108.

The American Legion expresses its appreciation of the generosity and support of the public for its help last Friday.

A. M. SCHANKE For Congress

THE MAN

Mr. Schanke was born in Minnesota in 1878, of fine old Norwegian Lutheran parentage. During his boyhood he clerked in a store owned by his father. Later he attended high school at Elmore, Minnesota, in which town he later entered the banking business. From the beginning his ability along commercial lines was very evident and his progress was rapid. Twelve years ago he moved to Mason City where he has since made his home. It was there that he and his brother laid the foundations of Schanke & Company, now one of the leading Investment Banking Houses in Iowa, dealing in Farm Mortgages and School and Municipal Bonds, the market for which has been materially broadened to the advantage of the borrower. From a very modest beginning he has been eminently successful. Mr. Schanke's reputation for strict business integrity and fair dealing has given his organization a large following especially throughout Northwestern Iowa.

Mr. Schanke, like the majority of America's leading statesmen and publicists, is a self made man. He is a close student of public affairs and understands the problems that confront the nation. Very democratic in his tastes, his sympathies are with the common people, and if elected to Congress his industry and his ability as an organizer will be devoted to seuring legislation calculated to promote the welfare of the producing classes and guarding against the enroachment of interests bent on securing special privileges either in the way of exhorbitant tariffs, subsidies, or exemption from surtaxes on large incomes, thus throwing the burden onto the farmers and laboring men, who are taxed, not on their ability on pay, but on their necessities when they come to buy.

Mr. Schanke owns and operates a number of farms and takes a very active part in their affairs. All of his interests are closely identified with farming and he understands the farmer's problems.

HIS PLATFORM

MR. SCHANKE——
Is opposed to Ship Subsidies.
Favors drastic reductions in the expenditures of government.
Believes in applying to governmental matters the same efficiency that is applied to successful business enterprises.
Favors the adoption of legislation necessary to the economical distribution of farm products to the end that hey may bring a greater proportion of return to the producer.
Takes the position that labor is not a commodity and the principle must be recognized in all legislation. We must assure all who toil an honest and commensurate return for that toil.
Favors increasing from $10,000 to $25,000 the amount that may be loaned by the Federal Farm Loan Bank to one person and popularizing the Farm Loan Bonds thus reducing the interest rate to the borrower.
Condemns the practice followed by many congressmen of playing politics by "side stepping" the issues in Congress by being absent or voting "present" or "not voting."
Is opposed to the present exhorbitant tariff which taxes the farmer $5 on the things he buys for every $1 protection he receives on his products. In so far as European goods are barred from our markets to protect our high cost manufacturers, the Europeans lose their power to buy our farm crops. That must mean lower prices for American farm products in the end.

MR. SCHANKE'S OPPONENT HAS BEEN IN CONGRESS 24 YEARS. IS IT NOT TIME A CHANGE WAS MADE?

This test shows why a Clothcraft Suit is such a Wonderful VALUE

A Clothcraft Serge Coat—right from the rack—was thrust in water, dried and repressed. And it came through the test looking like new.

Now you know how water will ruin almost any garment—how it pulls it all out of shape. That is because a coat is made of many little parts—fabric, hair-cloth, lining, canvass, thread, etc. If these materials are not of good quality or if the coat is not put together with theseparts in the proper relation to each other, it cannot survive the water test unchanged.

The fact that Clothcraft Coats do go through this severe test without harm proves that the materials are of proper quality, the designing perfect and the workmanship truly expert—and that they will retain their shape after the hardest wear.

Doesn't this answer your suit problem exactly? Doesn't it show you that Clothcraft Clothes are clothes of Quality? And doesn't the price—for instance $27.00 for Clothcraft Standard Serge in blue, gray or brown—show the VALUE which is built into Clothcraft suits? Visit us and let us demonstrate further

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance.

CHAPTER II.—That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her.

CHAPTER III.—Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, apparently is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance, and the feeling of antagonism is mutual. Natalie, Coolidge, and West plan a visit of charity to a poor and remote section of the city.

CHAPTER IV.—Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage, remaining a length of time which causes him some uneasiness. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie, and has ulterior motives.

CHAPTER V.—On the party's return to the Coolidge home, Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions concerning her "double," and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but helpless. He leaves.

CHAPTER VI.—On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and investigates. He finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. The inquest so determines. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He gives it as his belief that Coolidge was murdered, and about convinces West he is right.

CHAPTER VII.—Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West, his suspicions of things not being right strengthened by his learning that Coolidge had lied about the reason for the trip to the cottage, visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon.

All true, yet this state of mind brought no satisfaction. He was interested; he could not escape his first impressions of the girl, or drive from him a desire to serve her, whether she wished it, or not. She might, indeed, be in equal danger from an assassin. He could not determine this until he learned the cause of the slaying of Percival. Then, on the other hand, suppose some one else's suspicions were also aroused. Who would they naturally look to as guilty of this horrible crime? There was but one answer—Natalie Coolidge. She was seemingly the only person to directly benefit by his death. All these considerations urged him on, overcame his doubt and indecision. Then he desired to learn the truth himself. His eyes rested on Sexton's anxious face.

"I've been thinking it over," he admitted quietly, "and I guess it is up to you and me to find out what this means."

"Yes, sir," hesitatingly. "You—you don't think it was Miss Natalie, sir?"

"No, I do not, Sexton. I have my own reasons for saying that. Yet naturally she is the one to be first suspected. Do you know anything?"

"Only that I am sure she was in the garden, sir, when the shot was fired. I saw her there just after you drove away."

"That is conclusive then, so far as her personal actions are concerned."

"Where was it the three of you went on Sunday in the runabout, Captain West?" asked Sexton.

"To a house over in the factory district; some charity case that Coolidge was interested in—the widow of one of his employees, I believe.

"Did you see the people?"

"No, I didn't go in; waited outside in the car; it was no affair of mine. Why?" he asked in surprise.

"Because, sir, Miss Natalie seemed like a different person when she got back. Not in looks, or nothing like that, I don't mean, but in the way she talked and acted. Nothing suited her all the rest of the day. You know how she was to you, sir. Well she was just that snappy with all of us, even after we brought the body back to the house. And she wouldn't look at him, sir, not even after he was dressed proper and laid out."

"I hardly believe," said West thoughtfully, "you can attribute her state of mind to anything that occurred on that trip. Indeed she was in high spirits all the way home."

"I can't help that, sir," Sexton insisted blindly, "It was something that happened yesterday what set her wrong, an' if I was you, sir, I'd find out what happened in that house first of all. Could you find the place?"

"Yes, I think so. I'll look it up, although I don't have much faith in your theory." He glanced at his watch. "I'll go out there now. You come back here about five, and we will talk over any discoveries I may make."

"And what shall I do, sir?"

Both were standing, West with hand on the knob of the door. The light in his eyes hardened.

"Nothing occurs to me now, Sexton, unless you can find an excuse to return to Fairlawn, after something you have forgotten, let us say. If we can learn what Miss Natalie proposes doing it might furnish a clue."

"Very well, sir, and I am to be here at five o'clock?"

"Yes, at five; I will leave word with the doorman to show you in at once."

West picked up a taxi-cab for the trip, bidding the chauffeur to drive to a certain section of the city, and then up and down the various streets until told to stop. His conversation with Sexton had greatly strengthened his conviction that this was a murder, and he had determined to ferret out the truth if possible. Yet, thus far there was nothing to build upon, no clue, no motive, no suspicion as to who had perpetrated the deed. He simply faced a blank wall, in which no entrance was apparent, yet there must be one, if he was only fortunate enough to stumble upon it. Deep down in his heart West was conscious that he possessed a motive in this search far more worthy than mere curiosity. That motive was Natalie Coolidge. He smiled at the thought, yet confessed it true. In spite of her curt dismissal, his memory of the girl centered about those earlier hours of their acquaintance. Something mysterious had occurred to make her change so quickly, and he was unwilling to condemn her before learning the real reason.

The chauffeur drove slowly up and down obscure streets for half an hour before West recognized familiar surroundings, and motioned for him to draw up against the curb. He had discovered the place sought, but from the street it exhibited no signs of occupancy, nor did any knocking at the front door bring response from within. He circled the building. Every door was locked, but, as he passed along the other side to regain the taxi, a man emerged from the next house, and hailed him.

"Say, what're yer snoopin' round there for? Lookin' for somebody?"

"Yes, the parties who were here Sunday. What's become of them?"

"Hobart, you mean?"

"Is that his name? I met him downtown, and he told me to come here," West explained rapidly. "We had a deal on."

"Oh, yer did, hey," leaning his arms on the fence. "Well, Jim Hobart was the name he giv' me. That's my house, which is why I happen to know what his name was. Something queer about that fellar, I reckon, but 'tain't none o' my business. You ain't a detective, or nothin' like that, are yer?"

"Nothing at all like that," West laughed, although interested. "Why? Did you think the police might be after him?"

"Not for enything I know about, only he skipped out mighty sudden. Paid me a month's rent, and only stayed there three days. That looks sorter queer. Then Sunday that fellar what committed suicide out south—I read about it in the papers—came to see him in a car. I got a boy workin' in his factory. that's how I come to know who the guy was. The next night Hobart, an' them with him, just naturally skipped out."

"Who did he have with him here—a family?"

"A woman 'bout his age, I should say, an' a younger one. I didn't see 'em only from the window; didn't get no sight o' the girl's face at all, but could tell the way she walked she was young. They didn't have nothin' with 'em; that's all my stuff in the house there."

Feeling the uselessness of trying to learn anything more, West thanked him, and returned to the taxi.

"Back to the club," he ordered briefly, and settled into his seat to think.

The information thus gained had been small enough, yet sufficient to stimulate his belief that he was at least upon the right trail. The sudden departure of this man Hobart, and the fact that no young children were in the family, were important items to consider. Coolidge, then, had not visited this cottage to aid a widow and orphans. There had been some other object in his call. The girl must have known and understood the real purpose; that was why they both acquiesced so readily to his remaining outside in the car. It was part of their mutual plan to thus leave him in ignorance. Yet they had made a mistake in taking him along at all. This error alone gave him now an opportunity to unravel the riddle. But did it? What did he know? Merely that Coolidge had not gone to this house on an errand of charity; that the occupant called himself, temporarily, perhaps, Jim Hobart; that his family consisted of two women, undescribed except as to age; and that all three had mysteriously disappeared together. He might take it for granted that this disappearance was caused by the death of Coolidge, but they had left no trail, no inkling as to where they had gone. He might suspect this sudden vanishing had direct connection with the crime he was endeavoring to solve, but he possessed absolutely no proof, and, apparently, any further movement on his part was completely blocked.

More puzzled than ever, although now fully convinced that murder had been committed, West could do nothing but wait the reappearance of Sexton. The latter arrived promptly on time, and West told his story. His listener seemed to sense the situation clearly.

"It wasn't no mistake, your goin' out there, sir," he said confidently. "What we know now gives us something to work on anyhow, an' it's just what I thought—that trip Sunday led up to this killin', an' something happened while they was in there to stir Miss Natalie all up. Now we got to find this fellow—what did you say his name was, sir?"

"Hobart—Jim Hobart; that is, he was known by that name there."

"And did you say he has simply dropped out o' sight?"

"That's true; never left a clue behind him."

"Well, sir, I'm not quite so sure about that. You listen to me, sir. This afternoon I walked out to Fairlawn from the car line, an' come in across the fields to the house. I didn't have no good excuse for goin' back there, sir, an' was sorter afraid to meet up with Miss Natalie. She might have thought I was just spyin' 'round. But I didn't have no need for being afraid, for it seems she'd driven into town about noon, an' hadn't got back. There wasn't nobody but the servant around the place, sir. Do you remember Lizzie, the second maid—sorter full face, an' light hair?"

West nodded, wondering what all this might be leading to.

"Well, she an' I always hit it off together, an' I talked with her quite a bit. She told me, sir, that Miss Natalie had a telephone call this morning that took her into the city. Lizzie she went to the 'phone when it rang, an' it was a man's voice. He wouldn't leave no message, but insisted on speaking to Miss Natalie. Lizize had to call her down from upstairs."

"Did the girl overhear the conversation?"

"Not so as to make much out of it, sir. She was sorter interested, the man's voice being strange, and hung around in the hall listening, but about all she could make out was what Miss Natalie said. It seemed like he was givin' her some kind of address, which she didn't exactly understand, an' so she repeated it after him two or three times to be sure."

"What was the address?"

"238 Ray street, sir, an' then about an hour later, Miss Natalie ordered her car, an' drove into town."

"Alone?"

"Yes, sir; it was the electric she took."

West remained silent, tapping with his knife on the table. This might prove important, and he could not afford to ignore the information. While to his mind it was hardly likely Hobart had called the girl, yet the possibility remained.

"I never heard of a Ray street," he said at length, "but of course, there may be one. Oh, Charlie," he stopped a waiter passing. "Bring me up a city directory, will you?"

The man returned with the book, placing it on a chair next West, who immediately began to inspect the volume.

"Ray street," he said doubtfully, fingering the pages. "There is no such street here, Sexton. Are you sure you got that right?"

"That's what she said, sir; I made her say it over twice."

"Ray Street; wonder if it could be spelled with a W? By jove, it is—Wray! Here we have it, only five blocks long, extending from Conway to Grogan. Rather tough section I should judge. It wouldn't do any harm to take a look around there. Perhaps that is where Hobart went; he might have been the one calling Natalie. Rather a wild guess, but it will give us something to do. Are you game, Sexton?"

"Quite so, sir."

West hardly took the adventure seriously, being more influenced by curiosity than any other motive, but Sexton was deeply in earnest, in full faith they were upon the right trail. Doubtful as he was, West had neglected no precautions. The map assured him that they were invading a disorderly section of the city, where to be well-dressed would only invite suspicion, and might lead to trouble. To avoid this possibility, he had donned his most shabby suit, and wore a cap largely concealing his face. In one pocket of his jacket within easy reach lay hidden his service revolver loaded, and he had induced Sexton to accept a smaller weapon in case of emergency.

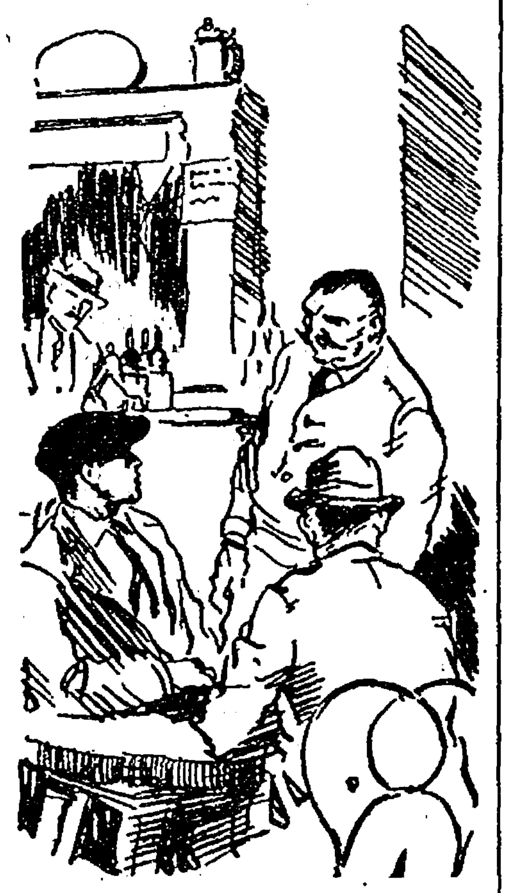
The street was not inviting, the saloon on the corner being flanked by several small factories. The brick sidewalk was in bad condition, and littered with junk of all kinds, while the roadway was entirely uncared for, and deeply rutted from heavy traffic. Half way down the block was a tannery, closed now for the night, but with its odor yet permeating the entire atmosphere. Altogether, the scene was desolate and disagreeable enough, but the street was deserted of pedestrians, the factory doors tightly closed for the night.

The two men pressed their way through along a narrow passage, finding less obstruction as they advanced, the second block being composed entirely of houses, largely of the tenement type, and apparently principally populated by children.

Wray street was lined with homes, usually humble enough outwardly, yet the thoroughfare was clean, and the small yards had generally an appearance of neatness; 238 was a three-story brick, on the corner, the second story evidently utilized for living purposes, and the ground floor occupied as a saloon. The upper story exhibited no signs of occupancy, the windows unwashed, and two of them boarded up. The two lingered in uncertainty opposite the house. Standing there idly, however, did not appeal to West.

"Well, let's go over," he said impatiently. "There is nothing to be learned here."

It was an ordinary bar-room and, their entrance apparently aroused no special interest. Besides the man behind the bar, a rather rough-looking foreigner, a Pole, in West's judgment, three customers were in the place, two with feet upon the rail talking with the drink dispenser, and, one at a small table moodily contemplating a half emptied stein of beer. There were three other tables in the room, and the captain, with a swift glance about, drew out a chair and sat down, his action being imitated by Sexton. The bartender came forward around the end of the bar, while the man nearest shifted his position slightly so as to look them over, conversation instantly ceasing. Something indefinable in the fellow's attitude, and steady stare, gave West a feeling of hostility, which was not dispelled by the gruff greeting of the bartender.



"Well, What Is It You Fellers Want?"

"Well, what is it you fellers want?"

"A stein apiece, and a sandwich—you serve them, don't you?"

"Sure; ham or beef?"

"Ham."

There was no cordiality, no welcome in either manner or speech. It was plainly the proprietor of the saloon felt no enthusiasm over his unknown customers. He came back with the beer and sandwiches, pausing this time to wipe off the table, as an excuse for speech.

"You guys live 'round here?" he asked gruffly, "Don't remember ever seein' yer in here before."

"No," returned West indifferently, looking directly into the hard face. "I'm a smoke inspector, an' we just dropped in on our way back to the office. Why?"

"Oh, nothin'; only we don't get much trade outside the neighborhood."

He walked back toward the bar, pausing an instant to whisper a word to the taller man who still stood there staring moodily at the table. What he said apparently determined action, for the fellow addressed crossed the room to where West and Sexton sat, deliberately pulled up a vacant chair and joined them.

"Bring me another, Mike," he ordered. "That is, if these gents don't object to my joining 'em awhile."

CHAPTER VIII

Trapped.

West smiled pleasantly, glad the man had taken the initiative, thus naturally opening up a way for asking certain questions. Whatever his own immediate object might be in thus scraping an acquaintance made no difference. It would doubtless develop in time, but meanwhile here was the opportunity sought to discuss the affairs of the neighborhood. Yet the subject must be approached with due caution. The very indifference of the bartender, coupled with the evident desire of this hanger-on to form an acquaintance, served to reveal the real nature of the place. Plainly enough strangers were viewed with suspicion, and this was no ordinary saloon, catering to whatever trade drifted within its doors. More than likely it was rather a thieves' hang-out, ever suspicious of the activity of the police.

Yet this fellow bore no outward semblance to the common conception of the underworld. He was well dressed, easy of manner, with an exceptionally intelligent face, blue eyes meeting West's gaze frankly, a carefully trimmed mustache, with white teeth good humoredly showing when he smiled, and threads of gray in his hair. His very appearance invited confidence and comradeship, while his outspoken words increased this impression.

"Excuse my butting in," he explained genially. "But it's d—n dull around here tonight. Nobody to talk with but a couple o' bums. You see I don't belong around here; just dropped in for a bit of business with Mike."

"I see," admitted West, puzzled,

Hampton Chronicle — Franklin county collected $1,700 in fines during the month of September and only collected $100 during the other months of this year, according to a report made by W. T. Webb, clerk of the district court. Of course, local towns in the county, Hampton included, have collected several hundred dollars in fines, but they do not pass thru the records of the district court.

Nearly all of the fines assessed by the district court have been for bootlegging and the illegal manufacture of "hootch." Of the total amount collected, $700 has been paid by violators who broke the law in driving automobiles while intoxicated.

Basket Ball Next On Sports Program

School Teams Getting Ready To Start Winter Season—Other Activities Many.

BRITT WINS GAME 7 TO 0

The Junior high girls have begun their basket ball practice.

The 6th grade was visited Wednesday of last week by Misses A. D. and M. G. Luick.

The 6th grade will have a party in the gym Tuesday night from 5 to 8, and the 8th grade will have their party the same evening in the gym from 8 to 11 o'clock.

Archie Wilson will move to Manchester, Iowa, this week. He is now a member of the 3rd grade.

Floyd Hamilton entered the 3rd grade Monday.

The kindergarten held a party on Monday and Tuesday mornings. The pupils dressed as brownies, played many games and were lead by Old Mother Witch in a peanut hunt.

The following have had perfect spelling lessons in the 3rd grade this week: Herman Dorenkamp, Christina Groen, Ruth Rowe, Myrtle Johnson, Peter Steenblock, Deward McNulty, and Dwan Packard.

The following have had perfect arithmetic lessons for the past two weeks: Harriett Gowdy, Muriel Luick and Unita Packard.

Joe Zeiger re-entered the 3rd grade again after three weeks' absence while working in the beet fields.

Mrs. Starnes and Miss Kernan were visitors to the 5th grade.

The 5th grade had a picnic during the last week.

There will be no school Thursday and Friday of this week on account of the state teachers convention.

The Freshmen had a Hallowe'en party in the gym Friday, Oct. 27. The gym was decorated appropriately for the occasion with corn fodder and pumpkins. The costumes were clever. After an evening of games, light refreshments were served.

The Juniors enjoyed a picnic in the grove last Thursday evening given by their class teacher, Miss Jewel. Everyone had a very good time.

The football team played Britt last Saturday, Oct. 28. The boys played a good game but the luck for the day seemed to be with Britt. A few home folks went over to boost for the boys. The pupils that went enjoyed meeting their old teacher, Mr. Gruetzmacher, again. Britt carried off the honors by the score of 7 to 0. Britt "put up" supper for our boys before they started home.

The B. H. S. Literary society gave their program last Friday and many visitors were present. We hope to have as many at the next program.

The following people visited the grades last week:

Kindergarten—Mrs. Ned Packard, Mrs. Trafford, Mrs. George Starnes and Mrs. Ernest Stapley.

Second: Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Buntu.

Third: Miss Marie Johnson of Ackley, and Mary Kernan.

Fourth: Lee Lowenberg, Miss Brady Mrs. Pfaltzgraff, Mrs. Trafford, Mrs. Ned Packad, Mrs. Schultz, and Mrs. Brown.

The typing medal went to Cecil Riley again last week. This makes the second week that Cecil has had the honor of wearing the pin.

CONTRACT FOR GRAVELING WILSON HIGHWAY FINISHED

The work of graveling the Wilson Highway between Klemme and the Wright County line just south of Goodell has been completed.

Truck drivers hauled and dumped the last load of gravel on the highway the other day.

When the gravel is well smoothed and packed down hard the road will be as smooth and as good as paving It is now a migthy fine road which will stand a lot of traffic and will not be affected by heavy rain. —Klemme Times.

Geo. Peterson spent the week end here with his family.

SAYS HAGEMAN IS STRADDLING FENCE

Declaring that F. P. Hageman of Waverly is attempting to "straddle both sides of the liquor fence" in his campaign for Congress in the Third District, Supt. R. N. Holsaple of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League issued a statement to citizens of the Third District, urging support of T. J. B. Robinson, the Republican candidate for Congress.

Hageman's statement that he is "against liquor but in favor of light wines and beer" refutes itself, Holsaple's declaration says.

"The prohibition amendment declares against all kinds of intoxicating beverages," Holsaple continues. "The men who are sent to Congress should be men who stand ready to support the Constitution of this country thru all possible emergencies. Prohibition is a part of the Constitution and when a man declares against prohibition he is attacking the Constitution of the United States. I do not believe that the citizens of the Third District want such a man to represent them at Washington."

The League superintendent, in the same statement, heartily endorses T. J. B. Robinson, the Republican candidate.

CO. FEDERATION HAS ENJOYABLE MEETING

Meet In Belmond Last Week As Guests Of Local Clubs—President Gives Talk.

The Wright County Federation of Womens clubs met at the library in Belmond last Wednesday. The meeting was called to order at 10:30 a. m. by the president, Mrs. Henry Graepler of Dows. Mrs. H. F Luick of Belmond extended a welcome to the Federation and Mrs. Emerson of Rowan responded.

The forenoon session was devoted chiefly to the roll call, which was responded to by the delegates of the various clubs giving a few minutes' report of the work of their clubs, and the general business of the Federation.

At noon luncheon was served by the hostesses, the members of the Progress and Priscilla clubs of Belmond.

The afternoon session was opened by a talk by Mrs. Bert Thompson of Forest City, who told about her trip to Oberammergau to see the Passion Play. She told of the life of the characters of the play, and she had photos of the different characters. Her talk was highly enjoyed.

Mrs. Vera Hanson of Clarion played a piano solo. Mrs. Van Patton of Fort Dodge gave a very good lecture on "The Abundant Life."

Mrs. Hoffman of Clarion gave a review of the new book, "This Freedom." Mrs. Rosecrans of Belmond gave a talk on the pictures of the Art Exhibit. A vote was taken and "The Home of the Heron," by Innes, called the Corot of America, was found to be the most popular, with "The Harp of the Winds" as second.

During the afternoon session much discussion was held about the county nurse, and about the necessity of the services of such a nurse.

Mrs. Crowe of Clarion sang a very beautiful solo, and Miss Mulnix from Dows gave a humorous reading.

CLARENCE A. ARNOLD

Last Friday afternoon at his home was held the last sad rites of this good and influential man in his community. On Monday evening at 5:00 o'clock he passed away. Some weeks ago he was taken to a hospital at Msson City where medical and surgical skill did all that it could to save his life, but his life's work seemed to have been completed and medical science was of no avail.

Mr. Arnold was a progressive and up to date farmer, beng an extensive breeder of good live stock. However, his intrests were not all centered in farming. He took a very active part in all movements that tended to benefit rural life. He was especially active in promoting the agencies that develope the educational and moral life of the youth.

He was an active, dependable and spiritual member of the First M E. church at Klemme. The pastor who was instrumental in getting him to religious life preached the sermon, assisted by Rev Bergman. His last words were "I have kept the faith." A loyal citizen, a helpful neighbor, a kind, loving husband, and a godly man has gone from this world of tears to join that innumerable company of the redeemed.

The large attendance at the funeral services is a testimony of his inestimable worth to the community and their high appreciation of him.

James Trumbell of Mason City was in town last Wednesday.

A. D. White was a Mason City visitor last Tuesday.

Elmer Kienenberger and Tony Boller left Wednesday for Garwin, where they will work this fall and winter, loading gravel for the trucks that are graveling the Lincoln highway. The married men of the crew will have their wives with them and they will live in tents and board themselves.

Last Wednesday a large per cent of the school pupils had their pictures taken.

Supt. Nelson is constructing a radio for the high school.

Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Wesenberg were in Mason City on Wednesday on business.

Mrs. Julius Cook returned from Rochester last Tuesday.

Last Thursday as Joseph Heginger was crossing the Wilson highway just south of the school grounds his car stopped. A Ford car coming from the south and running at high speed, ran into his car. The car from the south was unable to see Mr. Heginger's car until within a few rods, but the driver was able to reduce the speed enough so that little damage was done aside from a smashed fender, foot board, and the side of the car. Mr. Heginger feels that he was lucky to get out so fortunate.

Mr. Engeseth's closing out sale brought many buyers from a distance and he closed his place of business Saturday. He is now packing his remaining stock which he will move to Frost, Minn.

Earl Jenison an family visited at the O. Sandberg home on Sunday.

Earl Clark made a business trip to Garner last Friday.

Miss Adalaide Engeseth of Blue Earth, Minn., came down Thursday night and helped with the closing out sale.

Mrs. H. T. Miller made the address for the Women's Missionary association of the Ames United Brethern church on Oct. 29.

Saturday, Supt. Nelson moved into the Goodrich house. Tony Boller had moved out a few days before.

Caryl Church of Clear Lake visited at the home of Mrs. Christensen on Friday.

The Goodell hotel changed hands the last of October. Mr. W. Kirkwood moved out and N. C. Chelvig moved from the farm into the hotel.

KANAWHA MAN SAYS BRIDE WAS STOLEN

"Other Fellow" And Mother Get Her To Leave After Marriage He Claims.

Clarion News—A few hours after Albent Judd and Miss Doris Wheeler of Kanawha were married at the Little Brown Church, things began to happen. The bride's mother came down from Algona early that morning and was said to have been brought by Albert Smith, a cracker salesman who had kept company with Miss Wheeler for some two years past and who, it is claimed, was engaged to marry her. The two induced, thru threats or force, the husband believes, the bride of a few hours to depart with them, and since then he has failed to find a trace of her.

Mr. Judd's story of the marriage, as told to friends, is that he had been attentive to Miss Wheeler, a seventh grade teacher in the Kanawha schools the past two terms, and their friendship had ripened into love. He knew that Albert Smith was also keeping company with Miss Wheeler, but hoped to win her hand. A tacit understanding is said to have been had between Miss Wheeler and Mr. Smith, but one report is that the girl claimed Smith's suit was advanced more by the mother than Smith himself, and finally there was an agreement between Miss Wheeler and Mr. Judd to consummate their marriage at the Little Brown Church in the Vale. This understanding was reached after Corn Carnival Day in Clarion, the two having spent the afternoon and evening here.

Saturday morning at seven o'clock the young folks started from Kanawha for New Hampton, where a marriage license was secured. A friend accompanied the couple to the Little Brown church, where the marriage is said to have been solemnized.

Smith, the jilted lover, is said to have been in Kanawha Friday learning that Judd was paying marked attention to Miss Wheeler. Next day, it is claimed, he drove to Algona and returned with the mother. When the bridal souple returned, Mr. Judd left his bride at the Dr. Stewart home where she had been rooming, and went to his father, Dr. Judd's home. Then the mother and Mr. Smith shortly afterward departed in company with the bride.

To friends Mr. Judd is said to have stated that he would fight for his bride. He was in Algona Monday but could not find Mrs. Judd at home. It is understood an attorney is representing him in the matter, and a habeas corpus may be secured forcing the mother to produce the daughter in open court.

Mr. Judd is a young man in his late twenties. His bride is nearing twenty-three. Judd was married when a young man, but is divoced. He is a sign painter. Mrs. Judd is a teacher of experience and has a splendid reputation and character. She is a petite young lady, inclined to dress well, and is very good looking Among her friends and close associates it was know that she was having hard work to make up her mind as to whom she really loved. Kanawha people are considerably excited over this dramatic episode of real life.

LITTLE CHILD CLAWED BY BEAR AT WEST BEND GROTTO

A child from Storm Lake, who, with its parents were visiting the Grotto at West Bend Sunday suffered a severe injury to its arm near the shoulder when old Dick, the mammoth bear caught it with his paws and pulled and clawed the arm of the little one. The child was finally released by men using a crowbar to pry loose the bear's claws. As the local doctor was absent the child was taken to Algona for treatment. The bear will be chained or killed that no such occurence will take place again. Father Dobberstein, the proprietor of the Grotto, is very much worried over the affair.

Three years ago a little girl from Britt was nearly killed by one of the bears. That bear was killed immediately after, but they thought this bear was safe as it appeared to be quite gentle. Warning signs have always been posted all about the grotto. —Exchange.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

We were glad to see a good increase last Sunday over the Sunday before. However, we were not quite up to normal yet. Let us try to be in our places next Sunday on time. We are hoping that our teaching force will all soon be able to be in their places again.

The services last Sunday evening were well attended and the address by Dr. Varnadore was one that should open the eyes of all to the need of a united effort to combat the immorality which is so prevalent.

If the reports are half true much "booze" is being sold and drunk around Belmond but the officers do not seem to find it out. If anyone has any legal information that they would give before the court we would be glad to get it

. There will be the regular services next Sunday morning and night. Remember November the 9th is the day for the Ladies Aid bazaar.

LARGEST SUGAR BEET WEIGHS 15 1-2 POUNDS

And 15 Acres Of Beets Stand To Bring Belmond Farmer A Nice Fat Profit.

The five dollar gold prize offered by the State Bank for the largest sugar beet grown this year for the Belmond factory, went to a Belmond farmer, Fred Loats, whose entry had a weight of 15 1-2 pounds. Mr. Loats has been presented with his prize.

Mr. Loats had around 15 acres of sugar beets in this year, and the one big beet was not all he raised on them His beets averaged between 14 and 15 tons to the acre. The cost per acre in raising these beets will amount to around $25 to $27. It is safe to say that he will realize $6.00 a ton from the beets. Therefore an acre of beets will bring in around $85 while the cost of raising will be less than $30. Mr. Loats should be on the right side of the ledger from $60 to $70 an acre. How does that compare with corn? And in addition Mr. Loats has the beet tops—fine stock feed—and his ground is already plowed—he can plant corn on the ground next year without plowing, and get a 15 per cent better crop because he had the beets there this year.

DEMOCRAT SPEAKER TO BE HERE FRIDAY EVENING

Honorable Ed. Murtagh of Algona will be in Belmond on Friday evening of this week to address the voters of this community. The meeting is to be held in the city hall at 8:00 o'clock. Mr. Murtagh, who is a well known banker, is an able and convincing speaker and will present to Belmond people the democratic side of the fence in the various political issues

Scoop Larsen was called to Klemme last week by the funeral of a relative.

Three Others Are Badly Injured

Four Young Men Speeding Are Blinded By Lights And Go Into Ditch.

HAPPENS NEAR CLARION

One man was killed, another very badly injured, and two others more or less seriously bruised late Saturday night when the Paige speedster they were driving went into the ditch and turned over, near Clarion.

Albert Larsen, residing west of Belmond was killed outright, Gerhard Tegland and Walter Ford of Clarion were badly bruised, and Fred Hobson suffered a fractured skull and other injuries. According to the best available information, the four young men were driving from Eagle Grove to Clarion, and going at a pretty stiff speed. When within about three miles of Clarion on the west, Tegland, who was driving and whose car it was, states he was blinded by the lights of an approaching car. He turned out to the right to avoid it, and it is thought turned too far, so that the wheels began to slip down the grade. The other car passed and Tegland, feeling the car slipping, turned back into the road. It is presumed that he turned so sharply that the car sped across the road and into the ditch on the left side before he could help it. The right rear wheel broke as the car went into the ditch, and this helped the car to keep a balance for several yards. Tegland evidently tried to swerve back into the road, and the front wheels, hitting soft sand, caused the car to turn a somersault forward, end for end.

Larsen, who was sitting in front with Tegland, was evidently thrown out to the side as the car turned over, and became caught under the rear axle and dragged. The spokes of the wheel penetrated his chest, and when found he was pinned down by the axle.

The car, said to be a new one and valued at $2,800, is a total wreck, being smashed to kindling and torn to pieces.

While one of the men says that the report of their going 60 miles an hour when the accident occured is not true, yet people who have seen the wreck and viewed the scene of the tragedy, are of the opinion that only excessive speed could have caused such an accident. It is also reported that the men admitted having had a "nip" before they left, altho there is no charge that they were under the influence of liquor when the accident occured.

A coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death, and a phone call to the county attorney's office yesterday afternoon gave the information that contrary to reports here, no criminal poceedings are planned in connection with the case.

FACTORY GOING FULL BLAST

The sugar factory continues to operate at full blast. The mill is going at capacity or better every day, and the sweet stuff is pouring out by the hundreds of pounds daily. Altho the operating force has been rather small the work has not been hindered and things are running very smoothly and economically.

The factory is now open to the public every day of the week with the exception of Sundays. It was decided that no visitors would be allowed Sundays because of the crowds that would be there, and the more or less interference with the workmen which they would cause. Week days however the public is welcome.

Sugar is being sold as it is made to some extend, and some is being stored. The price of sugar has been good, and indications are that it will be better. Beets are piled at the factory grounds by the thousands of tons, the bins being full and many piled along the side tracks. There is every reason to believe that the company will return a profit, which, while it may not be extra large, should nevertheless be good.

THINGS TANGLED OFTENTIMES

Waverly Democrat: How much mental anguish we could spare ourselves if we had the ability always to look at the bright side of things, and how much injustice in our judgment of others would be avoided if we always understood the motives that govern their actions and behavior.

You meet a friend on the street and offer a friendly greeting. He seems to look you squarely in the eye but does not return the greeting. At another time a good acquaintance crosses the street when he sees you coming or deliberately looks the other way, apparently to avoid you. Immediately you feel the pang of having been snubbed. You are miserable for days and wonder what you may have done to deserve such treatment. If you had the facts you would know that your friend was deeply engrossed in thought, perhaps he was trying to untangle some business or household problem or was himself worrying about some imaginary grievance and therefore was not conscious of seeing you.

A cutting, insinuating remark may hurt your innermost feelings, and yet it was not meant to be unkind. The one who made it may have been ill and nervous from overwork and worry and, therefore not responsible for what he said.

At another time you address a remark or a question to a person who apparently ignores you entirely. If he is a good friend you feel hurt and slighted, while if he is merely a casual acquaintance or a stranger you think, "the big stiff," and silently put him down as a dub—and all this because you do not know that he did not hear a word you said.

We accuse others of being unfriendly and "stuck-up" because they seem haughty and unfriendly, when as a matter of fact they simply haven't the same gift of gab that you have, some physical defect may prevent them from being good mixers, or they are simply overly self-conscious, timid and bashful. Just go out of your way to be friendly to such a person and see how he will warm up to you.

Try always to look at the bright side of things and to be more charitable in your judgment of others and see how much more cheerful the world will smile back at you. Ah, we judge each other harshly,

Knowing not life's hidden force.
Knowing not the fount of action
Is less turbid at its source,
Seeing not among the evil
All the golden grains of good;
Oh, we'd love each other better—
If we only understood.

Men Being What They Are.

"This is the first time Henry has been away from me at night since we were married," sobbed the young bride.

"But your mother is with you."

"That only makes matters worse. She's been telling me about father."

Second thoughts are best only when they are an improvement over the first.

Need Them.

"Do you think girls ought to put on knickerbockers?"

"Yes, replied Miss Cayenne, "especially those I have seen photographed in bathing suits."

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

VOTE "YES"

One of the things to be decided next Tuesday is the soldier bonus. The state of Iowa wants to know whether you want to give the ex-service men of the state a bonus for their services in the war.

Vote "yes."

Some may say that the boys do not need it; that no premium should be placed on patriotism. None is. And perhaps there are some of the boys who do not need it. But the idea is here, that they left everything to go—and drew a dollar a day for the privilege of being shot and gassed and starved and frozen, while the war laborer stayed at home in warm quarters with plenty of food, and he drew his ten dollars a day regularly. And he had no risk of life. To be fair should we not see that the man when went into active service gets a little to balance it up. The country was not at all backward in allowing contractors a bonus for their services and materials; no holler was heard about that; then we should be ashamed of ourselves to deny the bonus now to those who really deserves it.

The issue will call for $20,000,000, to be raised in bonds and paid by the same old way, taxes. Now don't get excited over that word taxes; you aren't going to be hurt. The amount need is spread over a long period of time, and the levy is small, two mills the first year, after that one. If you own property worth four hundred dollars, the taxable value is one fourth, or $100. A two mill tax on that will be 20 cents. Is your patriotism worth 20 cents?

LOST

One Chamber of Commerce. When last seen was vainly struggliug for breath, gasping for air, and endeavoring to look alive. Is good workable machine if properly oiled and looked after. Has three speeds, one forward and two back. Was running in reverse gear when last seen. May have died from sleeping sickness. No reward offered for information as to whereabouts, as it is of no good to anyone in condition last seen. Might be rejuvinated if tied to the high line of the Iowa Falls Co. Definite assurance as to whether it is alive or dead would be appreciated by the citizens of Belmond. If located, sound fire siren.

A WHATISIT?

In a recent edtiorial the Hampton Chronicle takes to task the newspaper which retains an independent political line. The Chronicle maintains, as the Independent gathers it, that the newspaper which is neither republican or democrat whole hearted ly is neither fish, fowl nor good red herring. It is a sort of Barnum's Whatisit, a thing of curiosity, without foundation. How come, T. W? Does a paper have to be one or the other to have sound vews or to see clearly the issues? The Independent is neither republican nor democrat; it is just what its name implies. No party ever had a monopoly on good men, or bad ones; the politician who advises you to vote a straight ticket is pretty apt to be crooked, and he who votes straight regardless is too easily led to be a good voter.

Enough pure junk comes to the editorial desk of this paper each week to paper a good sized room—if one wasn't paricular about what he looked at. The democratic committee is frothing at the mouth with the iniquities of the republians, and the republicans are weeping tears of bitter anguish because the democrats may get control and start us all to the demnition bow-wows. If the newspaper is democrat it swallows one side, if republican it gulps the other. The independent view endeavors to pick the meat from both nuts and throws the balance in the waste basket. Sometimes there is nothing but balance.

Nay, nay, Tom; he who sits on the side lines is pretty apt to get a bettr view of the game than the players. And it's a cinch he can enjoy the game. The newspaper which is not tied hoof and horns to any one party or organization is in a better position to serve its readers and the general public better. It is more free to honestly praise or justly condemn, and it is much more liable to see what is deserving of either.

The manufacturer of the Durant cars says he will meet every price drop of Henry Ford. Hope so. If he does, some of us will be able to get a car for nothing, and maybe get paid for taking it.

To judge from the daily press, this seems, to be an unlucky year for some folks. Have you noticed the headlines?

If you have ever noticed, the man who knows it all is pretty apt to ask his wife about it before hand.

It's too bad that things can't be run by others than those who are running them; they know how to do it so much better.

Pretty soon you'll hear the same old story, "Pretty cold, ain't t?"

Chicken thieves have been getting in their work in this vicintiy of late. At the Nick Neve home the first of the week some 200 chickens, about all he had, were stolen. An organized effort upon the part of dealers in all neighboring towns in which an agreement is entered into not to buy poultry from a stranger, would go a long way toward stopping the nefarious business. Perhaps the most effective plan to adopt is to so arrange a shotgun in your chicken house so that it can not be entered without dischanging the gun. There is one large raiser of poultry in this vicinity who has successfully prepared for these nightly visitors in this way, and the arrangement is so skillfully placed as to mean a job for the undertaker.—Thornton Enterprise.

A farmer near Havelock named Obrecht, was severely shocked a short time ago when he was climbing a woven wire fence by boosting himself by a guy wire from an electric high line pole. It seems that he was taking his dog with him and was assisting the dog over the fence at the same time. When he lifted the dog and rested it on the guy wire to the high line pole, the dog caine into contact with the live wire, and the electricity passed through the dog and into Obrecht. This is probably what saved his life. He was knocked down and severely burned, and is still in bed. The dog, however, is as frisky as ever, through it is now afraid of wire fences.—Exchange.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Corn Demonstrations On November 7th and 8th

Professor B. E. Heizman of the Farm Bureau Crops Department at Ames will be in Wright county on November 7th and 8th to assist with the demonstrations in checking up the results of the corn yield experiments which were conducted in four different points thruout the county this year.

The first demonstration will be held Tuesday, November 7th, at the Harry Inners farm two miles northeast of Goldfield, when the weights will be taken and moisture determinations made on samples of corn which were contributed by the following men:

Miller S. Nelson
Bert Siemens
M. L. Clark
Herald Holm
Jas. McGowan
Clarence McBride.
L. B. Price
T. A. Knight

The second demonstration will be held at the H. A. Flett farm 6 miles southwest of Dows, when reports will be made on samples from the following men:

F. L. Bubeck
Chas. M. Overbaugh
G. D. Denger
:d Harring
Harry Woodley
M. R. Pierce
W. F. Mechem
Harry Inners
N. L. Vanderlip

The men on whose farms the experiments were conducted will, with the assistance of those contributing samples, husk and pile the corn of each man's sample at the end of the field where it will be weighed and moisture determination made in order that the highest yielding corn may be found how the various strains of corn of the county yield on the different types of soil.

Meat Cutting Demonstrations

Many Wright county farmers will be interested in the meat demonstrations planned by the Wright County Farm Bureau for next week. County Agent Edwards has arranged with Mr. C. W. Macdonald, Animal Husbandry specialist from the Extension department of Iowa state college to demonstrate methods of slaughtering, cutting and curing meat on the farm at two meetings to be held in different sections of the county November 9th and 10th of next week.

Many Iowa farmers have forotten the old fashioned butcher days. Some have been losing meat as the result of improper methods in curing and have found it easier, tho more expensive, to buy their meat. Mr. MacDonald will present the demonstrations in such a way that those present will be given an opportunity to actually practice in the slaughtering and cutting. He says the men attending these demonstrations will find the annual butchering days less of a task, and the loss of meat on the farm should be reduced to a minimum. Hogs, beef and sheep will be slaughtered and the carcasses cut up at the demonstrations. Methods of curing and smoking and sausage making will be fully discussed.

The places of meeting for the demonstrations have not been decided as yet, but announcement will be made by mail of the places and time of meeting. Nearly all the farmers are busy picking corn and some may feel that they cannot afford to take the time to attend the meat demonstrations, but we feel that those who can arrange their work so as to attend one of these demonstrations will be greatly repaid for their effort.

Bring your knives and overalls and come prepared to work.

Costume Planning Demonstrations

Miss Bertha Foster, Clothing expert from Ames, conducted three very interesting demonstrations in the county last week. Her demonstrations were along the line of "Costume Planning" and according to the ladies who attended these meetings, her work was very interesting and highly instructive.

The first meeting was held Monday October 23, at the J. E. Kirstein home, Wollstock township, and was attended by about 25 ladies of the township and surrounding community. The second demonstration was held at the Jay Tice home near Cornelia, Tuesday, October 24th and was attended by about 50 ladies of the community, and the third meeting was held at the Glen Knox home, Vernon township, on Wednesday, October 25. with an attendance of about 30.

Even tho Wright county is without a home demonstration agent the ladies department of the farm bureau is not being neglected. There seems to be a growing demand for demonstrations and specialized work for the ladies of the county, and there is an effort being made to have a complete ladies organization, the purpose of which will be to carry on the home projects more extensively. Beginning November 13 there will be Home Demonstration agent work held thruout the county and every lady is asked to be thinking about the work which will be conducted by Miss Huber, Clothing specialist from Ames. The projects which Miss Huber will take up in the meetings will be:

"Alteration of Commercial Pattern, "Making the Foundation pattern," and "Short cuts in sewing."

Club Work Progressing

Farmers of the county will be interested to know about the great interest which is being taken by the boys and girls of the county in the club work which is now being organized. Since the call went out for enrollments in the Baby Beef club there have been about 25 to 30 boys and girls who have indicated their willingness to feed and care for a calf to be fed out and shown at the state fair next year. About 40 or 50 calves have been located on the different livestock farms of the county and this number includes individuals from the Shorthorn, Angus, and Hereford breeds

Any boy or girl who enters the feeding contest will take a calf which was born between March to June of this year and feed this animal until fair time next year, when all calves will be shown in a local show and possibly in a neighboring county fair, and then at the state fair at Des Moines. Weights will be taken and the actual feeding contest will begin December 1st and each club member will be required to keep an accurate account of all feed consumed in order that definite figures may be had on the cost per pound of the gains on the animal.

Boys and girls who are interested in the Baby Beef club should remember that the baby beeves which were sold at the state fair this year ranged in price from nine to 12 cents per pound and the average weight of the calves sold was about a thousand pounds. This shows what a return is made to the boy or girl for efforts put forth and of course every boy or girl has the chance of winning the prize which amounts to a neat sum.

Judging Team To Chicago

Word has just been received from Paul Taff, State Club leader at Ames, to the effect that the Wright county boys and gris have been entered at livestock judging contest of the International Livestock Show, which is to be held December 2nd to 9th.

The Wright county boys who proved themselves champions of the state will make the trip, accompanied by the County Agent, to Chicago, where they will judge in competition with champion teams from other states of the union as well as teams from foreign countries, including Mexico, Canada and possibly England. According to the state club leader, Clarence Clark, who is attending Iowa State College this year, will be barred from taking part in the judging contest which, according to the International Livestock Judging rules, must be a noncollegiate judging contest.

The boys who will make the trip to Chicago with County Agent Edwards are as follows:

Everett Denby, Lake township.
Clyde Knight, Liberty township.
Ross Meachem, Lincoln township.

It will be remembered that Ross Mechem was chosen as alternate on the team which represented our county at the state fair at Des Moines, and the Interstate fair at Sioux City. Since Clarence Clark has been barred from entering the Chicago contest Ross Mechem automatically becomes a member of the regular team.

Belmond Local News

Mrs. Lena Anderson fsom Westbrook, Minnesota, was a guest last week at the Ward Martin and Tom Brooks homes.

Mrs. Dan Brooks and son John went to Hayfield last Thursday. Mrs. Ray Hawley and children returned with them.

Miss Claire Jewell, the Commercial teacher in the local school, spent the week end at her home in Waterloo.

The ten year old son of Geo. Luick was operated on for appendicitis at the local hospital Sunday. It was a rather serious case, as the appendix was ruptured, but the little fellow is reported as coming along very nicely at this writing.

Thowald Hodney, one of the men working at the sugar factory, narrowly escaped death one day last week when he became caught in the conveyor belt. His overalls in some manner were drawn into the belt, and seeing his danger the man gave a hard, sudden jerk, which enabled hm to get loose, altho his clothes were torn from his body. It was in a somewhat similar manner that a death occured during the first campaign. Hodney can consider himself lucky.

Mrs. Raymond Norris and children from Garner visited at the home of Mr. and Ms. W. A. Brewer last week a few days.

Mrs. Will White went to Fort Dodge on Monday to attend to some business affairs and spend a while at the home of her son, Clair, and wife

Mr. and Mrs. H. Bohning took Mr. and Mrs. S. Hubbard to Des Moines on Sunday. They are enroute to their home at Durango, Colorado.

Charley Peterson and family from Hampton spent Sunday with his mother, Mrs. P. J. Peterson.

Mrs. Seth Huntington and two children came Tuesday for a visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Boughton.

You don't need to fear tomorrow if you have done your level best today.

Genuine I. H. C. Repairs

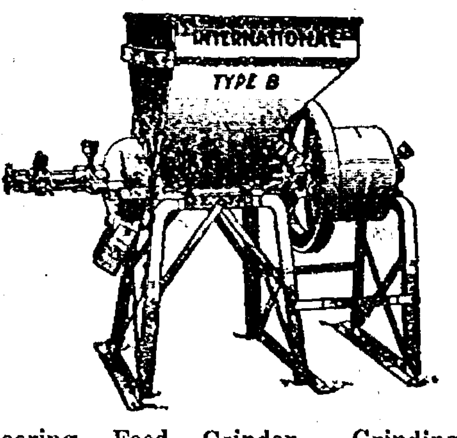
The rate of depreciation of farm machines depends very largely on the kind of repairs that are used. The right kind of repairs add new life to a machine, but the "made-for" kind are like patches. The International Harvester company makes repair parts from the original patterns for every McCormick-Deering machine. Parts sold for repairs are made exacty the same as for new machines. You naturally want to make your farm machines last as long as possible, and the next time you need I. H. C. repairs be sure to get the genuine from us.

Anyway, it's easier to lengthen the skirt to conform with the new styles than a bobbed head o' hair.

So many fail—and yet all one needs to do to win the hearts of humanity is to be human.

Puts Money in Your Pocket.

It pust money in your pocket to grind your grain with a McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder. Grinding feed saves waste because it makes it easier for the stock to digest. There are three distinct types of the McComick-Deering Feed Grinders with capacities ranging from 9 to 96 bushels per hour. Engine horse power required varies from 3 to 16. The Type B Grinder, which is most commonly used, is designed for grinding corn on the cob, but will grind small grains equally well. An agitator in the hopper prevents clogging. Made in 6, 8 and 10 inch grinding plate sizes.



Power For the Farm Shop

Every farmer will find it a great advantage to have a repair shop—a place where all ordinary repair work can be done quickly and economically. This shop should have a few simple tools and a dependable kerosene engine. There is no question but that a repair shop will prove a profitable investment because it will permit repairing to be done in the shortest possble time. The power for the farm shop should be dependable. International engines are meeting this need and are pleasing their owners. International engines have removable cylinders, enclosed crank cases, serviceable magnetos, improved oiling facilities, etc. They are made in 1 1-2, 3, 6 and 10 horse power sizes.

One reason why so many men leave home is because they hate to stay there alone.

We still have a nice line of heating stoves to choose from.

WHERE GOD'S COUNTRY IS.

Those who read only the dailies of great cities, and never see the home-town paper, may taste the spice of American life, but they miss much of its salt. Many a pen that might be a power in the metropolis strolls leisurely across the lesser pages of a country weekly because its owner, perhaps, prefers to work where he can go home to lunch every day through quiet streets overarched with familar trees and paved with contentment. The other day we found this on the editorial page of the Goshen (New York) "Democrat":

"When a man is far away from the placed that he has lived in for years, and his heart yearns for home, he says: 'Some day I am going back to God's country.' "

Whether it is some little country town where the only lights come from the windows that glitter down the lane, and the only noises are the lowing of the cattle in the fields and the sighing of the winds through the trees, it is God's country for the man who knows that there are faces there which will light up at sight of him and hands that will grasp his own in open friendliness and affection.

Or, if it is some great city where countless, thoughtless thousands squirm and twist in their endless rushings to and fro, it is past all speaking dear to the man who calls it home.

All over the nation men say that they live in God's country or that they used to live there and are looking forward to their return.

God's country is America, thruout its length and breadth. But to the individual, God's country is where the home is and where the friends are.

In all his wanderings he believes it. There, he knows, are the sweetest girls, the bravest men, the bluest skies, the reddest roses. There he finds the peace that passeth understanding near the things he loves. —Colliers Weekly.

A Jewel.

"Does his new wife love him?"

"Does she? Why, she even takes in washing to help him meet his alimony.

A Soft Answer.

She—You ought to give up smoking—it affects the heart.

He— By that reasoning, I ought to give you up too.

In a way, young ladies are excusable for leading their fellows up to the candy counter and bidding them buy. Husbands are less tractable than lovers.

ROBBERS CAPTURED

The two robbers wanted here were captured at Osceola last week and brought to Mason City where they pled guilty, each receiving a sentence for ten years.

A third member, who accompanied the party from Des Moines was given five years. A week ago last Sunday night two houses and three business places were robbed and five automobiles were tampered with in an attempt to get a conveyance to carry the loot, but somehow they all failed to start.

Local talent was suspected from the start on account of the similarity of the work done a few months ago, by some of the same local talent who has now confessed. The trio were sentenced soon after they plead guilty and John Schloendorf passed as Art Anderson and was sentenced under that name, but several of our citizens happened to be at the county capital about two hours before they were taken to their future home, and John admitted that he was John, and not Anderson. He gave his reason for assuming the ficticous name being that he hoped to get a lighter sentence, but we are informed that when he has served his first ten years that his first offense of several month ago will be taken up and that will be for ten years more. John had made his home here part of the time since he was released from the Industrial school and as long as ho possesses a mania for stealing it is much better that the prison authorities take care of him, in hopes that he may outgrow it in time.

Miss Mildred Gealow spent Sunday with home folks at Belmond.

Most of the ladies in town are taking advantage of the beautiful weather to get their fall house cleaning done. Everywhere can be heard the beating of rugs and the way the windows and furniture have taken to shining only goes to remind the men that these are harbingers of approaching change of season.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Russell of Gray Eagle, Minn, called on friends here Saturday.

A. E. Muller, accompanied by Mrs. Emma Stadtander, and John Jordan, were Thornton business callers last Monday.

Miss Wilhelmine Loats, Sundayed with her people at home.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Geigel and their daughter Miss Lena, and Mrs. Church of Renwick were Sunday visitors at the Rev. Schlesselman home, also attending services here.

Hartley Blewitt of Thornton was in town last Wednesday evening greeting old friends.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Hulslebus were Mason City callers last Monday afternoon.

A. J. Nissen, G. E. Raecker and A. E. Muller were Belmond callers Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Zimmerman of Sheffield, who have been at the home of their son Victor, for the past two weeks, returned home Sunday afternoon Mr. Zimmerman has been afflicted with the same throat trouble he had last fall, but had sufficiently recovered to take the trip home.

A. E. Muller and family and Lucile Paul were calling on friends at Sheffield Sunday.

REFORMED CHURCH NOTES

Sunday school at 9:30. (English.)

German preaching services 10:30.

Young Peoples meeting 7:15. (English.)

Evening servies (English) 8:00.

Primary and junior classes in Catechism Sat., 1:30 to 3:00, Senior class 3:00.

Children may enter the primary class at the age of 5 years. We are looking forward to a large enrollment in this class.

The church extends a cordial invitation to both young and old who have no church home to attend these meetings. We are glad to help you.

The Ladies Aid meets next Thursday at the usual hour at its regular place of meeting. The Aid gladly accepts orders for tying comforters at 65 cents apiece.

Instruction in Bible and catechism will be resumed next Saturday. May we look for a large enrollment. The time next Saturday will be taken up with the arranging of classes and assignment of lessons.

We very strongly urge upon all parents to be faithful in the discharge of the bringing up of their children in the fear and admonition of the Lord. Remember the baptismal vow.

It cannot be gainsaid that christian education is the supreme need of the hour. "Knowledge is power." How true this is both of secular and biblical knowledge. We boldly declare that no education is complete without a study of the Bible. The Bible puts in right relation to God, to our fellowmen and the universe. It alone lays the foundation for sound moral character, conduct, and the most useful service—the service of God. Dr. Martin Luther, the great reformer, worked for education. It was education in order that men and women might know the way of life and salvation. The church today, possibly as never before, feels intensely the deep need of educating the youth in the truths of the Bible.

H. Pannkuk, Minister.

The W. M. S. met at the home of Mrs. Joe Smith last Thursday afternoon. The usual business session was held. Also the convention report was given by the delegate, after which the first chapter of the new text book "Building with India," was read and discussed.

What Will Your Boy Be 30 Years From Now?

NO doubt, your earnest hope is---"A son I can be proud of; a good citizen, respected by everyone for his spleneid character."

And what builds CHARACTER? No factor perhaps so much as being a SAVER. A Saving Account promotes self-respect, self reliance; it begets confidence, not only of the saver himself but of others. It promotes all the other good qualities that go to make up CHARACTER. Your boy or girl will be a better citizen, a better mother; thirty years from now, if you do YOUR part TODAY. See to it that they are started on the right road, and the RIGHT road is the THRIFT road.

EVANGELICAL CHURrH

Thurman A. Varnadore, D. D., will give two addresses in the interest of "The Iowa State Hygiene and Welfare Campaign" at the Evang. church Wednesday and Thursday evenings, beginning at 7:30. If an afternoon service can be arranged for it will be announced later.

Teacher training Friday 7:30 followed by choir rehearsal.

Sunday school 9:45.

Preaching service 10:45.

Sunday night, Oct. 22, closed a very blessed series of revival services in the Evang. church of Meservey. The number of converts were 32, 23 of which joined the church Sunday a. m. More will unite at an opportunity offered soon. Rev. J. H. Engel, conference evangelist, preached some very inspiring and spirit-filled sermons. Let us hope and pray that all may remain true and that this is only the beginning of what shall follow. A free will offering of $173.15 was taken for the evangelist on the last Sunday of the meeting.

A. W. Schlesselman.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Boughton from Webster City visited at the L. B. Hulsebus home last Sunday. They were accompanied home by Alma and Louise Witt who will spend the week with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Hartfelder visited at the home of Hartley Blewitt in Thornton last Sunday.

Presiding Elder Brecher of Le Mars conducted quarterly meeting at the county appointment known as Hartwig church. He had just recently returned from General Conference sessons at Barrington, Ill., and Detroit, Mich, and was all enthusiasm over the outcome of these meetings. He spoke of the beautiful spirit which pervaded throughout the sessons and of the warm hearted reception that everyone present received. Now that the two factors are one again, namely the Evangelical Association and the United Evangelical, they are now known as The Evangelical Church. Since the session held at Detroit one of the newly elected bishops has passed away. Bishop G. Heinmiller was chosen to have charge of the work in Europe and it is with profound regret that his death is chronicled even before he had the opportunity of taking up the work to which he would have been especially adapted

BEER AND LIGHT WINE

Monticello Express: Iowa gave what the wets are now bawling for, a real test fo a generation and it didn't work, nor will it work now in the delusion of an interpretation of the prohibitory amendment, which would allow the sale of beer and light wines. For a long period of time prior to the adoption of the Iowa prohibitory amendment, which was invalidated through informalities in its adoption, Iowa had a liquor law which permitted the sale of beer and native wines, only. Nevertheless there was plenty of whisky to be had at nearly every saloon. Nor did the saloons confine their sales to native wines. It is estimated that nine-tenhs of the wine sold was made outside of the state of Iowa. This state is not, and never was, a wine manufacturing state. It could not have supplied a tenth of the wine demanded. It was brought into the state in defiance of the law, and whisky selling became so prevalent over the saloon bars, in defiance of law, that the people in their indignation, arose in their might and smote the saloons, "hip and thigh."

What happened in the past would happen again in restricted saloons. Every such saloon in its greed for profits would become a joint for the sale of strong alcoholic beverages, where its violation of the law would be more or less hidden under the privilege accorded it. The saloon, restricted or unrestricted, has never been worthy of trust, and it never can be trusted.

ROWAN NEWS

There was a large attendance at the regular meeting of the Ladies Aid society last Thursday, which met with Mrs. John Pritchett. A dainty lunch was served at the close.

The mid week services of the M. E. church are increasing in attendance and interest. The pastor is emphasizing the instructional as well as the devotional aspect of the service. The Bible talks seem to be greatly enjoyed.

The basket ball enthusiasts in the town are greatly delighted with the opening victories which the girls' and boys' teams gained over Williams on Friday.

A party including the relatives and a few of the near neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Azeltine invaded their home Friday and surprised them by settling down for an evening's entertainment. After a while spent in music and games, the Rev. Harold Tomkinson presented to the recent bride and groom, on behalf of the company, some substantial tokens of their good will. After this refreshments were served.

You are invited to be present at these services and enjoy the good things that are given.

Rowan School Notes

The basket ball games played here Friday night between Rowan and Williams were Rowan's from start to finish. Both the boys and girls had fine play in every way. The scores were, girls' 33-11, boys' 25-9, which prove that they had team work and pep. The players on the girls' team were Forwards, Amy Azeltine, Bernice Hansen and Esther Emerson, Guards, Laura Aldinger and Grace Holliday, Centers, Cleo Duffy and Clara Azeltine. The boys' team was Forwards, Ray Azeltine and James Kercheval, Guards, George Utz and Fred Moellering, Centers, Joe McKinley. The Referees Frances and "Scotty" Farren are also to be congratulated for their square play. There was a fine crowd out. It helps when there are lots to boost so ALL COME. Every effort is being made to have another game next Friday. They plan to play the return game with Williams a week from next Friday. This promises to be pepy for it will be a strong fight from start to finish.

Vey Ketchum who came home for the week end visited school Friday a. m. Everyone was glad to see her again and wished she could stay.

Mrs. Arthur Hansen visited in the grades last week.

Miss Angie Baines visited the 2nd and 3rd grades Friday.

Mrs. D. W. Whitten was a visitor last week.

Adjournment.

Miss Maude Cowley and Miss Hillyard were not teaching Friday p. m. They went to Cedar Rapids where they lately attended college to attend the Home Coming at Coe College.

Mrs. Hinkley was a visitor Monday of this week.

Two boys were hurt this past week on the play ground. Donald Gunderson cracked a bone in his arm and Harry Mossman was also hurt, spraining his ankle. Both boys are back in school.

Rowan Congregational Church Notes

The Junior Endeavor society at their first meeting since vacation time, elected as their officers Pres. Margaret Keith, sec. Eveyln Whitten, treas. Lewell Hoke. The hour of meeting for the Juniors during the school months will be Wednesday afternoon at 4:00. Will the parents please bear this in mind? Miss Stella Emerson is acting superintendent.

The Ladies Missionary society will meet Thursday afternoon with Mrs. C. T. Halbert with Mrs. H. J. C. Box as leader.

There was a large attendance of the boys and girls at the morning service Sunday to hear the special sermon given by the pastor. The interest manifest was very gratifying and Rev. Halbert promises them a sermon of their own next Sunday morning.

The large congregation enjoyed a splendid anthem by the choir and spent a profitable time listening to "Our Duty in the Present Crisis."

The fourth division of the Ladies Aid will hold a 25 cent supper in the church basement on Thursday, Nov. 9th.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Rowen attended a party in Clarion Monday evening which was given to the American Legion by the Auxilary of that place.

George Vanston of Sheffield is visiting at the Nels Hanson home and working at the carpenter trade for J. F. Howell.

Fred Spencer, a merchant of Alden, held a sale of ladies coats and dresses at the D. W. Whitten store last Wednesday. The sale proved very successful. He had a fine line of goods here a year ago also.

Harvey Lineweaver was home from Marshalltown over Sunday.

Mrs. Walter Carver and children of Mason City spent several days at the Fred Hackley home. Mrs. Carver will be remembered as Hazel Gill formerly of this place. Mr. and Mrs. Hackley motored to Goldfield with her Monday where she will visit for a short time.

Fred Brooks, Herb Hadley, Edgar Mantle and Ray Cupp motored to West Bend, Saturday, to look after their trucks there.

Miss Dorothy Steffens was a Belmond caller Tuesday.

Roy Hyde was a dental caller at Belmond Tuesday.

Lloyd Myers of Nebraska came on Tuesday to visit at the home of his brother, F. M. and family. He expects to spend the winter here.

Carl Steffens was a Belmond business caller Tuesday.

Charley Bowers took his son to Dows, Tuesday, to have some dental work done.

A week ago Sunday, Mrs. Alt. Hackley hurt her ankle very much. She tore all the ligaments loose. She is able to get her shoe on now but has to be very careful of it for some time. Mrs. Edith Harsen was helping her last week.

Frank Ball of Dows was driving near the Joe Simons place one day last week when something went wrong with his steering gear. His car turned over twice but did not hurt him as the top did not collapse, it being a sedan.

Mrs. Jap McKinley of Cedar Rapids came last Friday to visit at the home of Will Duffy and other relatives. She had been visiting at the George Diltz home in Webster City and the Matt Shanner home in Storm Lake. She expects to return home the first of the week.

O. F. Braden was a Dows caller on Saturday.

Mrs. Charley Peddle and Mrs. Mary Williams were Clarion shoppers on Thursday.

Mr. Haugen, Where Were You?

If Congressman Haugen is performing such wonderful service for the country as we are led to believe from alleged speeches mailed out by him, what was he doing when we were obliged to sell our corn at 16 cents per bushel?

Where was he when we were forced to liquidate our debts to the banks and they in turn to the Federal Reserve Banks at a time when the live stock, and crops we had to sell scarcely brought enough to pay for the revenue stamps required on our notes?

Why did he not help us when our products were suddenly deflated and most of the things we must purchase have not as yet been deflated?

Why did he not help us when the Federal Reserve Banks kept increasing the rate of interest during the depression to force liquidation when we could scarely raise money enough to buy a postage stamp to send him a letter of protest?

If he really desires to lessen our burdens why did he permit himself to be registered as "Not voting" upon the passage of resolution subjecting salaries of members of Congress to war excess profits tax?

Was he playing politics when in January 1921 he voted "Present" upon the motion to strike out the free seed appropriation from the agricultural appropriation bill instead of voting "No" and by that vote lending his efforts to a reduction of a quarter million dollars annually in government expenses, which expenditure serves no other purpose than to keep himself in office?

Why has he not endeavored to amend the Esch Cummids Railroad act so as to wipe out its objectionable features?

Why has he not attempted to lessen the burden of the farmer and the consumer by securing for us a reduction in freight rates?

Why is it that in view of his long service he has not made himself one of the outstanding figures in Congress and in the nation, thus reflecting credit upon the district he represents?

If he desires to lessen our burdens why does he clog the mails just before election with government pamphlets and printed matter all at Government expense thus compelling the voter to pay the expense of his campaign?

Is not 24 years in Congress enough? The district needs a new broom that will sweep clean.

The foregoing questions have been put to Mr. Haugen repeatedly during this campaign, but no response has been received from him. No doubt the voters can supply their own answers. Then the most effective way in which they can register their dissatisfaction with Haugen's inaction is to vote for A. M. SCHANKE for Congrefs.

Are you satisfied with present conditions?

Don't you want a change?

Mr. Haugen has been in Congress for 24 years. Is it not time a change were made?

Then VOTE FOR A. M. SCHANKE

Congressional Committee.

As they were near Spencer on their way their car was run into, breaking it some but not injuring any of the occupants. It delayed them on their trip for 24 hours while they were getting it fixed

Last Tuesday evening a large number of friends gathered at the Cong. church parlors where a miscellaneous post nuptial shower was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harson. The room was beautifully decorated in autumn leaves and crepe paper while the addition of rugs from the homes made a very inviting looking place of it. The evening was spent in games of various sorts after which the bride and groom were presented with many useful and beautiful gifts which showed the high esteem in which they are held. Before refreshments were served much fun was derived from selling the ladies who were draped in sheets to the highest bidder. Many of the gentlemen proved their Morman instincts by bidding in several partners. The bride brought the highest pice. The guests left at a late hour wishing the happy couple a long and happy life and voting the evening a fine success.

A meeting was held in the sales pavilion Monday evening for the purpose of organizing a Short Course to be held in Rowan, the date of which will be announced later. Co. Agent Edwards of Clarion and County Agent Hamilton of Franklin county were in attendance. There was a good representation of business men breeders association and farmers of Rowan present. Lee Aldrich was chosen temporary chairman. D. W. Whitten was elected representative of the business men, Supt. Holliday of the school, Joe Simons of the farm bureau, Earl Patton of the Farmers Union, O. R. Meyers for the breeders association, and Mrs. Fred Brooks for the ladies of the community. The duties of this committee are to notify the different ones of their department to be present at a meeting to be held at the school house on Thursday night, Nov. 2., to complete plans and settle a date for the Short Course. Let us all give our asistance by co-operating to make this a rousing success.

Word received from Mrs. William Tresidder at the hospita in Iowa City states she is doing very well and may be able to return home this week.

The Case and The Girl

by Randall Parrish

COPYRIGHT 1922 by ALFRED A. KNOPF INC.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance.

CHAPTER II.—That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her.

CHAPTER III.—Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, apparently is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance, and the feeling of antagonism is mutual. Natalie, Coolidge, and West plan a visit of charity to a poor and remote section of the city.

CHAPTER IV.—Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage, remaining a length of time which causes him some uneasiness. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie, and has ulterior motives.

CHAPTER V.—On the party's return to the Coolidge home, Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions concerning her "double," and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but helpless. He leaves.

CHAPTER VI.—On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and investigates. He finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. The inquest so determines. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He gives it as his belief that Coolidge was murdered, and about convinces West he is right.

CHAPTER VII.—Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West, his suspicions of things not being right strengthened by his learning that Coolidge had lied about the reason for the trip to the cottage, visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon.

CHAPTER VIII.—West is taken by surprise, knocked out, separated from Sexton, and comes to his senses to find himself bound and helpless, and confronted by a man named Hobart, whom West knows to be the man who had rented the house which Natalie visited. The man tells him he (West) is interfering with his plans and if he persists will be done away with. West refuses any compromise. Hobart sends for Natalie, hoping she can induce West to give up his quest.

and wondering how far he dared venture. "You can get lonelier in a big city than anywhere else."

"You bet you can. You see I run a broker's office down town, an' it's pretty blame slow around a dump like this—you get me?"

"Sure; this seems to be a pretty quiet place."

"Quiet! H—l! It isn't always so quiet. I've dropped in here when it was lively enough, believe me. But tonight it's the limit. Fact is I come up for a little excitement, as much as anything else, but must have struck an off night. You're a smoke inspector, Mike says?"

West nodded.

"Know Fred Karvan, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes; friend of yours?"

"Used to be; we were kids together down on the South side. He's got a pretty soft job now; stands in strong with the City hall, they tell me. Mean to drop in and see him some of these days."

"You'll find him a mighty good fellow," asserted West, to whom the name was entirely unfamiliar.

"Well, I'm not so sure about that. He's got pretty stiff the last few years, they tell me. But then you work under him, and ought to know. Head of your department, isn't he?"

"Yes, but I only meet him in a business way, of course."

"Sure; but that is the way you get to know them best. Been a soldier, haven't you?"

"Yes, but what made you think that?" in some surprise at the unexpected query. The man laughed, lighting a cigar carelessly.

"Oh, it has not been so long since, that the evidence is obliterated. I've got a habit of noticing things. The way you sit, and square your shoulders told me you'd been in uniform; besides, you're the right age. Get across to France?"

"Had over a year there," wondering what the fellow could be angling after. "You didn't get in?"

"No; I was over the limit. I was thinking you might be interested in looking over a collection of war relics Mike has got stowed away here somewhere. He had two boys over there, and I reckon they must have put in most of their time gathering up souvenirs. Anyhow they brought back the greatest collection of war junk I've ever seen. Say, Mike, what did you do with those war relics the boys sent home?"

The fellow addressed leaned over the bar, his face glowing with sudden interest.

"They vas in the back-room, all, spread out. Why you ask? The gentlemen would see them, what?"

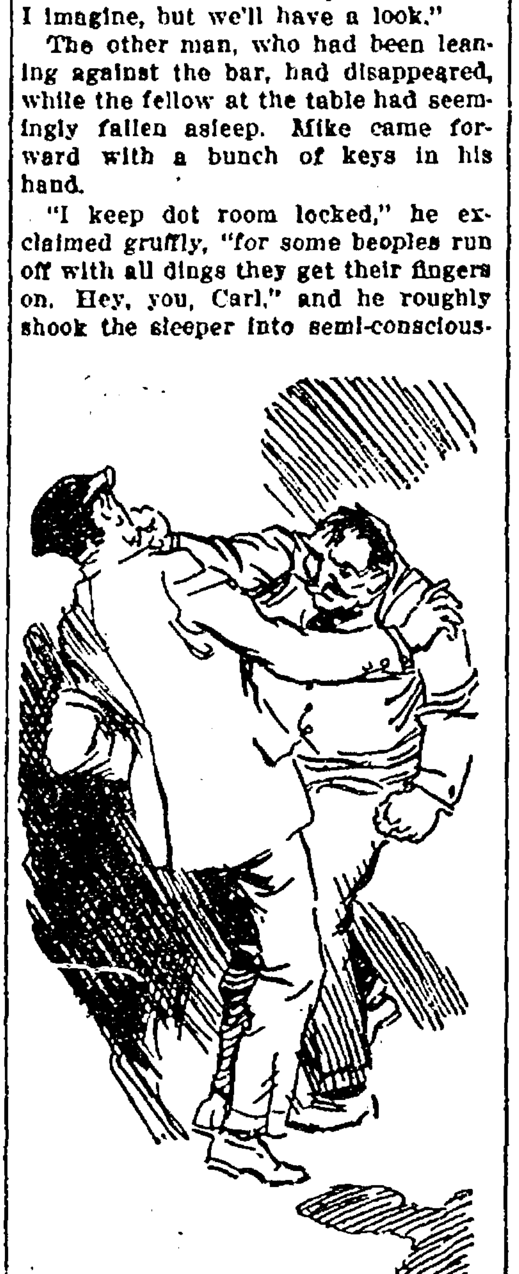
"Yes; this one was a soldier himself. How is it? You fellows like to see the things?"

West hesitated for just an instant, his eyes turning unconsciously toward Sexton, who had not spoken. He felt no suspicion, merely a vague doubt as to what this invitation might conceal. Yet it had all been natural enough, and promised an opportunity for him to learn something more of the place. Besides, there could be no danger; both he and Sexton were armed, and apparently the invitation was innocently extended. To refuse to accept would be churlish.

"Certainly," he said at last, quaffing the last of his beer and rising to his feet. "It will be nothing new to me, I imagine, but we'll have a look."

The other man, who had been leaning against the bar, had disappeared, while the fellow at the table had seemingly fallen asleep. Mike came forward with a bunch of keys in his hand.

"I keep dot room locked," he exclaimed gruffly, "for some beoples run off with all dings they get their fingers on. Hey, you, Carl," and he roughly shook the sleeper into semi-consciousness, "wake up, and see to the bar awhile. I've got some business. Whoever comes, you keep them here—understand. All right, gents."



The Giant Pole Flung His Whole Weight Into the Crashing Blow.

The three stood close behind him as Mike inserted the key, and opened the door. The tightly closed room, with shades drawn at the single window, was so dark that West could scarcely discern its shape and contents. Mike, without hesitation, stepped within, his great bulk blotting out whatever view there was.

"Come right in, gents," he insisted. "Von minute, an' I turn on the light."

West never understood why he responded so recklessly to this invitation, and advanced without hesitation. He had no suspicion of any trick, no conception of being in any danger. He stepped in directly behind the leader, and Sexton followed. An instant later, the door closed, with the sharp click of a night latch, and Mike flashed on the light. As he did so, he wheeled about, and shot one mighty clenched fist straight into West's face. This was done so suddenly, so unexpectedly, the man attacked found no opportunity to even throw up a hand in self-defense. The giant Pole flung his whole weight into the crashing blow, and the ex-soldier went down as though struck by a pole-ax. For an instant, he realized that Sexton was in a fierce struggle; that his assailant stood poised above him ready to land again if he moved; then consciousness left him entirely.

He woke up, sitting in a chair, his hands bound to the arms with strips of cloth. For a moment everything about seemed tinged with yellow, the various objects in sight vague and shapeless. It hurt him to move his head, and his mind functioned dully. He could not think, or bring back to memory a recollection of what had occurred. Yet slowly the mist cleared and the objects about him assumed natural form. He was in a room of some size—not the one in which he had been attacked, he felt sure—fitted up with a long table, and a number of chairs. There was no other furniture; the walls were bare, and only a small rag rug partially covered the floor. At first he perceived no other occupants; only as, painfully, he finally twisted his head to the right, his eyes distinguished two men seated against the wall. The sight of their faces restored instantly his memory of what had occurred. The Pole rested back, with feet on the table and eyes closed, but the other—the younger man—was watching him closely, an unlighted cigar gripped in his teeth.

"So, you've come out of it," the latter said unpleasantly. "I'd begun to think Mike had handed you a real knock-out that time. Ready to answer a few questions?"

West, his brain clearing rapidly, sat up straighter in the chair, determined to play out his part the best he could "Perfectly ready," he replied struggling to control his voice. "Only I should like to know what all this means? Why attack me?"

"You'll find that out soon enough, Captain; but first I'll do the questioning."

"Not until I know one thing, at least—what has become of the man who was with me?"

"Well, I might as well tell you," carelessly. "He got hurt; the fool compelled me to hit him with a gat; so he's out of it, and you might as well come through clean—that guy isn't going to help you any."

"You mean you killed him?"

"Well, he's out of the game; that's enough. And as for you, your best play right now is to talk up straight." He laughed sneeringly, "Unless you want to call up your friend Karvan, at the City hall, you know. H—l, but you was easy!"

"Easy?"

"That's what I said. I knew you all right when you first blew in, only I wasn't quite sure. I naturally guessed your smoke-inspector stunt was a sham. So I ran that Fred Karvan stuff in on you. You ate it up, which gave you clean away, for I never knew any guy of that name. Do you see the point, Captain West?"

"Yes, I see all that plainly, but it does not explain the attack on me. You evidently know my name, and this assault has been deliberately made. Why? What have you against me?"

"Perhaps I'll tell you when you explain. What brought you into this neighborhood. Hunting some one, wasn't you?"

"Not exactly."

"Oh, don't lie; that will bring you nothing, West. You were sticking your nose into a private matter which does not concern you in any way. That's right, isn't it? Very well, you've had your lesson, and now it is simply up to you to either drop this thing, or else take another. It's up to you how far we go. Now listen. I believe it was merely curiosity that brought you here. That's true, isn't it?"

"Largely, yes."

"You suspected something, and wanted to find out if it was so. Well, you came into a bad neighborhood. We are not nice to your kind around here. What really caused your seeking me?"

"I do not know that I did," West answered honestly. "In fact I haven't the slightest idea who you are."

The other laughed.

"So you are as green as that. Then I'll give you the information. My name is Hobart, Jim Hobart. I am the guy you were looking for?"

"Yes," West admitted, seeing no reason to refuse an answer.

"I thought so, although darned if I know how you ever located me here. However, the sooner we come to some understanding, the better. What do you know about me?"

"Nothing."

"Is that so! You knew my name when I spoke it. It was the Coolidge matter that sent you hunting me. You thought the girl was here, didn't you?"

"I had reason to believe she came here."

"I see; how did you gain that news?"

"A conversation by telephone was overheard."

"Now we are getting down to facts. And this comprises your entire information, doesn't it? Let's check up. You connected me with the case because you were with the uncle and her on their call Sunday. You discovered in some way that I had since disappeared from that neighborhood. Then you accidentally got on to this telephone call, and decided to run me down. Some cute little detective, I'll say. But what's the object? What is it you are trying to connect me up with. What possible cause can you have for butting in on this affair?"

"I told you before; merely curiosity."

"And who was the guy with you?"

"An old servant of the Coolidge family."

"It was mere curiosity in his case also, I presume?"

"So far as I know, yes."

Hobart smiled, showing his teeth cruelly.

"West," he said slowly, "you are a d—d good liar, but I am about to spike your gun. Go on out, Mike, and send in the first witness."

The two sat silently watching each other, Hobart pretending a carelessness he was far from feeling, uncertain as to West's real purpose. The latter realized now the true seriousness of his position, yet this only increased his belief in the reality of the crime. Previously his mind had harbored doubts, but the very fact that Hobart would resort to such desperate methods was ample proof of his apprehension of danger. If Percival Coolidge had committed suicide, this fellow would surely have nothing to fear; he could safely ignore any efforts to trap him; indeed would possess no suspicions along that line. It was his own guilty conscience which drove him to desperation. Coolidge had been murdered, and this man was either guilty of the crime, or else knew the one who was, and had personal reasons for protecting the party.

These thoughts took possession of his mind and were convincing. He no longer questioned but that he was on the track of crime, yet his thought at that moment concentrated more vividly on his own personal peril. How could he escape? What was he about to be confronted with? Nothing around him afforded inspiration. He was bound helplessly; Sexton had disappeared, whether dead or a prisoner, he did not know; the walls of the room exhibited no signs of weakness, while Hobart eyed his every movement coldly, evidently enjoying his predicament. Apparently the man comprehended the nature of his thought.

"Perfectly useless, West," he said carelessly. "This place was constructed for the purpose, and you are not the only one who has tested its strength. You will get out when I say so, and not before."

"Do you intend to say so?"

"Well, that depends," shrewdly. "Not if your release means my taking any chances. But frankly, I do not believe it will. So far as I can see you possess no particular interest in this matter—only the attraction a young fellow always feels in a pretty woman. Have I got that doped out right?"

"To an extent, at least."

"Yes, to a very large extent. Of course, curiosity also played a part, while everybody possesses a sneaking desire to do a detective act. Miss Coolidge filled you up with a lot of bunk; she was good looking, and you fell for it. Certain things happened that you failed to understand, so you rather naturally jumped to the conclusion that some crime was being concocted. That was what brought you here. Now I take it that, ordinarily, you are a man of some sense. Consequently I mean to try to get you to drop the whole affair, as being none of your business. If you agree to this, I accept your pledge, the door opens, and you go free; otherwise—" he waved his hand expressively.

"Otherwise what?" asked West quietly.

"I will see that you are removed from all temptation; my plans are too important to be interfered with by a meddlesome fool."

"But you can scarcely expect me to give such a promise?"

"Well, I don't know about that. It doesn't pay to be too obstinate. You have been in the army, I understand; then you are aware there is a harsh side to life, a way to make or break men. All right, now I've got the power; I can keep you locked up here; I could even kill you if necessary. You are utterly helpless. There is an argument worth your consideration. But I will give you yet another which may have even more weight."

"What?"

The door opened quietly, and then closed, leaving Natalie Coolidge standing there in the light, her eyes slightly frowning as she looked silently at the two men.

"The lady, of course," explained Hobart, rising to his feet, "you will, at least, be gentleman enough to accept her word!"

She waited, seemingly unable to grasp the situation, or realize the part she was called upon to perform, but as West failed to respond, finally asked a question.

"What is it, Jim? You sent for me?"

"Yes, as a last resort. You recognize this man?"

"Of course," indifferently; "what is he doing here?"

Hobart laughed.

"It seems the fellow hasn't taken his dismissal very seriously, Natalie," he explained, "and remains very much interested in your affairs."

"You mean he followed me here?"

"He was on the trail, but just for what particular purpose I have failed to learn; the lad is a bit close mouthed, but it looks to me as though he was in love with you."

The girl smiled, tossing her head as she stepped forward.

"In love with me," she echoed. "That is a joke, yet I had some such suspicion when I told him to quit the job. He acted like a fool then, and began to question me as though he had a right. It was that being engaged business, most likely."

"Sure; he thought he had you copped, fortune and all, and it looks to me like he needs another jolt to put the idea entirely out of his head. That is what I brought you in for. I'll explain first just how it happened. This army guy blew in here before dark, along with another fellow, Sexton.

"I was standing by the bar talking with Issy, and I was sure I knew this lad's face. I was stumped a bit at first where I had seen him; then all at once it came to me—he was the guy sitting out there alone in the automobile over on Arch street. I knew then what he was over here for, and got to talking with him. He give himself away the first thing, and that is why we got him up in this dump."

"How did he know I was here?"

"Some of your precious help out there heard you talk to me over the 'phone, and passed it on."

"And what does he want? What do these men want?"

"Well Sexton don't want much of anything—he's knocked out; the fool made a fight, and had to be hit; and, as to this bird, I rather think he was just naturally nosing around out of curiosity, and because he was stuck on you. I don't figure he is anything to be afraid of, but I am not going to have the fellow gum-shoeing around. I'll take his word to get out and stay out; otherwise he and I are going to have a little seance of our own. That's all there is about it."

West had said nothing, watching the others, and waiting to choose some course of action. His mind was confused, uncertain, yet he found encouragement in Hobart's statement of the case. The fellow felt no serious fear of him; had no suspicion as yet that any one believed Percival Coolidge murdered. The probability was that not even the girl dreamed of such a thing. Whatever her connection might be with this man, she must be innocent of so foul a crime. If he could only speak to her alone; bring to her the truth; reveal to her the real character of this man Hobart, there would be no doubt of the result. In spite of the strange situation he yet retained faith in the girl; she had been deceived, led astray in some manner, but his first impression of her true nature still controlled his thought. He could only believe her a victim of scheming villains, driven by circumstances to play a part uterly foreign to her character. His only hope of learning the facts from her own lips, or of re-establishing her faith in him, lay in a moment's conversation alone. His mind instantly leaped to this conclusion, and his eyes met her own. They were wide open, full of curiosity yet not unkind. He spoke swiftly.

"That sounds fair enough, Hobart," he said quietly, taking the chance as though it was the most natural thing in the world. "I am not hunting trouble in any way, or seeking to butt in where I am not wanted. Your guess as to my purpose in coming here is about right. I had no other object but to be of some service to this young lady. If I can talk with her a moment alone, and thus assure myself as to her wishes, I'll give you any pledge you want, and forget all about the affair. Is that satisfactory?"

"Alone, you said? You want to see her alone?"

"Absolutely no other arrangement will answer. I want her to talk freely; to answer my questions with no interference."

Hobart glanced toward his companion inquiringly, evidently inclined to deny the request.

"H—l, you don't want much," he said rather gruffly. "What do you think about this proposition, Natalie?"

The girl smiled, her eyes still on West's face.

"Fair enough," she admitted as though the whole matter was a joke. "It looks like the easiest way out."

"All right, if you say so. It is my guess you are equal to the job. How much time do you want, West?"

"Ten or fifteen minutes. I want to get down to the bottom of this thing.

"Oh, you do, hey? Modest as ever, I see. Well, here's luck to you. You needn't be afraid of the guy, Natalie; we got his gat before we brought him up here, and if he makes any break, I'll be out in the hall ready to take a hand. You're still for it?"

"Yes," indifferently, seating herself on a convenient chair. "We might as well talk it out now as any time. You go on Jim, and leave it to me."

Hobart was not entirely satisfied, hesitating as he lit a fresh cigar, his keen eyes watchful of them both. However, it was plain to be seen the girl had made her decision, and he evidently knew her well enough to realize the uselessness of revolt.

"All right, then," he replied finally, turning to the door. "Suit yourself, only watch your step. Anyhow, I'll be within calling distance, if this guy gets gay."

"Don't worry about that," a flash of anger in her eyes. "I am no baby, Jim Hobart. Go on now, and leave Captain West to me."

He closed the door behind him, and the two were alone in the room. No sound reached them from without, not even an echo of Hobart's footsteps in the hall. West looked across at the girl, who sat motionless, her eyes shaded by long lashes, and ringless fingers clasped in her lap. She appeared indifferent, uninterested, scarcely aware of his presence. He wondered if Hobart was listening at the door; what had become of Mike, and whether Sexton was alive or dead. For the moment he could scarcely make himself realize the true situation. His silence served to arouse her interest, for she suddenly lifted her head and looked at him.

"Well," she said soberly. "You have something to ask?"

"Much—yes; but first, are we alone?"

"Certainly—why?"

"This man Hobart, you are sure he is not listening at the door?"

She glanced about; then laughed.

"Little good that would do him; there is no key-hole, no chance for sound to penetrate. We are quite alone, Captain, and you are perfectly free to say whatever you please."

"But even then, is this wholly fair?"

"What do you mean?"

"I came here," he explained earnestly, "with no bad intention; no desire to injure any one, Miss Coolidge; my only thought the possibility of being of some service to you."

"That is very interesting, I am sure. I am quite grateful.

"Then I am going to ask you a favor. Release my hands and feet. You need not be afraid; I give my pledge to make no attempt to escape while we are together. Will you do this?"

CHAPTER IX

West Makes His Choice.

The girl neither answered, nor hesitated, but crossed the room swiftly, her hands seeking the lashings about his wrists. Her movement thrilled him, and his blood leaped at the soft touch of her fingers.

"Really, I did not realize you were tied into the chair," she exclaimed indignantly. "Hobart is a fool to do such a thing. Why, what has caused him to become so frightened? Tell me, Captain West, how all this occurred?"

"You know nothing?"

"Only what has been said since I entered the room. Mike simply told me they had a man here who Hobart thought was a detective, and he wanted me to come in a moment. I came, and found you. Now, please, what does it all mean?"

She slipped back to her seat again, her eyes on his face, as he arose and stretched his limbs to restore circulation. To his quick glance her face expressed only sympathy, and innocent interest. Any doubt he may have felt as to the sincerity of the girl vanished instantly; whatever of crime was concealed here, she had no suspicion. He could tell her the whole story without fear.

"I'll try and explain, Miss Natalie," he began rather lamely, "although perhaps, you may not wholly understand the motives which have prompted me. This, of course, is really no business of mine, and the only thing that has involved me is the deep interest I have felt in you."

"In me! Why, that is rather interesting. It was to serve me you came here?"

"At least I thought so. Shall I make it more definite? No doubt you are aware that you are an unusually pretty woman. Well, at least, I think so for one, and our first meeting, with its subsequent adventures, was romantic enough to shake me out of a commonplace existence. In fact, I became quite deeply interested in you."

"Why, really, Captain," she interrupted, slightly puzzled. "I perhaps do not fully comprehend to what you refer. Do you mean there was something between us? Some special intimacy?"

"Oh, no; not that; probably no dream of what was occurring in your mind. Yet the circumstances of our meeting were peculiar; they rendered a very brief acquaintance into what promised to become a real friendship."

"How do you mean?"

"Surely you cannot have forgotten so soon," he explained in surprise at her attitude, seating himself once more and facing her determinedly. "I came to you in response to a strange advertisement; you trusted me so completely as to introduce me to your friends as your fiance, and later confided to me the special trouble you were in. I pledged you my assistance, and it was surely very natural that, under these circumstances, I as a young man, should have become rather deeply interested—"

"In both the case and the girl."

"Yes; so much so, indeed, that even when I was rather harshly dismissed, I could not accept it without a protest. I had grown to feel that this was not a mere business arrangement between us. Do you understand now?"

"I can see it from your standpoint. But nevertheless, I am surprised, Captain West. You—you mean you actually fell in love with me?"

"I felt a very, very deep interest in you," he admitted gravely, "a greater interest than I have ever felt in any other woman. That is my sole excuse for becoming involved in your affairs. I could not bear to see you make a mistake it might be in my power to prevent."

"What mistake?"

"Well, first of all, trusting in this man Hobart."

She laughed, her eyes glancing up quickly into his face.

"And why not, please? Remember your confession; I may think this only jealousy."

"You are not so silly as that," earnestly. "Moreover, I may as well be perfectly frank. I did confess an interest in you, and in a measure, I still feel eager to serve you in every possible way; but you have changed so greatly, Miss Natalie, that my confidence in you has been severely tried."

"You no longer believe?"

"I hardly know; I fail utterly to understand you of late; you seem an entirely different girl. For one thing, you have deliberately deceived me."

"Indeed! in what?"

"In your visit to Arch street with Percival Coolidge. That was no mission of charity to a poor widow and children."

"What then?"

"An arranged conference with this fellow Hobart. He rented that cottage for no other purpose, and left it the next day. You made a mistake when you took me along."

She straightened up slightly in the chair, yet spoke rather indifferently, her voice cold.

"No doubt I did," she said tersely, "Indeed I have already discovered, Captain West, that I made an even greater mistake when I first took you into my service. You have proven altogether too inquisitive. Now I will be plain with you. Whatever need I once supposed I had for your services ended with the explanation I received in that Arch street cottage. I told you so very distinctly after our return home. You recall that interview, no doubt?"

He bowed, waiting for her to go on.

"You were then and there dismissed from my service. That should have been sufficient. I knew nothing of your silly feeling of personal interest in me; nor did I realize any occasion for discussing with you the reasons causing me to change my plans. You were my employee, and I discharged you; that was all. It is true Percival Coolidge took me to that cottage to have certain mysterious things explained, and they were explained to my complete satisfaction."

"By Hobart?"

"Yes."

"You knew the fellow before?"

She hesitated slightly, although there was no perceptible change in the answering voice.

"For several years; he was in my father's employ; the—the whole trouble originated in a joke, and—and was quite amusing, once I understood. Of course, after that, I had no further need for you. Why did you persist in annoying me?"

Belmond Local News

E. E. Boughton last week purchased the second hand store from Herb Harberts, possession being taken on November 1st, and has severed his connection with the Belmond Furniture company, with which firm he has been connected for some twenty two years.

Two gentlemen were down from Kanawha, one from Alexander and another from Meservey last week to look over the radio set of the Belmond Storage Battery Co. and the Independent, with the idea of having a set installed. Very fine results are being received over this set during the past month, stations from all parts of the country being heard.. If you have not as yet been in to listen in, you are welcome at any time.

Atty. J. M. Jensen was a visitor at the county seat last Thursday where he had a case in district court.

Belmond's candidate for county attorney, J. M. Jensen, is going to have opposition at the election November 7th. Attorney Henneberry of Eagle Grove has come out on the democrat ticket against him. The Independent was of the opinion that a candidate could not run in the election unless he had been among those present in the primary If this is the case, then Henneberry is not entitled to be on the ballot, and only Messrs. R. C. Morse for supervisor, and Dunn for sheriff, can legally run at the election. Anyway, J. M. should worry.

G. E. Raecker, of the Meservey garage, was a business caller here on Thursday last.

Sheriff Lang was in the city last Thursday on some legal affairs for the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Stacy and family spent the week end at Hampton with relatives.

Miss Mildred Gealow came down from Meservey to spend the week end with reatives here.

Monday morning a sure sign of approaching cold weather was evidenced in the stream of blackbirds that were headed south For several hours the birds flew over in a steady flock, and while we didn't take the time to count them, it is a safe bet that at least half a million went over the town. They were quite a sight.

Joe Sampson, who is raising some extra fine Spotted Polands, recently sold several, two going to a farmer near Klemme. Joe has some extra fancy blood lines in his herd.

Senator Brookhart was at Hampton on Saturday where he delivered an address. A football game between Hampton and Mason City drew by far the largest crowd, something like four housand being out to see it. Evidently people are not much excited over politics this year.

Corn pickers are as scarce as hen's teeth this fall, and many of the farmers are having a hard time to get their corn out. The good weather has been a great help, and as they were able to get started from two to three weeks earlier than usual they have been doing nicely.

New goods are arriving daily at the D. L. Mallory Jewelry Store. Adv.

L. V. Hyde, presdent of the Old Homestead Chemical company of Shenadoah, spent a few days last week with F. A. Stine of this place, who represents them here.

The American Legion dance held Monday was a fine success and was attended by a large crowd.

Mrs. James Abrams of Mason City and formerly of Seattle, Washington, is visiting at the home of her old-time friend, Mrs. Frank Stine. They motored to Eagle Grove, Sunday, and were guests at the John Thiebay home.

If you have anything you want to sell, or if you want to buy something, need help or have something to trade, try an Independent want ad. They bring big results.

F. A. Stine was a business caller in Butler county and at Hampton on Friday.

Mrs. T. N. Davenport and Mrs. E. E. Boughton were callers at Goodell last Thursday.

W. W. Goetz returned last Thursday from Rochester where he had been with his wife, who is receiving treatment at the hospital there. He reports Mrs. Goetz as improving in health nicely. She is now able to be up and around somewhat each day and is gaining in strength.

Mrs. Irene Bailey returned to her home at Minneapolis the first of the week after a few days spent here on business matters.

Two days of almost constant rain this week have soaked things up in good shape, and put a temporary damper on corn husking.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Having purchased the Herb Harberts' Second Hand store, we wish to announce that it is our purpose to conduct a first class store, and buy and sell second hand goods. Store will be open for business every day after Nov 1, at the old stand next door to Adams Drug store. All are invited to call and see what we have to offer. Will also do repairing and refinishing. Bring in your work and have it done right.—E. E. Boughton & Co. 501*

SIX FIGURES ON AUTO LICENSES

Every Iowa automobile license plate for 1923 will carry six figures, according to announcements recently received from the office of the secretary of state. Supplies for making the 1923 registrations have already been received by county treasurers. Treasurers are now ready to take applications for new auto licenses, but will not issue the plates till the first of the year.

The reason for the six-figure number is to prevent anyone with a short number from filling in the vacancies and changing the number. The new plates are black with orange figures. The registration fee is the same as for 1922. Treasurers in a number of the counties have announced that no requests of individuals for certain numbers would be honored. Each year a number of such requests are made, but because of the rush incident at that time of the year, it is impossible to consider these requests.

ROBINSON WINS OVER HAGEMAN BY BIG VOTE

Annual Red Cross Campaign Nov. 11th

Annual Drive For Memberships Starts Armistice Day And Goes To Thanksgiving.

JOIN THE RED CROSS SAT.

The Red Cross membership enroolment begins November 11, Armistice Day, and will continue to Thanksgiving Day, November 30, during which its volunteer army of four million and more men and women and many others will again enlist to wage battle against disease, disaster, misery and suffering in peace, even more than in war.

The service given by the Red Cross in connection with the Mississippi River Valley floods the past season in Illinois and Iowa, in the disasterrous storms and tornadoes of Wisconsin and South Dakota, in the forest fires of Minnesota and in the droughts of the far West are all fresh in the public mind. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended by the organization in giving immediate relief and in re-establishing families that have suffered. No county is safe without community insurance in the form of an organization ready to meet these unexpected disasters. Nearly a million and a half dollars in disaster relief have been given in 19 states the past year.

More than $9,000,000 was given last year by the Red Cross in addition to the services of 50.000 volunteer workers for the disabled ex-service men, 30,000 of whom are now in hospitals.

38,855 Red Cross nurses are enrolled for service with the Army and Navy for other emergency Red Cross Life Saving and prevention of disease and accident has been carried on a national scale, and 5,000,000 children in the schools, enrolled in the Junior Red Cross, are receiving training in practical social service.

This record leads our Red Cross chapter to believe the organization will receive adequae local membership support at the present Roll Call for the coming year. The membership campaign will start in Belmond on Saturday, Armistice Day.

Under the new arrangement, all funds remain with the local chapter for the support of its present activities, with the exception of fifty cents from each annual, contributing or sustaining membership, which goes to the National fund to support the disaster relief, soldier work health and other projects. Plans for Roll Call activities will be announced shortly.

GIRL CAUGHT FOOT IN RAIL ENGINEER SAW HER

Hampton Chronicle.—Engineer Harry Elliott, piloting the engine on the M. & St. L. freight No. 32 while switching in the yard here last Saturday, stopped his train just in time to avoid running over little Margaret Whitehead, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Whitehead, of this city.

The little girl was out roller skating and when she went to cross the M. & St. L. tracks on Sixth street her skate became caught between the rails of a switch and she was unable to get loose. Freight No. 32 was rapidly approaching the crossing where the little girl's foot was caught and when she saw that she would be unable to get way she threw herself back away from the rails and, covering her eyes with her hand, waited for the train to run over her. But Engineer Elliott saw the girl and was able to stop his train just in time to keep from hitting her. It was necessary for the child's shoe to be removed to get her foot from between the rails.

BAZAAR

The Trinity Lutheran Ladies' Aid and Dorcas societies will hold their annual bazaar in the church basement on Saturday, November 18th. The sale begins at 1 o'clock. A cafeteria lunch will be served from 3 o'clock until all are served.

PARKER-ROURK

Mr. W. A. Parker and Miss Viva Rourk were united in marriage last Saturday morning, November 4th, at 8:00 o'clock, at the St. Francis church in Belmond, the Rev. Father Eardley officiating. Only the immediate relatives of the couple were present, the out of town guests being the brides parents and sisters, Mr. and Mrs. James Rourk, Mrs. Leo Gilligan, Miss Ethel Rourk, and Anson Avery of Kanawha. After the ceremony the wedding party motored to Kanawha, where a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents. The happy couple left for the Twin Cities and other points for a short honeymoon.

The bride is very well known in Belmond, where she has taught the third grade in the public school for the past three years. Her charming ways and pleasant manner have earned her a host of friends here who unite in wishing them the best of life's blessings.

Mr. Parker is now, and for several years past has been, connected with the C. C. McGuire clothing business. He is one of this city's best known and most popular young men, capable and industrious, and will make a happy home for the bride he has won.

The many friends of both young people, with whom the Independent takes pleasure in joining, extend to them their heartiest congratulations and sincere good wishes.

Mrs. Parker will go on with her duties in the local school for the present. Later they expect to begin housekeeping in the Thos. Cullinan residence.

ST. OLAF

Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock the class meets at the church.

Wednesday evening, roads and the weather permitting, prayer meeting at the home of Otto Tegland.

Sunday morning service will be at 10:30, with confirmation.

Sunday evening the League will meet, likely for the last time, this year. Something impertant to be considered. Therefore all must be present. Please come.

DISTRICT COURT IN DISPOSAL OF CASES

Several Cases From Belmond In Court Are Settled—Negroes Taken To Pen.

Judge McCall adjourned the October term of court Friday, having disposed of a goodly number of case.

O. P. Morton, Harry Sumners and Nels Koltvet have been appointed commissioners by the court to adjust terms upon which property sought to be set outside the city limits of Clarion by F. B. Mathias et al. The commission is to ascertain the liabilities of said city in connection therewith and report at the November term of court.

Henry Sporaa of Belmond failed to defend the suit brought by Johnson & Wright and the court directed a judgment in their favor for $372.46.

A $50,000 bond is required of C. O. Fitts as referee in the case of Kessler vs. Kessler. The appraisers are Ward Martin, M. D. Sullivan and C. P. Luick. After paying costs it is ordered that proceeds from the sale of the land be divided among the several heirs.

Taft Co. have secured a judgment against Norris & son for $177.09.

Three divorces were granted during the last week of court, as follows: Beulah Keena of Eagle Grove was granted separation from her husband, James Keena, and given the custody of their three minor children. She is to receive $40 per month alimony and $100 attorney fee. Louise Clemmons of Clarion was granted a divorce from her husband, Clyde Clemmons, who did not appear to defend the case. Mina Mills of Eagle Grove was given the custody of the minor child Dorothy with her petition for a divorce from Joseph Mills.

It is hoped that all Iowa township ladies and all others interested will come and get what benefit they can from the lecture and from observation.

OBITUARY

Mary Kelley was born November 16, 1854, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. She came to this state 39 years ago, at which time she was married to John Kelly of Hancock county. For a number of years they made their home on a farm between Belmond and Goodell. In 1900 Mr. Kelly died, and in 1907 she was married to Thos. McNulty, residing in Belmond until her death. About three years ago she underwent an operation for cancer. For awhile she was improved, but the disease returned and during the past summer slowly brought death. She died at the home here on Thursday, November 2. Funeral servics were from St. Francis church Saturday morning, solemn requiem high mass being celebrated by Rev. Father Eardley, assisted by Dean Nolan of Eagle Grove and Father Torpey of Clarion. Interment was in the St. Francis cemetery.

GAME WARDEN ISSUES WARNING TO HUNTERS

Says You Cannot Depend On Calendar To Determine The Sunrise Time.

Eagle Grove Times.—Warning to all hunters that the hour of sunrise and sunset as set in the calendar is not correct for this section of the country, is contained in a statement made last week by August Greiner, state and federal deputy game warden at Wall Lake.

The calendar cannot be taken as a guide, Mr. Greiner says, because the hours of sunrise and sunset as fixed in it are sixteen minutes earlier than the official hours in this section of the country. He suggests that hunters write either the geological survey or the Des Moines Register for the official hour in this section.

Mr. Greiner has been lenient, he says, with men who were using the calendar time as a guide because they were showing a disposition to observe the law. However, since warning has been issued, the plea of ignorance will not be considered when hunters are caught shooting too early or late and it behooves every one to make an effort to find out the proper hours before opening fire.

Wright County Returns Big Republican Majorities For All Candidates.

BAKER WINS OVER MORSE

Election Tuesday returned T. J. B. Robinson of Hampton victor over F. Hageman of Waverly, his "light wines and beer opponent, by an immense majority, and settled for good the opinion of the people of the third district as to the wet and dry issue. Robinson's lead as the Independent goes to press has not been determined, but as it had been 8,000 twelve hours previous there is little doubt but what Robinson has so completely snowed him under that he can't be found in the race. In Wright county Robinson polled a vote of 3116 to 783 for Hageman. Waterloo and Dubuque went for Hageman, but this was expected.

Belmond's candidate for county attorney won over Henneberry of Eagle Grove by 3079 to 907, or better than three to one. This was a foregone conclusion, but the great majority of Jensen is highly pleasing to his many friends.

John Baker won over R. C. Morse by 577 to 278. Baker carried all three townships.

For trustee in Pleasant township Riekens won over Bohning 269 to 100.

The local returns on the most important offices were as follows:

Pleasant: Brookhart 341, Herring 141
Belmond: Brookhart 116, Herring 36
Pleasant: Robinson 325, Hageman 127
Belmond: Robinson 112, Hageman 37
Pleasant: Kendall 346, Files 97.
Belmond: Kendall 120, Files 25.
Pleasant: Ramsay, 389, Frederickson 93.
Belmond: Ramsay 137, Frederickson 20.
Pleasant: Ulstad 301, Barry 140.
Belmond: Ulstad 120, Barry 25.
Pleasant: Lang 337, Dunn 145.
Belmond: Lang 110, Dunn 40.
Pleasant: Jensen 340, Henneberry 128
Belmond: Jensen 114, Henneberry 32
Pleasant: For the Bonus 356, against 89.
Belmond: For the Bonus 141, against 60.

The total vote of the county on the respective candidates was:

Robinson 3116, Hagemen 783.
Jensen 3079, Henneberry 907.
Walker 3183, Hildebrand 615.
Ulstad 3175, Barry 655.
Lang 3123, Dunn 1058.
Vaughn 3393, Filkins 515.
Walker (for coronor) 3130, O'Toole 721.
Baker 577, Morse 278.
For the Bonus 2801, against 1380.

The county returned heavy pluralities for Brookhart over Herring, and for Kendall over Files. The estimated majority for Kendall in the state is 200,000, while Brookhart is expected to win over Herring about 2 to 1.

Radio reports of the election were received over the Battery Station-Independent set up to 12 o'clock midnight from all parts of the country. The race in some states was close, but on the whole the expected Republican victory was announced, altho not by as large a margin as had been claimed.

New York went democratic, and it was claimed that Kansas and Nebraska would return democrati governors. Ohio was a very close race but the republicans won out as had been anticipated.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

SHALL WE GIVE IT ?

Much has been said regarding the debt owed America by the European nations, most of which, in fact practically all of which, was contracted during the war and for war purposes. Below is given the complete list of what is due the United States, by whom owed and the amount. Glance it over, consider the total, over eleven billions, and then consider what has been said of the part America took in the war. Consider whether we should present to the old world over eleven billions of dollars, when they are now making no effort, aside from England, to pay what they borrowed, and hardly any effort to stabilize the governments over there so as to get back on a firm peace basis and have a place in the sun with America. They would have us give them this sum, a sum so stupendous that none ran comprehend it. Instead of settling down and trying to do something for themselves, they are going ahead on warlike plans, and trusting that our good heartedness will cancel their obligations. Why not call it charity and be done with it? November 11th brings to American minds a cost that was too dear to so easily forget. Uncle Sam is not so rich that he can afford it, all other things aside. Read what they owe, and then ask yourself: Can we afford to, and should we anyway, give them this staggering sum?

Almost all the allied governments to which the United States advanced funds during the war have appointed special commissions to meet the foreign debt funding commission, of which Secretary of the Treasury Mellon is chairman, with a view to placing this indebtedness on a permanent basis.

Elliot Wadsworth, assistant secretary of the treasury, in charge of foreign loans gives the latest figures on all sums owing to the Unite States as a result of the war and the post-armistice events. This schedule represents the task to which the foreign debt funding commission has addressed itself and indicates the great extent of the burden which rests upon the allies to arrange payment.

Twenty-seven nations signed the treaty of Versailles, which offically terminated the European war. The United States has made loans to 20 nations. This is an indication of the invisible aid which the American people gave the allied cause during the war in addition to the visible assistance of men, munitions and food.

A survey of what was advanced, what it was used for, and what has been repaid should be of interest and value.

Great Britain heads the list of debtors. She borrowed $4,135,818,358; she has paid $250,132,158 in interest but total accrued interest amounts to $611,044,201, bringing the total debt due to $4,746,862,560. Great Britain used these funds in the United States buying arms and food, agricultural and manufacturing implements, and a great variety of other goods necessary to the prosecution of the war. She lent other allies about $9,0[illegible],000,000, so that all the money she borrowed from the United States amounted to only about half her advances.

France borrowed $3,340,857,593; she has paid interest of $170,804,490; total accrued interest is $430,049,062 and the net debt now due is $3,770,906,655. Practically all of this loan was spent in this country for munitions and supplies.

Italy Our Third Debtor.

Italy stands third. She borrowed $1,648,034,050; she has paid $57,598,852; total accrued interest is $243,480,583 and net debt, $1,891,514,634. She used her money for munitions and supplies and to stabilize her exchange with the United States.

Belgium borrowed $337,123,745; she has repaid $14,609,062; total accrued interest amounts to$51,515,733. Belgium bought munitions and supplies in the United States.

Russia, before the fall of the czarist government which was our ally, borrowed $192,601,297; she paid interest amounting to $7,717,333; accrued interst is $35,019,427 and net debt $227,620,724. All Russia's expenditures were for munitions and supplies in the United States.

The status of this loan is much in doubt. The existing soviet government recognizes none of the old debts. It is not likely Russia will be recognized by the United States until she acknowledges this debt.

Sixth in the list of debtors stands Poland. The loans to her were made after the treaty because prior to that event she was not a nation. Chiefly they were for food and medical supplies. She borrowed $135,662,867; has paid interest of $1,290,620; accrued interest is $17,380,785 and net debt, $153,040,652.

In the same class is Czechoslovakia, another treaty country. She borrowed, chiefly for food, $91,887,668; paid interest of $304,178; accrued interest is $12,797,876 and net debt, $104,685,545.

Serbia, a belligerent ally, borrowed $51,104,595; she has paid $636,059; accrued interest is $7,336,455 and net debt, $58,441,051. Serbia bought munitions and supples in the United States and also used some of these funds to meet the expenses of detaining German and Austrian prisoners intrusted to her custody.

Rumania borrowed $36,128,494; she has paid $262,313; accrued interest is $5,283,958 and net debt, $41,412,453. Rumania bought Amercan supplies and, at times urgently needed this financial assistance to pay her army.

Austria borrowed $24,055,708 wholly for emergency food relief after the armistice. She has paid no interest and $2,165,014 has accrued, making the net debt, $26,220,722.

Smaller Loans on List

Greece borrowed $15,000,000; she has repaid $1,159,152; accrued interest amounts to $375,000 and net debt, $15,375,000. This money was used largely by Greece to stabilize her own currency. Much of it was retained in the United States on deposit in gold, as a currency reserve for Greek circulating notes.

Esthonia, another treaty country borrowed $13,999,145 after the armistice. She has paid no interest and $2,098,625 has accrued, bringing the net debt to $16,088,771. This was a food loan to a large extent.

Armenia borrowed $11,959,917 for food relief. She has paid no interest and $1,677,356 has accrued, bringing the debt to $13,637,174.

Finland, a treaty country, formerly part of Russia, borrowed $8,281,926 for rehabilitation. No interest has been paid and $1,012,436 has accrued, bringing the net debt to $9,294,362.

Cuba, borrowed $7,740,500 during the war to assist in her military preparedness. She has kept her interest paid up to date.

Latvia, a treaty country, borrowed $5,132,287 for rehabilitation. She has paid $126,266 in interest, but $643,576 has accrued, bringing the net debt to $5,775,864.

Lithuania is a debtor of the same class who borrowed $4,981,628, has paid no interest, although $747,344 has accrued, bringing the net debt to $5,728,872.

Hungary borrowed $1,685,835 as an emergency food loan after the war Interest to extent of $202,300 has accrued, none having been paid, so the net debt stands at $1,888,135.

Nicaragua, another war ally, borrowed $170,585. That is her net debt , for she has kept her interest paid up. It is a curious fact that out all the score of mighty nations which have borrowed from the United States, the relatively small Latin-American states of Cuba and Nicaragua are the only ones which have kept their interest paid up.

The least of our debtors is Liberia, who borrowed $26,000. She has paid $861 in interest; $2,868 has accrued, so the net debt is $28,868. Liberia was a war ally and this money was used in part to assist her in maintaining a wireless station useful to the allied cause.

The total lendings of the United States amounted to the impressive total of $10,102,252,207. Total interest paid thus far amounts to $506,002,109, only about one-third of what has accrued, which is $1,422,699,662. The net debt to the United States, therefore, is $11,524,951,867.

The bulk of this money was lent at 5 per cent interest and is payable on demand. The commission now trying to fund the debt is expected to translate the demand obligations into term notes probably running over half a century or more.—Federic J. Haskin in the Chicago Daily News.

IN FLANDERS' FIELDS

Armistice Day 1922 only brings a renewed reverence to the minds of Americans for the heroic service and sacrifice made by their sons in the greatest of all conflicts. It brings again to their thoughts the days of 1918, when their sons went gayly forth to battle, smiling and full of cheer, optimistic and determined, in full knowledge of the dangers and the possible cost, yet nevertheless willingly, hopefully. It brings to our minds those who went, and did not return, and there is born anew in our hearts a great and lasting love and reverence for they who sleep in Flanders' Fields. It renews again our determination and resolve that the land they gave their lives for shall always remain the haven of the oppressed and the home of freedom; it makes our loyalty greater, and stronger.

To those men, those youths, who went, to those who returned and to those who did not return, America bows its head again in reverence and in humility, in thankfulness and in pride. Their names shall remain in our hearts forever, so long as this nation shall endure, fresh and green in love. We shall not break faith with they who died, nor with they who came home again to us. each passing year shall but strengthen the love that binds them to us. All honor to the sons of America.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Short Course Being Planned

The old time short course with its exhibition of agricultural products and general community interest seems to be coming back in Wright county. There was a time when it was quite common to hold a short course or farmers' institute in each township within the county. The busine men of several town communities of the county are co-operating with the farmers in making plans for the winter short courses.

The farmers and business men of Goldfield and surrounding communities met in the fore part of October and laid plans for a two day short course to be held in the White Motor company garage December 14th and 15th. B. E. Heitzmen, farm crops specialist, Mark G. Thornburg, former professor of Animal husbandry at Ames, livestock judge. S. W. Henn of the poulty department at Ames, poultry judge, and a lady demonstrator who has not been arranged for as yet. It will be remembered that the Goldfield people held a most successful short course last year and they are planning to out do their last year's record.

A joint meeting was held at the Rowan Consolidated school last Thursday evening for the making of plans for the winter short course. This was a meeting of representatives from the livestock breeders, the farmers union, the farm bureau, the Rowan business men, the Rowan cosolidated school and from the ladies' clubs of the community. The meeting was opened by an interesting program by the Rowan consolidated school, which was arranged by Mr. Sheldon, Earl Patton, president of the farmers' union, Lee Aldrich, and many others. Following this was a general discussion of the Short Course plans after which committees were appointed from the various organizations to cooperate with one another in making final plans for the short course.

Some of the specialists which have been secured for the Rowan short course are as follows: M. A. Hauser, farm crops, J. J. Warren, poultry E L. Quaife, animal husbandry, and Miss Florence Imlay, household exhibits. With Rowan situated as it is, in the heart of a purebred livestock community and with the splendid livestock pavilion, this short course should be a great success. While the dates have not been decided upon definitely, December 19 and 20 have been suggested for this two-day short course.

Meat Killing and Cutting

Those who are planning to attend the meat killing and cutting demonstrations will be interested to know something about the general plan of the work. On Thursday morning, November 9th, a demonstration on butchering will be held at the M. L. Clark farm (Lake township) 2 miles north and 2 miles west of Clarion, and in the afternoon at the Frank Drury farm one mile west of Rowan. On Friday, November 10, a demonstration on meat cutting will be given in the afternoon at the Frank Drury home.

Professor C. W. MacDonald of the animal husbandry department at Ames will give actual demonstration in the killing and cutting up of carcassess of hogs, sheep, and cattle, which will be brought to these farms for this purpose. It will be noted that according to the schedule the animals will be slaughtered the first day and the cutting up of the carcassas the second day. This arrangement allows the meat to cool over night.

While most farmers know in a general way the methods generally followed in killing meat for farm use there are a number of valuable suggestionsto be had from Prof. MacDonald in this work, and especially in connection with the cutting and curing of home meats. This demonstration was held in the county two years ago and proved to be very popular at that time.

Tuberculosis in Herds

One of the federal veterinary instructors was in Wright county during the last week in October running the tuberculin test on several herds of cattle in this community and fifteen head of cattle on the farms of H. N. Denby and P. A. Thielen were found to be tubercular. The fact that these tubercular cattle were found on these farms was a great surprise to these men and it goes to show the great danger which lies in keeping cattle from year to year without having them tested for the deadly disease of tuberculosis.

According to the October report of the Iowa commission of animal health there are six accredited herds in Wright county, 56 applications on the waiting list which includes that the farmers of our county are awaking to the danger of tuberculosis. Many farmers have had their applications filed for several months and in some cases a year or more and have not had the tuberculin test made yet. The reason for this is that there is a limited amount of money appropriated by the state and federal deartments each year for this work and the testing work is done in the order in which the applications are received.

Some counties are making an effort to stamp out tuberculosis carrying on a county wide campaign in which every farmer takes part. In carrying out this system the local veterinaians are used in making the tests altho the indemnity from the state and federal departments is not allowed. It would seem, however, that when one considers the dangers of this disease and the fact that it is transmissible to the human that an effort should be made to have our herds clean, in fact have all of our livestock free from tuberculosis.

Club Work Progressing

The interest in the boys and girls club work of the county seems to be growing and if the enrollments continue to come in the County Agent will have more than he can handle in taking care of the clubs which are being organized.

Considerable time has been spent during the past two weeks in organizing the baby beef club and the dairy calf club. From thirty to forty boys and girls have enrooled in the baby beef club and enrollments are still coming in. The enrollments in the baby beef club includes boys and girls from the territory of Goldfield, Eagle Grove, Dows and Rowan. The dairy calf club seems to be centered around Belmond where a great deal of interest has been taken during the past year in the dairy industry.

Wright county happens to have some of the best livestock in the state of Iowa and there is no good reason why the boys and girls club work should not be developed more extensively. We have the quality in the livestock and with the right kind of care and feeding the boys and girls who take part in the club work will make winners when they enroll in the different club contests.

Clothing Specialist Coming

Beginning Monday, November 13, Miss Bertha Huber of the extension department at Ames, will conduct a series of demonstrations on "Alteration of the Commercial Pattern." One demonstration will be held in each township in the county and will be in the nature of a training school. Five ladies from each township will be asked to attend this training school and be responsible for taking the work back to the ladies of her township. These five ladies will bring material and actually do the work as demonstrated. All other ladies are invited to come and observe the demonstration.

The demonstrations will be all-day meetings and those who attend are asked to bring lunches and a picnic dinner will be held in the home where the demonstration is put on. The schedule which will be followed during the first week of Miss Huber's work in the county will be as follows:

Monday, Nov. 13, Vernon township, H. Engeland.

Tuesday, Nov. 14, Wall Lake township.

Wednesday, November 15, Blaine township.

Thursday, November 16, Iowa township, Mrs. Lyle Hall.

Friday, November 17, Lincoln township.

Saturday, November 18, Grant township, Mrs. L. E. Spencer home.

Will Elect New Officers

Meetings for the purpose of electing officers for the year 1923 will be held thruout the county beginning Monday evening, November 13th.

Each township farm bureau in the county is arranging a short social program for the evening of their regular monthly meeting. After the social program is completed the election of officers for the ensuing year will be taken up and every member will have opportunity to help decide who shall direct the affairs of the township for the coming year.

According to instructions received from the state office at Ames the system of electing officers will be changed somewhat this year. Heretofore there has been one man director elected from each township, but according to the new plan a man director will be elected and the vice director will be a lady, and the secretary-treasurer may be either a man or lady. The directors who are elected to represent the various townships will constitute the county board of directors for the coming year of 1923.

Watch For The Mill Moth

Attacks on stored grains by the saw toothed bettle, the Mediterranean mill moth, the Cadelle moth and the flour bettle have been reported by the Iowa state college entomologsts to be ruining considerable stored grain. These pests, they say, can be controlled if the bins or storage places be either heated or fumigated. The Cadelle moth can be recognized by the fact that it eats out the germs of the seed. It is a rather large insect and easily seen. Heating of bins or elevators to control the pests, while effective, might cause fire or kill the germs of seeds on hand. If facilities are present, a temperature of 120 to 130 degrees F. will kill the pests.

Fumigation of small bins or lots of grain with carbon bisulfide will clean up the pests. Considerable caution in its use should be exercised as it is highly explosive and all lights and fires should be kept away during the fumigation. For every 1000 cubic feet use between five and eight pints of liquid carbon bisulfide. Place this on top of the grain in a dish and seal the bin so that it is air tight. Due to the heaviness of the gas it will go down and kill all infestations. Choose a day when little wind is stirring and do not try to fumigate too large an area at once. Where large elevators are infested it will not pay to take the risk of explosion to rid the place of pests.

Griesy's Store News

Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, NOVEMBER 9, 1922. No. 35.

Easiest Turning Separator In The World

We mean just that. The new Primrose with its ball bearings is in a class by itself when it comes to easy turning qualities. The next time you are in town step in our store and take hold of the handle of the Primrose waiting here for you and give it a spin. The ball bearings tell the story at once—easiest turning machine for its capacity in the world. But this is not the only way in which the Primrose excells. The postive lubricating system, the close skimming, the improved tin ware and the compactness—all these features will appeal to you.

A Money Maker.

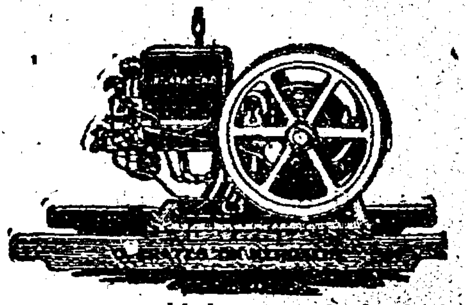
The basis of profitable farming is a fertile soil. In farming, as in other businesses, there are poor years and good ones, but the farmer who keeps up the productivity of his soil will forge ahead. No method of maintaining soil fertility has proved so efficient as the proper application of barnyard manure. It is a foresighted policy to build up crop yields with an Internation Roller-Bearing Manure Spreader. Put manure on your fields finely, uniformly, and economically; the extra fertility will in a short time pay for the International Spreader.

How about that denatured alcohol you were going to put in the radiator? We have a good grade.

Some flappers remind us of those store keepers who put all their stock in trade in the window.

Made To Deliver

The International Kerosene Engine was made to deliver an abundance of power cheaply, dependably and continuously. The reason it does these things has been told in these columns before. There's another reason why the International Kerosene Engine is one of the best hired men you could have, and that's because there is always some one near to take care of any repairs it may need. When parts become worn, it's a matter of only a day to get the brand new repairs, replace them and be ready to go again. This service is part of the engine itself and something you can expect to get when you buy an International from us.



A good worker is the first characteristic of a good citizen.

What Will Your Boy Be 30 Years From Now?

NO doubt, your earnest hope is---"A son I can be proud of; a good citizen, respected by everyone for his spleneid character."

And what builds CHARACTER? No factor perhaps so much as being a SAVER. A Saving Account promotes self-respect, self reliance; it begets confidence, not only of the saver himself but of others. It promotes all the other good qualities that go to make up CHARACTER. Your boy or girl will be a better citizen, a better mother; thirty years from now, if you do YOUR part TODAY. Something took place in our little burg last week which led a goodly number to believe that 'ere long wedding bells will ring in our midst. Well one never can tell.

Those who availed themselves of the opportunity were privileged to hear two strong lectures on last Wednesday and Thursday nights. They were given by Thurman A. Varadore, D. D., at the Evangelical church, in the interest of the Iowa State Hygiene and Welfare Campaign He brought out some startling facts of conditions as they exist today, and gave good wholesome advice to parents and young people, which, if heeded will bring about better conditions.

Rev. and Mrs. Pannkuk and Lydia returned home from Stout, Ia., last Wednesday, where they had gone last Monday by the auto route, accompanied by Miss Martha Watermiller, sister of Mrs Pann.kuk, who had been spending a few days with them. They were guests at the home of Rev. Reverts.

THE RETURN OF THE PRODIGAL!

Last Friday at exactly 2:30 p.m. there was much joy in Meservey and the scene reminded one of the old home town comics. All on account of the safe arrival home of Harry T., our village blacksmith, who had driven an old worn out Ford to his home in Maryland, a total distance of 3000 miles.

Not knowing just when Harry T. would arrive, no band was out to meet him, but the small boys spied him driving his trusty iron steed with its radiator belching steam like a small locomotive.

The boys gave a yelp that reminded one of the fire alarm when Harry T. brought his boat to a sudden stop in front of Marshal Proost's office, and less than three minutes we counted 38 persons gathered around the car asking questions and waiting for Harry to tell his story. In the crowd were two nice young ladies, a clergyman, a banker, several general merchants, a druggist, garageman, ticket agent, hardware dealer, and many others who have no regular business except near election time.

We are all glad Harry T. is back, but why did he telegraph for $20.00 from Joliet, Ill? We were always under the impression that the state prison was located there. And why did it take him four days to drive from there home, when the whole trip over took only a week? Possibly Harry can explain.

Our corps of school teachers all returned Saturday and Sunday and school began again Monday after a two weeks corn husking vacation.

OBITUARY

Mr. Lambert Pals, Sr., died suddenly early Wednesday morning, November 1, at his home in Meservey at the age of 82 years, 5 months and 11 days. He was born May 20, 1840 at Bunde, Ostfriesland, Germany, and in the year 1865 he came to Ackley where he lived until 1876 when he came to Belmond, where he lived on a farm until about 6 years ago when he retired and moved to Meservey. He was married three times, two of his wives preceeded him in death many years ago. Oct. 17, 1882, he married Miss Martha Steeler. This union was blessed with 10 children, who, except the oldest, are all living. They are Mrs. Dick Barkema, Belmond, Ia., Mrs. Jake Dorenkamp, Alexander, Ia., Mrs. Henry Pals, Meservey, Ia., Mrs. Claus Blau, Alexander, Ia., Lambert and Harm Pals of Belmond, John of Meservey, and the Misses Tillie and Ollie Pals.

The children of his former marriage are John L. Pals of Meservey, Dick Pals of Belmond, Mrs. John Herriot of Hampton, Ia., and Mrs J. Freerks of Alexander.

Mr. Pals had been a successful farmer, which is proven by the fact that he accumulated a comfortable fortune in farm lands and other property. He possessed undaunted courage, was always hopeful, ever willing to extend a helping hand to those in need.

He was one of the founders of the Immanuel Reformed church near Palsville. For 30 years he served this church as deacon. He rendered his church faithful service and valuable support. When he moved to Meservey he had his membership transfered to the Meservey Reformed church. Funeral services were held at the Reformed church and also at Immanuel Reformed church, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Palsville cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the many kind friends and neighbors who assisted us in our late bereavement.

R. H. Virden and daughters, Mrs. George Pritchett and Miss Frances, and Roy Fitz returned Friday from their motor trip to South Dakota. Miss Hazel McCallum, who has been working in an office in Aberdeen for the past year, returned with them. She, with her sister, Mrs. Harry Robinson, went to their home at Mason City.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Hadley and Mr. and Mrs. Herb Hadley, were Clarion shoppers Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dee Halbrook and family left Wednesday for Salem, Mo., where they will visit his parents. This is the first he has been home for 11 years. They expect to be gone about two weeks .

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brooks and daughters Thelma and Mrs. Edgar Mantle, were Clarion shoppers on Thursday.

Will Whitten, Edgar Mantle, Chas. Moon and Lloyd Waite went to Mason City, Friday night, to see the wrestling match .

John Thomas left Saturday for Wall Lake where he will trap.

Monday evening the American Legion and Auxiliary met in regular session. The Auxiliary held their business meeting at the home of Mrs. L. A. McCallum, after which they joined the boys at the hall and served refreshments. The evening was very much enjoyed by all.

Fred Brooks is putting on a fine show Saturday night. It is the Wallace Reid picture "Love's Spesial." All ex-service men will be admitted free of charge.

The boys are home from the gravel hauling jobs until the weather clears so they can get in more time.

Mrs. Gay Fletcher was a visitor at the home of her parents in Clarion last week, returning Tuesday.

G. W. Ballou was a county seat visitor last Thursday.

L. A. McCallum was a Clarion visitor last Friday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Guy Sheldon and family spent Sunday in Clarion at the home of her parents.

Mrs. J. E. Miller visited at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Guy Stumph, Friday. Mrs. Stumph went to Clarion with her Saturday and spent the week end.

Donald Farren was a Clarion caller Friday.

The M. E. Aid socity met at the home of Mrs. F. H. Fowler, Thursday afternoon. There was a good crowd present in spite of the rainy weather. The hostess served refreshments of cake and coffee.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Myers, Mrs F. Brooks and Lloyd Myers motored to Clarion, Friday, to shop. Mr. Myers had some teeth removed.

Harry Harsen is suffering from a boil on his wrist which stops him from picking corn.

Mr. and Mrs. Keinset have moved into the Keith tenant house in the east part of town. Mr. Keinset is working for Mr. Keith in the blacksmith shop.

Mrs. Morris Sullivan came Tuesday of last week from Ft. Dodge to visit her parents until the latter part of this week, when her husband will join her here.

Mrs. Will Bingham has been suffering from the flu the past week, but is much better at the present writing.

Wm. Tresidder went to Iowa City on Wednesday to bring his wife home from the hospital. She was not able to come until Saturday. She is improving slowly and her many friends hope she will soon be in good health again.

D. W. Whitten and Fred Hackley were Hampton business callers on Wednesday

The M. E. Missionary society met with Mrs. Carr last Wednesday. On Thursday evening several of the ladies met with Mrs. Carr and tied two comforters for the Shesler Deaconess home at Sioux City.

Mrs. Walt Whitten and daughter Elfrieda, and Mrs. J. W. Azeltine and daughter Celia, were Mason City shoppers Saturday.

The Misses Ruth and Esther Emerson and Frances Farren were Belmond callers Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harm Brinkman and family spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Hannah Whitten.

Last Tuesday night the Young People's Christian Endeavor society held a Hallowe'en social in the church parlors. The rain spoiled a part of the plans but the social was a success anyway . The ride to spookland had to be given up on account of the bad roads. Nearly all came dressed in costume and some of the disguises were very good. The church was decorated in Hallowe'en style. The chief attractions of the evening were the Land of Horrors, Madam Zetska in the fortune telling booth, and the witch telling fortunes by the use of a kettle. The evening was spent in one continuous round of fun after which refreshments of sandwiches, doughnuts and cocoa were served. About 40 young people attended this social, and the society realized something over six dollars after expenses were paid.

Last Thursday evening a large representation of the community and surrounding country met at the auditorium of the school house for a continuation of the meeting held at the sales pavilion last Monday night and completed plans for a short course to be held in Rowan some time in the near future. The temporary committees appointed Monday night were made permanent Thursday as follows: R. E. Lee Aldrich, chairman; D. W. Whitten to represent the business men; O. R. Meyers the Stock Breeders association; Earl Patton the Farmers' Union; Joe Simons the Farm Bureau; T. K. Holliday for the school, and Mrs. Fred Brooks in the ladies' department. Prizes will be offered for the best stock and the best fancy work, cooking, etc. Addresses were made by Lee Aldrich, F. B. Sheldon, Rev. Tomkinson, Mr. Edwards, and others. There will be experts from different places to judge the different articles and also demonstrators in various lines of work. There will be a boys and girls judging contest and a baby beef club. If the people of Rowan and community take hold of the short course in the right spirit of co-operation they can make it great success and something that will be a great benefit to all concerned.

Rowan Congregational Church Notes

In spite of the inclement weather there was a good attendance at the Ladies missionary meeting at the Cong. church last Thursday afternoon at the parsonage. An interesting event of the meeting was the presentation to Mrs. R. H. Virden of an "appreciation" which had been contributed by many friends, and which was for her "Good for one round trip with stop over at Ames, Nov. 7, 8, 9." The presentation was given by Mrs. C. T. Halbert, who voiced the thanks of the society for Mrs. Virden's efforts which resulted in successful financial closing of their year's work. Mrs. Halbert was invited to accompany Mrs. Virden and share in her gift as it was large enough for two to make the trip. Consequently these two leave Tuesday for Ames to be present at the State meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Interior.

The supper which was announced for Thursday in the Cong. basement has been changed to Saturday night. The serving to begin at 5:30. All ex-service men will be admitted free in honor of Armistice Day.

The services next Sunday will be as usual. Morning service at 11:00. Sunday school at 12. Christian Endeavor at 6:30 p. m. Evening worship 7:30. Prayer meeting at 7:30 Wednesday evening. Junior Endeavor on Wednesday afternoon at 4:00 at the close of school.

Kanawha Reporter: Last Saturday evening at about 7:30 Arthur and Floyd Robinson, their sister Fay and Curtis Duncan tipped over in the Robinson Ford about one and one half miles south of town. Arthur received a broken collar bone, Miss Fay a deep gash in one knee, and Curtis a few scratches on one hand.

The young folks were on their way to town and met some parties with the trucks which had been used to move the Kalvig house into town. The trucks took up the greater part of the road and the driver of the car got too close to the edge of the grade with the result that the car turned over into the ditch.

While the young folks were not dangerously injured yet they do not care to repeat the experience.

The Case and The Girl

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance.

CHAPTER II.—That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her.

CHAPTER III.—Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, apparently is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance, and the feeling of antagonism is mutual. Natalie, Coolidge, and West plan a visit of charity to a poor and remote section of the city.

CHAPTER IV.—Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage, remaining a length of time which causes him some uneasiness. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie, and has ulterior motives.

CHAPTER V.—On the party's return to the Coolidge home, Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions concerning her "double," and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but helpless. He leaves.

CHAPTER VI.—On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and investigates. He finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. The inquest so determines. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He gives it as his belief that Coolidge was murdered, and about convinces West he is right.

CHAPTER VII.—Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West, his suspicions of things not being right strengthened by his learning that Coolidge had lied about the reason for the trip to the cottage, visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon.

CHAPTER VIII.—West is taken by surprise, knocked out, separated from Sexton, and comes to his senses to find himself bound and helpless, and confronted by a man named Hobart, whom West knows to be the man who had rented the house which Natalie visited. The man tells him he (West) is interfering with his plans and if he persists will be done away with. West refuses any compromise. Hobart sends for Natalie, hoping she can induce West to give up his quest.

West hesitated an instant, his mind struggling with the situation. Was she honest, truthful, in this statement? Could he say anything which would change her viewpoint? She must have been deceived by these men, yet how could he expose them so she would comprehend? He was so little certain of the facts himself, that he had nothing but suspicion to offer.

"Why do you not answer, Captain West?"

The girl's eyes were clear, insistent, a little amused; they somehow aroused his determination.

"I will endeavor to make you understand, Miss Natalie," he explained slowly. "I would not have you feel that I deliberately pushed myself into this affair. When I left Fairlawn after your dismissal, I had no thought of ever seeing you again. I have already told you the interest I had felt in you up to that time, but your abruptness during our last interview left me angry, and with no inclination to seek your presence again. You can scarcely blame me for such a feeling?"

"No," she confessed. "I—I was so excited and nervous I was not very nice."

"You certainly hurt me. I departed with a sense of wrong rankling, and no desire to come back. But fate intervened. You know, perhaps, that I overheard the shot which ended the life of Percival Coolidge, and I was the first to discover his dead body. I supposed it a case of suicide, and so bore witness at the inquest. The whole matter would have ended there; but the next day you discharged Sexton also, and the man sought me out at the club."

She leaned forward, her lips parted, a new light in her eyes.

"He told you something? He made you suspicious?" she asked breathlessly.

"He caused me to see the affair from a somewhat different point of view—a point of view which, I confess, revived my interest in you. I began to believe you had been deceived, and your treatment of me arose through a misunderstanding; I thought you a victim, and that I would be a cad if I failed to stand by you. We put this and that together, carried out some investigations quietly, and arrived at a definite conclusion."

"What investigations?"

"In the field where the body was found first," West went on steadily, but no longer looking at her, "tracing the different tracks through the clover. Then I looked up that cottage in Arch street, and thus learned about Hobart. Somehow he seemed to fit into the picture, and your mysterious visit there made me anxious to interview the man. He had left no address, however, just faded out of sight suddenly, which increased suspicion. Then, when we were completely baffled, Sexton learned about your conversation over the telephone."

"How? Was he at the house?"

"Yes; he went out at my suggestion."

"And heard me repeat this number?"

"It makes no difference how he got the information; we knew you were coming here this afternoon, and jumped at the conclusion that you were going to meet Hobart for some reason."

"Very bright, I am sure," and there was a tone of relief in her voice. "And that is your whole story, I suppose? What does it amount to?"

"Not very much, perhaps."

"And the two of you came out here seeking to learn my business, to pry into my personal affairs. That was not a very gentlemanly act, Captain West, and I hardly see how you can justify yourself."

"I had two purposes," he insisted, "either of which justify. I felt it a duty to locate this man Hobart; and also to warn you of the danger you were in."

"Warn me!" she laughed scornfully. "That is ridiculous enough surely. I have a perfectly good reason for being here, but I am not accountable to you in any way for my movements. A duty you say—a duty to locate this man? A duty to whom?"

"To the state, if no one else," he answered gravely. "Percival Coolidge did not commit suicide; he was murdered."

"Murdered!" she came to her feet with utterance of the word. "You cannot think that!"

"I know it, Miss Natalie; the evidence is beyond question; he was murdered in cold blood."

"But by whom? For what purpose?"

"These points are not yet determined; I am only sure of the crime."

"Yes, but—but you suspect Jim Hobart. Isn't that true? You came here seeking him—yes, and me. You even think I know how this death occurred. You—you connect it with my fortune."

"No, Miss Natalie," he protested stoutly, moved by her agitation. "The cause is a mystery, and who did it equally mysterious. The evidence thus far unearthed is all circumstantial."

"Then why did you come out here searching for Hobart?"

"Because of his strange meeting with Percival Coolidge the very day of his death; because his sudden disappearance furnished the only clue."

"And that is all the knowledge you possess, absolutely all?"

"Yes; I am no more than groping in the dark. My main object in coming was to put you on your guard."

"You have repeated these suspicions to no one else? The police?"

"To no one. Only Sexton and I have even talked the matter over. We are both too loyal to you to ever say a word which might be to your injury."

She suddenly held out her hand, and he took it, conscious of the firm clasp of her fingers.

"I thank you, Captain West," she said sincerely, "and believe your purpose was honorable. You have told me frankly all you suspect, and doubtless you have reasons. You have simply made a mistake, that is all. Percival Coolidge was not murdered; he killed himself because he had muddled my affairs, and knew he was about to be discovered. You have got upon a wrong trail. Will you accept my word for this, and drop the whole matter here?"

West was almost convinced, but not quite; the explanation had not been sufficiently explicit.

"This man Hobart—who is he? What connection does he have with your affairs?"

She hesitated slightly, yet her eyes did not fall, or her apparent cordiality change.

"Mr. Hobart," she explained, "I have known for years. I told you before he was once in my father's employ. Now he is a private detective, and was employed on my case, before I advertised for you. I thought then he was not accomplishing anything, but at our interview Sunday, all was cleared up."

"In the presence of Percival Coolidge?"

"Yes; he was given a week in which to straighten matters. That is why he killed himself."

"But why is it necessary for you to meet Hobart in a place like this—a veritable thieves' den?"

She shrugged her shoulders, releasing his hand.

"He has not completed his work, and does not think it best for us to be seen together. I know him so well I am not at all afraid, even here. Is that all, Captain West?"

"It seems to explain everything," he admitted, yet far from satisfied.

"And you will drop the whole affair?" she asked anxiously.

"If I say yes—what?"

"You will be released from here, of course, and the whole misunderstanding forgotten."

"And otherwise?"

"I have no means of knowing what the men intend to do. They will accept your pledge, I am sure."

"Possibly, but I am not so sure I will consent to give such a pledge."

"Then you do not accept my word; do not believe what I have told you?"

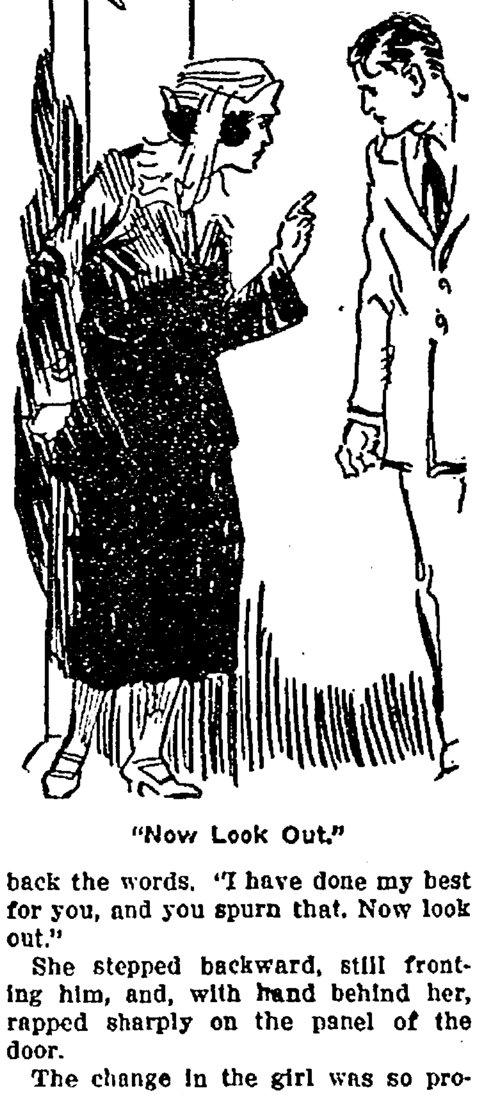
"Not that exactly, Miss Natalie; I could have faith in your word, except that I believe you to be mistaken, deceived. Hobart is not square; he is using you for his own ends. Under these conditions, I would be a coward to give such a promise, and leave you helpless in this man's power."

"You intend then to refuse?"

"I do; I'll fight it out."

She stared at him, scarcely believing her own ears, her lips parted, a look of angry fright in her eyes.

"You are a fool, Captain West," she burst forth at last, unable to hold back the words. "I have done my best for you, and you spurn that. Now look out."



"Now Look Out."

She stepped backward, still fronting him, and, with hand behind her, rapped sharply on the panel of the door.

The change in the girl was so pronounced, her action so impetuous, as to leave West startled and silent. The thought came to him instantly that she was not the innocent victim he had supposed. Her words and movements expressed disappointment, rather than regret. She was angry at his choice, ready to withdraw from him all sympathy, all assistance. Her plea had failed, and the woman had become a tigress. Then she must have been endeavoring to deceive him; as deeply interested as these others—in getting him safely off the trail of this crime. It was a hard lesson, one that instantly turned all his theories upside down, but the truth came to him with blinding, sickening force—she was as guilty as Hobart; they were both working to the same end, endeavoring to get him safely out of the way. They would accomplish this with lies if possible, if not then with force. It was for no other purpose he had been granted this interview alone—in the hope that he might thus be deceived by her. Now he saw through the trick.

These thoughts swept West's brain in a sudden flash of revelation, but he had no chance to act, to denounce her, to make a single movement, before the door opened swiftly, and Hobart slipped eagerly into the room. The first glance the fellow had of the prisoner, standing erect and unbound, must have deceived him into believing the girl had succeeded in her quest.

"So you've set him free," he exclaimed. "The fellow has come to his senses, has he?"

"No, he has not," she snapped with temper darkening her eyes. "I was not afraid of him, so I let him loose, but he's made me no promise. Now it is up to you; I'm done."

She slipped out through the opening, and Hobart leaned against the door, pushing it shut behind her, his scowling eyes watching West intently.

"So, that is how it stands, is it, my man?" he growled threateningly. "You even refuse to accept the word of the lady, do you?"

"Those are very nearly the facts," West replied steadily. "Then I told her I thought she must be mistaken; now I believe she was sent here for no other purpose but to deceive me. If I ever had any doubt of a crime, it has vanished since this interview."

"What crime?"

"Murder; the killing of Percival Coolidge. Is that plain enough, Hobart? I want you to understand. I am fighting this case from now on in the open; it is going to be man to man."

"What the h—l do you mean, you cur?"

"I'll tell you," went on West coldly, determined now to so anger the fellow as to bring the whole matter to a climax, reckless of the consequences. "I charge you with murder. I haven't the proof, but I'll get it; I do not know the object, but I'll find out."

"You fool! You'll never get away from here."

"I am a soldier, and am taking a soldier's chance. Now listen. I feel no particular interest in the death of Percival Coolidge. In my judgment the world is just as well off with him dead as alive. But what this means to Natalie Coolidge is another matter entirely."

"She told you—"

"Yes, she told me—a lie. That is what hurts; what makes me ready to take any chance to put you where you belong. You have lied to her, deceived her, made her your accomplice in crime. I'm fighting for a woman, because she has got no one else to fight for her."

"Oh, I see; in love, hey—with her, or her money?"

"With neither, so far as I know," frankly. "She is a woman helpless in your hands; that is sufficient."

"But, h—l, she hasn't any use for you—didn't she tell you so?"

"Quite plainly—yes. But that is no excuse for any man to play the coward. I am not afraid of you, Hobart, or your gang. You got me before by treachery; I was not looking for trouble. But now I am. I am going through that door, and if you try to stop me you are going to get hurt."

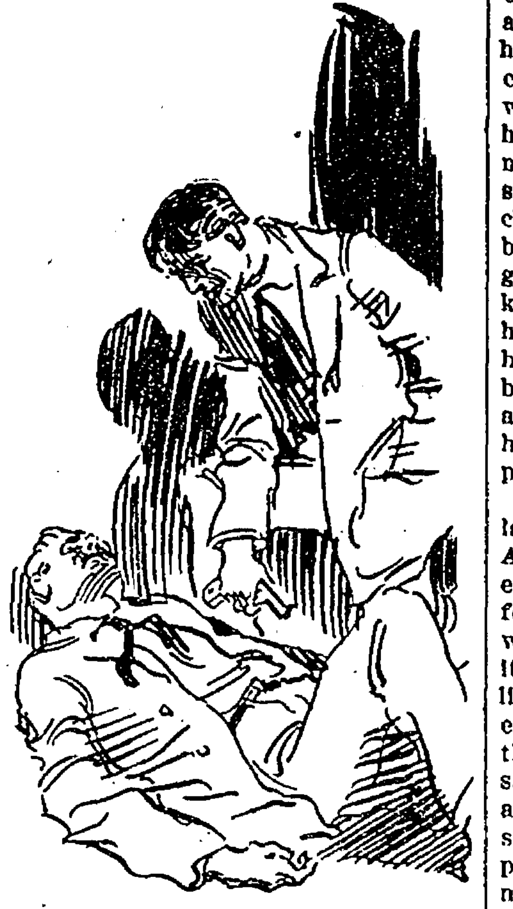
The fellow grinned, one hand thrust into the outer pocket of his coat, his eyes narrowed into ugly slits.

"You think so! You haven't a weapon on you, West, and if you take a step, I'll put you out of commission. I know how to handle your kind, you big bluffer. What I want to know is what you have got in your head, for, believe me, I don't take any stock in this woman stuff. Are you after a slice of old Coolidge's boodle? There's enough of it for all hands to have a dip. How does that hit you?"

"Sounds interesting, at least," admitted West, so earnestly as to attract the other's attention. "But let's talk it over among ourselves—who is listening there?"

Hobart glanced behind at the nearly closed door. It was for only a second he was off guard, yet that was enough. With one leap forward, West struck, his clenched fist smashing against the side of the fellow's jaw. It was a wicked, vicious blow, with all the propelling force of the body behind it, and Hobart went down stunned, crashing the door tightly shut as he fell. Once he strove blindly to reach his feet, tugging madly at the weapon in his pocket, but West, feeling no mercy, and wide awake to the fact that any shooting would mean a call for help, struck again, sending his groggy opponent flat, and unconscious. It was all the swift work of a minute, and there had been no noise to arouse alarm. Hobart had not even cried out; the only audible sounds being the sharp click of the door, and the dull thud of a falling body.

West emptied the man's pockets, slipping two revolvers into his own; then stood for an instant motionless, staring down into the white upturned face. He had followed the impulse of the moment; had struck savagely; knowing it was his only chance. Thus far he had done well; but what next? He was conscious of but one thought, one purpose—to escape from this house, unpledged and still free to act. Yet how could this be accomplished? He had no plan, no knowledge even of his surroundings, of what lay beyond the walls of this room. His eyes swept the bare interior, seeing nothing to inspire hope. Hobart had said this room was practically a prison, and it looked it—the walls bare, and unbroken, and a rough single cot. All possibility of egress lay in the closed door, and a narrow window high up in the opposite wall, also tightly shut, and shaded by a heavy curtain.



West Emptied the Man's Pockets.

His hand tried the door cautiously; the knob turned easily enough, but there was no yielding to his pressure. The lock was evidently on the outside, and he could discover no keyhole, no possibility of operating it from within. Then besides in all probability, a guard would be posted outside in the hall, waiting for some signal from Hobart. West glanced again at the recumbent figure, bending over to make sure of his condition, then, gripping a chair, silently crossed the room.

There was not a minute to lose. He knew that he must choose quickly whatever course he pursued. Any instand Hobart might recover consciousness and gain assistance by a rap on the door; indeed his confederates without might not wait for the signal. The silence within, the length of time, might arouse suspicion. The only chance lay in immediate action. Standing on the chair West found the window had been securely nailed into place, but this had been done so long ago, it was quite possible for him to work the nails loose, yet it required all his strength to press up the warped sash sufficiently far to enable him to gain a view outside. It was [redacted] rushed [redacted] and rapped sharply on the door panel. It opened instantly, and big Mike, closely followed by another man, pushed forward into the room. West was trapped, helpless; one man pitted against three. He backed slowly away, brushed back the disheveled hair from his eyes, watching them warily, every animal instinct alert.

Mike took one comprehensive glance at the scene, at the overturned chair, the half-open window, the trapped man crouching motionless against the further wall. The meaning of it all was plain, and his bar-room training gave quick insight as to the part he was to play. He spoke gruffly out into the dark of the hall behind him, an order to some one concealed there; then shut the door tightly, and faced West, his head lowered like a bull about to charge. West understood; he was locked in to fight it out—three against one. Hobart was nearest to him, his face swollen and red, his eyes ugly slits, with teeth snarling between thin lips. The fellow laughed sneeringly, as their glances met.

"Now we'll take care of you, Captain," he taunted. "Never mind his guns, Mike; there's not a load in either of them. Give the guy what he is looking for. Come on, you terriers!"

But West did not wait. There was only one chance, and he took it—to carry the fighting to them. He had no doubt of the emptiness of his guns, and hurled one straight at Hobart's head, leaping forward with the other clutched in his hand straight at Mike, who had scarcely time to fling up one hand in defense. The thrown weapon missed its mark by a narrow inch, striking the wall behind, and falling clattering to the floor, but the other broke through the big saloonkeeper's guard, and sent him reeling to his knees, a gush of blood reddening his hair. Again and again West struck him, driving him prone to the floor before the other two dragged him away, wrestled the weapon from his hand, and closed with him in a desperate death grapple.

What followed he never could relate. He was mad with fury to fight. A mere animal defending life with every means at hand, caring nothing for either wound or hurt so that he won out in the end. Mike was out of it, but the two grappling him fought like wildcats, rough bar-room fighters, resorting to any tactics to disable their opponent. Yet it was this that saved him. Crazed as he was, madly as his brain whirled in the fierce struggle, his long training held supreme—he knew how to fight, remembered instinctively every trick and guard. Again and again his clenched fist reached its mark, and slowly he broke away from clutching hands, and regained his feet. It was a terrific struggle, but luck, as well as skill, was with him. The next he knew, out of the red ruck, was that he had Hobart by the throat, jammed against the wall, with fingers clenched in the throat. Then he saw the other coming, a dim, shapeless thing, that he kicked at viciously. The boot must have landed, for he was suddenly free to strike the purple face fronting him, and fling the helpless rocking body in a huddled mass on the floor.

It was over with; he had won breathing space, a chance to see what was about him. Yet that was all. The fellow he had kicked was already up, doubled from the pain of the blow, but with mad eyes glaring at him. Hobart had struggled to his knees, cursing fiercely as he swept the blood out of his eyes. They would both be on him again in a minute, more desperate than ever, and the door was locked—there was no chance there. The window! Ay! there was the window. Death either way, yet a chance; and he was man enough to take it. He leaped on the chair, and clambered up; he heard Hobart swear, and felt the grip of a hand on his dangling leg; kicking himself free, and was on the ledge. He never looked below, or took time to poise for the leap. Heedless, desperate, scarcely realizing what he was doing, he flung his body out over the edge, and fell.

CHAPTER X

Under Cover.

A shed roof was below, and he struck it, fortunately feet first, but the sharp slant of the boards sent him hurtling forward over the edge into a miscellaneous pile of boxes beneath, his body finally resting on the hard ground. He lay there dazed, the breath knocked entirely out of him, bruised, and scarcely certain whether he was dead or alive. For the moment, he seemed to have lost all consciousness, unable to realize even [redacted] t had occurred in that upper room, o comprehend the necessity of imiate flight. All about him was inse darkness, and, after the crash is fall, no sound broke the silence, could see nothing, hear nothing rouse his faculties; his flesh quivwith pain, although he felt sure bones were fractured, for he could e both arms and legs freely, le after the first shock, his mind rned to activity, dominated by the le conviction that he must get y from there before those men ld get down stairs.

e endeavored to rise, rolling par-
y over in the effort, which failed, the movement, slight as it was,
one hand dangling over an excava-at his right. His fingers explored edge of this opening cautiously, aling a cellar-way leading down the basement. The opening was k, silent, mysterious, yet it was ding place. If he could manage to down those steps into those ths below, he might hide there un-
, until he regained strength, until first effort at pursuit had been ndoned. Then there might be a nce for escape.

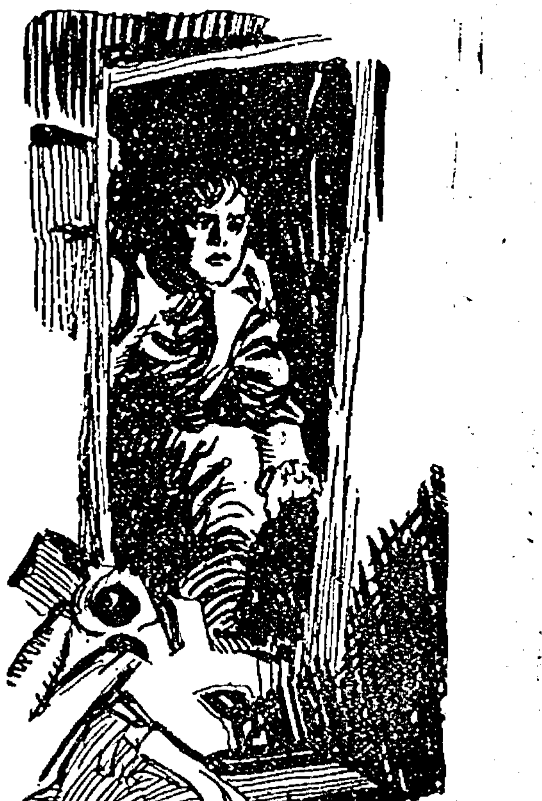
West grasped the idea clearly enough. Those fellows would be there swiftly. If they found him gone they would have no doubt but what he landed safely, and had made a getaway. They would search, of course, perhaps out into the alley, hoping he might have been injured, but it was hardly probable they would think to explore the cellar. Even if they did, he could surely creep into some dark corner where he might escape observation. Anyway, crippled as he was, this offered the one and only chance. He could not argue and debate; he must act.

He rolled over, and lowered himself down into the opening, locating the half-dozen broken and rotted steps with his feet. He made no attempt to stand, but simply slid down, finding a partially closed door at the bottom, the passage-way blocked by a litter, the exact nature of which could not be determined in the darkness. With some difficulty, and more than ever conscious of his weakness, and the pain of bruises, he managed to crawl over this pile of debris, and crouch down finally in the intense blackness within. He felt like a trapped rat, still gasping for breath, his body quivering from exertion.

Yet his retreat had been none too rapid. The silence above was broken by the creak of an opening door, the sound of excited voices, and a sudden gleam of light finding entrance through the open cellar-way. West, startled, crept back into a corner, every nerve alert at approaching peril.



He Recognized Hobart's Voice.

He recognized Hobart's voice, as the fellow plunged down the steps from the first floor out into the yard.

"To h—l, of course he's here!" he stormed. "My G—d, man, he dived out head first; I saw him. He'll be dead as a door nail now. Come on with that lantern, Turner. Where in thunder is the ladder—does any one know?"

"You think he lies on the roof?"

"Why not? That's where he must have struck, ain't it, Shorty? I don't know, though; it is so steep he'd most likely roll off. Here, you, let me take that glim. There's nothing here in these boxes. Ah, there's the ladder; climb up, Shorty, and see if the guy is stuck anywhere on the roof. Go on! What are you afraid of; if he's there, he's a stiff all right, believe me."

Turner's voice, hoarse and rumbling, came back from above.

"There ain't nothin' up here, Jim. D—n me, if I don't believe the cuss got clean away. Gee, but he was sure a nervy guy, all right."

"Nervy? Crazy, you mean. But he never took that fall without busting something. The bird is lying about here somewhere. You make sure he ain't up there, Shorty."

"Well, he ain't; I kin see every inch o' this roof. Perhaps he fell in between them barrels down there."

The two evidently searched thoroughly, the rays of the lantern dancing wildly about, while Hobart savagely cursed his companion, and reiterated his belief that no man could take that plunge, and escape unhurt.

"It couldn't be done, I tell you; maybe he could crawl, but that would be all. Why he went down head first; I saw him go out the window, and that drop would daze a cat. Say, Shorty, maybe the stiff dropped down into this cellar-way. Let's take a look."

STORE SEED CORN CAREFULLY

Seed corn that has been picked and hung out of doors in temporary storage wants to be placed in a permanent storage condition before freezing starts. Corn that was hung on temporary racks should be transferred to strong wire or string racks or placed on one of the many good commercial storing racks. After the corn is racked so that it can properly dry place the racks in a dry room that has good air circulation, but that does not get cold enough to freezes. Seed corn is damaged more by early freezes because it contains considerabe moisture and this soon breaks the kernal.

The best places for storing corn are in special dry sheds, furnace rooms, attics, heated spare rooms or tool rooms or sheds, not used during the winter. Out of doors on trees, windmills, over grain bins or in damp cellars are not good places as the corn soon becomes ruined. It is a good plan to place the corn where it will not have to be moved before spring, as this often breaks up the ears. During the winter the corn can be looked over and damaged ears, moldy ears, light ears or ears off color or not desire type, can be sorted out before the testing begins.

Good Form.

Mrs. Catt—Why did you speak to that chorus girl?

Mr. Catt—Just a matter of form my dear.

Mrs. Catt—So I noticed.

CLIPPINGS

Jack McClellan has his troubles just the same as other folks. This week it has been trouble over a well. He bored one with one of these small hand well borers Tuesday, and went down about thirty-five feet, but the next morning it had caved in. Wednesday he drilled another partly down and finished it Thursday. He had been using a shallow well for a number of years, but the drainage ditch put on this year emptied his well, along with a number of others, the ditch being on a slightly lower level. It seems the drainage ditch is causing all the wells in the neighborhood to go dry.—News.

Sunday evening, between 6:30 and 7:00 o'clock, the barn on the Henry Hoeft farm located about four miles north and east of Garner, was discovered on fire, and within a remarkably short time the entire structure was a ruined mass. How the fire originated no one knows.—Garner Leader.

Gov. N. E. Kendall this week honored Rev. J. B. Walker, pastor of the Methodist church in Clarion, by naming him as an official delegate to the International convention of the World League Against Alcohol. which shortly convenes at Toronto, Canada. It is understood that Rev. Mr. Walker and Rev. J. J. Bushnell are the two duly authorized delegates representing Iowa. Rev. Walker regrets that he will be unable to attend the convention.—News.

One Hallowe'en joke that was pulled this year, we think is rather mean in that it casts an insinuation against one of our business men. The Billiard parlor owned by Smith & Owen has a sign on the window, "Billiard Parlor." Part of the sign was covered, making it read "Liar Parlor." —Garner Signal.

A. C. Rowley, rat exterminator, who has been in Des Moines working with the city board of health, for two weeks, says that he has killed over 100,000 rats in the city during that time. He will remain for two weeks more and can be found at the board of health office .—Exchange.

A spark from an Illinois Central engine Wednesday afternoon of last week set fire to a seventy acre field of corn east of Webster City. The corn was owned by T. C. O'Connor of Jewel. The loss is estimated at about $5,000, as Mr. O'Connor said the field would produce 80 bushels to the acre. What corn was not burned was damaged so that it has no value.—Humboldt Republican.

It is announced that Henry Ford wants to buy the Wabash railroad company so that he can use it in his business. If Henry wants the Rock Island we will be glad to have him buy it. What we need at the helm of the Rock Island is a man who will give service to the people who were unfortunate to purchase farms on the Rock sland lines. Service is what the farmer wants. In Titonka right now is stored in its elevators not less than 60,000 bushels of grain that cannot be moved on account of no motive power to pull trains. The people are entitled to service, and service is what they want.—Titonka Topic.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Saatoff went to Belmond the first of the week and will make their home there for the present. They moved a part of their household effects and stored the rest. —Kanawha Reporter.

MERCHANTS TRADE WINDOW DISPLAYS

Eagle Grove Times.—No little consternation was caused early morning shoppers when they arrived in the business district on Friday morning, and viewed an attractive display of meat in a window where before they had alway seen drygoods, or found the hardware store advertising groceries. On closer examination it was soon discovered on Thursday evening the merchants had traded windows displays, each merchant putting in his own display in the window of some other store.

The effect was novel and well served its purpose to attract the attention of the passerby to the window displays of various business men The windows were tastily decorated and while some of the displays lacked the room necessary to show the goods to best advantage others were lost in huge window intended for bulkier merchandise. The idea however caused considerable comment and no doubt the window will be observed with greater frequency in the future.

Jap Johnson Writes Of Jap Customs

Belmond Boy Says They Cut The Tails Off The Cats Instead Of The Dogs.

AND SIT ON THE FLOOR

A recent letter from Jasper Johnson, son of Mr and Mrs. Lud Johnson, who is teaching in an American college in Nagasaki, Japan, written to his brother, Galen, contains an interesting side light on the country. "Jap" writes in part.

"When I first got here I got so 'fedup' on seeing new things that I would have given anything to have been home for about ten minutes, where things were familiar. You can imagine how it is to land in a country where you are the Foreigner; where everybody speaks a language that you cannot make head or tail of; where they all wear wooden shoes, sit on the floor in their houses, sit on the floor at the shows; eat with chopsticks; cut the tails off of the cats instead of the dogs; where the women carry their kids on their backs; where the streets are so narrow that you can reach halfway across a lot of them; and if you meet a bicycle you have to get next to a building to get out of its way—even traffic must keep to the left instead of the right—where men do the work of horses, and all land is farmed by hand; where the sewer system goes past you on the back of an ox; where you get mail once a week if you are lucky, instead of any time you want to go to the post office and call for it—well, if you ever had a dream that you were n a place where everything was backwards to you, then you know just about how I felt for the first few weeks in Japan. But I have gotten used to it, and go along the streets any place I want to in the city, can read enough on the street cars to tell which car will take me to Nishihamonomachi, Sembatcho, Oura, Oumachi, Ourakme, etc., have developed a taste for saraoudon, supico, hapahan, and a few other dishes, and at least ask the price of things. Here is the Japanese up to ten: ichi, ni san, shi, go, ruku, hitchi, hotchi, ku, ju."

CONGREGATIONAL NOTES

The bazaar given by the Ladies Aid society last Thursday was one of the most successful that they have given for a number of years. The officers and members of the Aid are very grateful for the hearty co-operation of the members and friends of the society and for the liberal patronage of the public. The rainy weather did not seem to keep any away from the good supper which was served.

We were again below our hundred mark at Sunday school last Sunday. It was one of the few times that we have been that low during the year and we hope that all will put forth a great effort that it may not happen again. So far this quarter our attendance has been lower than for any quarter during the year. One reason for this is the number of our faithful pupils who are away at college and teaching. Those of us who are here need to put forth a greater effort to enlist others to take their places.

Now for a full attendance next Sunday at 10:00 a. m. and we would like to see more of the Bible school in the morning services at 11:00 o'clock. The orchestra is furnishing some very good music for the evening services which begin at 7:30. Come and enjoy these services with us.

A week from next Sunday a special Thanksgiving offering will be taken for the general work of the church outside of our own parish. Please plan to pray and give. If it should be so that you cannot be at this service do not fail to mail your offering to the treasurer or clerk of the church.

WHAT IS DOING AT OLAF IN WAY OF NEWS

Mrs. G. Holverson, who has been on the sick list, is better and able to be around again.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Scott entertained the 500 club at their home last Saturday evening.

A class of boys and girls were confirmed at the St Olaf church last Sunday.

A little baby girl came to gladden the Oscar Hanson home last Friday morning. All are doing nicely.

School began Monday, with Miss Nellie Delaney of Belmond as teacher

Ole Thompson has been building a hog house for Anton Olson. Mrs. Thompson came out from Belmond and stayed with Mrs. Olson while Ole did the work.

Miss Iris Trumbell, Miss Sadie Frohling, Miss Nettie Benson and "Shorty" Eggers attend the card club at the Clarence Scott home Saturday evening.

OUR RANK IS SECOND

Two brothers, J. H. and G. S. Burleigh, farmers near Mechanicsville, Cedar county, introduced the first Hereford cattle into Iowa in 1870. Now this state ranks next to Texas in having the largest number of this breed of cattle in America. The past year there were 8,055 transfers placed upon the records from Iowa. Iowa cattleman who feed Herefords for the commercial market have made notable records during the last few weeks. The first cattle to sell for $12 a hundred weight in the Chicago market this year were six carloads of Herefords fed by Oscar Cain, Frank Smith and G. B. Hughes, of Bagley, Guthrie county and G. F. Gleason of Ida Grove. On October 4, Herman J. Buck of Westside, Crawford county, set a new record at Chicago, when he sold a load of Herefords at $12.65 a hundred-weight, the high est price in two years.

NEW CASES UP FOR TRIAL IN DISTRICT COURT TERM

A Number Are Filed For Trial —$10,000 Suit For Wife's Affections Is Asked.

Monitor—Twenty new cases have already been filed for the November term of the district court, which convenes at Clarion on the 27th.

Charles Culmer has brought suit against John Jones in the sum of $10,000 for the alleged alienation of his wife's affection. The two families are neighbors and reside on Troy township farms about one mile apart. Plaintiff was married to Mary Julia Beshey at Webster City in 1901; they have four children, the eldest daughter being married; that he and his wife lived happily together and that she was faithful and dutiful in every respect and diligent in attention to all of her children until the happening of the matters hereinafter complained of: That on or about November, 1921, the defendant began paying attention and showing courtesies to the plaintiff's wife, which he continued, inducing her to go riding with him and in other ways deliberately, premeditatedly and wickedly cultivated and caused to grow up between himself and the plaintiff's wife a relationship, by means of which he gained the confidence and affection of plaintiff's wife; that he very frequently took her riding in the day time and at night time, and by such means and influence caused her to withdraw her affection and companionship; that through the loss of the companionship of his said wife he has sustained damages to the amount above named.

Germer Stove Co. vs. W. W. Frakes of Eagle Grove is an action to collect a balance of $173.95 due on account.

Mishawaha Woolen Mfg. Co. vs. G. W. Hansen of Galt is a suit to collect the sum of $176.15 alleged to be due on account.

Marriage licenses were issued the past week to William A. Parker of Belmond and Viva K. Rourk of Kanawha; Ance Seal and Amy Campbell, both of Clarion.

Chas. Brisbin vs. Wm. Brisbin is a suit of father against son. The plaintiff, who is 94 years of age, alleges fraud was practiced in gaining possession of his property at a time when he was very ill and not expected to live. He asks judgment against his son for $2,000.

McCarty & Cole of Eagle Grove have transferred judgment from Justice Williamson's court against Dan Galvin in the sum of $151.30 and asks the court to establish defendant's nterest in ninety acres of corn located on the Gormley farm, which defendent is tenant.

A $450. note executed to Frank Drury by F. M. Coufal and later purchased by the State Savings bank of Rowan is being sued upon by said bank. This bank also asks judgment against S. D. Hinckley on his $300 note.

Ina Stumph of Rowan charges her husband Guy Stumph with drunkeness and for that reason petitions the court for a divorce. The parties were married January 1, 1908, and have one child, a daughter, also a son by adoption. Plaintiff asks the custody of the children and alimony for support of herself and family.

F. D. McLeod and Olive McLeod of Galt are named as defendents in a suit brought by the Farmers State bank of Dows to collect a $4000 note, due last March.

Elmer Gunderson of Eagle Grove asks judgment against T. O. and Raymond Larson, father and son, of Eagle Grove in the sum of $500. For cause of action plaintiff claims young Larson, while on the wrong side of the road, between Clarion and Goldfield, and driving a buick automobile in a reckless manner, sturck the Gunderson Ford car. The accident happened while attempting to pass another car. Gunderson alleges his car was thrown into the ditch and turned over several times, resulting in its complete destruction; that the fair value of said car was $515; that its value as

IOWA MAKES RECORD IN RED CROSS WORK

Splendid Achievements In All Branches Of Service Is Record Of Chapters.

Iowa holds the record for the largest number of chapters of any state in the Central Division. It has more memberships proportionately than the more densely populated states. It has made an equally enviable record in the service rendered the state in meeting disaster, in helping the ex-service men, in life saving, in the prevention of disease and in the enrollment of the school children for helpful service.

93 Iowa chapters have handled some big undertakings during the past year. The speed with which these chapters in several parts of the state quickly mobilized in Iowa the past season to bring relief in times of flood, and the manner in which the National Pageant of Red Cross and the Red Cross exhibit at the State Fair were staged at Des Moines coupled with community service by chapters in every part of the state make Iowans appreciate and esteem Red Cross increasingly. The report just made by Walter Davidson, Manager, Central Division on the work of the chapters emphasizes in detail some of the outstanding achievements.

The soldier service work of the Iowa Red Cross chapters is a volume in itself. Almost everyone knows the great variety of work the Home Service and other secretaries or officers of these chapters are doing for the ex-service men and their families, and particularly for the disabled. It is estimated that 3,000 Iowa ex-service men have received individual care from the local Red Cross chapters the past year. If they have been in financial trouble, Red Cross has made them a temporary loan to tide them over the difficulty. If their families have been in want or distress, it has looked after them. If they have needed to have their claims adjusted it has guided them thru the necessary official channels. Vocational training has been secured for them to enable them to earn a better living. If medical or hospital treatment has been necessary, it has watched over them to give added comforts and recreation that hasten the days of convalesence. In these and numerous untold ways, the Iowa "boys" and their families have received the continuous ministrations of Red Cross for which they never cease to express gratitude.

Red Cross Nurses have discovered that over 40,000 children are physically defective, one-third of all the school children in the state; but they have also to report that notable progress is being made by physicians, Red Cross workers and others to improve these conditions.

These Red Cross nurses, and there are 81 today where there were three in Iowa three years ago, gave health talks in schools thruout the state the past year to more han 8,000 groups of school children and 900 groups of adults. They helped in 350 clinics at which treatment was given to more than 4,000 persons. In six months, 17,000 visits were made to homes to teach the mothers home hygiene and care of the sick and to give expert nursing care. Some 27 Iowa chapters also are conducting nutrition classes to give instruction in the proper selection of foods and in methods of preventing malnutrition.

Iowa has many rivers and appreciates the value of Red Cross life saving classes from which her chapters have graduated in the six months 207 as certified life-savers. The demonstrations at prominent points thruout the stae recently, particularly at LeMars, Mason City, Sidney, and Lake Okoboji, have greatly increased interest in Red Cross life saving methods. In recent months 184 persons have also received Red Cross first aid certificates.

HEARING THE GRAND OPERA VIA THE RADIO

Many things have been heard over the wireless set of the Battery Station and the Independent, but by far the best that has been heard yet was the opening opera of the Chicago Civic Opera Association, which was listened to Monday evening of this week. On that evening for two solid hours it was the pleasure of those who listened in to hear the opera as it was given at the theatre in Chicago, relayed to the radiophone station of the Westinghouse company, and by them broadcasted. The singing, the music of the orchestra, the clapping of the audience were as audible as tho is was in the room. On Tuesday evening the same company broadcasted the opera "Carmen." On Monday evening a total of 14 stations were heard, all clearly and perfectly audible. Concerts from New York City, Newark, New Jersey, Atlanta Georgia, Anthony, Kansas, Detroit, Michigan, Kansas City, Missouri, Indianoplis, Cicinatti, and Denver were the far points reached. J. W. Scott has an interesting letter from the Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga., in answer to a notice from him that their concerts were being heard. You are welcome any evening to drop in and listen. Either the editor or Mr. Scott will be here to catch you something in the air.

FOOTBALL GAME TODAY

The Belmond high school football team will meet the team from the Clarion high shool. This ought to be a real game. Clarion is noted for its good football teams, and while this will be the second team that is no indication that they cannot play the game. Belmond has won two of its first three games; the sport is a new thing to the local boys, but they have made wonderful progress, and a real battle is assured when they meet the team from the county seat this afternoon. Come out to the game and enjoy a hot contest. Game starts at 3:30.

HAVE REAL EXPERIENCE WITH GOOD IOWA MUD

Two Local Men Are Among Five Hundred Who Have Their Cars Stuck.

You can talk about your good old Iowa mud—the men from Belmond who drove to Iowa City last Saturday to take in the Iowa-Minnesota football game know all about it; they met it, face to face. Dr. Steele and Mikesell were the two, and they saw the game. But coming home was something else again. Between Cedar Rapids and Iowa City, near the little town of North Liberty, there is a fair-sized hill, composed chiefly of clay, gumbo and just plain mud. The traffic over this road was heavy, hundreds of cars going home from the game. The ruts wore deeper and deeper, and finally the cars just got in and stuck. There were, it is estimated by these men, from five hundred to a thousand cars within a space of four to five miles, stuck in the mud. Men, women and children by the hundreds were in them, and they couldn't get out until Sunday morning. They slept Saturday night in barns, corn cribs, houses, any old place there was shelter, 21 being on the dining room floor of one farm house. Farmers made a rich haul pulling cars out, at from $2 to $10 per pull, one financier making $90 Sunday. Dr. Steele and Mikesell finally managed to get thru to Cedar Rapids. But anyway they saw some game.

CAR THIEVES GET 5 YEARS

Sheriff Lang, while in town Monday, told the editor that the three men who stole the Dorr Ford this fall had been captured and are now serving their time in the Fort Madison prison. The men abandoned the Door car at Pocahontus and took a Buick there. Police officials caught them in the southern part of the state with the Buick and all three of them were given five years each in Fort Madison.

"The Golden Giant" Given Next Week

Fine Cast Of Players Secured For One Big Play To Be Given This Winter.

TO BE GIVEN TWO NIGHTS

The Community club home talent play, entitled "The Golden Giant," originally dated for this week Friday and Saturday, has been postponed to Friday and Saturday of next week, the 24th and 25th, in order to give the actors more time to perfect their parts. A strong cast has been secured, including many of the "oldtimers" who have been thru the mill before; a clever and interesting play is being rehearsed, and indications are that theatre goers in Belmond will be given a treat. The cast of characters is as follows:

Jack Mason ------------------------ Cato Griesy
Alexander Fairfax ------------------------ J. H. Ncurse
Duncan Le Moyne ------------------------ Teddy Johnson
Jim Bixby ------------------------ C. M. Morse
Max Wayne ------------------------ M. C. Barry
Tom Flynn ------------------------ Mac McNamara

TWO HUSBANDS TOO MANY

In Algona a woman recently got a divorce from her husband, and in a short time took another. However, when the chill winds of autumn began to blow, husband No. 1 hastened home to his domicle, and put out the skids under husband No. 2. That is, he chased him out of the house with a butcher kinfe and took over the duties of husband to his erring spouce, and she evidently made no violent objection.

In the mean time, husband No. 2 is wandering disconsolately about wondering where he is to spend these long winter evenings, and pondering on the uncertainty of life in general. —Humboldt Republican.

HONORED BY PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Martin entertained at dinner last Thursday in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Grundy of Los Angeles. They were residents of this place many years ago, and are making a tour of the East, visiting New York, Boston, Wshington and other points of interest. They expect to return home via the southern route thru New Orleans.

BUYS OUT HIS PARTNERS

Steve Antonio has bought out the interests of his partners in the Candy Kitchen in Belmond, and henceforth will be the owner of the business instead of manager. When he began business here he was in partnership with his countrymen at Clarion, but recently completed the deal that gives him the business. Steve has been "delivering the goods," has made a host of good friends, and they are glad to see him owner now.

BEGINNING OUR FOURTH YEAR

This issue of the Independent completes three years' of successful operation, and the publisher feels that a word of appreciation to the many friends who have stood so faithfully by is not amiss.

A newspaper cannot succeed under any circumstances without one outstanding thing: The support of the public. This support comes in two different forms, both of which are absolutely necessary. First there must be circulation; without circulation a newspaper is in the same fix as a Ford without gas, it can't go. Second, it must have advertising. It is essential that both be there. The advertiser looks first of all to circulation; the publisher of a newspaper uses every effort to build up the ciculation. That the Independent has been able to build up a circulation of over a thousand in three years is proof that its friends have stood by, and to them the Independent is indebted. It is indebted too to its advertisers, to those who have used its columns to bring before the people of this community the things they have to sell. They both have been friends in every sense of the word, and it is the aim, and in the years to come will be the aim, of the Independent to serve them both, to give them service in their respective lines.

To them both, may the Independent extend its sincere thanks and appreciation for their support in the three years gone by, and solicit for the year to come the same good loyal support. And in return we give you our promise to "do our durnedest" to serve you both better.

CLIPPINGS

Harry Webb, Belmond's "boy preacher", has just been assigned as student pastor of the M. E. church at Woden, Iowa. This is Mr. Webb's third year at Morningside college, Sioux City. He received a license to preach when he was only 18 years of age and has quite successfully filled a number of charges during his vacations. Mr. Webb preached at the M. E. church here several times last fall when that church was without a minister.—Klemme Times.

Eck Raw, the hustling deputy sheriff, pulled a good one Monday when he was called to Corwith to raid a moonshine distillery. He was directed to the farm where it was supposed to be and made haste to get there before any one had a chance to beat him to it. Arriving at the place he captured a large still and many gallons of mash and returned to Corwith with his find, whereupon he learned that he had overreached his territory and captured the still in Kossuth county. Eck wasn't going to let this mar the enforcement of the law so telephoned to the county attorney at Algona and the sheriff or his deputy was sent to Corwith to gather in the still and take over the prisoner.—Britt News-Tribune.

Leroy Depew, a former Goldfield resident and now of near LuVerne, met with quite a serious accident last Monday He was riding horseback in a pasture when a neighbor's horse kicked him, breaking the large bone in the left leg between the ankle and the knee. He laid helpless in the pasture for more than an hour when he was found by his four year old son. —Goldfield Chronicle.

The Occidental hotel was robbed Friday afternoon and all efforts to apprehend the thief have been unsuccessful. Jack Knight, who is the day clerk at the hotel, left the office for a short time to attend to business matters on the street and upon his return found that the cash register had been robbed of $85. The thief evidently knew the combination of the drawer as it was locked when Mr. Knight left the hotel Suspicion was fixed upon the janitor who knew the combination of the register and he was placed under arrest but was later released because of lack of evidence. Up to the present time no further arrests have been made. —Eagle Grove Times.

Ed Baker figured in a comedy sketch last Thursday which was a real scream. He bought a can of black paint at Kenefick's and left it at Ole Gunderson's implement house on east Broadway. He went home after some material he was going to paint, leaving the paint as stated above at Gunderson's. Well, Carl Groves, Ole Gunderson, Geo. Shaunce and some other parties not named in the indictment, removed the paint label from the can and glued it on a can of perfectly good tomatoes. Ed opened the can and found it filled with tomatoes. Ed thought this a fine joke on Mr. Kenefick and took the tomatoes back to the store and demanded an honest to goodness can of black paint. Mr. Kenefick was just as mystified and handed out another can of paint, which Ed insisted on opening on the spot. It contained what it should, black paint.—Eagle Grove Eagle.

Naomi Baldridge and Inza Africa went to Belmond, Friday, and visited until Saturday afternoon with Naomi's grandparents and other relatives On Tuesday they went to Nevada where they will spend a few days with the Misses Lyona Baldridge and Caroline Lewis, who are employed there.—Kanawha Reporter.

Several hundred gallons of pure Iowa water were taken with the football team from Iowa City to New Haven, Conn., when the men went to play with Yale. The men drank nothing but Iowa water from the time they boarded the train at Iowa City until they returned five days later. Fear that a change of water might disagree with the players as they went from one section of the country to another prompted the Iowa athletic board to arrange to carry a five-day supply for the 25 men who made the trip—Exchange.

Yesterday morning at 9 o'clock at the Catholic church in this city occurred the marriage of Miss Elvira Richter to Mr. Joseph William Hammes of Pocahontus, Iowa, Rev. Father Wagner of Pocahontus officiating. Miss Nell Sullivan of Belmond played the wedding march—Garner Signal.

The north part of town also is hit by the drought, and wells are going dry or pumps are failing to function. Some who have bored wells find they either have had to lengthen the pipes to their pumps or else bore deeper. They blame the sewer for lowering the water level.—News.

Mr. Wm. Voiles of Belmond was a business caller in Klemme last Friday.—Times.

Oscar Larson came up from Belmond, Monday, to give the Larsen company business here the once over. Scoop is a combination travelling auditor and block man for the company. —Garner Leader.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Corn Yield Plots Harvested

Considerable interest centered about the farms of Harry Inners (Liberty township) and H. A. Flett (Vernon township) Tuesday and Wednesday of last week, when Prof. B. E. Heitzman of the Extension Department at Ames checked up on the various samples of corn which were produced on these farms.

In harvesting the samples of corn in these plots 4 rows 89 hills long were husked out and piled at the end of the field. It is estimated that this size of a plot makes about one-tenth of an acre. The nine samples of corn which were piled at the end of the field were weighed up and small samples of each have been sent to the Farm Crops section at Ames where moisture determinations will be made and the final results of yield contests will be figured.

Those who had samples of corn in the experimant plot will be anxious to know how their corn compares with others having corn in the test plot but it will not be possible to announce the ratings of the various samples until the moisture determination is returned from the Farm Crops department.

The corn yield plot which was conducted on the Al Watkins farm near Eagle Grove will be harvested later and announcement made of the results of this experiment. The corn plot which was conducted on the A. E. Martin farm near Belmond has not turned out very satisfactory on account of the hogs having gotten in the field and destroyed some of the plots, making it impossible to get a definite check on the results. An attempt will be made, however, to select 89 representative hills from each plot which has not been molested and figure the approximate yield of the plot.

Farm Meat Demonstrations.

Many county farmers learned methods of slaughtering, cutting and curing meat as a result of the four meat demonstrations held by the Wright county farm bureau in different sections of the county last week. The county agent, in arranging for these meetings, secured the services of Prof. C. W. MacDonald, Animal Husbandry specialist of the extension service of Iowa State college who demontrated and discussed methods of slaughtering, cutting and curing meat on the farm, and gave many present an opportunity to actually do some of the work themselves.

The secret of curing meat on the farm, according to Mr. MacDonald is: first getting a godd bleed on the hog; second, thoroughly cooling the carcass but not allowing it to freeze; thrid, curing the meat for a sufficient length of time with proper strength of curing agents. Either dry cure or brine cure can be used with equally good results. The cures recommended are:

1. Dry Sugar Cure.. For each one hundred pounds of meat, weigh out 8 pounds of salt, 2 1-2 pounds sugar and 2 ounces of saltpetre. Rub at least one half of the mixture thoroughly on pieces and pack. Rework the meat at the end of each week for three weeks and each time each pound in the mixture should be thrown on the exposed parts. Allow the meat to cure three days to ample: a 12 pound ham should be cured for 36 days by this method.

2. Brine Cure. For each one hundred pounds of meat, weigh out twelve pounds of salt, three pounds of sugar and two ounces of saltpetre and dissolve in six gallons of water previously boiled and cooled. Pack the meat and pour over the brine. At the end of each week for three weeks repack the meat using the same brine if it is not sour. Allow the meat to cure four days to each pound in the piece. For example: a 12 pound ham should be cured 48 days.

Clothing Demonstrations Successful

The clothing demonstrations on "Alteration of the Commercial Pattern," by Miss Bertha Huber from the Extension department at Ames are proving quite successful from the standpoint of attendance and the general interest which is being shown by the ladies throughout the county. Miss Huber seems to be a real specialist in her line and the ladies are getting some valuable hints in regard to the subject at hand. These demonstrations are very practical and the ladies of the county are getting the work from Miss Huber in such a way that they will be able to make daily application in their home problems.

The schedule which will be followed in conducting the clothing demonstrations throughout the county beginning November 20, will be as follows:

Monday, November 20, Pleasant township with Mrs. J. F. Henn.

Tuesday, November 21, Belmond township with Mrs. A. E. Martin.

Wednesday, November 22, Liberty township, with Mrs. Rasmus Hanson.

Friday, November 24, Eagle Grove (Call lady director.)

Saturday, November 25, Dayton township, with Mrs. Will Hagie.

Monday, November 27, Woolstock township, with Mrs. Matt Adams.

Tuesday, November 28, Troy township, yith Mrs. Newton Bawn.

Wednesady, November 29, Norway township, with Mrs. E. E. Evans.

Friday, December 1, Lake township, with Mrs. Allen Robinson.

Boys Start Feeding Calves

Boys and girls who have enrolled as members in the baby beef club will weigh their calves into the contest on December 1st, when the feeding oprations will begin. The members will be required to keep a daily record of the amount of feed given the calf and will report to the county agent once a month the weight of the calf and the amount and price of feed consumed in order that a definite record may be kept of the cost of gains made during the month.

Each day's mail brings in the names of a few more boys and girls enrolling in the calf club. Around forty calves have already been reported by the members and this number should be increased materially before November 20th, the date that the enrollments close. The premium money offered by the State Fair association last year alone exceeded $1500 and this amount will likely be doubled for 1923, as more counties have entered the contest and different Breeders' associations are offering prizes in addition to the Fair association przes.

Most of the calves reported for the club are between four and eight months old and show good uniformity in size and conformation. The three leading beef breeds will be about equally represented and a good class of ten calves may be selected from each breed of calves fed to be exhibited at the county show and State fair and sold at Des Moines the last day of the fair.

Boys and girls who have not signed up for this Baby Beef club and know where they can locate a good calf should send in an application for an enrollment card. The calf doesn't need to be a pure-bred and should be bought at about market price. The calf to be used in the contest may be taken from home herd in case you have the right beef type to begin with .

Champion Judging Team Training

Members of the state champion live stock judging team which judged at Des Moines and Sioux City will spend considerable time between now and December 1st in getting practical experience in judging the different classes of livestock. The boys, accompanied by the county agent, will make judging trips to the different livestock farms of Wright county and to different purebred farms in neighboring counties in order to have opportunity to see some of the best types of livestock and have actual practice in handling these animals.

An invitation has just been received from the animal husbandry department at Ames to come to the college and work out on some of the high class purebred animals at the college. It has been suggested that by making the trip to the college boys will come in contact with some of the best livestock and at the same time have an opportunity to work on some of the college animals.

The International Non-Collegiate Live Stock judging contest, in which the boys will take part, will be held at the stock pavilion in Chicago on Friday, December 1st. The county agent and the boys will leave Clarion about Wednesday evening, November 29th, in order to be ready to begin the judging work Friday morning. This judging contest is open to any boy or girl attending an Agricultural high school, a vocational high school, a rural consolidated school, or boys and girls clubs who have never been legally classified in a state agrcultural college and who has never taken part in a meat, stock or horse judging contest in an international character previous to the year in which this contest is held. Entries in this judging contest are limited to one team from each state, the members of which must all be from the same club. This team is determined each year by a state judging contest held at the state fair. Dean Curtis of the agricultural club at Ames has already certified to the eligibility of the Wright county team in the State judging contest and has entered our team in the International live stock judging contest at Chicago.

Prize Corn To International

It will be interesting to corn growers of Wright county to note that prize winning samples of corn are being sent to the International live stock and grain show at Chicago by M. L. Howison of Wall Lake township, O. J. Pardun and Emory J. Pardun of Clarion.

The management of the International at Chicago has made it possible for farmers thruout the middle west to exhibit their forage crop and grains. Thru this medium the best grains and forage crops are brought together and consequently the farmers have opportunity to study the exhibits and get the best possible information on varieties and methods of production. The International rules require that the exhibit when shipped must reach the grounds not later than Monday, November 27th, and must have been grown, selected and prepared by the exhibitor. Single ear and ten ear samples are being entered by these men.

Look ahead. You have eyes in the front of your head for that purpose.

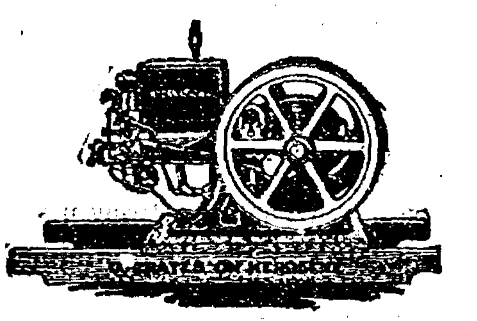
An All-Weather Engine

Engines are subject to a great deal of abuse. Sometimes from the operator—sometimes from themselves and sometimes from the weather and elements. When an engine is placed out in th sun, rain, hail and wind it won't last as long, of course, but the engine that is proteted in itself by its construction, will naturaly last longer. When engineers designed the International Engine they must have had this in mind and made an enclosed crank case. That's why the International Kerosene Engine is more protected from dust, dirt and the elements than other engines. It's just one more reason why the International horse-and-a-half and larger sizes will run for years at the very lowest cost per hour. They're more than economical. Come in and get one.



Grinding Out Dollars

Not everybody has the privilige of making money by coining the actual pieces in a machine, but everyone who uses his head and his hands has the privilege of earning money in an honest way. The farmer who wishes he could have a money-making machine can easily satisfy his wish by buying a McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder. This machine turns out dollars in the form of better and less wasteful feed. With a McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder you can make every pound of feed produce the utmost in feeding value by putting it in the most digestible form. Come in and look them over—Buy a McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder.

Long women who have longed for long skirts can now wear them right along.

We should have a warm winter after all the hot air distributed during the recent election campaign..

What Benjamin Said

Benjamin Franklin said, "The safest investment is a deposit of fertility in the soil bank; surest and pays the best." There's real sense in this statement and if Franklin were living today he would add a few more lines to his wise words, and say that the best way to put fertility into the soil bank is to use a good manure spreader. By using an International Manure Spreader you are assured of the highest possible dividends, for the International spreads finely, evenly and uniformly. The International is both large in capacity and light in draft. It is made almost entirely of steel with the exception of the bottom and side boards and will outlast and outdo any other spreader on the market Franklin would OK this spreader if he were here today.

STRENGTH SERVICE

Watch Out!

Don't be a SHINING MARK for a MINING SHARK or an oil shark or any other of the great family of get-rich-quick sharks.

The country is full of them, smooth and oily, shrewd salesmen out for easy money by selling stock in some wonderful prospect that promises to make you rich in quick order. Just stop and think. If these things were as good as they are represented, there would be no need to peddle them around. Before investing it is always a good plan to consult your banker and then follow his advice.

The Y. P. A .monthly business and social meeting was held in the Evang. church parlors last Tuesday evening. The Misses Viola and Evelyn Thomas and Mildred Gealow were hostesses. After the regular business session a short program was given. Games were played and a jolly good time is reported. A delicious oyster supper was served, which all enjoyed.

W F. Butz is able to be about again since his recent illness.

What Will Your Boy Be 30 Years From Now?

NO doubt, your earnest hope is---"A son I can be proud of;a good citizen, respected by everyone for his spleneid character."

And what builds CHARACTER? No factor perhaps so much as being a SAVER. A Saving Account promotes self-respect, self reliance; it begets confidence, not only of the saver himself but of others. It promotes all the other good qualities that go to make up CHARACTER. Your boy or girl will be a better citizen, a better mother; thirty years from now, if you do YOUR part TODAY. See to it that they are started on the right road, and the RIGHT road is the THRIFT road.

The W. C. T. U. met at the home of Mrs. A. J. Nissen last Wednesday afternoon for their regular monthly meeting. Plans for the essay contest to be held in the future were discussed. Mrs. C. J. Wendell has charge of this work, and we trust that all are interested enough to boost for the Union and all they undertake to do.

The council met last Monday evening for their regular meeting.

The annual Thank offering program of the W. M. S. will be given at the Evang. church on Sunday, Nov. 26. Program will appear later.

Our attention was called to the neat little addition built onto the post office. The work was done by Chas. Halfpopp, and will be quite a protection against the cold wintry blasts that will soon be due.

Albert Wendell was busy putting up new eaves spouting on the A. J. Nissen residence one day last week. He was assited by Alvin Halfpop.

HONOR SOLDIER BOYS

The Armistice Day services held at the Evang. church last Saturday forenoon were fairly well attended. Mrs. Carrie Lucas of Mason City gave the address and several of the grade pupils of our public school rendered a few suitable songs. The first and second graders gave the Flag Salute. After the services the Legion boys with their families and friends were invited to partake of a bounteous luncheon in the church parlors, which had been provided for by the Helping Hand society. All present report a fine repast, which was ended by a treat from the business people and a few friends, consisting of ice cream and wafers and apples.

Mrs. C. Bier was a Mason City shopper last Thursday.

After the exercises held at the Evangelical church Sat, Nov. 11, in honor of Armistice Day, the Legion boys with their wives, mothers and sweethearts numbering 27 were entertained by the Helping Hand sociey to a sumptuous five-course dinner. The manner in which all such good things disappear speaks well for the efficient cooks the society is composed of. A toast given by the secretary of the society was responded to by the Adj. of the Legion. The guests of honor were Rev. Schlesselman and wife, Rev Pannkuk and daughter, and Mrs. Lucas, speaker of the day. All present report a most delightful time.

Mrs. Geo. J. Fischer of Mason City came down from that place Saturday to visit a short time at the home of her son Simon. She returned Sunday.

MESERVEY SCHOOL NEWS

Anita, Herman and Lucille Enabnit have been absent from the 1st grade the entire week.

Perfect spellers in the 2nd grade for this week are Bernice Blewitt, Barbara, Kenneth Kolb, Andrew Boelman, Julia Fry, Lois Thomas, Esther Smith, Viola Koehler and Neola Watermiller.

Our sand table for this month represents a Pilgrim scene.

Tillie Rieckens has been absent from school this week because of illness.

Marvin Lauen, John Van Osten and Benjamin Suntken have been absent from school this week in order to help in the corn fields.

Our room has recently been made more comfortable and attractive thru the painting, hanging of new curtains and autumn decorations.

The 3rd grade have already commenced making gifts for Christmas. Altho it is rather awkward for small boys to sew, their mothers will be surprised and will appreciate the hand made gifts.

Friday afternoon the handwork period was spent in making Puritan dolls from clothes pins, cotton and bits of cloth.

Those receiving prizes for having the most "hundreds" in spelling the first six weeks are Vona Weaver and Norman Muller in the 3rd grade, and Lydia Pals and LuVerne Butz in the 4th grade.

The 4th grade are keeping weather charts on which are written the daily weather reports from their own observations.

The 5th grade have finished some excellent reports on coal iron and petroleum.

The 5th grade had an interesting lesson on Great Salt Lake in geography Wednesday.

Many pupils have been absent from 6th grade duties the past week to help finish husking corn.

We were sorry to learn Monday morning that Marie Pals has had the the misfortune to be kept from school on account of a broken arm.

Those having perfect deportment stars the past week are Harriett Sprau, Christopher Groen, Mildred Janssen, Wayne Waddingham, Harland Blewitt, Neva Muller, Fredona Lemke, Marvin Nissen, Edward Kuhler and Alma Dorenkamp.

The teachers and pupils of the 5th and 6th grades are much pleased with the appearance of their room since it has been repainted.

Thirteen pupils are absent from the grammar room due to corn picking.

For Armistice Day program Orvis Schlesselman will give a recitation "In Flanders Fields."

The next Community Program will be given in the M. E. church on Friday, November 24. The program will appear in next week's paper.

Eva Sprau has been absent from school the entire week due to illness. At present she is somewhat better and it is thought tha she will soon be able to be about on crutches.

There has been a very small attendance in high school this week as many of the students are still husking corn. Several of them expect to be back next week.

While playing basket ball Tuesday afternoon, Anna Pals severely sprained her ankle. As yet she is unable to be in school.

The girls' basket ball team will have a game with the Thornton team on the home court Friday, Nov. 17.

A double header basket ball between Meservey and Latimer teams had been planned for Fri., Nov. 10, but due to the large number of absences this week the game has been postponed.

A numbr of the pupils from the public school took part in the Armistice Day program which was held in the Evangelical church Saturday forenoon.

The Sophomore English class is using the Literary Digest this year for a part of the class work. The Digest furnishes much material which is suit able for both oral and written work. Another advantge of using the Literary Digest is that it enables the students to keep abreast of the times. When students are taught to read about and think of political problems, they are much more likely to be interested in such matters when they become older.

There is a new school bus on route 5, the body of which was made by Mr. Halfpop.

REFORMED CHURCH NOTES

Sunday school at 9:30 (English)
German preaching services 10:30
Young peoples meeting 7:15 (English).
Evening services (English) 8:00.

Primary and junior classes in catechism Saturday 1:30-3:00, Senior at 3;00.

The church extends a cordial invitation to all who have no church home to attend these meetings. We are glad to help you—Someone has said: "I doubt if there is a living man in the civilized world, no matter what his avowed opinion of Christianity or of the church may be, who does not in wardly confess, Christ stands for the noblest and best in history and human experience; and who has not qualms of discomfort whenever he stops, looks and listens long enough to realize that he ought to serve and follow him."

Catechetical instruction was resumed last Saturday and despite unfavorable weather conditions the goodly number of 78 were enrolled. We are looking forward to a large enrollment next Saturday.

The Ladies Aid will meet next Thursday at the regular hour in the basement of the church.

H. Pannkuk, Minister.

HOME COMING DINNER

The Hulsebus family enjoyed a reunion last Sunday, the event being planned in honor of the home coming of Mr. and Mrs Hulsebus, who returned from Europe last Tuesday, having spent 13 months abroad. All the children and families privileged to be present, and all were made happy by the reuniting with father and mother, after so long an absence

The time was spend in a quiet, social way in keeping with the day. All enjoyed the eats provided for by the children, and a prayer of Thanksgiving arose in the hearts of all for the safe return of the parents.

Those present were L. B. Hulsebus and wife, and Alma and Louise Witt, A. J. Nissen and family, A. F. Muller and family, and H. W. Hulsebus and freind Miss Daisy Clark of Mason City.

A number of friends and neighbors spent last Monday evening at the Muller home to get what benefit they could from the new radio, installed in their home, that day. We all agree that it was a program alright quite varied but we will learn to "tune in" after while.

Mr. and Mrs C. H. Muhlenbrock of Hampton were guests at the F A. Lemke home last Friday.

Miss Ethel Typer of Mason Cty was a week end guest at the F C. Barger home.

Mr. and Mrs Ben Gruis visited with friends at Alexander last Friday.

Miss Wilhelmine Loats spent Sunday with her parents.

Miss Mildred Gealow Sundayed with relatives at Belmond.

E G. Thomas and family enjoyed a week end visit with Mr. Thomas' mother and brothers of South Dakota. They made the trip in their car.

Herman Ostendorf and Herman Dirks, who are attending Central college at Pella, spent Sunday with their parents

The sad news was received here last week of the death of Wm. Buekelman, who in former years was an employee of the Klemme Lbr. Co. of this place. He passed away at Aplington but the body was taken to Buffalo for burial. Rev. and Mrs. Pannkuk and Lydia and Mr. and Mrs Harm Groen attended the funeral services. Rev. Pannkuk had charge of the English services

Mrs. U. J. Cooper was on the sick list the latter part of the week

George Langlitz was confined to his home on account of sickness last week.

ROWAN NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rietz celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on Thursday, Nov. 9. 50 years ago Caroline Bennewitz and Henry Rietz were married in Grosgostein, Germany. A few years later they came to this state and for the past 27 years have lived in Rowan. During these 50 years they have gone hand in hand thru all the experiences, happy and sad, that life has brought them. Ten children were born to them, five of whom are now living: A. C. Rietz, Wm. Rietz, and Mrs. A. O. Pelley of Rowan; Mrs. (Rev.) Geo Stevens, Dexter, Iowa, and Mrs. Julius Goos, of St. Paul. Their grandchildren number 13

On the anniversary day the family invited some 90 friends and relatives to a banquet in their parents' honor, in the M. E. church basement. The rooms were tastefully decorated, the color scheme being gold and white. The 50-year bride and groom sat under a golden bell while the tables were ornamented with lighted candles christanthemums and daffodils. After a bountiful repast the company retired to the auditorium of the church where the following program was given:

Duet: violin and piano; Anna and Nina Rietz.
Reading: Mrs. Julius Goos.
Vocal duet: Karl and Edward Rietz
Address: Rev. Harold Tomkinson.
Piano solo: Miss Esther Fowler.
Reading: Mrs. Tomkinson.
Solo Mrs Pelley
Reading: Nina Rietz.

The last mentioned was of more than usual interest being a recital of the history of the guests of honor from their wedding day until the present time, and composed for the occasion by a son-in-law, Mr. A. O. Pelley. Mr. Tomkinson, pastor of the church, in his congratulatory remarks referred to the happy couple as exemplary parents and faithful workers in the church. He also, on behalf of the company, presented them with an address and a substantial purse of gold.. Beside this they received other smaller tokens, among them a gold brooch and cuff links. The out of town guests included Mr. Bennewitz, Dows, brother of the bride, Mrs. George Stevens, and daughter Ruth, Dexter, Mrs. Julius Goos and daughter Anna, St Paul.

Last Tuesday at Mason City occured the marriage of Mrs. Mary Williams and Albert Erickson. They spent their honeymoon at St. Paul, returning to Rowan, Sunday. Their many friends extend congratulations to this happy couple and wish them much happiness thru life. The bride will continue her duties at the D. W. Whitten store for the present.

Mrs. H. H. Barker is enjoying a visit, from her daughter Alice, and baby, of Oelwein

Rowan School Notes

A number of pupils have been staying out of school picking corn. Last week Anna and Frank Peddle, Dale Hiams and James Kercheval were out for that purpose

Others absent were Fred and Harold Moellering, Clesson Azeltine and Ione Francomb.

Bernice Hansen was excused Friday p. m.

Plans are being made to repair the gym in several ways

The return game with Williams will be played at Williams on Friday, Nov. 17. It is not far to Williams and the more boosters the better.

A number of visitors were present at the literary program given Friday p. m. The program was well given and enjoyed by all. The other society will give a program in a short time.

The girls did not have their regular basket ball practice Monday evening. The weather made it impossible for all but a few to practice.

The orchestra practice was also postponed which was to have been at the home of James Kercheval on Mon day evening.

The Young Ladies Mission Study club will meet at the home of Mrs. Ray Azeltine Thursday evening, with Miss Frances Virden as leader and the assistant hostesses Mrs Nellie Hyde and Miss Alta Allen. All members are urged to be present as we are studying a very interesting book, "Ann of Ava." We also invite any of the young ladies who are interested in this society to come. We always have a very pleasant time.

The Ladies Aid society will meet with Mrs. N. B. Olson on Thursday afternoon. This is an important meeting as there is business to trans act

The supper given by the 4th Division of the Aid society Saturday night was largely attended, netting the society $28. Since the supper fell on Armistice Day all ex-service men were guests that evening. The boys very much appreciate this courtesy and wish to extend their thanks to the committee in charge.

Altho the attendance at the Sunday morning service was not as large as usual on account of the rain yet a goodly number listened with interest to "Our Country's Future" by the pastor and enjoyed the solo "The Story of Old Glory, the Flag we Love so Well" given beautifully by Miss Mohr.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bennewitz who have been staying in Michigan for several months, were over Sunday guests at the home of Chas. Bowers.

PAVING NOW OPEN ACROSS THE COUNTY

Garner Signal— The paving is now open all the way from Garner to Britt. The last of the barricades were taken down yesterday and the last strip of paving cleaned off. The paving was finished on October 1st, but the weather has been exceptionally fine since then for the paving to dry, and thus it was possible to open it for traffic earlier than generally the case.

You can now drive across Hancock County, all the way on paving. This can be said of but few counties in the state, and is something that the people of Hancock County may look to with pride.

The Kossuth County paving has not been progessing very rapidly, we understand. A gentleman from Algona was in Garner Monday and he told us that the Empire construction Co. had about a mile of the work near Algona yet to complete, and there was no chance of their getting to the work from the county line west through Wesley this fall. This means a poor road from the county line through Wesley until the middle of next summer.

This gentleman also said that the Empire Construction Co. had been having difficulty in getting material of late and that for the last three or four weeks they had been able to run but very little concrete. It had been hoped that they would complete their job this year, that we would have a paved road all the way to Algona.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance.

CHAPTER II.—That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her.

CHAPTER III.—Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle and guardian, apparently is disgruntled by West's appearance as Natalie's fiance, and the feeling of antagonism is mutual. Natalie, Coolidge, and West plan a visit of charity to a poor and remote section of the city.

CHAPTER IV.—Leaving West in the car, Natalie and Coolidge enter a small cottage, remaining a length of time which causes him some uneasiness. Before they return, West secures information which leads him to believe Coolidge is deceiving Natalie, and has ulterior motives.

CHAPTER V.—On the party's return to the Coolidge home, Natalie informs West she has been mistaken in her suspicions concerning her "double," and that she has no further need for his services. West is astounded, but helpless. He leaves.

CHAPTER VI.—On his way out of the grounds, West hears a revolver shot, and investigates. He finds Percival Coolidge dead, apparently a suicide. The inquest so determines. In the city West is visited by Sexton, an old servant of the Coolidges. Sexton tells him he has been abruptly dismissed, for no apparent reason. He gives it as his belief that Coolidge was murdered, and about convinces West he is right.

CHAPTER VII.—Sexton has overheard a telephone conversation in the Coolidge home, in which a man demands Natalie's presence immediately. He gives an address, and with Sexton, West, his suspicions of things not being right strengthened by his learning that Coolidge had lied about the reason for the trip to the cottage, visits the place. It is a disreputable saloon.

CHAPTER VIII.—West is taken by surprise, knocked out, separated from Sexton, and comes to his senses to find himself bound and helpless, and confronted by a man named Hobart, whom West knows to be the man who had rented the house which Natalie visited. The man tells him he (West) is interfering with his plans and if he persists will be done away with. West refuses any compromise. Hobart sends for Natalie, hoping [illegible] can induce West to give up his quest.

HAPTER IX.—Natalie releases West [illegible] his bonds and assures him that she [illegible] no need for his assistance. Her ac- [illegible] almost convince West she has guilty [illegible]ledge of Percival Coolidge's murder. [illegible]fies Hobart, and the thug, with two [illegible]panions, attempts to kill him. After a [illegible]fic fight West leaps from the window.

APTER X.—West succeeds in eluding [illegible] pursuers, finds Sexton bound and [illegible], releases him, and the two escape. [illegible] alley Sexton picks up a lady's pen- [illegible], which he gives to West.

[illegible]e light streamed in through the [illegible]ow opening, and Hobart scram- [illegible] cautiously down the rotted steps. West, drawing himself securely back behind the protection of his barrel, saw the lantern thrust forward, and a face behind it peering in the shadows. The fellow did not advance into the room, but Hobart did, pressing his way roughly past, and standing there full in the glow of light, staring about into the dim shadows. He evidently saw nothing to arouse suspicion, for his voice was angry with disgust.

"Not a d—n sign here, Shorty. It looks like the fellow maybe did get away. But it beats me how. There ain't no place now for us to look but the alley."

"An' if he ain't there?"

"Then we'll hop this dump mighty sudden, I'm telling you. With that guy loose, it won't be healthy for me hanging around here."

[illegible] in't got the goods on you, has [illegible]

[illegible] he ain't got the goods, but he [illegible]ad wise to some things, and he [illegible]n't get out of that shindy upstairs without getting hurt. He'll be sore all right, and will raise all the h—l he can. It's safer to keep out of the way."

"An' what about that other buck, Hobart? It won't do to have him picked up, if this guy gets the harness bulls to take a look around here."

"That ain't his style, Shorty; he won't spiel anything to the cops about this row. He's an ex-soldier, a captain, and he's nuts on the girl. That's why he dipped into this mess—trying to save her—see? Maybe he won't be so keen now, after the song and dance she gave him upstairs. I'm half inclined to think the guy will drop out entirely, d—n glad to get off alive, now he believes she is as rotten as the rest of us. But I ain't sure—maybe he is the kind that sticks. That's why I don't take any chances just now. Things ain't quite ripe for a get away—see?"

"Sure; she gave him some straight stuff, hey?"

"She certainly did; she's as smart as she is good looking. It somehow don't strike me this guy is going to bother her any more. I'm figuring that he's out of it."

"But his partner?"

"Oh, we'll leave him somewhere propped up against a door. Likely he'll never know what happened to him, or where. He ain't nothing to be afraid of—just a butler with a cracked head. It's the other guy who has got the brains. Come on; let's take a look out in the alley."

Their shadows vanished up the stairs, the glow of light disappearing, and leaving the cellar in impenetrable darkness. West did not venture to move, however, content to wait until thoroughly assured the way for escape was clear. He had not learned much from this conversation, except to increase his convictions that a serious crime was being consummated. The full nature of this conspiracy was as obscure as ever; rendered even more doubtful indeed, by the active participation of Natalie Coolidge. This was what puzzled and confused him the most. He could no longer question her direct interest in the affair, or her willingness to assist in overcoming his efforts. Even without the free testimony of the men this fact was sufficiently clear. She had deliberately lied to him, attempted deceit, and then, when he refused to yield to her efforts, had so reported to Hobart, and left him to his fate. It was manifestly impossible for him to believe in her any longer. Yet what could it all mean? how could she hope to benefit by such an association? Why could she thus shield the murderers of Percival Coolidge? What possible object could there be in the commission of this crime, except to gain possession of her own fortune? It was all mystery to his mind; a new unanswerable question arising wherever he looked.

What strange influence could this man Hobart exercise over the girl? To West's judgment he was in no way the sort of man to appeal to Natalie Coolidge. He was of a low, cunning order, with some degree of outward polish, to be sure, yet inherently tough, and exhibiting marks of a birthright which indelibly stamped him of a social class far below her own. Surely, she could not love the fellow, yet unquestionably he possessed a mysterious power over her, difficult to explain through any other hypothesis. If West had not known the young woman under different conditions, he might have accepted this theory, and dismissed the whole matter from mind. But it was the haunting memory of that earlier Natalie Coolidge, the mistress of Fairlawn, which would not permit his complete surrender. She had seemed all that his dream of womanhood called for. Unconsciously, he had given her his heart, and he could not tear the remembrance from mind. There was something wrong, terribly wrong; what it was he had no means of knowing, yet, there in the dark, he determined he would know, would never be content until he learned the whole truth. All his hope, all his future, depended on the answer.

Hobart and Turner were absent for some little while; the sound of their voices ceased, but the distant flicker of the lantern enabled West to trace their progress up the alley, and then back again. They returned in no pleasant humor, convinced that their expected victim had escaped safely, but made no further effort to search the yard. West, confident at last that the way was clear, wriggled out from his place of concealment behind the barrel, and stood erect. He felt stronger now, and in less pain, convinced that his injuries were in no degree serious. The darkness was so intense he had to grope his way forward, anxious to make no noise which might betray his presence.

In the intensity of the gloom, his sense of direction failed, taking him somewhat further back before he finally located the exact position of those outer steps. Then as he turned abruptly, his foot came in contact with an obstacle on the floor. For an instant he could not determine what it was; then, with a thrill of horror, he realized the presence of a human body. There was no sound, no movement, and West drew back from contact with the object, shrinking in horror. Then he gripped himself sternly—whoever, whatever this was, he must know. Alive or dead he must determine the truth. He bent over, feeling with hands in the darkness. The flesh was warm; it was no cold corpse he touched, but a living human being; ay! tied like a mummy, unable to move hand or foot. Then, as suddenly, his groping fingers, eager enough now, discovered the cause of silence—the man was gagged, cruelly gagged, helpless to utter a sound.

The situation once realized, West worked rapidly. If this bound man was Sexton, the quicker he could be released the better. Hobart had already revealed his plans, and might appear at any moment for the purpose of executing them. If escape was to be achieved, it must be accomplished at once. In the darkness his fingers could do nothing with the knot, but the sharp blade of a knife quickly severed the twisted cloth, and the gag was instantly removed from between the clenched teeth. The man moaned, breathing heavily, but made no other sound while West slashed at the cords lashing his limbs, finally freeing them entirely. Not until this had been accomplished did he pause long enough to ask questions.

"There; that's the last. Now, who are you—Sexton?"

"Yes, sir," weakly, and in a mere whisper, "an' I know yer voice, sir. Thank God, yer found me, sir."

"It was a bit of luck; but we'll talk that over later. Now we've got to get out of here. Can you walk?"

"I don't know, sir; after a fashion, maybe. I'm mighty stiff and numb, sir."

"Take it easy; work your legs up and down like that; good, that will restore the circulation. How long have you been lying here?"

"I don't know, sir," his voice strengthening. "I must have been hit, the way my head aches. The first thing I knew after I went into that room with you, I was lyin' here in the dark. I couldn't move or speak, sir, an' it was so black, I kind of got it into my head maybe I was dead and buried. If it hadn't been for my hearing things—voices talking, and all that—I guess I would have gone clear batty. Maybe I didn't get everything straight, sir, but one o' them fellows was Hobart, wasn't he?"

"Yes; we walked right into his trap. The fellow who came over to the table and talked to us was Jim Hobart. He knew me at first sight, and easily guessed what we were there for."

"And was Miss Coolidge here, too, sir?"

"Yes, she was; I had a talk with her that has mixed me all up, Sexton. She seems to be hand in glove with these fellows. But how did you suspect she was here?"

"I heard her voice, sir; up there somewhere, sir, soon after I come to my senses. She and some man went along outside. Sounded like he was makin' her go with him. I couldn't get much of what was said, but he sure talked awful rough, an' she seemed to be pleadin' with him. They wasn't there but just a minute, an' then, a little later, I heard an automobile start up."

"You have no idea how long ago this was?"

"No, I ain't sir. I been lyin' here about half dead, I guess, an' I don't seem to have known anything after that until those fellows come down here with the lantern. Were they hunting after you?"

"Yes; I outwitted them upstairs, and jumped from a window. But that is enough talk now; we'll go over the whole affair when we are safely away from this place. How is it? Do you think you can navigate?

Sexton responded by getting slowly to his feet. He trembled and was so uncertain, as he attempted to grope forward, that West grasped him firmly, helping him slowly toward the foot of the steps. The two crept up the stairs cautiously, and surveyed the cluttered-up yard as best they might in the dim light of the distant street lamp. It appeared entirely deserted, nor was there any evidence that the building above was occupied. No doubt lights were burning within, but if so the shades must have been drawn closely, allowing no reflection to escape. No better opportunity for evading notice could be hoped for, and West, alert now to every chance, made instant decision.

"They are all inside. Creep along behind that pile of lumber to where you see the hole in the fence. I'll be just behind you. That's the way."

The narrow alley was much lighter, yet still dark enough to conceal their movements, as they clung close to the deeper shadows. Except for an old cart it was unoccupied, the surface covered with ashes, so packed as to leave no trace of wheels. Ahead of them at the end of the block glowed the only street lamp visible. Sexton, by now largely recovered from his late experiences, broke into a run, *with West following from the immedi*ate neighborhood unseen. Suddenly Sexton stumbled, but arose almost instantly to his feet again, grasping something which gleamed like silver in his hand.

"Not hurt, are you?" asked West anxiously.

"No; what's this I found?"

The other took it impatiently.

"What is it? Why a small pocket knife, of course. Come on, man, don't stand mooning there." He slipped the article carelessly into his pocket.

"Where are you going?" Sexton panted, endeavoring to keep beside him. "Have you anything planned out?"

"Not very much; Milwaukee avenue first. There is sure to be an all-night restaurant somewhere in sight. Telephone for a taxi, don't dare to risk a street car, we both look too tough."

"Suppose they will follow us?"

"Hardly; they will have no idea which way we went, or how long we'll have been gone. Once we turn off this street, we'll be safe enough."

It was considerably past midnight when the two men finally reached the University club; they had lunched at an all-night restaurant, washed and made themselves as presentable as possible, yet were hardly recognizable as they entered the club lobby. Neither possessed a hat; Sexton was in his shirt sleeves, while West's coat clung to him in rags. Without waiting to explain anything to the servant in charge, except to state briefly that Sexton would be his guest for the night, the captain hurried into the waiting elevator, and accompanied by his companion, ascended to his apartment above.

The reaction from the excitement of the evening left Sexton dull and drowsy once he felt secure from any possible danger. His only desire was to lie quiet, and forget. Stretched out on a comfortable lounge, he fell asleep almost instantly, making no effort even to remove his clothes. West was of a different temperament, his mind far too active to find sleep possible. His only desire was to think, plan, decide upon some future course of action. With mind busy, forgetful of the very presence of his companion, he indulged in a bath, again dressed himself, and, lighting a cigar, settled back into an easy chair to fight the whole out alone with himself.

The mystery confronting him appeared more difficult of solution than ever. He was more thoroughly convinced than ever that Percival Coolidge had been murdered; that the act had been committed either by Hobart himself, or under his direction. He possessed no proof, however, nor could he figure out a motive for the crime. Who was this Jim Hobart? Was he in any way personally interested in the fortune left by Stephen Coolidge? Or did he hold any special relationship with the murdered man?

More important still, what peculiar influence did the fellow exert over the girl? Here was by far the deeper mystery, the one that troubled him most. The others seemed possible of explanation, but the sudden change in Natalie Coolidge was beyond all understanding.

Except in face, form, dress, outward appearance, she no longer seemed to West as being the same woman he had formerly known. His original interest in her had vanished; he had learned to distrust and doubt her sincerity and truth. Beyond all question she was openly playing an important part in this tragedy under Hobart's direction, but for the life of him he could not figure out to what end. Still the very mystery of it had its fascination. While he felt no longer any special desire to serve her, to further risk his life in her cause, yet he experienced a fierce determination to learn what all this really meant; to uncover the object these conspirators had in view. If Natalie was involved it could not be helped, she would have to suffer with the rest; his own duty was clear.

Yet how could he begin action? What clew did he possess which could be followed? Practically none. Before morning, that saloon on Wray street would unquestionably be deserted, except perhaps by its proprietor, and Mike would simply deny everything. Two possibilities remained; the police might have some record of the fellow, might know his favorite haunts, even be able to locate his next probable hiding place. If not, the only hope remaining would seem to be Natalie Coolidge. She would undoubtedly return to Fairlawn; was probably there already, and, by shadowing her, the whereabouts of Hobart would surely be revealed either sooner or later.

But possibly there was a quicker way to learn their purpose than by thus seeking to find either. If it was the Coolidge fortune which was at stake, why not endeavor to learn in whose trust it was being held, and what steps were being taken to safeguard it? He could explain the nature of his interest to an attorney, and be advised how to proceed. Determined to take all three steps the first thing next day, West rested back comfortably in the chair, already half asleep. One hand rested in his pocket, and as his fingers fumbled some object there, he suddenly recalled the knife Sexton had found in the alley.

He drew the article forth curiously, and looked at it under the glow of the electric light—it was a small silver-handled penknife, such as a lady might carry, a rather strange thing to be discovered in a dirt alley back of Wray street. The incongruity struck him forcibly, and he sat up, wide awake once more, seeking for some mark of identification on the polished handle. There was none, not an inscription of any kind, but he noted that the single slender blade did not fit closely down into its place. He opened it idly to learn the cause—beneath appeared the white gleam of tightly folded paper.

CHAPTER XI

What the Telephone Told.

All West's indifference vanished instantly. He had to pry the paper out, so closely had it been wedged in beneath the closed blade, and it required a moment in which to straighten it out so that the writing was discernible. Even then the marks were so faint, and minute, he could not really decipher them until he made use of a magnifying glass lying on the desk. A woman's hand, using a pencil, had hastily inscribed the words on a scrap of common paper, apparently torn from some book—the inspiration of an instant, perhaps a sudden hope born of desperation. He fairly had to dig the words out, letter by letter, copying them on an old envelope until he had the message complete: "Please notify police to search Seminole quick."

West read this over, word by word, again and again. What did it mean? Did it mean anything? Had it any possible connection with the case in which he was interested? There was no signature, nothing to guide him; yet in some way the plea sounded real, was a cry of distress, an appeal for help. It could be given no other meaning, yet how long had it been lying there in the alley? Not any great length of time surely, for the polished silver was far too conspicuous to escape notice. It must have been dropped during the night, within a very short time of its discovery. But what did the words signify? "Notify police" was clear enough, but "search Seminole" meant absolutely nothing. What was "Seminole"—an apartment house? A hotel? A saloon? Perhaps the police would know; evidently the writer so believed, or she would never have used the name with such confidence. A familiar name to her, she assumed that the police would have no difficulty in instantly locating the place meant. The haste with which the message had apparently been written, its short, sharp words, bespoke urgent need, the consciousness of imminent peril. Plainly the writer had used the only means at hand in a hurried desperate effort to gain assistance.

"The police." The request had been for the police; then why not appeal to the police? Why not take the note now directly to headquarters, and let them help solve its mystery? At first West hesitated, yet a moment's thought convinced him this would be the logical course to pursue. His appealing to the police need not necessarily involve any disclosure relative to the Coolidge matter. He had found this note accidentally in an alley in the northwest section of the city; his being there need require no special explanation; he did not understand its meaning, and consequently he placed it in their hands. That all sounded natural enough.

He looked at Sexton, who was sleeping soundly, and decided not to awaken the man. He had no use for his services just now; the City hall was only a few blocks away, and he might not be out more than an hour himself. He would leave a note so that if by any chance he should be delayed, Sexton would understand what had occurred. He scratched this off hastily, placed it in a conspicuous place, and swiftly departed, after extinguishing the light. He was no longer conscious of fatigue, or the pain of bruises, his mind eager to learn the meaning of this new discovery.

It had been a quiet night at the City Hall station, and West encountered no difficulty in reaching the presence of the lieutenant in charge. The officer who had opened the door to the inner office said rather doubtfully:

"This guy wants to see you personally, sir; he wouldn't talk to no one else."

"All right, Slavin; shut the door, and I'll hear what he has to say. What is it, my man?"

West explained swiftly and clearly, his manner of speech, as well as his statement as to who he was, evidently making a favorable impression on his listener. He took the note, spread it out on the desk, and studied it carefully.

"Looks genuine enough," he commented at last, "but not very clear. I don't know any place in this town called Seminole. Wait a minute, though; perhaps one of the boys may have an idea."

He pressed a button on top of the desk, and in response to the summons, a side door opened, and a man in plain clothes entered.

"You rang, sir?"

"Yes, McAdams; this gentleman here—"

"Captain West, as I am a sinner!" he exclaimed. "Gee! but I am glad to see you again, old man! Say. By Gad! you don't remember me."

"Oh, but I certainly do, Mac," and West grasped the extended hand heartily. "It's a devil of a surprise, that's all. Saw you last at Brest, the day you sailed for home. So this was your job, sergeant?"

"Been with the department ever since I was a kid. Put me in plain clothes since I came back. Lieutenant, this is Captain West, officer across the pond with the engineers; we were buddies for about two months. What was wanted, sir?"

"Well, Captain West has just been telling me a rather peculiar story, and wanted some information I thought perhaps you could give; you know the old town right better than I do. First of all, do you recall any crook by the name of Hobart—Jim Hobart?"

"Hobart? Hobart? No, not off hand, I don't. How old a man is he, Captain?"

"Middle-aged, anyway; an active fellow enough, but his hair is quite gray."

"Do you know where he hangs out?"

"The last I saw of him was in a saloon known as Mike's place over on Wray street."

"Off Milwaukee; yes, I know. Mike is a big Pole, but has never had any serious trouble so far as I know. However, being there is no special recommendation to a guy, but I don't believe this man Hobart has been pulled since I've been on the force."

"Look him up in the index, Mac." McAdams drew out a thick volume from a nearby cabinet, and ran his fingers swiftly down a long column of names, indexed under the letter "H." Suddenly he stopped, with an exclamation.

"The lad is here all right—government offense, fifteen years ago, third arrest; mugged number 28113. Let's look him up, and see if he is the same man. Come over here, Captain."

"Is that the fellow?" he asked.

West studied the face seriously.

"Yes, I believe it is, Mac," he said at length. "He looks much older now, but those are his features all right. What was his game?"

"'Con' mostly, according to the record; only one conviction though, two years in Detroit for using the mails to defraud. Oh, yes, here is something different, 'assault with intent to kill'—indeterminate sentence to Joliet for that. Nothing heard of him since. So he is back, and at the old game again. Do you want him brought in, Captain?"

"No, not yet. I haven't anything against the man now but a suspicion, I wanted to learn his record, that's all. This inquiry was only incidental. What I'm really interested in just at present is something I picked up in the alley back of Mike's place three or four hours ago. It's a note in a woman's handwriting, and when I found it, it was hidden in a small silver penknife, such as a lady might carry."

"There is a woman in it, then?"

"Yes; but I haven't got things hitched up sufficiently to talk about it. The note itself is blind."

"In what respect?"

"Well, here it is. Can you make it out? I'll read it for you—'Please notify police to search Seminole quick.'"

"No signature?"

"None."

"But that is plain enough, isn't it?"

"Yes, if you know what she meant by Seminole; what is it? A street? An apartment house? A saloon? Do you know of anything under that name?"

McAdams stood motionless thinking.

"No, by thunder, I don't," he admitted reluctantly. "There is no street of that name in the city. There used to be a shady hotel over on Ontario street called 'The Seminole,' but that was torn down ten years ago. I never heard of any other, did you, Dave?"

"No," answered the lieutenant slowly, sucking away at a cigar. "Maybe it's the name of a boat—seems to me I've heard some such name before, but I don't just recollect where."

"A boat! Well, that's a straw, anyway, and worth looking up." Mac picked up the telephone. "Who is on at the harbor master's office this time of night?"

"Winchell, usually, and he'll have a record there."

The detective jiggled the receiver impatiently.

"Yes, this is police headquarters calling. Give me the harbor master's office, please. Oh, is this you, Dan? Bob McAdams speaking. Do you know of any boat on the lakes called the Seminole? What's that? A lumber schooner at Escanaba? Never makes this port, you say? And you don't know of any other by that name? Sure, I'll hold the wire; look it up."

"Not a very promising lead," he said over his shoulder, "but Dan will have the dope for us in a minute."

He suddenly straightened up, the receiver at his ear.

"I didn't quite get that, Dan. A medium-sized yacht, you say? Where is it? Oh, at the Jackson Park lagoon. I see, and who did you say owned it? Coolidge? What Coolidge? Exactly; the fellow who killed himself out south. Hold the wire."

He swung about to face West. "This mean anything to you?"

"It surely does," eagerly. "The girl I spoke of was Natalie Coolidge. By all the gods, we are on the right track."

"All right, Dan," resuming his conversation. "What's that? Coolidge had the boat up the river a few weeks ago trying to sell it. That's how you happened to remember the name—I see. Say, is there any one out at Jackson park I could talk to at this hour? Who? Oh, yes, the life saving station. Sure: somebody will be on duty there. Thanks, old man—good night."

He hung the receiver upon the hook, and reached for the telephone directory.

"Some luck, I say. Jackson park—oh, yes, here it is. All right, Central; sure, that is the proper number. This is the City Hall police headquarters again; hustle it up, please. Hullo, Jackson Park life-saving station? Good; this is McAdams speaking from the city detective bureau. Is there a yacht out there in the lagoon called the Seminole? belongs to a man named Coolidge; medium-sized boat, with gas engine. Yes; what's that? Not there now; went out into the lake about two hours ago. The h—ll it did! Who was aboard? do you know? Say that again; oh, you wasn't on watch when she sailed; your partner said what? Three men and a women. All right, yes, I got it. Say now, listen; this is a police matter, so keep your eyes open. It will be daylight pretty soon, and if you get sight of that boat, call up the City Hall station at once. Do you get me?"

He wheeled about, smiling whimsically.

"It's on again, off again, Flannigan. We had it, and we have it not. Dave, I am getting interested; I feel the lure of the chase. Can you spare me for a day or two? You can? Good enough; we'll comb the lakes until we find out who is sailing aboard the Seminole. You're with me, old man?"

West extended his hand silently, and the fingers of the two clasped in a mutual pledge.

PTON FIGHTS RULING

e Hampton high school has been ended from the state high school etic association by the state rd of control. The period of susnsion is indefinite. It may be two ks and it may be three months.
e bone of contention is Paul Davis, who was allowed to play on the football team. Davis is a son of Byon Davis, who resides about three miles east of Hampton. Young Davis, a year ago, quit the Hansell school, which is about two and a half miles from the Davis home. Davis had first intended to attend school in another county, but his parents urged him to remain closer to their home, so he finally decided to come to Hampton.

Davis never played football before, and he wants it to be understood that he was not urged to come to Hampton by any school officer, or by any other person, for the purpose of taking part in athletics of any kind.

Under the athletic rules a student is all[illegible] four years in athletics, but th[illegible] state that no person can en[illegible] athletics during the first semester, unless his parents or guardian move to the district where he is attending school. In this case the parents of young Davis gave him his own time, and he was his own boss. Superintendent Cecil took the position that as long as he had quit the Hansell school and did not intend to return there whether he came to Hampton or not, and the further fact that he had been given his own time, he was eligible to take part in athletics. Many other school men in the state take the same view of the matter.

When Jim Shearer, the famous Iowa high school football star went from Hampton to Mason City to attend school and play foot ball, the state board never batted an eye. When Rollin Stonebrook went from Hampton two years ago to Eldora and played football on the Eldora team the state board again failed to discover any infraction of this rule, and in this case the superintendent of schools at Eldora notified the state board of the matter, and Eldora was not kicked out of the association, and neither was Stonebrook barred from playing. Stonebrook went to Eldora of his own free will and accord, and he was not paid to go there by Eldora. His parents resided in Hampton then and they do yet, and this year Stonebrook is back in school at Hampton and playing on the team here.

The Hampton high school team played Osage last Saturday, without Davis on the team, and it was a great victory from one of the strongest teams of the state. That is evidence again that Hampton did not need Davis and had no reason to solicit him to attend school here just to play foot ball.—Chronicle.

A. G. Pribbenow of Hampton was a business caller here Tuesday. He says Hampton is wild over the barring of their football team, and are going to carry the matter to the last ditch.

GOODELL NEWS NOTES

Last Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Dan Miller, who was in the hospital at Hampton came home. It will be some time before she will be able to do any work.

Miss Maude Griggs spent the latter part of the week with her sister, Mrs. J. J. Cook.

Thursday, last Mrs. John Ahrenkeil who has been visiting in Cedar Rapids, Waterloo and Iowa Falls, came home.

Elmer Schnieder and Elmer Anderson came home Friday from Omaha where they purchased two cars of feeding cattle.

On Thursday night Mr Ray gave an interesting lecture and picture show on the work of the Modern Woodmen of America. The past week he has been active in endeavoring to secure new members for the organization.

Mrs. Mary McNutt spent the larger part of the week at Garner with Mr. and Mrs. Earl Clark.

Since Mr. Engeseth closed out his dry goods store many people are compelled to go to Belmond or Garner to buy their groceries..

Mr. Church of Belmond was in town Monday.

The banks will now be able to give their customers the market of the day, and the news of the world, while the employees will without question be "listening in" every evening. Westinghouse outfits are sold by J. W. Scott of the Battery Station, who also installs them. Some very fine results have been secured of late. As the weather gets colder and the atmosphere clearer of interference, the concerts come in splendidly. Monday evening the Battery Station-Independent set was hooked up to a horn, and New York, Atlanta, Denver, Canada and a dozen others were heard all over the room by those present. The owners of this set invite you to drop in any evening and listen to the many fine programs being broadcasted from all parts of the country.

EXPECT TO PAY BONUS ABOUT JANUARY FIR

State Bonus Board Hopes A ual Payment Can Start By Or Before Then.

The hope that actual payment of the state bonus may be started about January 1 was expressed by members of the state bonus board, following a meeting where further plans for speeding up the work were formulated.

"It is contemplated that the bonds will be sold, the money available and the organization perfected on or about January 1," said Adjutant General L. O. Lasher, acting secretary of the board.

The adjutant general pointed out that the board had no authority to provide the necessary blanks, forms, etc., until after the vote is canvassed by the state board and that no payments can be made until the bonds are sold and the money becomes available.

After the blanks are printed, distributed, filled out and returned to the bonus board they will have to be verified and checked from the official record of the applicant.

Adjutant General Lasher said that correspondence relative to where how and when application blanks may be obtained will not be answered as the board has no office force as yet to handle such matters. It is considered likely that a permament secretary will be employed within a few days.

Every person, male and female, including army and navy marine corps nurses who served in the military or navay service of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917 and November 11, 1918, and who at the time of entering such service was a resident of the state of Iowa, and who was honorably separated from such service, or has been retired or has been furloughed to a reserve, shall be entitled to receive fifty cents for each day in active service. Judging Team Training

Professor Beanblossom of the animal husbandry department at Ames is in Wright county this week giving special attention to the training of our boys who will represent the good old state of Iowa in the International Junior Live Stock judging contest, which will be held in Chicago December 1. Prof. Beanblossom and the county agent are making the trips with the boys to the various purebred livestock farms of the county where they are working over the classes in the different breeds in order that the boys may have first hand training in sizing up the important points in these different animals. The boys have been handicapped to some extent because of the busy corn husking season. In order to get this special training it has been necessary for the boys to desert the corn picking work and give their attention to the judging work.

On Friday of this week the county agent and the boys will make a trip to the college at Ames where they will have opportunity to work over the high class stuff which is being fitted for the International Live Stock Show at Chicago. Here the oys are to receive special instruc- in the live stock judging work Professor H. H Kildee and men who are in charge of the l husbandry work at Ames. trip is being made in response invitation which was received from Professor Kildee, the the animal husbandry de- nt at the college. It is hoped he boys will get valueable point while at Ames and put on the shing touches for the judging con- at Chicago.

Dairy Industry Growing

There seems to be a growing interest in the dairy business in Wright county as well as other sections of Iowa. In the past year there have been several carloads of dairy cattle shipped into Belmond for distribution in the surrounding territory. The farmers near Belmond are becoming interested in the returns which are being realized from their dairy products.

There seems to be a growing interest in the dairy work all over Iowa and the farmers are beginning to realize that there is a steady income from the sale of dairy products. It is a very noticable fact that the farm communities which have been most prosperous in the past two years are the communities where dairying has been carried on to a greater or less extent.

While Iowa was taking a slump to the downward trend of prices on corn and other grains, as well as live stock, the dairy farmers of Wisconsin were sitting "pretty" because of the steady and certain income from the sale of dairy products.

Wright county is not essentially a dairy community but many farmers and business men have expressed the opinion that the farmers of our county could devote more attention to the dairy industry with profitagle results. While most of our farms are being operated for the production of corn, hogs and beef there seems to be a growing feeling that more time could be spent to an advantage in producing dairy cattle on our Wright county farms.

A number of banks in our county have indicated their willingness to co-operate to the utmost with the farmers in getting dairy cattle into the community and there is no doubt but what this will result in more farmers becoming interested in dairy work and will eventually mean larger returns from our Wright county farms in the form of dairy products.

Miss Huber In The County

Miss Bertha Huber, clothing specialist from the extension department at Ames is still holding meetings in the various townships of the county. The information which is being given out by Miss Huber seems to be as interesting and instructive as if we had a regular demonstration agent. Indeed, the ladies of the county realize the value of the work which is being demonstrated at these meetings.

In conducting these demonstrations or training schools thruout the county Miss Huber plans to have one lady from each school district within the township take the information on to the ladies of that particular school district. According to Miss Huber, the lades of each township will be able to conduct the home demonstration work in their own communities without having a home demonstration agent work full time within the county.

This system of conducting training schools within the county is being used thruout the state and quite satisfactory results are being obtained. This facilitates a system of cooperation among the farm women. By taking the course of instruction and conducting their own meetings in the future the farm women will be able to carry on the demonstrations in the home community without outside help

Healthy Hog To Bring Premium

A short time ago the National Live Stock Exchange at its annual convention held in Kansas City passed a resolution urging all packing companies to agree to pay ten cents per hundred weight more for hogs that come from counties where cattle have all been freed from tuberculosis. The packers have always been heartily in favor of eradicating this disease from cattle and indirectly thus free the hogs of the country from the malady, but so far the man who has delivered hogs free from tuberculosis has received no more for his stock than the man whose herd was affected with this disease.

There has been no practical way it seems to favor the man with the healthy animals because tuberculosis has been so widespread. The result has been as in all such cases, that the man with the clean stock suffered equally with the man who handles diseased stuff, unless the animals are so badly affected with the disease that they can be discovered before killing.

Now Chicago packers have come out with a definite guaranty, at least several of the packers have—Armour, Swift, Morris, Wilson, Cudahy, Independent Packing Company, Miller & Hart, Roberts & Cope and Agar—that at Chicago they will pay a premium of ten cents per hundredweight on any carload of hogs shipped by any farmer or producer who guarantees thru his commission company that said hogs are free from tuberculosis. The hogs will sell on the market in the usual way. If after they are slaughtered it is found that they are free from tuberculosis so the owners will be paid the ten cents premium in addition to the regular price. "

This is a distinct step in advance and should be appreciated especially by men who now have tuberculosis free herds of cattle even though their entire county is not cleaned up. Their hogs shipped in caroads will be entitled to the bonus, subject to inspection at the time of slaughter. For years it has been the contention of those interested in eradicating bovine tuberculosis that when this great task is finally accomplished it will mean an increase in the price of hogs and this agreement on the part of the packers is a practical demonstration that those contentions will materialize.

The tremendous loss of hogs due to tuberculosis has never been borne by the packer On the contrary, he has known from past experience what percentage of the hogs he buys is affected with the disease and what percentage has to be condemned to the rendering tanks and he has figured this as a part of the regular expense of running his business and has paid accordingly.

Feeding For Egg Production

The first essential in feeding for egg production is, of course, the use of a well balanced, palatiable ration. There are, however, many different mixtures, or mashes, which if fed intelligently will give equally good results. Therefore each flock owner will wsh to find out which is the most economical mash and grain mixture to use.

It is advisable to have the poultry ration as simples as possible, that is to limit the kinds of grain used to such as will be available the year around. If you do this there will be less danger of running out of some of them during the year.

A change in the ration and particularly a sudden one, usually results in a decided slump in egg production and will throw many of the birds into a molt at certain seasons of the year.

Most economical gains:—Corn and oats are on the average the most economical grains to use, both in the scratch mixture, to feed in the straw litter, and in making up dry mash

Wheat in the ration:—Wheat is an excellent poultry feed, but should not be made an important item if its market value is too much in excess of that of corn. In the scratch ration given below wheat can be made to take the place of one-half or less of the corn. However, some wheat at least is advisable in feeding chicks

Barley in the ration:—A little barley can be used in the scratch feed but not very much as the hulls are rather tough.

The following ration is recommended on Poster No. 19 and is giving excellent results:

Ration No. 2:—Mash, 200 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds ground corn, 100 barrels tankage (60 per cent.)

Scratch feed, 200 pounds shelled corn, 100 pounds oats.

This is probably one of the lowest priced balanced rations that can be recommended, and is one of the most practical rations we can recommend for farm conditions.

Shipping Association Conference

On Thursday and Friday, November 16th and 17th, a livestock shipping association conference was held at the chamber of commerce in Mason City, when the officers, managers and members of ten counties of northern Iowa met to discuss the problems connected with the shipping of livestock from that section of the state.

The first day of the conference was spent in the study of the uniform system of records which is used by the various associations thruout the state Interesting lectures on livestock market problems were also given by Professors Thompson, Hammans and Cady from the market department of the extension service at Ames.

The forenoon of the second day of the conference was spent at the Decker Packing company plant where actual demonstratons were given on the different market cuts. A clean cut comparison was made between the different grades of carcasses and it was demonstrated to these men the great difference in prices when this meat is sold by the retail merchant.

Our local county agent and E. W. Campbell, secretary of the Clarion Shipping association attended this conference on Friday. Other counties represented at this conference were Cerro Gordo, Hancock, Franklin, Floyd, Worth, Palo Alto, and Kossuth.

Vol. 1 BELMOND, IOWA, NOVEMBER 23, 1922 No. 37

Mr. W. D. Schlieffarth, the man with the motor equipped farm has just added another high grade machine to his excellent equipment—A PRIMROSE BALL BEARING MOTOR-DRIVEN CREAM SEPARATOR. Ask Walter about his cream test.

It is indeed with great interest that we hear of our good farmers stocking their farms with high grade dairy cattle. We have just heard that Mr. Wm. Boelman of Pleasant township has added some new stock to his herd and also that Baker Brothers of Belmond township have headed their already fine herd with the champion bull of Hardin county. A fine animal weighing 1800 pounds, just purchased from the State Industrial School at Eldora.

Get into the game—milk cows—and then be sure and get all the cream by using a Primrose Separator.

Put "snap" into your work—don't work the "snap."

Enclosed Crank Cases

An enclosed crank case on an engine is like insurance—it protects. Of course, you can't buy insurance for an engine from us, but when you buy an International Kerosene Engine you buy the two together, because the enclosed crank case on the International protects it against dust, dirt and weather, and prolongs its life. That kind of insurance and protection is money in your pocket. It means that you will have a constant and unfailing source of power to handle all the odd jobs about the farm at a very low cost. The hired man can get other work this winter, and at more money than you can afford to pay him when an International horse-and-a-half does it for 3 cents an hour. Also built in 3, 6, and 10 horse power. Let us show them to you.

Lots of folks never get anywhere because they use all their elbow grease on their wishbones instead of their elbows.

Fall And Wnter Spreading

The weather man is giving farmers the best opportunity in the world to increase the productiveness of their soil. Our pleasant fall weather has made it possible for hundreds of farmers to spread manure during the last few weeks. Indications are that we will have more nice weather. It is a foresighted policy to build up crop yields with an International Manure Spreader, by putting the manure on your fields finely, evenly, uniformly. Manure spread on your fields today will immediately start working for you next spring and you will not have that additional work on your hands when the seed-bed-making and planting season is so short. Get your International Roller-Bearing Manure Spreader from us now and be ready to put your seed into rich and fertile soil.

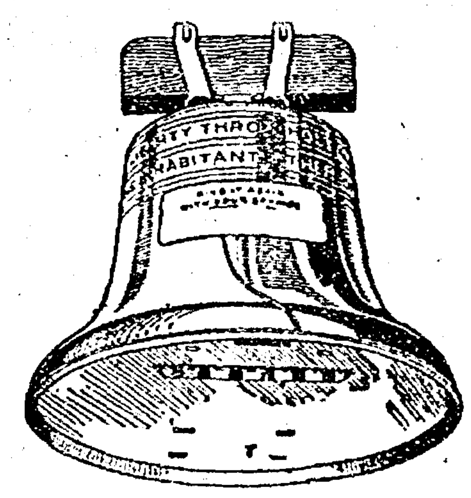
A. J. Nissen is another to install a radio outfit within the past week. He is getting good results also. Others are contemplating getting outfits in the near future.

There is but little change in this week's styles in women's attire—only enough to require new gowns.

Mrs. L. B. Hulsebus and sister Alma went to Iowa City last Monday where the latter is receiving treatments from a specialist.



What Will Your Boy Be 30 Years From Now?

NO doubt, your earnest hope is---"A son I can be proud of; a good citizen, respected by everyone for his spleneid character."

And what builds CHARACTER? No factor perhaps so much as being a SAVER. A Saving Account promotes self-respect, self reliance; it begets confidence, not only of the saver himself but of others. It promotes all the other good qualities that go to make up CHARACTER. Your boy or girl will be a better citizen, a better mother; thirty years from now, if you do YOUR part TODAY. See to it that they are started on the right road, and the RIGHT road is the THRIFT road.

COMING WEST

Leaving Meservey on Sept 24 between 5 and 6 o'clock in the morning for the east, by way of Sheffield, Hampton, Dumont, Parkersburg, Cedar Falls, Waterloo, Clinton, Cedar Rapids to Grand Mound, where I stayed all night. Roads fine, and lots of detouring. Leaving Grand Mound lots of dust, alternating a stretch of gravel; graded dirt roads for about [illegible] miles. Breakfast at Clinton, then [illegible] Chicago, Ill. At Sterling, Ill., [illegible] fan belt came off. A puntchure [illegible] the radiator laid me up two and [illegible] lf hours at Dixon. From Dixon to [illegible] on the Lincoln highway to [illegible] Chicago all night. Most- [illegible] brick and macadimized [illegible] few stretches of gravel. [illegible] go in the morning, thru [illegible] and Michigan Boulevard to [illegible] Heights, then to South Bend, [illegible] Ligoner to Shurobusco. [illegible] ed there all night leaving in [illegible] orning for Ft. Wayne, then to [illegible] by way of upper Sandusky, [illegible] yrus, to Mansfield. Stayed there [illegible] night leaving in the morning for [illegible] ooster, Ohio. Scenery fine; rolling country, most all lime stone rock; cars are white as paint from the dust they gather. You can tell from the dust they have been in Ohio. Went to Olvisburg, Ashland to Canton, O. From there to Freedom, Pa., where I stayed all night. Put the car in a garage, then couldn't find a place to sleep. Hunted high and low. The only thing I could do was to go back to Rochester by street car and slept in the next town. Left Rochester in the morning for Freedom, got my car, and beat it for Beaver. Brick and stone roads the entire distance down the river to Pittsburg. East to McGee port, then to Bedford, staying there all night. Brick and macadimized roads thru hills and farming country and mining country over a high range of the mountains. Many heavy climbs were interesting; many fine views cannot be seen. Left Bedford in the morning for McCollinsburg, to Chambersburg to Gettysburg, where I stayed that night with my brother Walter S. Smith. Sunday p. m. for Taneytown Mr., to my mother's, for that welcome handshake. I had not seen her for a long time. It was a great surprise to her and the boys, as they did not know I was coming.

Made many friends and met so many of my old school chums and girls, of my boyhood days. To visit them all would take three months.

Gettysburg is one of the finest historic spots I ever saw. I would advise every boy and girl to visit the old battle field if they get the opportunity.

Leaving Taneytown Oct. 22, Saturday p. m., I went to Gettysburg, saying hello to many old friends at a place where I worked a good many years ago. The battle grounds are southwest of the city, covering about 25 miles of monuments, marked with all the important points where Lincoln made his famous speech. Left on Sunday morning from my brothers' for the west. Got as far as Laughinton, Pa., when I had a break down, tearing the rear gears out of the car going up the 16 mile grade in the mountains. Fixed the car up. If I ever got stung I got it there. Two prices for one job. There ought to be a law to prevent overcharging just because you are from another state He will be remembered by all, not to stop there. I stayed at the Lincoln Tea Room while waiting for the car to be put in order. Those people surely did treat me fine, it was the same as home to me, such friendly folks. Their assistance will never be forgotten by me.

Left Laughinton Oct. 25 for the west again. Car was in good shape, and arrived at Pittsburg in the morning, staying all night in East Canton, O. Hit a bridge that night, but did not injure me at all. The other fellow's car was badly smashed up. Three-fourths of a mile from this bridge three girls and two boys were killed by a freight.

Left East Canton in the morning for Elkhart, Ind. Stayed there all night, and left the next morning for Chicago. It's a short cut to Joliet. It was here I ran short of funds, which were sent me on short notice. Caused by overcharging me when I broke down. Went farther staying at New Lenox, Ill., from Saturday noon until Tuesday morning with a farmer. Left Tuesday a. m. for Joliet and passed thru Aurora to Geneva, Ill., then to Clintin, Iowa. Got as far as Whetland, Iowa, where I stayed all night. Next morning rain, and it was rain all day. Went to Tipton by train and back to Whetland that p. m. Left the next morning for Cedar Rapids, Waterloo, Cedar Falls, plowing mud all day. Only a few miles of good roads. Stayed at Cedar Falls for the night. Left there for Hampton and from Hampton to Meservey. Only a few miles of good roads.

Maryland has an abundant crop of fruit such as apples, and peas. Corn crop is also very good. Apples are selling for 35 cents to a dollar for choice lots per bushel.

Maryland has good roads; transportation of livestock is mostly done by trucks to market. Cars in the state must have two license cards. Only the state of Maryland requires them, no other state needs them.

If you want to know the rest, ask Harry T, he will tell you. The citizens of Meservey were predicting that Harry T. would never return with his old 1913 tin Lizzie, but I did, and Lizzie returned together with me, altho a little warm due to bad roads. But the eyes of a great many were almost in their vest pocket when I arrived with the old tin Lizzie. She is entitled to a new set of tires, but with only a little tightening up of different parts Lizzie will go to Maryland again.

Expenses For The Trip

3,000 miles, 140 gallons gas, 35 qts oil 2 lbs. grease. The price of gas ranged from 21c to 35c, oil from 15c to 25c a quart. Meals ranged from 35c to $1.25. Repairs on car $35.00. One puncture on the way, two on the way back. Rooms ranged from $1.25 to 50c a night.

The people of Meservey ought to be proud of the shop I have here. On my journey I viewed a great many blacksmith shops and saw none that will the one I have here. Eastern shops have only a sway-backed anvil and a claw hammer for forging, and a common punch for a drill, and are not caring. When showing the village blacksmith back home a photo of the interior of my shop, they tho't it took a millionaire to maintain such a shop. They thought the western states were only wilderness.

Meservey has nothing on Harry T., from the ladies' friendship to automobiles. But I have one on Meservey. The old saying is a blacksmith has a weak mind and a strong back, but I can run a 1913 Lizzie 4,000 miles and return wth the same 1913 Lizzie. I thank the people of Meservey and vicinity for their past patronage and for having good patience during my absence while I was away to see my mother. I thank you for your future patronage. Let us all be friends as I will be on the job from now on.

With best wishes to all,

HARRY T. SMITH

Nearly 75,000 children in the 885 schools of Iowa are enrolled in the Junior Red Cross, and are learning early to carry out successfully many different types of social service in a way that would do credit to their elders. The Des Moines school children can well be proud, as they are of the $4,000 they made or saved by some sacrifice that the destitute children in far away Albania might be mothered by Red Cross. Now those forlorn children the Red Cross Commission found in Tirana, Albania, are able to go to a vocational school that begins as a playground. This school has become such a model one that the Albanian government is using it as an example of what other Albanian schools should be.

In disaster preparedness organization, in Soldier Service, in first aid, and life saving instructon on a country-wide scheme, in the wide distribution of first aid kits, in its county nurse actvities and nutrition instruction, Iowa chapters write a large record of accomplishments with a varied program.

Those absent last week were Amy Azeltine, James Kercheval, Dale Hiam and Walter Barker

Elsie Halbrook is in school after her visit with her parents in Missouri

There was some outside work done on the school building last week.

The basket ball games at Williams Friday, were very pepy and a good game was played by each team. The Rowan girls came out victorious after a stiff fight, the score being 21-10. The girls' game was refereed by Mr. Wagner of Williams. The boys' score stood 11-15 in favor of Williams. The Rowan boys, however, played a fine game. The boys game was refereed by a man from Williams.

There will be a Literary program given in the school house Wednesday afternoon Nov 29. The program will be given as follows:

Roll call: Thanksgiving quotations.
Impromtu.
Quintet: Marie Hinckley, Cleo Duffy, Clara Azeltine, Bonnie Thomas, and Gladys Whitten.
Recitations: Dale Farren.
Essay: Clesson Azeltine.
Thanksgiving play.
Critic: Supt. Holliday.
Adjournment.

Ruth Emerson was absent Friday of last week having gone to Iowa Falls to a Cong. conference.

Orchestra practice was held at the home of Miss Mernice Hansen Monday evening.

Miss Osetrhus visited high sschool for a short time Monday morning.

The basket ball teams go to Goodell next Friday Nov. 24, where they will play their 3rd game for this season.

Rowan Methodist Church Notes

10 Sunday school. 11 Public worship, sermon topic "Sentiment." 6:30 p. m. Epworth League 7:30 p m Evening

If you have no church relations, and have no church home, you are cordially invited to these services. You are always welcome.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church will hold a special sale in the pavilion on Saturday, December 2. This will be in place of the regular Christmas sale. The ladies are making special plans for this time and hope to put on a real good time. There will be, besides produce, etc. many articles and foodstuffs., fancy candies. We hope that you will plan to with us.

There is a likelihood this year of holding a Thankagiving Service on the eve of Thanksgiving day, that is, Wednesday, Nov. 29th. This service which be a united one will be held in the Congragational Church. It is hoped that the people will turn out in large numbers and give gratitude to the giver of every good and perfect gift.

The Standard Bearers of the M. E. Church, under the supervision of Mrs. Guy Sheldon and Mrs. Harold Tomkinson had charge of the program in the church last Sunday evening. The chief attraction of the service was a sketch called "Not Exempt". In addition to the playlet there were other musical selections. Those taking part in the program were Bernice Hansen, Lillian, Clara, and Amy Azeltine, Anna and Nina Rietz, Catharine Harsen, Grace Holiday, Hazel Utz, Della Langdon, Lorene Liming, Sophe Eason, Garnet Stumph Gladys Whitten, Gladys Cupp, Irene Steffens, Luverne Simons, Lile and Bonnie Thomas, Irene Webber, Joan Mossman. Superintendent Holiday led in prayer and read the scriptures.

The pastor of the Methodist Church spoke very highly of a strong address to which he listened recently at Britt, by Prof. Vassie, Superintendent of Public Education in Mason City. Prof. Vassie spoke on, "What the Public School expects from the Church". He strongly emphasized the fact that the church and public school are co-partners in the great task of building citizenship.

Rowan Congregational Church Notes

The Ladies Aid will hold their annual sale and chicken pie supper in the church basement on Sat., Nov. 25. Sale of articles to begin at 3 p. m. Supper at 6 p m. Supper 35c.

The Misses Francis Farren, Frances Virden, Ruth and Esther Emerson were in Iowa Falls from Friday until Monday attending a Regional conference of young people which was held in the Congregational Church at that place. Among the speakers of note were Miss Sarah Field of Kobe College Japan, and also Marion E. Hall of Japan; Miss Frances Patterson field worker of Chicago and Royal C. Montgomery of Grinnell, Director of Religions Education.

The pastors sermon to the children Sunday morning was "What Iowa thinks". If you were not among those who listened to this talk you too would have been delighted as were those present. "Our Accountability" was the sermon to adults. Miss LaVonne Ballou rendered beautifully, The Name of Jesus

STAR THEATRE

Wednesday Nov. 22, a seven-reel picture "His Own Law," with Hobart Bosworth. A story of a code of honor stronger than written law, of two men who loved the same girl, an amazing clash of love and loyalty, a two-fisted story of acton

Saturday, Nov. 25, a five-reel picture "Her Winning Way," by Mary Miles Minter.

Watch for the dates of the picture to be given for the benefit of both the Cong. and M. E. Aid societies, and boost for the ladies.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Answering an advertisement calling for a young man willing to engage in service of danger, Matthew West, ex-service man just returned from France, where he had been captain of engineers, meets Natalie Coolidge, writer of the advertisement, and without being instructed as to his probable duties, is engaged by her, and that same evening introduced to her friends as her fiance.

CHAPTER II.—That night, in the Coolidge home, West is startled by the appearance in his room of a young woman, whom he takes to be Natalie, but who escapes before he can be sure. Next morning Natalie tells West she has been troubled by some woman, apparently her double, who has been impersonating her.

CHAPTER III.—Percival Coolidge, Natalie's uncle [illegible]d guardian, apparently [illegible] disgruntled [illegible] West's appearance as [illegible]atalie's fiance [illegible]nd the feeling of antag[illegible]ism is mutu[illegible] Natalie, Coolidge, and [illegible]est plan a vis[illegible] of charity to a poor and [illegible]te secti[illegible] the city.

[illegible]e party's return to [illegible]atalie informs West [illegible]n in her suspicions [illegible]uble," and that she [illegible]ed for his services. [illegible]ut helpless. He leaves.

[illegible]On his way out of the [illegible]ars a revolver shot, and [illegible]e finds Percival Coolidge [illegible]y a suicide. The inquest [illegible] In the city West is visited [illegible] old servant of the Coolidges, tells him he has been ab[illegible]sed, for no apparent reason. [illegible] as his belief that Coolidge [illegible]d, and about convinces West [illegible]R VII.—Sexton has overheard [illegible]e conversation in the Coolidge [illegible] which a man demands Natalie's [illegible] immediately. He gives an ad[illegible]d with Sexton, West, his suspi[illegible] things not being right strength[illegible]y his learning that Coolidge had [illegible]out the reason for the trip to the [illegible]e, visits the place. It is a disrep[illegible] saloon.

[illegible]APTER VIII.—West is taken by sur[illegible], knocked out, separated from Sex[illegible] and comes to his senses to find him[illegible] bound and helpless, and confronted [illegible] a man named Hobart, whom West [illegible]ows to be the man who had rented the [illegible]ouse which Natalie visited. The man [illegible]e him he (West) is interfering with [illegible]lans and if he persists will be done [illegible]y with. West refuses any compro[illegible]. Hobart sends for Natalie, hoping [illegible] can induce West to give up his quest.

CHAPTER IX.—Natalie releases West from his bonds and assures him that she has no need for his assistance. Her actions almost convince West she has guilty knowledge of Percival Coolidge's murder. He defies Hobart, and the thug, with two companions, attempts to kill him. After a terrific fight West leaps from the window.

CHAPTER X.—West succeeds in eluding his pursuers, finds Sexton bound and gagged, releases him, and the two escape. In the alley Sexton picks up a lady's penknife, which he gives to West.

CHAPTER XI.—Concealed in the knife West finds a note in a woman's handwriting appealing to the police to "search the Seminole." West takes the note to police headquarters, where he finds an old friend he had known in France, McAdams. They find that the Seminole is a yacht owned by Percival Coolidge.

CHAPTER XII

The Yacht "Seminole."

There was little to do but wait impatiently for some further message of guidance. Mr. Adams dispatched a few telegrams to nearby lake ports, and briefly outlined certain plans of action for the morrow, provided nothing further was heard from the missing boat; these included a possible visit to Fairlawn, and a city-wide search for Hobart, who both men decided could not be included among the party of the yacht. West told his new assistant the entire story in detail, and Mac's interest in ferreting out the matter became intense. It was the kind of case which fascinated him with its mystery, but no theory he could spin born from long police experience, seemed to exactly fit all the revealed facts. The great puzzle revolved about the strange actions of the girl; her part in the affair presenting an unsolvable riddle. They must have talked for an hour, discussing the situation frankly from every angle, yet arriving at no definite conclusion. The sky in the east was red with dawn when both men fell fast asleep in their chairs, still waiting.

It was nine o'clock, and still no word. The two had eaten a hasty breakfast in a restaurant across the street, discussing the situation again thoroughly, but to no more satisfactory result. It seemed impossible to reconcile certain facts. If the silver knife, with its call for help, had indeed been dropped by Natalie Coolidge, and she was being held a prisoner in the hands of villains on board the Seminole, why had she acted toward West as she did in that house on Wray street? To all appearances there she had been hand in glove with the conspirators, willing even to connive at the Captain's murder if necessary to the success of their crime. Only one theory was possible; that the girl was under constraint, driven to her strange act by personal fear. She dare do nothing else, terrorized by the threats of Hobart, and her own sense of utter helplessness in his power. This, and this only, must be the answer to the riddle.

McAdams, unable to remain quiet, departed to get his police search started in an attempt to discover Hobart in his new hiding place. The fellow could not be on the yacht, as that had sailed from Jackson park at far too early an hour for him to have possibly made one of the party. He would still be in the city then, securely concealed in some dive of the underworld, perfecting his plans, whatever they might be, and, perhaps, arranging to join those on the boat later. The detective even thought this unlikely, his theory being that Hobart merely desired to get the girl safely out of the way for a length of time sufficient to enable him to complete his nefarious scheme. He argued that Natalie was in no real danger; she would be held, no doubt, kept out of sight as long as was necessary, but otherwise left uninjured. This was no strong-arm crime, but a high-class confidence game, and the important thing was to quickly lay hands on Hobart. With him once in the toils, the whole conspiracy would instantly collapse. With this end in view, McAdams took up the man's trail, leaving West to stand guard over the telephone.

The latter called up Sexton, and hurried him out to Fairlawn, with instructions to find out all he could from the servants there relative to any late developments. This accomplished, nothing remained for West to do but sit down and wait for something else to happen.

The delay was shorter than he anticipated. There was a sharp ringing of the bell, the police operator responding quickly.

"Police headquarters. What's wanted? McAdams; no he is not in just now. Who is calling him? Harbor master's office; all right; hold the wire a minute."

He turned his head around.

"Must be your case, Captain; better hear what they have to say."

West grasped the receiver eagerly.

"Is this the Seminole matter?" he asked swiftly. "Certainly, I understand about it. What's that. Oh, Winchell told you to call up if you learned anything. Of course; what is it? Yes, I hear; just found her tied up at north side of Municipal pier. What's the trouble? Engine working bad, and had to come in, hey? All right—thanks; I'll go straight over and see them."

This was great luck, yet there was very little he could hope to accomplish alone, without the help and authority of McAdams. Even if the vessel had been stolen—which was probably not true—he possessed no power of arrest. All he could hope to do would be to keep the fellows in sight until Mac showed up, and, if possible, prevent them from putting out into the lake again. Even in that he needs must be cautious not to be seen by any of the gang who might recognize him. An alarm, proving they were being followed, would doubtless send them scattering instantly.

West thought of all these things as a taxi bore him across the city to the pier, and acted accordingly. The open air restaurant accorded him every reasonable opportunity for concealment, while affording ample view of whatever was going on. A pleasure boat, a band aboard, and with a barker industriously busy, was close by, surrounded by a bevy of women and children. Beyond these, on the same side, snuggled close against the cement wall, lay the yacht.

The Seminole was a much larger boat than West had anticipated seeing, yet he could not doubt her being the vessel sought. The name was plainly stencilled on the bow, as well as upon the dingy towing astern. The cabin appeared tightly closed, even the windows being heavily draped. Some mechanics were evidently working below; there was a sound of hammering, and occasionally a fellow in overalls appeared at the hatch opening. No one wearing any semblance of a yacht uniform was visible, although four or five men lounged about the deck, or close at hand on the pier, apparently connected with the vessel. While an air of carelessness was assumed by all these, yet West, watching them closely, felt that they were very much on their guard, anxiously waiting an opportunity to depart. He left the table, and strolled out on to the promenade. So far as he could observe, this movement attracted no attention, although a moment later his eyes plainly caught a bit of drapery drawn slightly aside at one of the cabin windows of the Seminole, and, he felt convinced, the quick gesture of a woman's hand.

There was a woman on board, then! This certainty of knowledge by evidence of his own eyes, set his blood leaping. Whatever the purposes of these people he was again upon the right trail. A little later one of the fellows loafing on the pier, a rather heavily built man with closely clipped red mustache and a scar over one eye, slowly crossed the deck, and entered the cabin. He came forth again a moment later, asked some question of the workmen below and then clambered back carelessly over the rail, joining his companion on the pier.

"A half hour yet; it was quite a job the boys had, but they are making time. Come over here a minute."

They walked forward, out of earshot from where West sat on a bench in the sun. He watched the fellows closely, yet without neglecting the boat, but they neither glanced toward him, or seemed aware of his existence. His whole thought centered on the early arrival of McAdams. Until the detective came, there was nothing he could do but sit there quietly and wait. But what if the necessary repairs were completed, and the Seminole sailed before Mac got there? Was there any means in his power by which this could be prevented? The only suggestion which came to him was the picking of a quarrel in some way, with the two men ashore. The boat would never depart unless they were aboard, as they were evidently the leaders of the gang, yet this would be a most desperate expedient, to be resorted to only when all other effort had failed. Besides it would put them on their guard, and possibly avail nothing. Why not speak to the fellows pleasantly, and naturally? They had no reason to be suspicious of him; he was but one of many others lounging idly about the pier. His curiosity would seem reasonable enough, and he might thus gain some clue as to their destination. Then, even if they did sail before Mac appeared, they could be safely intercepted in time for a rescue.

Circumstances seemed to work to this end, the two men strolling carelessly back toward where he sat, pausing within a few feet of him, all their attention apparently riveted upon the yacht.

"Had some hard luck?" he ventured. "Engine give out?"

The red-mustached one glanced about, his eyes surveying the speaker indifferently.

"Broke a piston, and had to be towed in," he replied carelessly, "We'll be off again presently."

The very indifference of the fellow led West to take a chance.

"Some nice boat you've got there. The Coolidge yacht, isn't it? Haven't seen it out lately."

"Are you a yachtsman?"

"A bit of an amateur, yes; have a cat-boat I play with some. Belong to the Columbia club."

"Off Grant park; this boat quarters in the Jackson lagoon. We left there last night. You know Coolidge?"

"No, never met him; recognized the boat, though. Has it been sold?"

"Not yet. It wasn't his, anyway; belonged to the estate. I'm one of the trustees; that's how I've got the use of it—see? Ever looked it over?"

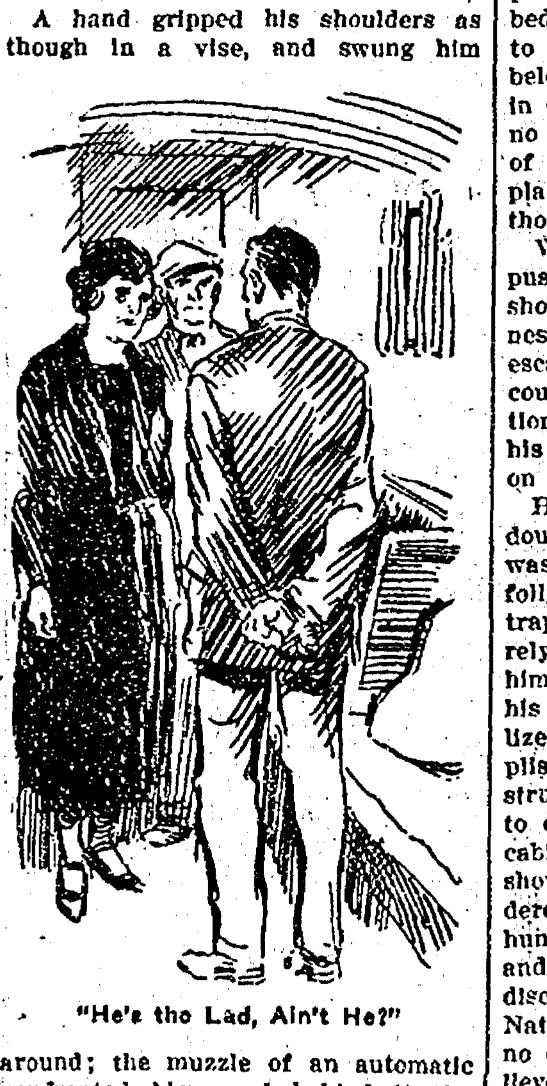
West shook his head.

"No, but I wouldn't mind; she's a dandy."

"She sure is; better inside than out to my notion. Come aboard; we've got time enough. Come along with us, Mark; we'll take a look at the cabin first, and then go forward."

The three men stepped over the low rail, and moved aft across the deck, the leader talking fluently, and pointing out various things of interest. The other man never spoke, and West gave no thought to his presence. He had been rarely fortunate so far, and was looking for an opportunity to question his guide on the purpose of their voyage. The man opened the cabin door, and West stepped inside, the interior darkened by drawn curtains. The dusk was confusing, and he stood still after the first step, hearing the latch click behind him.

A hand gripped his shoulders as though in a vise, and swung him around; the muzzle of an automatic confronted him, and behind it the threatening eyes of his guide glared directly into his own.



"He's the Lad, Ain't He?"

"Not a move, you d—d spy," a voice said coldly. "Now, Mark, frisk the cuss, and be lively about it. Had a gun, hey; I thought so. Give it to me. Now get the cord over there and give him a turn or two. A very good job, old boy; the fellow is safe enough, I should say."

He turned his eyes away, searching the cabin, confident that West was sufficiently secured.

"Come on out, Mary," he said sharply. "Who is this guy, anyhow?"

A woman came forward through the shadows. West had a glimpse of her face, but the features were unfamiliar. A woman of forty, perhaps, still attractive in appearance, with dark hair and bold black eyes that met his own defiantly. So this was the woman he had seen on board; not Natalie Coolidge at all. There had been a mistake of some kind; but if so, why had these people given him this sort of reception aboard? These thoughts swept his mind in a flash, as the woman peered forward to see his features more clearly. For a moment she said nothing, and the man broke out impatiently.

"He's the lad, ain't he?" he asked. "We ain't gone and picked up the wrong guy?"

"No; he's the bird, all right. I never lamped him but once before myself. I heard his name then, but forgot it. He's her friend, there ain't no doubt o' that, Joe, and it ain't likely he's hanging around here just for fun, is it? My idea was it would be safer to take him in."

"Sure; what's yer name, young fellow?"

Concealment was useless; they evidently had him correctly spotted; to lie would do no good.

"Matthew West."

"That's the name, Hogan," the woman exclaimed eagerly. "He is a soldier—a captain, or something like that. Jim told me about him; he's the same fellow who was snooping about Mike's place last night, before we pulled out."

"Is that so? How the h—l did you get out of there?"

"We had a little trouble," West admitted, "but they let me go."

"Yes, they did! I know better than that; Hobart don't do business that way. I reckon we've played his game all right taking you in. Well, you don't get out of here so easy, let me tell you. How'd you come to get onto us?"

"That's my business."

"Oh, is it? Well, we'll make it ours from now on. There is one thing pretty sure—you were here playing a lone hand. So it don't make much difference what yer idea was. We'll take the bird along with us, Mary; then he'll be out of temptation."

The woman nodded.

"Jim will know what to do with him," she said. "All we got to do is keep him safe."

"I'll attend to that; come on, Mark, let's throw the d—n sneak into that left-hand stateroom. He'll stay there all right. Aw, take hold; don't be afraid of hurting the fellow."

They roughed him forward, but West made no attempt to resist; his hands were bound, and he was helpless. The woman threw open the narrow door, and he was bundled unceremoniously across the threshold, and thrown heavily to the floor. He struggled partially upright, protesting against being left in that helpless condition, but the red-mustached man only laughed, shutting the door tightly, and locking it. The single porthole was covered by heavy drapery, the stateroom in total darkness.

West could distinguish the movement of feet in the outer cabin, and then the closing of a door. Undoubtedly the two men had gone on deck, leaving the woman there alone. His feet were not tied and he could sit up, although the hands were tightly bound behind him. With eyes accustoming themselves to the gloom, he could discern something of his surroundings. He was in the ordinary stateroom of a small yacht, with barely space in which to move about comfortably. Two bunks were at one side, with a metal stand at their foot for washing purposes. A rug covered the floor, the beds were made, and a stool, screwed to the deck, occupied a position just below the porthole. A few hooks were in evidence on the opposite wall; but no garments dangled from them to tell of previous occupancy. Indeed the place, was scrupulously clean, as though unused for some time.

West made his way to the port, pushed aside the curtain with his shoulders and looked out. The smallness of the opening made any hope of escape in that way impossible; nor, could he expect to attract the attention of any one ashore. Convinced of his complete helplessness, he sat down on the stool to consider the situation.

He had been a fool; there was no doubt as to that; the only thing now was how he could best retrieve his folly. He had walked blindly into a trap, suspecting nothing, confidently relying on his own smartness, believing himself unknown. Now he must find his way out. It angered him to realize how easily it had been accomplished; not so much as a blow struck; no opportunity even for him to cry out an alarm—only that dark cabin, and the threatening revolver shoved against his cheek. He wondered where McAdams was; perhaps hunting him even then on the pier; and Sexton, what had he succeeded in discovering out at Fairlawn? That Natalie Coolidge had returned home, no doubt. At least he no longer believed she was with this yachting party—evidently there was but one woman on board. Yet, whether she was there or not, it was clear enough from what he had heard that this sudden voyage of the Seminole had some direct connection with the mystery he was endeavoring to solve. That was why he had been decoyed aboard, and made prisoner—to keep him silent; to get him securely out of the way. Yet this knowledge revealed nothing as to what their real purpose was.

What did they intend doing with him now that he was in their hands? Joe had declared his fate would be left with Hobart. Then it must be that they had a rendezvous arranged somewhere with that arch-conspirator, some hidden spot along the lake shore where they were to meet shortly, and divide the spoils, or make further plans. Hobart unquestionably was the leader of the gang; but who was the woman? She had evidently been in Mike's place the night before, and had a glimpse of his face. She must have left with that party in the automobile, yet she surely was not the one who had dropped that note begging the police to search this vessel.

What then had become of the other? If she was being held prisoner, it was not at all probable she had been left somewhere ashore; apparently she had reason to know where she was being taken—to the Seminole; otherwise she would never have written as she did. She must have overheard their plans, before she hastily scratched off the note desperately; and yet those plans might have been changed. However, if so, why were these people—accomplices of Hobart no doubt—fleeing in the yacht, seeking to conceal their identity in an effort to disappear? What were they fleeing from? Why were they so fearful of discovery by the police? What would cause them to kidnap him, merely on suspicion that he was a friend of Natalie Coolidge? The very act was proof positive of the desperation of their crime. It could be accounted for on no other theory.

West paced the narrow space, his brain whirling, as he attempted to reason the affair out, his own helplessness becoming more and more apparent. What could he do? There was but one answer—absolutely nothing as he was then situated. He could only wait for some movement on the part of the others; his fate was out of his own hands; he had been a fool, and must pay the price. The cords about his wrists chafed and hurt with each movement. The metal wash-stand gave him an inspiration; its upper strip was thin, and somewhat jagged along the edge; possibly it might be utilized to sever the strands. It was better to try the experiment than remain thus helplessly bound. With hands free he could at least defend himself.

He made the effort, doubtfully at first, but hope came as the sharp edge began to tear at the rope. It was slow work, awkward, requiring all the strength of his arms, yet he felt sure of progress. He could feel the strands yield little by little, and redoubled his efforts. At last, exercising all his muscle, the last frayed strand snapped. His wrists were bleeding, and the hands numb, but the severed cord lay on the floor and he again had the free use of his arms. The sudden freedom brought new hope and courage. He listened at the door, testing the knob cautiously. There was no yielding, and for the moment no sound reached him from without. The woman was doubtless there on guard, and any effort he might make to break down the door would only bring the whole gang upon him. Unarmed, he could not hope to fight them all. As he stood there, hesitating, unable to determine what to attempt, he became aware of a throbbing under foot, increasing in intensity. West knew instantly what it meant—they were testing out the engine; if all worked well, the boat would cast off.

He sprang back to the port and stared out, eagerly hoping that, as they swept out into the lake, he might find some opportunity to communicate with some one on the pier. Perhaps by this time Mac would have arrived, and be watching their departure, unable to intervene, as he had no warrant for arrest, or any definite knowledge that the yacht was being used for a criminal purpose. He had not long to wait. Hurrying steps echoed along the deck; a voice shouted out some order, and the end of a loosened rope dropped splashing into the water astern; the boat trembled to the pulsations of the engine, and West realized that it was at first slowly, then more swiftly, slipping away into the broad water. He still stood there, gazing back at the fast receding pier; gradually becoming blurred in the distance, but hopelessly. He knew now he must face his fate alone.

CHAPTER XIII

The Fate of a Prisoner.

The Seminole headed straight out into the lake. No sound of movement or speech reached West's ears from the cabin, and he settled down into moody forgetfulness, still staring dully out through the open port. What was to be, would be, but there was nothing for him to do but wait for those who held him prisoner, to act. He was still seated there, listless, incapable even of further thought, when the door was suddenly unlocked. He had barely time to arise to his feet, when the man with the red mustache stepped within, facing him, as he pushed tightly shut the door behind. The fellow's eyes saw the severed rope on the floor, and he smiled, kicking the strands aside contemptuously.

"Smart enough for that, were you?" he asked. "Well, I would have taken them off myself, if I had thought about it. How did you manage? Oh, I see; rather a bright trick, old man."

The man's tone, and air of confidence was impressive; beyond doubt he felt that the cards were all in his hands. West drew in his breath sharply. "May I ask a question or two?"

"Fire away; I'll answer as I please."

"Who is the woman on board?"

"Mary, you mean? Hobart's wife."

"She came from the place on Wray street last night in an auto?"

"Yes; I brought her along myself."

"Alone?"

"There were two of us, Mark and I—why, what are you driving at?"

"Just putting some broken threads together. Then Natalie Coolidge is not on this yacht?"

"I should say not. What would we be doing with her out here?"

"Where is she, then?"

"Oh, I begin to see what brought you aboard so easily, West. You thought we had the lady kidnaped, and was sailing off with her. Some stunt, that. What put the idea in your head?"

West hesitated a moment, but decided a truthful answer would do no harm.

"I knew an automobile had driven out of the alley back of Mike's place; and that a woman was in it. When I got away a little later, I picked up a message—a note which had been dropped. It was written in a woman's hand but unsigned—"

"The little cat! She dropped it?"

"It seems so. You forgot yourself that time. So she was with you, was she?"

"I don't know what you mean. I told you who were with me. Go on; what did the note say?"

"It was only a request for the police to search the Seminole at once."

"Oh, that's the way the wind blows. But you preferred to tackle the job yourself. I am certainly obliged to you, West."

"You have no reason to be. I took that note to the police, and they are on the case. They are combing the city right now for Hobart, and if they get him, this bubble of yours is likely to be pricked."

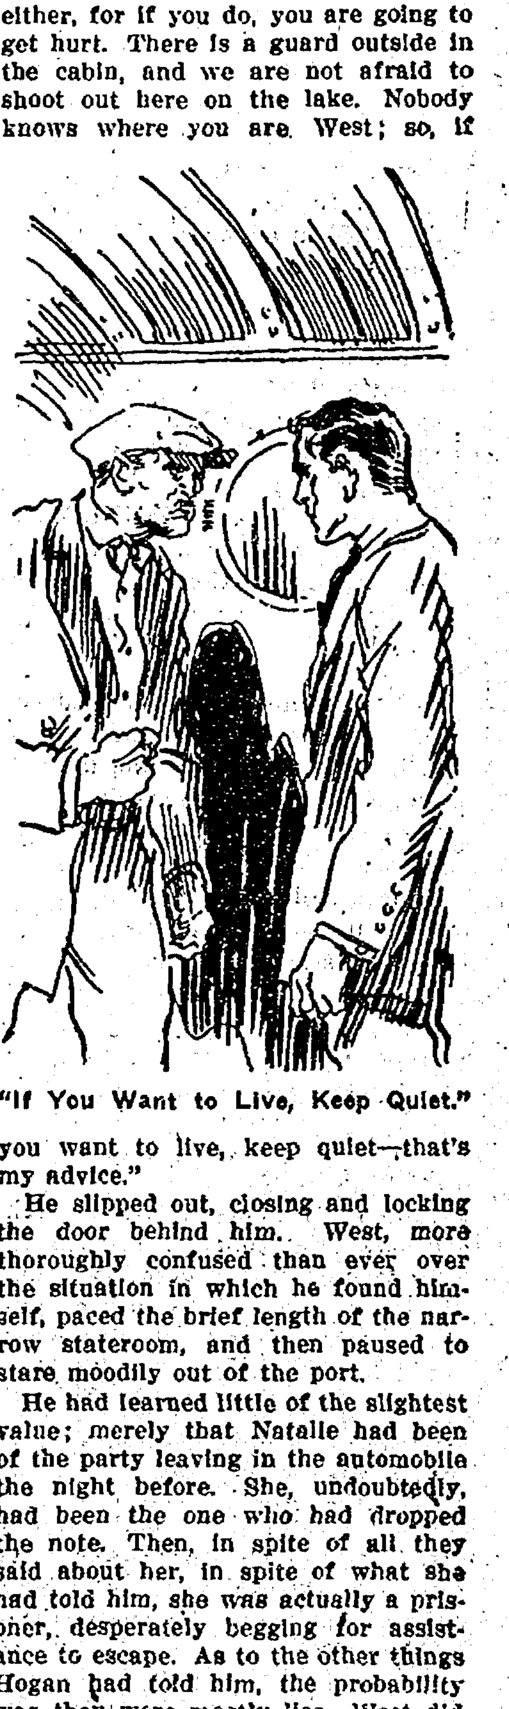
"H—l, they won't get him. There isn't a fly-cop in Chicago who could locate Jim in a week, and as for Natalie, believe me she is quite able to take care of herself."

"But where is she?"

"At home, of course, if you must know—'Fairlawn,' isn't that the name of the place? We left her there on our way to Jackson park."

"Then the girl was with you?"

"Spilled the beans, didn't I? That comes from talking too much. However, there is no harm done. Sure she left with us, but we dropped her out at Fairlawn. It was her machine we were riding in. Say, you've questioned me about enough, so let up. Listen now—you will stay in this stateroom until we get ready to let you out. Don't try any funny business, either, for if you do, you are going to get hurt. There is a guard outside in the cabin, and we are not afraid to shoot out here on the lake. Nobody knows where you are, West; so, if you want to live, keep quiet—that's my advice."



"If You Want to Live, Keep Quiet."

He slipped out, closing and locking the door behind him. West, more thoroughly confused than ever over the situation in which he found himself, paced the brief length of the narrow stateroom, and then paused to stare moodily out of the port.

He had learned little of the slightest value; merely that Natalie had been of the party leaving in the automobile the night before. She, undoubtedly, had been the one who had dropped the note. Then, in spite of all they said about her, in spite of what she had told him, she was actually a prisoner, desperately begging for assistance to escape. As to the other things Hogan had told him, the probability was they were mostly lies. West did not believe the girl had returned to "Fairlawn," the story did not sound natural. The longer he thought it all over, the more thoroughly was he convinced the girl and he were both prisoners on the same vessel. Yet what could he do? He sank down, with head in his hands, totally unnerved—it was his fate to attempt nothing; only to wait on fortune.

Joe White was a business visitor at Mason City one day last week on business connected with his produce. While there, Joe had stepped inside Higley's for a minute or two, leaving his new overcoat in the truck. When he came out the coat was gone. The police were notified after Joe and his friends had made a thoro search for the garment without success, and the police searched every place in a radius of three blocks where the thief could have hid it, but without success, and Joe is still minus his new $40 overcoat.

Over at Humbolt recently a 680 acre farm, purchased during the boom times, was allowed to go back to the original owner by the purchaser, Harry Fraser. Fraser prefered to have the land go back rather try to carry it on. The Humboldt Republican lays it all to the drop in prices of farm land whereas, it would seem that the drop in the price of farm products would have more to do with it. There are farms in this vicinity purchased at top prices, but the purchasers have managed to hold onto them someway. The man who bought at peak prices is having a hard job to hang on, but not because of any drop in the price of farm land, rather because the stuff he raises on that land is not bringing him a fair return.

Much ado is being made over the disbarment of the Hampton high school football team. The entire team is suspended indefinitely because it is claimed one of the players, Davis by name, is inelligible. This may be true, but to suspend the entire team because of one player does not seem like the fair thing. Efforts were made to bar Locke from the State University team on charges of professionalism, but no effort or no talk was heard of barring the whole Iowa team. Something is rotten somewhere besides in Denmark. Hampton's fast team evidently is a dangerous proposition for somebody. It is understood that the entire line up of Hampton business men are going to carry the matter to the limit.

We might, of course, describe a successful politician as "one who gets away with the goods."

Armistice Day after the football game, two well known Clarion people were in an Eagle Grove store, visiting and the talk turned to the football game and other things. Words were bandied back and forth and finally the Clarion woman said "Anyway, Clarion deserves credit for closing the stores Armistice Day." "Well," the Eagle business man's wife said, "you deserve credit for something, but I guess the reason Clarion doesn't amount to anything anymore than it does is because they close up for every dog fight that comes along." About that time the men took charge of the situation to prevent a real old fashioned hair pulling contest.—News.

Clerk Goslin is devoting the greater part of this week to the preparation of the jury lists for the years 1923-24. These lists are made up by selecting the names from each of the twenty-five voting precincts in the county. The total number so selected is about 1600 Of this number 900 are for petit jurors, 600 for talesmen and 150 for grand jurors. These are kept in three separate boxes and a few weeks prior to each term of court the auditor, clerk and recorder draw from these boxes the names of 75 persons who serve for the ensuing term. Twelve grand jurors are drawn in the same manner and they serve for the entire year. Prior to opening of court the clerk draws out seven of the twelve names who conduct the grand jury investigations for the term. The judge appoints one of the number as foreman.—Monitor.

The Cantilever Idea

The enjoyable comfort and the added vigor which women secure from Cantilever Shoes comes from certain improvements in construction of proved value. See if your shoes will flex at the shank.) The Cantilever Shoe is designed with an all-leather arch that is flexible like your own arch. This eases every step, gives poise, makes standing and walking natural, graceful, and far less fatiguing. The lower Cantilever heel and the rounded toe were additional Cantilever comfort details—these are now in fashion.

Comfort Is Golden

Women—no matter in what walk of life—who wear Cantilever Shoes, step out alertly in footwear that suits and fits their feet; that prevents and corrects foot troubles to which physicians ascribe so many other ailments. When you lace Cantilevers, their flexible arches draw up to give each one of your arches the precise degree of support it needs.

The Cantilever Idea is Comfort of the highest degree at every point. Slip your feet into a pair and learn what foot comfort can be—what it means to you. Sold by

Two Bad Fires Here Destroy Much

Destructive Fires Do Much Damage At Two Farm Homes In Past Week.

BOTH OCCUR AT NIGHT

The Frank Christie home a mile south and half mile west of Goodell was the scene of a destructive fire last Thursday night, when the house was burned to the ground. The fire occured about 9:15. Frank and family were away, being at the home of his brother Ira and family when the blaze happened. A neighbor of Frank's, Wm. Zeiger, first noticed the flames, and phoned the Ira Christie home for Frank, who with his brother jumped in the car and hiked for home. When they arrived the house was a blazing mass, burned to the sills and a total loss. All furniture was burned, nothing being. saved A high ind that evening fanned the flames that nothing could be done to save property, or even any of the niture. The loss is placed at 00, with $2000 insurance. The in of the fire is unknown unless was due to a defective chinney. There was only one fire in the house when the family left, a small one in the heater to keep the house warm. Frank just purchased the farm last spring, and this loss comes as a heavy blow to him. He intends to fix up one of the outbuildings to live in this winter, and in the spring will build a new home.

On Tuesday night of last week a serious fire occured at the Henry Goeman farm northeast of town. The blaze seems to have originated in or around the garage, close to the car, and destroyed the garage, some outbuildings and many hundreds of bushels of grain. The fire company from town was called and hurried to the farm, where they managed to save a number of the buildings which were threatened. ,

SIC 'EM FIDO!

The towns of Eagle Grove and Clarion have been as friendly lately as a couple of cats and dogs. Seems like it all started back in the summer when an Eagle Grove firm erected a big bill board in Clarion. Naturally the Clarion folks were peeved, and they made remarks right out loud about it. This didn't please Eagle Grove any too much. Several sassy things were passed back and forth over it. At the Armistic day football game, which Clarion won, some more remarks were remarked by several, chief of whom were a Clarion and an Eagle Grove lady. The innocent bystanders are awaiting the next move.

DELANEY-MILLIGAN

Miss Loretta M. Delaney and Mr. Guy E. Milligan were united in marriage Thursday noon November 23, at the Catholic parsonage, Rev. Father Eardley officiating, in the presence of the immediate family. Following the ceremony the bridal party returned to the Delaney home where a wedding dinner was served. Covers were laid for 20, the relatives and Father Earley.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Delaney, a graduate of the Belmond high school, and for a time a student in music at St. Clara College, Sinsinawa, Wis. The best wishes from a host of friends accompanies her to her new home.

Mr. Milligan is not a stranger to the people of Belmond and has made many friends here during his connection with the Dyer Construction Co. and later with the Iowa Valley Sugar Co.

The Independent joins in extending congratulations.

Word was received here Saturday of the death of Mrs. A. C. Wright of Canon City, Colo. Death caused from small pox. She was a sister of Mrs. Frank Snyder and formerly resided ere. Mr. Wright died about three nths ago.

DOWS IN THROES OF COMMUNITY FIGHT

Row Over Church Affairs Still Taking Public Attention And Getting Worse.

The town of Dows is a pretty live burg all the time in a business and social way. but lately it has been more than lively. The importunate row between Rev, Belsheim and his congregation, over the American Legion, originating in the refusal of Rev. Belsheim to preach the funeral sermon of one of his congregation, a member of the Legion, last summer, and aggravated later by Mr. Belsheim when the Ladies Aid of his church served supper on an American Legion Dance day, has kept the town in water more or less hot ever since. Letters by Rev. Belsheim giving his side of the case and by O. C. Sime a pillar of the church, giving the congregation's side have appeared in the Dows Advocate from time to time, together with articles from the editor of the Advocate and his employee. A recent letter by Rev. Belsheim in the Mason City Globe Gazatte stirred up the rumpus again and last week Sime takes another crack at Belsheim. The whole thing it appears would be amicably settled if Rev. Belsheim would resign. According to reports and the general tone of the argument, his resignation is almost universally desirted by his church members and by the people of Dows. But the reverend refuses to to go, and defies the whole bunch to put him out. It must be admitted that on this point the minister has them licked to a frazzle. The whole affair is unfortunate. The American Legion is in no way held to blame for the affair. In addition to this the last issue of the Advocate contains a short notice from two young ladies who, from appearances were farmers telephone operators and who have a bone to pick with the manager. Truly, Dows is a live place in more ways than one. But at that if Belmond was to have its affairs thoroly aired publicly, Dows would be so far back you couldn't see it for dust.

TO OPEN NEW GARAGE

The garage building formerly accupied by Charley Johnson, who recently moved to his new location several blocks north on the same street, will be taken over December 1st by the Belmond Motor Sales Co., of which Mr. N. E Brear of Garner will be manager. Mr. Brear has been in the garage business at Garner where he has been very successful, and he comes well recommended. The new firm will handle the chevrolet car. Harold Aigley remains with them.

HOLD FINE MEETING

The Iowa Township Farm Bureau meeting held at the home of Mrs. Lyle Hall on Nov. 16 was quite well attended despite the bad roads and the busy time of year. A picnic luncheon and social hour was enjoyed at noon.

The demonstration on the "Alteration of the Commercial Pattern" given by Miss Huber of Ames was very interesting and the ladies felt they received many practical points in home sewing.

A number of Franklin county ladies were present and brought with them the enthusiam of the extension work in their own county. It is planned to perfect a better working organization, by having district meetings, using the rural school district as a unit, thus hoping to reach every home in the township.

The Radio bug continues active and while no new receiving sets have been installed the past week a number of the citizens are developing an awful hankering. Los Angeles, California, Portland Oregan and Springfield Mass., are the latest long-distance stations heard by the Independent - Battery station set They all came in very clear and loud The new outfits just installed at the two banks are working nicely.

STATE OF IOWA

Executive Department

Thanksgiving Day

By the Governor

A PROCLAMATION

From time immemorial the State of Iowa has observed one day in each year as a special occasion for thanksgiving and prayer: thanksgiving for the abundant blessings bestowed by Providence, and prayer for their unfailing continuance. The year which is rapidly expiring has been crowned with God's marvelous goodness to all of us, and a grateful people cannot be forgetful of the Divine benevolence. Accordingly I recommend that on the day designated by the President,

Thursday, the 30th Day of November

the people of the commonwealth assemble in their accustomed places of worship and there with devout spirits render praise and thanksgiving to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for His manifold mercies.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great Seal of the State of Iowa.

SEAL.

Done at Des Moines, this 9th day of November, A. D., 1922.

By the Governor:

W. C. RAMSAY,
Secretary of State

N. E. KENDALL,
Governor

RE-REGISTRATION OF CARS IS REQUIRED

Registration Must Be Made In December Without Waiting For Treasurer's Notice.

Owing to delay in receipt of revised schedule of fees from the State Department, no cards will be sent out from the Treasurer's Office this fall. Everyone will please take notice and register during December without waiting for notice from the Treasurer. The fee will be the same as this year except possibly on new cars registered in 1922.

If application card is on file in the Treasurer's office, no other will be necessary. Merely send in name 1922 license number, and fee; or enclose 1922 registration certificate which will give the necessary information. Register early.

SPORAA IN AGAIN

Henry Sporaa is again in the toils of the law, or he will be as soon as John McNicol runs on to him. Sporaa as usual has been doing a lot of little mean things to bother his neighbor Tony Lucas, until Tony complained to the mayor and then swore out information against him The marshal went down to serve the warrant on Sporaa, but told Sporaa he would carry the warrant if Sporaa would behave himself. While the marshal was at Sporaa's he noticed a telephone pole in the yard, and surmised that Sporaa had not gotten the pole as he should. He reported to the electric light and telephone companies about the pole and found it belonged to the latter company.

McNicol and Manager Williams went to see Sporaa and found him in a cornfield at work. He promised to call at the mayor's office as soon as he came to town but instead he came to town just in time to catch the evening train north. If he would only keep going on straight north no one would care, but he will come back if he has not already done so, and make life miserable for some one, or at least try to.

Later—Sporaa was broght before the Mayor last evening and assessed a fine of $25 which he refused to pay. He slept in the "coop" last night but this morning he informed Marshal McNicol that he would pay the fine.—Garner Signal.

ASK HELP IN RELIEVING NEEDY OF FAR EAST

Week Set Aside In December To Bring Grains And Money For War Orphans.

While at this season of Thanksgiving noting the Progress and prosperity which is ours, think also of those more needy, of whom we read and for whom representative missionaries to the Central East are seeking aid. Tho some of us have domated in past year, we will again. We are advised there is yet need of aiding the thousands of orphans, made destitute by war and famine. To this section where plenty abounds they come for your good will offering. In Wright county during the week of December 17 to 24, the farmers will bring to the elevators corn and such other food grains as they choose to give, and the town people will take to the banks their contributions in money to buy food. The announcing in society meetings and especially the churches of this endeavor to gather for the needy will be appreciated by the committees, of which you can be one by taking part.—Contributed.

INSTALL POISON GAS

Poison gas as a protection against bank robbers and burglars has been installed by the banks at Webster City. This gas, a tear gas, is kept in glass containers in the vault. It is so arranged that when the burglar blows the door of the vault or safe the glass receptacles are broken, releasing the gas which instantly starts a prodigrous flow of tears, blinding the crook so that he cannot see. If the robber does not immediately get away from the neighborhood of the vault, he soon become unconscious. This method of protection has been used in a number of other banks and in four cases where banks thus protected were entered by thieves the burglars were compelled to flee for their lives without taking anything of value. Thus an other weapon of warfare is being made to serve the needs of peaceful industry.

COMMUNITY CLUB PLAY PROVES ONE OF BEST

Crowded Houses Greet Players Both Nights And All Comments Favorable.

The Community club play given on Friday and Saturday nights of last week was a huge success, and was attended by crowded houses both evenings. The play was most excellently given by the home talent, and many complimentary remarks were heard of the way the various parts were carried thru. The almost universal comment was that it was one of the best home talents ever given in Belmond. The Community club realized a nice sum from the two nights of entertainment, and after expenses are all paid will have over a hundred dollars to use in their community work and betterment.

HOLD ANNUAL MEETING

The Pleasant township Farm Bureau will hold their annual meeting Monday evening, Dec. 4, at the center school house. Election of officers will be held, followed by a good program, and coffee and sandwiches will be served.

WANT COMMUNITY BUILDING

Garner is agitating for a community building, and several meetins have been held by the various clubs and civic organizations, including the American Legion, to discuss the matter. Garner now has no place suitable for a large community gathering. The Leader last week carried a lengthly article about it, and strongly endorses the idea; It states it believes public sentiment in Garner is sufficiently strong right now to put such a building across, and advocates nothing short of a $35,000 structure. It admits a siutable building could be erected for less, but looks to the future of the town when a smaller building would not be sufficient. Five thousand people in 1932 is the Leader's aim. Garner it must he admitted, is one of the finest towns in Northern Iowa and its paving, fine lighting, live American Legion and Civic bodies, together with the progressive and aggressive spirit of its citizens will carry it far during the next ten years toward the goal the Leader has set Belmond can well afford to take a few observations from its neighbor to the north. We had our dreams here too, once; but like the bubbles in the recently popular song they "faded and died."

THEY HAD SOME TIME

The big scrap on at Hampton is arousing much interest. The fight is over the barring of the High School football team by the State Athletic Association on the charge that one player in inelligble. Hampton people put the blame for starting it at the door of Mason City. Mason City, out for the state championship was defeated by Hampton They had some time at this game, judging from what the Hampton people tell. It seems Mason City expected to walk away with the game and had made arrangements to properly celebrate the victory. At one stage of the game when Mason City apparantly had it on ice, an airplane circled over the field and dropped flowers for the Hamptonites. A coffin, duly arranged was in a car ready for the grand parade after the game. But Hampton fought like tigers and won the battle. The coffin was taken back to Mason City unparaded, and later the flowers were gathered up by Hamptonites who sent them to Mason City—C.O.D.—to place on the coffin and the fight was on.

HIT BUGGY AT KANAWHA

The two sons of Anton Benson of Kanawha, while driving in town with their Ford car, smashed into a buggy driven by two Abbas boys last week Saturday evening, breaking one wheel of the buggy and the fenders of the car. The lights on the car had burned out and the windshield was covered with rain. No one was injured.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

ANOTHER IMPROVEMENT

The Independent takes pleasure in announcing to its advertisers and to the business men of the community, a new up-to-date service to them in the purchase of the famous Meyer-Both Advertising Features. The Meyer-Both service consists of advertising copy on every conceivable article sold, written by the highest paid advertising experts in America men and women who have "been in the game" for years, and who have spent years in learning the various arts and fine points of advertising copy. This service has real pulling power, and is offered to the advertiser free. In addition to this advertising service,the Meyer-Both Features contain cuts to illustrate the ads, high class drawings such as are found in only the better class of magazines They are artistic, attracting, and "Pulling." These illuslrations come in mat form, and a casting box to make them into plates has also been acquired. This casting box enables the Independent to handle mats of any kind. In case the advertiser wishes cuts to illustrate his ad on some particular line he handles, this casting box will save him money, as the mats are usually supplied h m free by the manufacturer, or at an insignificant price. The Independent will then make them into plates free.

This paper has, for sometime, had the idea of such a service, and after investigation of several different services, chose the Meyer-Both as being the best. This service is used by the Mason City Globe Gazette, and by many other large newspapers. It is expensive, but the Independent feels that its advertisers are entitled to the best of service, and in adding the Meyer-Both Feature they are getting it.

Advertising today, especially in newspapers. is the greatest business getter there is. This is acknowledged by men who know. People read advertisements in newspapers. They have been educated to do it. Every merchant in our town ought to advertise. You remember the story about John Wanamaker? The first day he was in business his receipts were $24.64. He kept the 64cents and spent the $24 the next day in advertising. We all can't duplicate this feat, but according to the best statistics available three per cent of the gross sales should be put aside for advertising.

Possibly you will say, "I don't need to advertise. I've been in this town thirty years and everybody knows me."

Probably they do, but did you ever stop to think of the sales you lose because your fellow competitor advertises? He may advertise the same goods you have in your stock, but the people don't know you have them. The other fellow gets the sale because he advertises. And then, how much more business you would do if you did advertise?

We know of one merchant who advertised a lot of goods at 19 cents a yard. They cost him 27 cents. He took a clean loss, but while the sale was going on he could buy new goods at 12 cents. He put them in with the other goods and the result was he cleaned his shelves of the old goods and he broke even on the deal. Advertising and good buying liquidated his stock without a loss.

We can't all be John Wanamaker's but we all can advertise in proportion to our business. Results will be sure if you advertise honestly and give service. A newspaper can bring people to your store, but it can't make people buy your goods. Your clerks must do that and it depends on the service you give as to how successful your business will be.

What is done in the big cities can be done right here in this town if you will show the pep, give the service and advertise. Make business good. You can do it through this newspaper.

Community—

The Community Welfare club held their regular monthly meeting last Friday afternoon. Mrs. E. F. Armstrong of Ft. Dodge, president of the State Federation of Womens Clubs gave a splendid talk on "Things to be accomplished." She told of many things women could and should do individually or as an organization.

Everyone regretted it very much that Mrs. Armstrong had to cut her talk short in order to make her train.

After a short business meeting the club adjourned and the usual social hour was enjoyed with doughnuts and coffee served by the refreshment committee.

AMES TO SHOW 150 ANIMALS

More than 150 head of animals will be entered by Iowa State College at the International Livestock Exposition at Chicago, Dec. 2 to 9. Several members of the faculty are connected with the show or will act as judges.

C. F. Curtiss, dean of the division of agriculture, is one of the directors of the exposition and has served as president. H. H. Kildee, head of the animal husbandry department, will be one of the three Hereford Judges, and J. C. Hammer, farm superintendent, is the reserve judge of the Shropshire breed of sheep.

The college will enter sheep, both breding and fat classes, fat classes of hogs, two car loads of fat cattle and 11 head of horses. Some 60 head of sheep will be entered in the competition, including all the breeds which are represented on the college farm. At least 40 head of hogs, including Duroc Jersey, Poland China, Chester White, Hampshire, Tamworth and Berkshire breeds, will be at the show.

Iowa State College has probably won more prize money at the International than any other state agricultuhal college in the country. The college's winnings have in the past more than paid the expense of showing the animals at the exposition.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Community "Corn Husking Bee".

A real old time community "corn husking bee" was held at the John Licklider farm in Grant township Tuesday, November 28th. Neighbors and friends of the Licklider family brought their teams, wagons, and husking hooks to assist in the harvesting of the corn crop of Mr. Licklider who is unable to husk his own corn. This husking bee was planned and organized by J. E. Lamb, director of the Grant township Farm Bureau with the assistance of some of his neighbors. This is surely a splendid example of community co-operation and shows what can be done when the people of any community join hands in an effort to put across a certain piece of work.

The feature of this "husking bee" was the good old corn huskers' dinner which was served by the ladies of this community to the huskers as they came in for their mid-day meal, from 10 o'clock in the forenoon up until about 3 in the afternoon.

Some great discoveries were made in the line of corn huskers. Some of them fall in the 100 bushel class and others as low as 40 bushel but never-the-less the corn was picked and a jolly good time was had by all who took part in this humanitarian project and the Licklider folks feel very grateful to all of those who had the bigness of heart to turn out and take part in this "husking bee."

Judging Team at International

The county agent and the Wright county boys who constitute the Iowa champion junior live stock judging work in the International junior live stock judging contest on Friday December 1st. The boys are spending Thanksgiving day in Chicago in order that they may have plenty of rest and be prepared for an early start the folowing morning. This judging contest will be more or less an endurance contest because of the nervous strain which they will necessarily experience.

Owing to the fact that Clarence Clark, the high man on the judging team, is barred from entering this contest the boys are handicapped to some extent, although they have been doing some very consistent judging during the past week in their trips to some of the pure-bred farms of our county and at Ames Friday, when they had opportunity to work over some of the high class stuff at the college. According to the professors in the department of animal husbandry at Ames the boys showed very good judgment in the selection of the different animals in the different classes, and predicted that if the boys are as strong in reasons as they are on judging they will "bring home the bacon" from the international judging contest.

The entry of the Wright county boys in this International live stock judging contest is another example of what can be accomplished thru club work in any community. Our boys will have the honor of representing the good old Hawkeye state in this contest and as Wright county is the best county in Iowa every one at home is back of the boys in their effort to see that Iowa is put at the head of the list. After the judging contest is completed our boys will probably stay in the city two or three days in order to see the splendid live stock exhibits at the International and see some of the points of interest in Chicago.

Baby Beef Club

On Friday, Dec. 1st, of this week the baby beeves which have been selected by the boys and girls for the feeding contest will be weighed into the Baby Beef club. The individuals which have been selected for this feeding work have been taken from the Aberdeen Angus, Shorthorn, and Hereford breeds within Wright county and any winners which may be made by the boys and girls will reflect upon the breeders of our own county.

On December 1st each boy and girl judging a calf will have some disinterested party weigh the calf and certify to its exact weight and then the calf will be weighed again next August at the end of the feeding period. The club will keep an accurate account of the feed fed during this time and the rate of gain and cost of gain will be computed and awards will be given on the following basis:

1. Individuality of the calf at county show—70 per cent.
2. Rate of gain—15 per cent.
3. Records and reports—15 per cent.

The boys' and girls' baby beef club has become a big factor in the improvement of the beef industry in Iowa, by interesting the "Farmer of Tomorrow" in beef production and its possibilities. The primary object of the baby beef club is to put in the hands of boys and girls who are sufficiently interested, desirable calves of beef type and give them the feed and care necessary for developing them into high class market beef animals.

The Baby Beef club assures a satisfactory way to make the educational value to be acquired from the experience of feeding and caring for the calf of first importance. The speculative side of a club is not to be encouraged, although it is necessary to consider the purchase of calves on sufficient basis that the member may not lose money. Particular stress is laid, first in securing the proper quality calves and second, in arranging the place of follow up work that will maintain the interest of the members and their parents throughout the period of the feeding contest. The real value should be made in the instruction given on feeding, fitting, and judging of the calves as well as some information on practical lines and things of breed interest.

Hog Cholera Vaccination School

Dr. Craft, the federal veterinarian, has been secured to conduct a two day hog cholera vaccination school at the court house at Clarion on Thursday and Friday, Jan. 18 and 19.

Dr. Craft not only takes up hog vaccination demonstrations, by actually vaccinating a few pigs, but also goes thoroughly into the other hog diseases, giving symptoms, causes and remedies. Examination is given the last afternoon of the course upon the passing of which a permit is issued for vaccinating one's own hogs. A fee of $5.00 secures the issuing of a permit. In the past those not wishing permits have found attending the school to be a most profitable way to spend the two days. Hereafter no fee will be charged those who wish to attend the school, but do not wish to take the examination. Any one wishing to take the course should send in an application to the county agent at once.

More T. B. Doctors

Because of a lack of funds Iowa has only been supporting five men for T. B. eradication, while the government has kept nine in our state. The agreement is that the state and government shall furnish the same number of men and as consequence of Iowa's shortage four federal men were going to be removed, thus slowing down the already slow proceeds of eradicating tuberculosis from our herds. But the county farm bureaus took the matter up with Governor Kendall impressing upon him the necessity of the work and as a result he has authorized that four more men be added and the work continued as rapidly as possible. Eighteen men are now at work in this state but at that it is a slow process. Many packing plants are now offering a premium of 10 cents a hundred weight for all hogs from tuberculosis free counties. Figure up and see what it would mean to you in a year if Wright county was on the T. B. free list.

Wool Sells For Good Price

A letter just received from V. G. Warner, secretary of the Wool Growers' association, states that all of the wool has been disposed of except the fine staple and clothing and a few odd lots and that the warehouse is rendering some account sale on the medium wool at the present time. The tags have not been sold and are therefore holding up a number of account sales. Since his last report in October the one-half blood semi bright sold for 50 cents and the one half blood clothing 46 cents.

This year it is costing bet and 5 cents a pound to marl wool which leavos a very price for the above grades.

Some of the men who were ing up wool last spring from 30 cents stand in hand to m good profit that is rightly d producer.

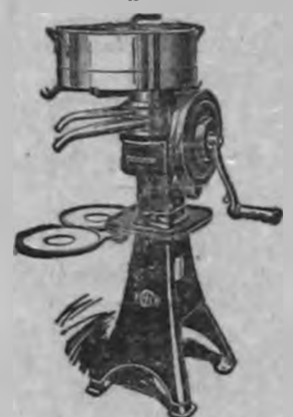
Mr. W. D. Schlieffarth, the man with the motor equipped farm has just added another high grade machine to his excellent equipment—A PRIMROSE BALL BEARING MOTOR-DRIVEN CREAM SEPARATOR. Ask Walter about his cream test.



It is indeed with great interest that we hear of our good farmers stocking their farms with high grade dairy cattle. We have just heard that Mr. Wm. Boelman of Pleasant township has added some new stock to his herd and also that Baker Brothers of Belmond township have headed their already fine herd with the champion bull of Hardin county. A fine animal weighing 1800 pounds, just purchased from the State Industrial School at Eldora.

Get into the game—milk cows—and then be sure and get all the cream by using a Primrose Separator.

Enclosed Crank Cases

An enclosed crank case on an engine is like insurance—it protects. Of course, you can't buy insurance for an engine from us, but when you buy an International Kerosene Engine you buy the two together, because the enclosed crank case on the International protects it against dust, dirt and weather, and prolongs its life. That kind of insurance and protection is money in your pocket. It means that you will have a constant and unfailing source of power to handle all the odd jobs about the farm at a very low cost. The hired man can get other work this winter, and at more money than you can afford to pay him when an International horse-and-a-half does it for 3 cents an h Also built in 3, 6, and 10 horse wer. A WORD FROM THE BUGS

The Meservey radio sets are all working fine. Those who have them are called "nuts" or "bugs"; just why we have been unable to disover. But for those that are worried about us we advise that we are a home loving set, content, to remain at home with our wives and family rather than go to some other town for entertainment As soon as the Bugs increase in sufficient number we expect to have the Bugs and Nuts form an organization with a board of directors, pres., sec. and treas., as soon as this done we will have our secretary look after our affairs in connection with the radio. If you have never heard over a radio come and visit us any evening and we will try and give you the kind of entertainment that you like best.—Written by some of the Bugs.

MESERVEY SCHOOL NOTES

On Wednesday a double header basket ball game was played with Goodell at Goodell. This was the first game of the season to be played on an indoor court but our player gave a very good account of themselves.

The girls won their game by the score of 15 to 6. Grace Groen and Anna Pals at the forward positions starring for Meservey. A lead was gained in the first few minutes of play and at no time was this lead endangered.

The boys playing their first game of the season lost by the score of 10 to 3 The first half boys were unable to hold their opponents but the second half they held them ' to one basket.

Arthur and Gerald Broga two of our best player were unable to be with us or possibly the score might have been a different story. Those composing the boys team were. Clyde Smith center; Harm Groen, George Brater, Mervin Wickersheim, Clarence Pals guards; Harry Smith and Donald Muller forwards.

Tuesday evening the teachers were guests at a 6 o'clock dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Muller. After a delightful repast all were entertained by a radio concert from Kansas City and Detroit, Michigan.

Harm Groen, Theodore Dirks and Clarence Paul, who were absent from school for several weeks are again in school.

Clyde Smith was absent from school the fore part of the week.

Alma Witt has been absent the entire week as she has been in Iowa City.

The following classics have arrived to be studied in literature Irving's "Sketch Book," "Poe's Prose Tales" and Carlyle's "Essay on Burns."

Arthur and Gerald Braga were absent a few days this week, which were spent in trapping at Morse Lake.

The second year German class have nearly finished "Immensee and Other Studies," after which they will read "Brigitta.

Those having perfect deportment stars every day the past week are Wayne Waddingham, Harland Blewitt, Neva Muller, Esther Van Osten Fredona Lemke, Edward Kuhlers, Alma Dorenkamp, Lydia Pannkuk and Bert Frey.

Marie Pals has sufficiently recovered from the effects of a broken arm to be able to come to school again.

Anna Pals was substitute teacher of the fifth and sixth grades Thursday and Friday during practice hour.

Harry Lauen has been absent from school the past five weeks.

Arne Winthers and Laura Bier have been absent the past three weeks.

The average grade of the fifth class note book work in Arithmetic for the past week was 93per cent. Those having the highest grades are Mildred Janssen Neva Muller Fredona Lemke and Harriet Sprau.

Benjamin Suntken has been absent the past week, because of corn husking.

A new device has been put to execution in the 3rd. and 4th grades for good behavior. All those who have had good deportment during the day are permitted to have their name in the Honor Box.

New books on plans for different season have been received from which the poster and art patterns are taught to the third and fourth grades

The children are making ryhme, booklets containing nursery pictures and ryhmes with them.

The boys and girls of our room have organized basket ball teams. The boys feel real confident that if they were a little taller they could easily defeat the High School teams.

Miss Wilhelmine Loats spent Sunday with home folks.

A party of young people motored to Mason City one evening last week to see "Bringing Up Father," but they missed seeing it owing to only one show being given that evening.

The best news that we have reported for many a day is now our priviledge to report in this week's issue of the Times. , The diptheria epidemic here is now a thing of the past and there is cause for much rejoicing with the passing of the dreaded disease.

It is now four weeks ago last Monday since the last case of diptheria was quarantined, almost five weeks ago since we have had a case here in Klemme. The last quarantine tag was removed Monday morning. —Klemme Times.

M. E CHURCH

Pastor, Rev. H. Tomkinson.

11 a. m. "Things that are static"

7:30 p. m. "Analyzing Johnny"

The evening sermon will be a special study in the psychology of behavior, and will be a very interesting subject to young and old alike.

METHODIST AUCTION SALE

The Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. Church will hold an auction sale of miscellaneous articles at the Pavilion, next Saturday, December, 2nd, the sale to commence at seven thirty o,clock. The articles will be on display during Saturday after noon. There will be all kinds of farm produce, house articles, fancy goods, and presents suitable for Christmas gifts. There will also be preserves, candies and doughnuts, and pies. You are cordially invited to be present and to assist the ladies with your patronage. A good time is looked for by all. The friends are asked to leave their articles etc at the parsonage by Friday afternoon or at the pavilion on Saturday morning.

Thro the generosity of Mr Fred Brooks a picture will be presented early in December, the proceeds of which will be given to the church. At considerable expense Mr. Brooks has secured for the Methodist church the picture, "The Little Minister" James Barrie's great presentation. The people of Rowan are in for a treat, this being one of the best picture productions in the country.

A Thanksgiving service will be held in the Congregational Church on the morning of Thanksgiving day, Thursday, November 30th. This will be a union service for the congregational and Methodist people, with the Rev. H. Tomkinson as the preacher. The service, which will commence at 10 o'clock sharp should appeal to all. Our president has issued a proclamation to all the people, and we should gather for a short time to give thanks to God.

The boys and girls of the High School continued their basketball victories last Friday when they defeated Goodell.

SCHOOL NOTES

Rowan was victorious in both basket ball games at Goodell Friday evening. The girls score was 12-7 The boys 20-5. According to reports the games, especially the girls was played regardless of rules. It was a fight from start to finish and might be said to resemble a basket ball game but it could hardly be called one. The boys game was better, tho not as pepy as the Rowan boys could make it under better ruling.

Goodell comes to Rowan on Thanksgiving and a stuff fight will undoubtedly be fought. The Rowan teams intend to show them a real game.

Walter Barker is in school again after being ill several days.

Dale Hiams, Joe McKinley and James Kercheval missed several days of school last week to pick corn

Orchestra practice met at the home of Kenneth Keith Monday evening.

Mrs. J. F. Howell and Mrs. Perlie Hirst visited second and third grades Friday.

STAR THEATRE

An extra big show for Saturday, Dec 2, "One A Minute", wherein the slogan "It pays to advertise" was never more humorously demonstrated. Also a BIG SPECIAL, a two-reel comedy "Rubes and Robbers." An amusing comedy from beginning to end.

PLOWING UP THE GOLD

Ed. Hayes, of Council Bluffs, went forth to plow a corn field the other day. The nose of the plow hit something hard. Ed. dug it out and discovered a box containing many pounds of gold. This gives a modern turn to the old Greek fable of the farmer who whispered with his last breath, "There is a treasure in our vineyards." The sons of the old Greek began to dig about the vineyard and found the treasure in increased crops of grapes. There are more boxes of gold in Iowa cornfields than ever have been discovered. Fertilizing the land coaxes these boxes to the surface. Plowing, harrowing, discing, rotation of crops, selecting good seed, harvesting properly, all raise the pots of gold out of Iowa soil. The chief obstacles that separate the Iowa farmer from this pot of gold lie not in the field but in economics and politics. When the farmer's economic and political problems are managed as well as the average farmer manages his land, every thrifty Iowa farmer will have his pot of gold in his own hands. The chief objective of city men and politicians in Iowa should be the solution of the problems that hinder the maximum prosperity of the Iowa farmer. The interests of the people of the whole state are one and the foundation of all other prosperity in this great agricultural state. Iowa alone could support 46,000,000 people and could have a population of 12,000,000 and be less crowded than Massachusetts. The Iowa farmers can not solve their problems alone. The manufacturers and merchants can do nothing better for the extension of their business than to keep in close touch with the farmer and fight for economic, social and political conditions that will bring all Iowa to the highest point of efficiency.—Cedar Rapids gazette.

He had no knowledge of g this slumber lasted, or ddenly awakened him, so star- the moment that he sat up in th, staring into the blackness. a dream, or a reality? Had ne spoken? He could neither or hear anything; the boat d to be motionless, not even ing now to the beat of the en- -the silence was uncanny. Some- was wrong, must be wrong. re were they—at anchor in some or or helplessly adrift on the ? The yacht rocked gently, as h the swell of the sea no longer ed her; there was no sound of on the deck above. Then he voice again, outside, reaching this time plainly through the open rt.

"All set, Mapes," it said sharply. ome on down. You finished the ?"

"Ay, ay, sir," the answer gruff, but th a tinge of excitement in the tone. She's fixed all right. Hold hard, now, ate."

West leaped to the port-hole, and, endeavored to gain a glimpse without. If land was near it remained invisible, nor could he even be sure of the close proximity of a boat. There seemed to be a smudge there at the left, a black, lumping shadow, shapeless against the background of sea; yet he could not be sure. Even as he gazed at it doubtfully, the dim object dis[illegible], fading away like a mirage. Something told him that mysterious shadow was a boat, a boat filled with men, creeping away silently into the night, fleeing from the yacht, and vanishing into the darkness.

What could such action mean? Had every one gone, leaving the vessel totally abandoned, a wreck buffeted by the surges, doomed to go down, unseen, its final fate unknown? Unknown! The word rising to his brain was the answer. There was the crest of the plot. What could be easier, or safer, than this ending? Who would ever know the truth? Who could ever prove anything, even if they suspected? And who was there to suspect? It was a plot infernal.

But if Natalie Coolidge was also prisoner on board, what of her? sn't that the very thing most probable? Of course it was; how foolish he had been. These men, recklessly criminal, as they were, would never sacrifice the yacht, and risk their own lives, merely to put him out of the way. He was not important enough for that; he was but an incident. While this was—must be—a carefully arranged plan. The girl then must be the real victim—his own plight arose merely because he chanced to be there, and the villains dare not leave him alive to tell the story.

The certainty of this acted like an electric shock. He must find the girl, and serve her. Surely she must welcome his coming to her assistance now. She would be alone, free to reveal the truth of all this strange mixup of affairs; perhaps the old trust, the old confidence between them would be renewed. The hope instantly inspired action. His eager eyes searched the narrow confines of the stateroom for some possible weapon with which to assail the door. The stout stool alone seemed available. Swinging this over his shoulder, hampered by the narrowness of space, he struck again and again, with all his strength, until suddenly the lock gave, and the door burst open.

He stepped cautiously forward, with hands outstretched, and his groping fingers came in sudden contact with the cabin wall, which he followed, circling to the left. In this manner he succeeded in finally locating the door opening out on to the deck, and weaved his way across to the right-hand stateroom door. It was locked, the key gone. He must break a way in; but first he must explain to her, so as to spare her the sudden fright of such an assault. He rapped sharply on the panel.

"Miss Coolidge: you are there, are you not?"

"Yes; who is that?" almost a cry of delight in the voice. "You—you have a voice I know."

"I am Matthew West; but do not ask questions now. The yacht is going down, and I must break this door in to release you. Stand back while I smash the boards. You hear and understand?"

"Yes—yes; I am safely away; have no fear."

A lantern's flickering light revealed the weapon he required—a heavy hatchet, and he snatched it up, and began to splinter the wood with well-directed blows. He worked madly, feverishly, swinging the sharp blade with all his strength and skill, gouging out great splinters of wood, and finally forcing the lock to yield. He sprang eagerly through the opening, the hatchet still in his grasp, and faced her.

An instant both paused, and then she cried out in sudden relief. "Oh, it is really you, Captain West. I know now. What has happened? How did you come to be here?"

"Not now," he insisted. "Don't ask me now. Just come as quick as you can. There is no time for anything but action. Quick; let me take your hand."

She permitted him to draw her through the door on to the black, deserted deck. West, bracing himself to the sudden plunging, managed to reach the rail. He drew back, sick at heart at the sight of the waves lapping the side almost on a level with the sloping deck on which he stood. The sight brought him home as never before, the drear deadly peril in which they were. He would find some means of rescue; he must! He was back instantly, grasping her arm.

"Quick," he cried. "You knew this yacht; what small boats did she carry?"

"Only the one; the other was so warped it had been taken ashore."

"Was there no life-raft? There must surely be something of that kind."

"Yes, there is; I remember now. It is forward there, near the engine-room hatch."

The deck was already sloping to port in a dangerous degree, and West was compelled to cling to the rail, as they slowly made passage forward through the darkness. He located the life-raft at last, securely fastened to the side of the deck house, and, leaving the girl to hold herself upright as best she could, began to hack it loose. Working with feverish impatience, he realized suddenly that his companion had deserted the place where he had left her and was also tugging and slashing at the lashings of the raft. These finally yielded to their blind attack. Without the exchange of a word the two grasped the sides and shoved the thing hard down against the port rail.

"Wait now," he cried exultantly. "Stay behind, and brace yourself against the hatch-cover. I'll get underneath and lift. Once on the rail the two of us must shove it free overboard."

She understood instantly, and, with a single swift glance at her dimly revealed figure, West straightened up, bearing the full weight on his shoulders, every muscle strained to the utmost, as he thus pressed it over inch by inch across the wooden barrier. Suddenly the great unwieldy mass slid forward, poised itself an instant on the rounded rail. The yacht rolled sharply to port, flinging both on to the deck together, but sending the raft crunching overboard, clear of the side. West grasped Natalie, and dragged her to her feet, but, even as he held her in his arms, ready to leap out into the black water, the shuddering vessel, with a last despairing effort, partially righted herself, and staggered on.

"Can you jump to the raft from the rail?" he asked. "It is either that, or the water. Are you afraid to try?"

"Afraid—no. Hold me; yes; that way, but—but what are you going to do?"

"Follow, of course; but I shall take to the water. There are no oars here. Nothing to use as a substitute for them. I'll have to swim, and push that old ark as far away as possible. Are you ready?"

She poised herself, held steady by the grip of his hands, her eyes on the dark outline of the floating raft. There was no hesitancy, no questioning.

"Say when," he said sharply.

"Now."

DR[illegible] NEEDS GOOD CARE

Extra good care thru the winter months must be given the "dry" cow if she is to be in condition to produce a good calf, say the dairyman at Iowa State College.

Many farmers turn these dry cows out and make them get what they can from corn stalks, when they should be getting a ration that is building up their bodies.

Often cows have had a long lactation period and their bodies are lean and they should be fed plenty of alfalfa hay and silage. A fine ration is made up of three parts of ground oats, two parts of bran, one part of oilmeal and as much ground corn as the condition of the cow demands. As soon as the cow begins to be too fat the corn can be eliminated from the ration.

Shortly after the cow calves the silage can be eliminated, especially if the udder shows signs of inflammation.

Provide a shed where the cows can get out of the winter storms and allow them warm water if it is available. This is especially valuable when the cow has just calved as it helps her keep in condition.

In feeding a cow, remember that she requires a large amount of roughage to provide bulk, but concentrates must be provided to keep up the milk flow.

HENS MAKE A GOOD PROFIT

Clearing over $100 in one month from a flock of hens that had been supplying barely enough eggs for the family table, was the experience of Mrs. Herman Miller of Crawford Co. after she had installed a modern poultry house and started to feed her hens a good winter ration.

About a year ago according to S. W. Henn, extension service poultryman at Iowa State College, Mrs. Miller was trying to find out what was the matter with her hens. She had a big flock of several hundred which were eating their heads off, but laying very few eggs.

After studying culling methods and then culling out about half of the birds as non-producers, Mrs. Miller built a semi-monitor poultry house after the plans furnished by the Iowa State College poultryman. She fed them during January 2½ bushels of ground corn, 5 bushels of whole corn, 5 bushels of ground oats, 7 bushels of whole oats and 10 pounds of tankage making a feed cost for the month of $20.15.

For this month she received a total of 405 dozen eggs and she sold all but four dozen of these for a total of $121, which when the cost of feed was deducted, left her $100.85.

Mrs. Miller says that the warm, comfortable hen house has more than paid for itself during the past year. Not only are there better quarters for the poultry and increased egg production, but there is an added pleasure that makes raising the poultry worth while.

GOOD FELLOWSHIP MEETING TONIGHT AT 8:00

Sugar Factory Completes Run

Over 30,000 Tons Are Cut—To Start Getting Acreage For 1923 Campaign.

CAMPAIGN IS PROFITABLE

The sugar factory finished cutting beets at 9:00 o'clock Tuesday morning in the 1922 campaign, and the end of the sugar making for this year is expected tonight.

Over 30,000 tons of beets were cut. Some 20,000 bags of sugar are now stored in the warehouse besides the sugar that was sold during the campaign. By Saturday the force at the factory will be thru, and the campaign over.

The factory is going to run next year, and the agricultural department has already started work toward securing the acreage next year's campaign will require. The larger the acreage the greater the success and profit of the campaign will be.

Owing to the beets this year not being up to standard with less sugar content than was expected the run of sugar was not as great as had been anticipated. However the plant will return a comfortable margin of profit both to the growers and stockholders.

Fred Gartz of Palsville was the high man for the number of tons to the acre, his tonnage being 16.04. If Mr. Gartz will call at the Independent office we shall be glad to present him with the prize offered by this paper for the farmer raising the most tons per acre.

EDITOR WINS DAMAGE SUIT

Howard C. King, editor of the News at Clarion, and defendant in a $5,000 damage case at his former home, Lyon county was recently given the decision by the supreme court. The suit was filed by one Wm. B. Frey, who claimed the damages as a result of an attack on him thru the Lyon county News by King, its editor, the alleged attack being in connection with some trouble over the county fair. The case was tried in district court, where King won, and Frey appealed to the supreme court. A recent decision by that body affirms the decision of the lower court and clears Editor King absolutely. King is a fearless type of editor, ready to battle at the drop of the hat for public welfare as Wright county people well know—and the Independent congratulates him on the victory. The newspaper profession needs more men of his type.

FOUR HOURS IN WATER

Two young lads from near Wall Lake had an agonizing experience recently when they were several hours in the freezing waters of the lake. They had gone out in a boat after ducks. The boat leaked, and while trying to pole out of some ice one of the boys lost his balance and fell in. Endeavoring to get back in the boat he capsized it, and both were thrown in the lake. They hung to the boat part of the time, and walked on the ice part of the time. No help was near enough to hear their calls. The ice was thin and only part of the time held them up. They at last succeeded in attracting the attention of a man from Waterloo, who was in a boat, and he took them to some solid ice and told them they could walk the rest of the way. After breaking thru several times they finally managed to get to shore after about four hours in the water and ice. They seem none the worse for their ordeal.

SLICK SALESMEN SELLING SHADDY SILK AT SALES

At the William Proctor sale near Clear Lake recently a couple of slick salesmen pulled a rather new stunt. They purchased a cow for $35, and after the sale announced that they had a fine line of dress goods which they were going to auction off, and the first buyer got the cow free. Naturally there was a jam to acquire bossy for nothing, and as a result the cow brought them in many shekels of easy coin, and the deluded purchaser of the dress goods found they had paid three prices for very inferior stuff, to say nothing of what they received when they got home with the shaddy goods.

HOW ABOUT IT, WALT?

Humboldt Reppublican: W. C. Ramsay, secretary of state, is pushing a bill for a reduction in auto licenses. This is a cheap way of trying to make the voters think he is for lower taxes. The tax on autoes today is not excessive. If Mr. Ramsay really wants to do us a favor he should decuse a way of spending the auto money so that the auto-owners will get their money's worth in improved roads.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Only four more Sundays in this year and we hope to make them the very best possible. Let us have every one in his place next Sunday at 10 a. m. as well as at 11 o'cock services and at the evening worship.

Many things are before us this month. Christmas is coming and our annual meeting and the closing of the year's work. Let us again close the year out of debt and with a good balance in the treasury as we have been able to do the past two years. See the treasurer as soon as possible so that he will be able to have his report made in time to have it approved at the annual meeting.

Be on hand Sunday morning to hear the report of the boys who attended the conference at Mason City.

NEW SLED LAW GOES INTO EFFECT JAN. 1ST.

Penalty Attaches Then For Using Sled Of Less Than Standard Width.

The Iowa Sled Law goes into affect the first of January, and an explanation of this law will be of interest to every farmer who uses a sled during the winter. This new sled law regulates the width between runner's and stipuates that every sled shall be of standard wagon wheel width—four feet and eight inches between runners. A good stiff fine is the penalty to any dealer selling a sled of less than standard width a jail sentence thrown in and the same penalty applies to anyone driving a sled of less than standard width. All this however is subject to the following interpretation as given the Independent by Cato C. Griesy, a local implement dealer informs this paper that any dealer can sell sleds of less than standard width providing said dealer had the sleds on hand prior to December 1st. Mr. Griesy also states that any farmers who had on hand prior to December 1st a sled of less than the standard width can use it all he pleases. It is his idea that this interpretation of the law as it applies to dealers and those now owning less than standard width sleds, will also apply to sleds sold at public sales, the owner of such sled sold having had it on hand before December 1st Mr. Griesy's explanation should set at rest any doubts as to the right of present owners to drive or sell sleds of less than the newly-required width. For some time it has been recognized that the narrow runners on bob sleds and cutters have seriously damaged the roads, and the intent of the new law is to gradually eliminate and correct this evil. However as sleds do not wear out overly fast it will doubtless be a good many years before the last of the narrow runners are done away with.

LOCAL CASE TAKES ATTENTION OF COURT

Suit Of E. F. Bailey Against C. G. W. Road Occupies Attention At Clarion.

Monitor: Marriage licenses were issued during the past week to Guy Edwin Milligan and Loretta Mary Delaney of Belmond, Wilfred A. Kist of Eagle Grove and Geneva V. Lamb ofWedster City, Cliff Johnson and Edith Williams of Dows, Andrew F. Bohning and Henrietta F. Frohling of Belmond.

The grand jury for the November term of court organized Monday by electing the first named as foreman: D. M. McBride, John Beyer, A. W. Mosely, Cryder Wicks, J. M. Flurer, John Meyer, Albert Schroeder. A report of their findings will be published later.

Lee Woodard of Eagle Grove was recently bound over to the grand jury under $500 bonds. He is charged with the larceny of a wind shield and other parts from an auto mobile owned by Harry McCallum, plead guilty and is now serving a six months' sentence in the county jail.

Treasurer Allen spent the past week on his Troy township farm, where the corn crop was being gathered with a husking machine.

Many important cases are scheduled for the present term of court. Among them is noted the case of Severe. The prominence of the par ing involving $100,000 is asked. Then there is the counter suit of Sams vs. Severe. The prominence of the parties attracts considerable attention to the separate maintenance cases, of Hazel Frank vs. R. W. Frank. Two damage cases will interest Clarion people: Mary Leeper vs. G. H. Lee and James Mehl vs. Byron Oberton.

The court's attention for most of the week will be occupied in a retrial of the case of E. F. Bailey vs. the Great Western. At a former trial Bailey was awarded a verdict of over $2000 for the alleged failure of the company to deliver cars per contract at their gravel pit. The jury erred in its verdict for the reason that the number of hours Bailey's men were found to be idle would have given him a verdict of $1000. The judge proposed to reduce the verdict to this amount, but plaintiff declined, hence a new trial was ordered.

Luther D. McNaughton of Eagle Grove asks for $309 from Edward Tighe of Eagle Grove for professional services rendered.

Louis Alcola of Eagle Grove asks judgment for $3000 against the Chicago Great Western Railroad Company. Plaintiff states that his right foot was injured while removing a steel rail from a push car and placing it in the track and that the accident happened as the result of carelessness on the part of the defendant's employees. In consequence of which he has been unable to do any work since August 8, 1922, and that his future earning capacity has been greatly impaired.

Anna Sanders of Galt brings suit against Clarence Johnson to recover $117.80 on a note.

The Farmers Savings Bank of Goldfield asks the court to set aside the sale of the J. R. Hawthorne farm made last August alleging that there was fraud in the pretended conveyance to Sarilda Hawthorne. Said bank secured a judgment for $510 at the October term of court and when Sheriff Lang attempted to satisfy a special execution he was unable to find any property subject to the same.

Nellie Luick of Belmond demands judgment against Christien Sorenson and Sena Sorenson for $1365.00 the amount of a promissory note. Plaintiff also seeks lien on mortgaged premises delivered to her by the defendants.

Lulu Kraft, guardian of the W. H. Kraft minors, petitions the court for authority to execute a mortgage for $10,000 in order to renew the expiring mortgage and to pay accumulated indebtedness.

Butler Brothers of Chicago are claiming a balance of $193.85 due from E. R. Lockwood.

TO HAVE CORN AND POULTRY SHOW

Kanawha has completed plans for a big corn and poultry show to be held at that place on Friday and Saturday of this week, December, 8 and 9. A long list of good prizes has been arranged and the best talent along poultry, grain and dairy lines has been secured from Ames The prizes are donoted from the various business places and from private individuals of the town.

The show is an annual affair, and is held to promote and encourage better poultry, grain and dairy products. A big time is being anticipated by the Kanawha people, and as they always do things up brown in that town they will doubtless realizes their ambitions.

TRINITY CHURCH NOTES

Do not fail to attend our mission and evangelistic meetings Thursday. Rev. Holm, Rev. K. O. Lundeberg of Minneapolis and other pastors have promised to be present. Evening sessions will be conducted in the English language. Sunday is our big mission day. We plan to begin the service at 10. Rev. H. C. Holm will preach the sermon in the Norwegian language. Then we must remember that our end of the church budget must be made up on that day. All please make this a big day in this respect and let us do it cheerfully. Let young and old plan to make this a big thank offering to God. Children are requested to be present. The evening service will be conducted in the English language at 7:30.

THE INDEPENDENT MAKES FINE CHRISTMAS PRESENT

There is no better Christmas present you can send a friend at a distance than a year's subscription to the Belmond Independent. The paper will remind your friends every week of the gift and your thoughtfulness. The subscription price is less than five cents a week. If you have a friend or a relative who used to live anywhere in this vicinity, and you believe they would like the news of their old home send them a copy of the Independent. Don't mail your old copy after you have read it, for in that manner you will deprive them of the paper while it is fresh, and you will also spend fifty-two cents for stamps, and more than the subscription price in time and labor on wrappers, besides forgetting to send it half the time.

Make your order direct from the Independent office.

GARNER STAGES DAIRY DAY.

Garner today is having a big day known as Dairy Day, with a program starting at 9:30 and lasting all day. The program includes numerous addresses by well known dairy men, exhibits of butter and dairy products, and scoring of butter exhibits. The entire idea is to boost the dairy industry and the Garner creamery.

NEW STATE BANK AT SHEFFIELD

The "First State Bank of Sheffeld is the title of a new bank being organized at that place, and the greater part of the necessary stock has been subscribed by the business men and farmers of the community there being over 60 reported subscribers. A meeting of the stockholders is to be held at an early date to complete the arrangements for opening. Application for a charter for the new bank has been approved. This bank is to take the place of the private one, owned by the Carhart family, which was closed a couple of months ago.

LOTTERIES GO UNDER THE OFFICIAL BAN

Attorney General Issues Orders To Prosecute Merchants At Town Of Renwick

The attorney general of Iowa has recently started cleaning up on lotteries being conducted in the state and has ordered the Humboldt county attorney to prosecute merchants at Renwick for offering a Ford car as a prize. No more are the merchants of a town to be premitted to give away a handsome piano, automobile, pig or the like as prizes for the purpose of getting trade. Newspapers are warned that any advertising, directly or indirectly, of a lottery is illegal and papers carrying such advertisements can be barred from the mails. It is not even permissable to announce who wins such prizes. It therefore, the readers of the Independent fail to see mention of any prize winners locally in any such contest they will understand that it is because the beds are softer in Belmond than they are in Ft. Madison.

BOHNING-FROHLING

The marriage of Miss Henrietta Frohling to Mr Andrew Bohning occured on Thursday, November 30 at 1:30, at the parsonage of the Immanuel church, Rev. Waakles reading the service. They were attended by the bride's brother, Herman Frohing, and the groom's sister, Miss Gae Bohning. The bride was attired in a brown traveling suit. The couple left the same day for a short wedding trip. They will be at home to their many friends after Dec. 10.

The bride is a daughter of Mr and Mrs. Herman Frohling. The groom is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. George Bohning, and has been farming with his father on their farm east of town. The young couple have lived in this community almost all their lives and are highly respected. The Independent joins in wishing them the best of success.

Judge Wright To Deliver Address

First Meeting Of Season Held At Library With Noted Jurist As Speaker.

USUAL GOOD PROGRAM TOO

The first meetng of the Good Fellowship club will be held tonight at the library basement, at which time Judge Wright of Fort Dodge will be the speaker. The meeting will start promptly at 8:00 o'clock, and there will be the usual good program and eats. As this is the first of the season and as the speaker is one of the best to be had, a large crowd is anticipated. Be there and enjoy one of the best times you have had this year. Remember it is tonight, Thursday, at the library at 8:00 o'clock.

DOWS VS BELMOND, THANKSGIVING DAY

The Sporting Editor has gone to considerable trouble to give the Advocate readers an anticipated account of the biggest Thanksgiving football game in this neck of the woods, namely Dows Hi versus Belmond Hi.

As the sun tries to get a peep at the Severe gridiron, both teams romp out for a short signal practice and then line up for the kick-off. Dows either kicks off or receives and Belmond either also; then the fray starts. What Dows doesn't do to Belmond would fill the space of a postage stamp on a letter.

This is just what happened:—Dows battles Belmond; busts Belmond; bangs Belmond; bewilders Belmond; bamboozles Belmond; bites Belmond; bends Belmond; blocks Belmond; blows Belmond bluffs Belmond; brands Belmond; bulldozes Belmond; finally beats (not sugar) Belmond.

Then the Belmond band leads off her aggregation, playing the Belmond Blues, after which they hit it for the cold north only to get their sweet (revenge) at the Sugar Beetery.

All of which from last week's Advocate, is only too sadly true, and thoroly describes the game as it was played. The score was only 32 to 6. The boys were simply outclassed, but they put up a game fight, and in the last half held Dows even.

ST. OLAF

Beginning Friday morning evangelistic and mission meetings will be conducted at the church beginning no later than 10:30. Rev. K. O. Lundeberg of Minneapolis and Rev. Holm and other pastors will be with us to make these meetings inspiring and helpful. Please come and tell others. Norwegian will be used at our forenoon and afternoon session. The Ladies Aid have kindly offered to serve luncheon at noon to those who attend the meetings. This will be very helpful. We are thankful for this Sunday is our big mission day. We are depending upon you to make up what may be necessary to meet our end of the Synodical church budget. Please remember this and make this day a day of thanks to God. Say it with your money as well as your words. Rev. Lundeberg will preach at the morning service in the Norwegian language. Then the offering will be received. Come to the meeting prayerfully, give to the Lord cheerfully and God's blessing will come upon us.

HOLD BAZAAR SATURDAY

The ladies of the Catholic church will hold their annual bazaar on Saturday of this week at the library basement. The sale starts at 2:30 in the afternoon and many beautiful and useful gifts suitable for the Christmas season will be on sale. In the afternoon and evening the ladies will serve lunches.

CLIPPINGS

Some great poet said, "Every tub should sit on its own bottom."

We were glad to hear that the creamery association plans to run the scoring contest another year. However, would it not be well for the patrons the mselves to contribute next year's prizes? It would improve the flavor and give an added interest to the affair, we believe.

We further suggest that these business men who so kindly donated for the other contests, be urged with their wives to join us in the blowout next year.—Clear Lake Reporter.

The sophomore class and Professor Risser autoed to Belmond Tues day where they inspected the Iowa Valley Sugar Beet plant.—Kanawha Reporter.

Miss Mable Starnes was visiting at the Mille Smith home Monday and then she went to Belmond Tues day for a visit with relatives and friends.—Klemme Times.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Drake went to Belmond Sunday and spent the day at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Allen—Klemme Times.

August Dahr, a resident of Iowa Falls and employed with a ditching crew near Ackley, was fatally injured Friday at noon when the fly wheel of the ditching machine became loosened and was hurled with great force, striking Dahr in the head. He was taken to the office of a physician in Ackley at once, but died soon after reaching there.—Hampton recorder.

Miss Newgard of Belmond, a sister of Mrs. Paul Barth, and Mr. Ralph Edwards of Clarion were over Sunday guests at the Barth home.—Garner Signal.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Pritchard are going to California next month for a visit with Mr. Pritchard's father and other relatives. Walt says that they will spend about two weeks in California as that is as long as he can be away.—Garner Signal.

Last Saturday at midnight while Harry Berry, night man at the Wood Carriage and Auto Company garage was absent from the building and at a cafe partaking of a lunch a thief looted the cash register and secured about $30 in bills and silver. The doors to the building were locked and the miscreant gained entrance by raising a window sas h with a bar which he used as a lever. The thief evidently was acquainted with the premises. The supposition is that the robbery was committed by local citizen.—Hampton Recorder.

The Rock Island passenger ran into a drove of cattle belonging to John Ullstad on the Steffenson farm northwest of town last Thursday evening and killed tweny-one head. Five more were injured. Those killed were cows and heifers and were all good cattle. The damage was fixed by a board of appraisers and further consideration if those injured did not recover. The cattle were trailing along a grade on the track when the train an hour late, hit them.—Forest City Summit.

The Recorder has been asked to call the attention of its readers to the fact that it is against the law to set a trap nearer than four feet to the runway of a fur-bearing animal. Another point that many seem to be ignorant of is that the trapping laws provide a severe penalty for disturbing or breaking into muskrat houses.—Hampton Recorder.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The hangings in Iowa during the past few months have stirred up a lot of sentimental people to agitate against the hanging of crimuials and some who are advocating the abolishment of capital punishment. These latter people are letting their sympapthies run away with their judgement. As a more humane manner of carrying out the death sentence, the electric shair may be a good thing but to abolish capital punishment altogether is unsound. The fear of the law is all that keeps some crimuial from doing more than they do; the knowledge that if they take a life their own shall be taken as a forfeit holds many a desperado from killing his victim. Stolen property can be replaced; a life taken is gone forever, a soul sent unannounced to the Great Judge. Prison sentences are for the lesser crimes; the death sentence should be the penalty for deliberate murder, and those sentamentalists who decry its fulfillment and vilify the officer who follows his duty and carries out the sentence are making trival talk for the glory of their own ears. Change the method, perhaps but the penalty never.

Forest City is organizing a Comercial club or Chamber of Comemerce. Wonder what the chances would be of getting one going in Belmond?

The general opinion is that the state board should have barred Davis from athletics for a period, if it thought best. Because they may have trouble with some schools that are wilfuly violating this residence rule is no reason why they should slap a whole school and a whole community in the face for unknowingly violating a rule, at best only in a technical way, without at least first allowing a just and fair hearing of the case from both sides. The board in so doing harms the real interest of education and the promotion of clean athletics.—Chronicle.

OUTSIDE ADVERTISING IT SHOULD BE ACCEPTED

Editor's Note: This paper was read before the last Annual Convention of the Minnesota Editorial Association. Mr. Folsom has given his ideas on this subject based on years of experience in this particular field and has handled it in an exececellent manner.....

In this meeting of the newspaper pulblishers, I take it that our topics refer to newspapers—not "organs." Certainly no one at this meeting would care to be rated as an organ grinder who represents some class or clique and does just what he is told to do without considering his obligation to those, who purchase his paper and rely upon his honesty and fairness.

It seems to me that the proposal advanced in the paper just read—that advertising should be acepted from competing towns is the only absolutely fair principle to lay down, presuming of course, that the advertising be "fair," by which I mean truthful and not aimed to injure. Just as a shopman's first obligation should be to give value received to those who place their confidence in him, a newspaper's first obligation should be to its subscribers. To make good with one's subscribers does not mean merely to give a fair statement of truth as news and make honest expression of editorial opinion but must also include the publication of all fair advertising that seeks and pays for space in its columns without breaking the rules of the office as to time and makeup.

To refuse to live up to this obligation puts the newspaper itself in the position of refusing to allow the publication of truth in its columns, puts its home-town merchants in the position of being afraid to compare their goods and prices with those of merchants in competing towns and makes the purchasing public feel that is being imposed on whether it is or not. Poisons its mind against the combination of "big business and kept press" that is arrayed against it and starts it out on a class war that is always injurious to the individual and demoralizing to the community and the state.

I one time had a personal exerience of that sort. I refused a piece of advertising from a competing town and the merchant who was really an amible and able man, flooded our community with circular advertising in which he held my paper up to a well deserved ridicule and fairly "bruned up" the merchants of my home town. The result cost us hundreds of dollars worth of business and untold injury in the loss of public confidence which is the windward anchor of every enterpise of real worth.

In addition to the obligation of a newspaper to its subscribers, which I referred to, there are other professional landmarks in the publication of a newspaper, without which no paper can retain the greatest degree of public confidence and no publisher best succeed. Probably the second obligation is to the publisher himself, to maintain his self respect and establish a public confidence in his course so that his birthright and be respected whether he be popular or not, and such a course can not be run nor such a confidence be built upon a platform so narrow as not to reach without the confines of his own door yard. It seems to me that a third is to the public which has given to the press untrammeled liberties of expression, special mailing privileges and other advantages and asks in return only absolute and unbending honesty, free from curtailment of censoring because of this that or the other, including locality. And I cannot, Mr. President and members of the Association, see by what means of reason I can so warp any of these obligations that rest on every newspaper as to any more justify the publication of a deliberate falsehood than I can to deny to any man the right to publish therein his fair story of the truth. And that refers to advertising as well as anything else.

It is true, that between localities, a newspaper owes its first obligation to its own home community. Every man owes that and a good country paper represents the personality of its publisher. But it seems to me that refusal to accept fair advertising which may contain valuable or necessary information for some or most of the paper's subscribers in its own home town, would constitute a deliberate abridgment of that obligation which should, under ordinary circumstances, class it outside the real newspaper pale. It isn't the American idea that a section or a state can best develop behind closed doors.

Along this same line, I might add that if the paper just read had upheld the propriety of soliciting advertising in competing towns I could not have agreed with it nor do I believe the sentiment of this organization would favor such a stand, presuming that the paper were already receiving fair treatment in its own home community. A newspaper is really a public utility and the obligation that it owes the public is based on this concepton, but there is a vast difference between its duty and its right to stir up competitive towns to destory its own. I do not believe that a self-respecting publisher in any town where the merchants are demonstrating their desire and ability to car for the business of the community and are providing the paper with a reasonable amount of local support will go into a competing community in a mistaken attempt to further feather his nest.

Of course, there are exceptions to every rule, and so they will be found to the one for which I contend—that advertising should be accepted from competing towns. But their existence is without effect on the rule itself. In some centers where nationality, creed or other condition plays a controlling part, some publishers tell us that they succeed best by refusing business from competitive towns, but that proves nothing in the broad field of newspaperdom, or in the general discussion in which we are engaged.

The real question is the development of the community and the newspaper which is a community leader must be broad in its conception. There are a thousand weapons at its command to ward off any danger in competitive town advertising if it wishes to arise and use them. Advertising from competitive towns is not a menace—it should be, could be, must be a spur to better things if the old home town is worthy of a place in the sun.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Corn Yield Contest

The purpose of the corn yield contest is to bring corn from various parts of the county together and plant it on one man's farm where the soil conditions are uniform. The corn has the same cultural methods and is given as near uniform conditions as possible. This gives the various farmers an opportunity to compare their corn in yielding qualities to other corn. The ultimate purpose of the work is to obtain a strain of corn that will outyield the various types of corn grown in any particular county. The best variety of corn for any particular set of conditions is one that, one season with another, will produce the largest amount of shelled corn of good quality. There are many varieties and strains of corn of more or less difference. In determining what variety is best suited for any particular locality two outstanding points should be taken into consideration, namely—first; a variety or strain that is adapted to that local condition and will mature properly in an ordinary season. Much loss is occasioned by attempting to raise a strain that is too large and too late for the locality. Second—the yielding points of a variety should be taken into conderation. In testing the relative productiveness of a variety of corn under the same conditions large differences have been found, even among varieties developed in the same community. Such differences are inherent in the variety. They are valuable characteristics just as much as color, type of ear, or shape of kernel. It has been found in some counties over the state that a difference of as much as twenty bushels per acre has been noticed among strains entered in competitive tests such as that conducted in this county.

The average yield of corn for Iowa last year was forty-three bushels per acre. Comparing this yield with the yield obtained in the test plots it is easy to see that the yield per acre can easily be increased. The low yield is due in many cases to poor seed. In Iowa the average sand is not more than sixty-two per cent. Records that have been taken have shown that twenty-five per cent of the hills were missing, thirty per cent had one stalk, twenty-five per cent had two stalks and twenty per cent had three stalks per hill. This condition exists in hundreds of fields but the actual seriousness of the situation is not generally realized in most instances. If we go into many corn fields to husk them and make a story of the stand of corn we will see why the average of the state is as low as forty-three bushels per acre.

Corn is more sensitive to changed conditions than any other grain, especially as regarding climatic conditions. We should therefore be careful not to import corn from a great distance. The man who once secures a good variety and then gives it careful attention year after year, planting only the best ears out of the best of all his crop, has a much better chance of success than the man who depends upon purchased seed from a distance.

The results of the corn samples on the Harry Inners farm near Goldfield are as follow:

Miller S. Nelson rank 1, plot No. 27, field wgt. in lbs. 567, per cent water 15.8 yield in bushels 77.71.

M. L. Clark, rank 2 plot No. 28, field wgt. in lbs. 563, per cent water 16.9, yield in bushels 76.17.

T. A. Knight, rank 3, plot No. 4, field wgt. in lbs. 546, per cent water 16.3, yield in bushels 74.40.

Numbers 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 yielded 73.70, 72.03, 68.87, 68.82, 68.29 and 67.77 respectively.

The results of the corn samples on the H. A. Flett farm near Dows are as follows:

Harry Woodley rank 1, plot No. 24, yield in lbs. 469, per cent water 16.2, yield in bushels 63.97.

Edd. Harring, rank 2, plot No. 22 yield in lbs. 464, per cent water 17.3 yield in bushels 62.47.

F L. Bubeck, rank 3, plot No, 19, yield in lbs. 457, per cent water 21.0 yield in bushels 58.77.

Numbers 4 5, 6, 8, and 9 yielded 58.51, 58.27, 57.76, 50.72, 50.09 and 48.90 respectively.

1923 Program Outlined

On last Saturday Nov. 25th a committee consisting of Geo. C. Kirstein, (Woolstock township)—Mrs. Harry Woodley (Grant township) and Geo. M. Nelson (Eagle Grove township) met at the county agent's office and outlined the program of work which is to be followed next year in carrying out the activities of the Wright county farm bureau. The president of the farm bureau appointed this committee from various parts of the county to work out the schedule of work for the coming year.

There was a time when the extension department arranged a list of projects and "wished" them upon the farm bureau organization to work out as best they could, but times have changed and the farmers within the organization have decided that as long as they are the ones who pay the bill, they should be entitled to have voice in deciding upon what lines of work should be taken up by the farm bureau organization. Each township organization has had opportunity to suggest projects which should be included in the year's work and the committee in outlining the work has kept these suggestions in mind.

Now that the program of work for 1923 is decided upon the way seems clear for carrying on a successful year's work in Wright county. An effort has been made to carry out the program of work in such a way as to fit it to the budget which is made up for carrying on the work each year. An interesting list of projects has been arranged and will be carried out as nearly we have at hand and with the assistance of the extension department.

Interesting Clothing Schedule completed.

Miss Bertha Huber, clothing specialist from the extension department a Ames, has just completed a series of demonstrations or training schools in which each township in the county has had opportunity to take advantage of her specialized work on "The Use and Alteration of Commercial Patterns."

In conducting these training schools on the sewing work the object has been to present the work in such a way that about five or six ladies in each township could actually do the work under Miss Huber's direction and in this way be able to go back to their respective communities and actually demonstrate to the other ladies the work as given. It is hoped that the ladies who have taken this course of instruction will feel the responsibility of passing the good work along, because it is only by such cooperation that the specialized work in the ladies department can be put across in this county where we are not fortunate enough to have a home demonstration agent. This is a splendid opportunity for the ladies of the various township communities to get together and cooperate with one another in problems which are vital to their individual homes.

Although the weather has been very disagreeable at times and the roads almost impassable, and although most farmers have been busy with corn picking work, the meetings have been very well attended and great interest has been taken in the work as presented by Miss Huber. These demonstrations have been very practicle and those who have attended seem to feel that if this work is carried on as we believe it will be the sewing work of the farm home will be made more attractive and less burdensome. This course of instruction has surely offered an opportunity to the ladies of Wright county for getting specialized help in the line of the sewing work and the hope has been expressed that this work will be continued next year.

Tuberculosis Increasing In Iowa

Mr. Smith of the live stock exchange, speaking before the extension workers' conference at Ames recently, said that twenty per cent of the hogs of Iowa have tuberculosis. This means that 100 train loads of forty cars each have the disease. He stated further that these hogs contract tuberculosis from the cattle and that the loss amounts to $1,000,000 annually. The packers at the present time find that it costs twenty-five cents per cwt. to maintain the inspection and pay the losses. They are offering a premium of ten cents per cwt. for hogs from tuberculin free districts. He also stated that twenty-five per cent of the tuberculosis of children under five years of age is caused by using milk from infected cows. These facts ought to make us realize the importance of testing the cattle especially milk cows, and getting them out of the herd. If you want your cows tested let the farm bureau office list them for testing and as soon as fifty head are listed in the community a test will be arranged.

Date Set For Annual Federation Convention

The next annual convention of the Iowa Farm Bureau federation will be held in Des Moines, January 11 and 12, 1923. The opening session on Thursday will be devoted to reports of federation officers of the activities of the organization in 1922. Speakers of national prominence will address the convention. It is hoped that arrangements will be again made to send a number of delegates from Wright county. Those who attended last year were especially well pleased with the program which they heard.

Beware of Bean Weevils

Several people have reported damage to stored beans by the common bean weevil. Thinking that information in regard to this pest would be of value to others we are quoting from Dr. C. J. Drake, state entomologist, as follows:

"These weevils get into the beans, lay eggs and the larvae soon hatch out in the eans and ruin them.

When the presence of the bean weevils is noticed, action against the pest should begin at once or they will soon have the beans thoroughly infected and ruined.

The best method to use is to fumigate the beans with carbon bisulphite gas, as this penetrates the bean and kills all the larvae. However, the carbon bisulphite is extremely explosive and should be used with caution. It is a good plan to consult the county agent about handling the remedy. When only a few beans are in storage, as a few bushels for seed it is a good plan to take the beans out of doors for fumigation.

To fumigate, take the sacked beans out of doors and place in a barrel. Take a small dish or pan and set on top of the sack and put one pound of carbon bisulphite in the pan for every 100 pounds of beans. Cover the barrel with an oilcloth and leave for several hours. The fumes from the carbon bisulphite gas is heavier than air and will go down and penetrate the bags and kill the weevils. Keep the temperature at about fifty degrees for best results."

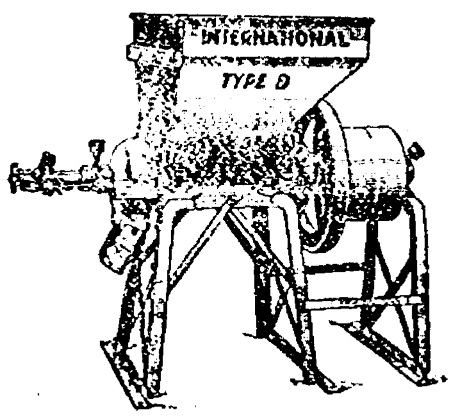
Feed Grinder Lubrication

The McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder has five hard oilers two of which are located on the main bearings and keep the shaft constantly oiled. Each end-thrust bearing is lubricated by oil supplied from cups that can be easily filled. The shaft on which the gear operating the agitator rod turns is kept well supplied with grease from an oil cup located within easy reach of the operator. These features may be incidental to actual grinding operations, but they certainly do much to keep the McCormick Deering Feed Grinder going at top speed and full capacity without mishap. McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder bearings do not burn out if oil is kept in the cups. That's part of the real quality you want in feed grinders.



Are You A Head Worker?

It has been said that "the man who spreads manure by hand is making better use of his hands than his head". Spreading manure by hand is a slow, tedious job at best. Manure can't be spread as finely evenly and uniformly by hand as by a good manure spreader, nor can it be done as quickly. The International Manure Spreader will save time, save muscles in your back, save manure and MAKE MONEY for you by increasing the fertility of your soil. The International Roller-Bearing, Tight-Bottom Manure Spreader will do all these things for you at a comparatively low price—the first price only. Why not come in and look one over? Be a head worker.

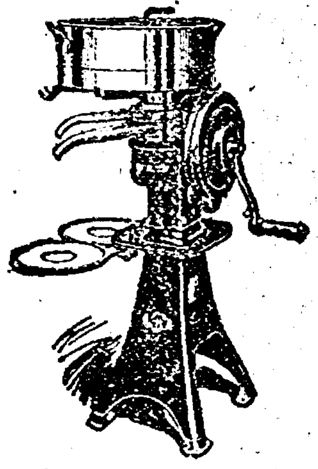
Ask For A Demonstration

The combination of the highest quality ball bearings at points of greatest friction and a slow crank speed make a large capacity Primrose so light running it will surprise and please you. The Ball Bearing Primrose is the lightest running cream separator of its capacity to be found anywhere—hard turning has been eliminated. Ask us to bring a Ball Bearing Primrose out to your farm. Test this machine to your own satisfaction. The improved tinware, postive and automatic oiling system, ball bearing slow crank speed, big capacity—all these so greatly increase the life of the machine that the Ball Bearing Primrose is the most desirable cream separator on the market. Ask us for a demonstration on your farm!



This is the time of the year when everybody you meet tells you a different way to cure your cold—none of which will work.

THE WHITE MULE BRAYS

The following sprasm must have been the result of too freely imbibing of the hooch when it is green from the still, and is credited to exchange:

It was midnight on the ocean
Not a street car was in sight;
The sun was shining brightly,
And it rained all day and night.
It was evening and the rising sun
Was setting in the west;
The fishes in the pine trees
Were cuddled in their nest.
'Twas a summer day in winter,
The snow was raining fast,
A barefooted girl with shoes on
Was sitting on the grass.
The rain was pouring downward
The moon was shining bright,
And everything that you could see
Was hidden out of sight.
While the organ peeled potatoes
Lard was rendered by the choir;
While the sexton rang the dish rag,
Some one set the church on fire.
"Holly smoke!" the parson shouted.
And the poor guy lost his hair;
Now his head is just like Heaven
For there is no parting there.

Kinseth's Store News

How did you stand the battle last Thursday? Hope you came thru victorious, full of satisfaction and with a contented feeling. Thanksgiving comes but once a year so one sorta feels like celebratin' a little bit.

If you trade at the store on the corner you will be thankful every day of the year, because you will be saving money, and money doesn't grow like sugar beets or corn, altho there is money in both. We have some real bargains to offer in blankets, and it's getting so a pair feels mighty good these nights. Look our line over and pick out a pair.

One big trouble with these holidays is that you no sooner get over one than the next one's here. Christmas is only a few days away and we have a full line of eats for the occasion.

We sell raisins but not hooch.

Men's leather vests and overshoes at warming prices for these warm goods. You need them out of doors this kind of weather.

And we also have wool shirts for the men too. Keep your shirt on if you want to keep warm.

And underwear that feels warm and is warm, and you won't get hot when you discover the price.

Coffee when it's cold is just the same as lemonade when its hot, only different. We have "different" coffee—different because it's better and only 38c.

The road runs right by our door, so don't forget the store on the corner.

MESERVEY SCHOOL NOTES

Eva Sprau returned to school Monday after an absence of several weeks.

Elma Witt returned to school Monday.

The Senior class are settling affairs in general. The following decisions have been made:

Class motto—"Don't be a crank, be a self starter."

Class colors—Purple and gold.

Class flower—Purple lilac.

The rings have also been chosen and will be sent for soon.

The school board gave the Friday following Thanksgiving as vacation, much to apreciation of faculty and students. The teachers spent their vacation in the following places:

Miss Anderson at Story City, Miss Hawthorne at Renwick, Miss Thomas at Meservey, Miss Holroyd accompanied Miss Huenemana to her home near Garner, Miss Humke at Ackley and Mr. Herbster at Meservey.

The agriculture class have taken up a new text "Soils and Soil Fertility." Tuesday afternoon they went on a field trip in connection with their studies.

The boys and girls basket ball teams of Meservey High School played both teams of Latimer High School,Tuesday evening at Latimer. The boys were defeated by a score of twelve to two. The score of the girls game at the end of first was four and. Another hotly contested half followed, at the end of which the score remained the same neither side making a gain. It was decided to break the tie by playing another 3 minutes, but the score remained the same . After another three minutes of hard fighting Latimer gained two scores making the standing score eight to four in their favor.

Among those taking the players and rooters to Latimer Tuesday evening were,Rev. Schlesselman, A. J. Nissen, A. E. Mueller, A. D. Grogan, Bert Groen, Clyde Smith, Fred Menzel, Harold Zieman, Theodore Dirks, and Albert Pals.

The high school had an old time spellingmatch Wednesday afternoon. The contest was rather brief and ended with an equal number on both sides.

5th and 6th Grades

Original Thanksgiving poems were written in both classes this week. The poems voted the best are belonging to Alma Dorenkamp, Harriet Sprau and Lydia Pannkuk.

The sixth grade people were much pleased to have their last year's teacher Miss Ralston, with them a short time Wednesday afternoon.

Laura Bier and Arne Winthers are back in school after a three weeks' absence

Those having perfect deportment stars the past week are Harriett Sprau, Marvin Nissen, Jennie Riekens, Mildred Janssen, Arlene Nissen, Wayne Waddingham, Harland Blewitt, Neva Muller, Ether VanOsten, Emma Boelman, Fredona Lemke, Nellie Frey, Herman Meints, Marie Pals, Lydia Pannkuk, Edna Kuhler, Virgie Schluter and Alma Dorenkamp. After a student has a perfect deportment star for 20 days he is entitled to a gold star.

Mr. Nissen and Marvin took the teachers to the basket ball game at Latimer Thursday evening.

Wednesday afternoon the members of the 5th and 6th grades handed in papers on which were written their reasons for being thankful. Chief among them we found health home and friends.

3rd and 4th Grades

Wilbert Frey spent Thanksgiving in Minnesota ,

The children who were absent from school this week were Lydia Pals, Wilbert Frey and Raymond Pals.

A third class has been organaized in our room. Anyone wishing information concernng the class may question some of the children or come and visit school.

The 3rd grade had perfect attendance on Monday and Tuesday.

The 4th grade had a speed and accuracy test Monday and on Tuesday morning. The leaders were Lu-Verne Butz and Lincoln Paul. The team under the leadership of Lu, Verne won, having made 350 points on Monday and 237 on Tuesday. The members of the winning team were Lu Vern, Thara, Raymond, Mervin, Benjamin S., Phyllis, Gwethalyun, aand Leona.

Tuesday afternoon, the Fourth grade spent their geography period in making an Indian village.

Miss Ralston visited our room Wednesday afternoon.

The third grade speed and accuracy test on Tuesday morning was won by Norman Muller's side. The members of the team were Vona, Frederick, Leona, Vergie, Virgil Tillie, and Raymond.

The Second grade has had only one case of absence during the past two weeks

Those who have had perfect spelling the past week are Bernice, Blewitt, Barbara Braga Kenneth Kolb Esther Smith Neola Watermiller, Julia Frye Viola Koehler and Lois Thomas. The last three had perfect spelling all last week also.

In the Second grade number work contest, Lorenga Quandt holds the best record, as he went around the "race track" in 14 seconds. Going around the track consists in giving the answers to the twelve combination written on the "track."

Harold Riekens has been absent from the first grade this entire week.

Alfred Olson has reentered the eighth grade after an absent of four weeks.

Arloene Janssen has had 100 in spelling for five weeks.

The seventh grade have finished studying about the Central States and have begin work on the Southern States.

Miss Ralston visited the 7 and 8th grades Friday afternoon.

You won't see 8 per cent bonds right away again, and there is considerable doubt about 6 per cent beer.

The Bright Side.

Mr. Nuwed—Peg, if you keep on spending money, we'll land in the poorhouse.

Mrs. Nuwed—But Jack, we'll have some pretty things to take with us.

Young Peoples' meeting at 7:15 (German.)

Evening services at 8:00 (English.)

Singing practice for Christmas on Sunday at 2:00 p m.

Rehearsal of dialogues, recitations, hymns, etc., for Christmas program Saturday at 1:30 p m.

A Thanksgiving service was held last Thursday and the goodly sum of $68.41 was raised for German relief.

Last Sunday after the preparatory services two persons made confession of faith, and were received into the church.

Next Sunday the Ladies' Aid Supper will be celebrated. The usual offering taken up at this occasion will go to the Board of Domestic Missions. May we add, that contributions in behalf of Domestic Missions ae far short of the board's budgets, and less than they were at this time last year. We, therefore kindly request the membership to give liberally towards this cause.

Last Thursday evening thirty of the young people gathered at the parsonage and had a complete surprise upon the pastor and family. They came with well filled baskets, and after a social time had been spent in games, etc. to the enjoyment of all refseshments were served. Just before leaving a purse of money was presented to us as a token of appreciation. We thank you again for this encouragement.

H. PANNKUK, Pastor.

SALE OF RED CROSS SEALS IS ENDORSED

Hearty endorsment of the annual sale of Christmas Seals in Iowa to finance the state wide fight on tuberculosis, and to assist in local public health work is given by a number of leading Iowa citizens in statements which they have made in regard to the sale of the seals.

The seals are sold in every county in the state by the Iowa Tuberculosis Association, cooperating with women clubs, local public health organizations and similar units everywhere. Most of the proceeds are used locally by the organizations conducting the sale.

"Nothing is more important in Iowa than the improvement of public health," declares Governor N. E. Kendall, who is an honorary vice president of the state association. "I hope that there will be a liberal purchase of the seals by al lwho are interested in better living conditions. The fight on tuberculosis is one of the most important activities of the present time, and much progress is being made in Iowa through the sale of the seals."

"Every member of organized labor is interested in improving public health conditions and in fighting tuberculosis," says J. C. Lewis,president of the Iowa Federation of Labor. "The sale of Christmas seals has the emphatic endorsment of the National Federation of Labor and Mr. Samuel Gompers, and I hope that the workers of Iowa will buy as liberally as they can afford. I am personally familiar with some of the good work which is being done, and I urge organized labor in Iowa to assist in the sale of seals in every possible way."

"Women of Iowa know that nothing is more necessary than continued activities to promote better health and protect the wellfare of the children", says Mrs. Dante M. Pierce, former president of the Iowa League of Women Votes, and well known in women's activities. "I hope that the fight against tuberculosis can be greatly strenghtened in this state by the sale of large numbers of christmas seals, and I am glad that women clubs and women's organizations generally are taking an interest in this work."

"I believe in all activities which will make the people of Iowa healthier and happier," is the statement of Senator-Elect Smith W. Brookhart. "The sale of Christmas seals helps to promote an interest in public health work by all who participate, and whenever the public itself becomes sufficiently active in any subject of vital interest to them, results are going to be obtained. I believe that public health work should begin at home, and this is one way to get a good start."

"The Iowa Farm Bureau Federation has cooperated with the Iowa Tuberculosis Association in the fight on tuberculosis, and I am glad to give my personal endorsment to the sale of Christmas seals," says E. H. Cunningham, secretary of the Iowa Tuberculosis Association. "The Farm Bureau has been one of the leading factors in the war on bovine tuberculosis. I hope that Farm Bureau members will assist in the seal sale to the best of their ability."

The seals will be placed on sale in county in Iowa about Dec. 1. It is hoped to sell at least $150,000 worth this year.

No Harm Done.

Preacher—Don't wou know my boy, that you shouldn't play ball on Sunday?"

Small Boy—That's all right, Mister. We ain't playing, we're only practicing for tomorrow's game!

You are invited to attend these services.

ROWAN SCHOOL NOTES

The entire faculty not living in Rowan spent Thanksgiving at home, with the exception of Miss Mohr who went to Harris

Several of the high school students have been picking corn the past week

Students absent thus far this week are Kathryn Harson, Fred and Harold Moellering and Walter Barker.

The program given at the school house Tuesday evening of last week was very well attended.

The basket ball game played here Thursday with Goodell was a fine game in spite of the fact that it was played after Thanksgiving dinner. Both Rowan teams were victorious. The girls won 29-9. A large bunch of Rowan boosters were present and also quite a number from Goodell, including part of the faculty. It was necessary to turn part of the crowd away for want of room.

George Brooks is now playing the drums in the orchestra.

Palmer buttons were presented to the following for improvement in the writing of 25 Palmer drills accepted by Palmer: Dolly Duffy, Anna Rietz, Eleanor Martin, Grace Holliday, Ione Francomb and Bonnie Thomas. For further improvement silver and gold pins will be given.

Rowan Congregational Church Notes

"CAPPY RICKS"

Thomas Meighan, athletic Paramount star, is a brawny sailor's mate in his latest starring vehicle "Cappy Ricks", which will be the feature at the Star theatre Dec. 9. As Matt Peasley in this refreshing picture of the sea, Mr. Meighan is said to have one of the best roles of his stellar career.

BASKET BALL NOTES

Goodell came to town on Thanksgiving evening only to return home vanquished. But they were good losers, mighty fine losers, which means a lot.

The Rowan girls won the first game of the evening with the rather onesided score of 29-9. Azeltine and Emerson starred for Rowan altho to them cannot be given the entire credit. Duffy at center pulled down every long pass that was attempted by the Goodell guards and returned the ball to the Rowan forwards. Both teams wasted considerable time on "held balls" but in the game as played by girls this seems, unfortunately, necessary. Goodell's chief trouble was in judging the height of our baskets many of their well executed shots striking the under edge of the basket.

Miss Frances Farran officiated

The Rowan boys out weighed and out played Goodell. There was little chance for any display of speed brilliant dribbling, careful or clever footwork, or any of the many essentials of good basketball. The smallness of the floor plus the use of the new rules held the game to common place basketball. There were occasional flashes of clever play, but in general straight aggressive basketball piled up the score of 35 to8.

Azeltine, Kerchwal and Moellering were pointmakers for Rowan. The latter spoiled a number of possible points by shooting from too great a distance.

Robert Holiday officiated.

The next game will be played with Chapin at Rowan, December 15. Thaat crowd Thanksgiving night was excellent and we admit it ourselves we'd like to see 'em like that all season.

OLAF

A number from here attended the funeral of the late Tom Hillestad, whose remains were brought here from Dolliver, and held at St Olaf church Monday afternoon. Mr. Hillestad was an old resident of this community but of late years had made his home with his son at Dolliver.

Mr. Wirkdecked hauled hard coal from Clarion, Saturday. Hard coal seems to be scarce this year.

G. Halverson's brother and family from Armstrong spent part of last week with him.

Mrs. Oscar Hanson, who has been quite sick is now much better which we are glad to note.

Otto and Otis Cook were confirmed, Sunday in the Norwegean Lutheran Church at Kanawha.

Mr. and Mrs. Orpha Anderson entertained the "500" club Saturday night.

Corn picking will soon be a thing of the past, as nearly everyone is thru, and this week with good weather will complete the harvest.

Mrs. Geo, Baxter entertainer a number of friends at her home, Monday afternoon to a miscellaneous shower in honor of Clara Eliason, whose marriage takes place, Thursday to Henry Ganappe of Sheffield.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kessler of Iowa Falls were Thanksgiving guests at the S. O. Windecker home.

Mrs. Clarance Scott wwas pleasantly surprised last Saturday by a number of her friends and relatives Mrs. Snyder planned the occasion having invited Mrs. Scott down to Belmond to take dinner with her, it being Mrs. Scott's birthday after Mrs. Scott arrived the friends and relatives appeared. And a big enjoyable time was had.

Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Ericson entertained their children and grandchildren last Sunday at a family dinner.

Pete and Jake Rigert of Mason City visited at the Henry Lien home Friday night and Saturday.

Belmond Local News

Mrs. John Wenzel left the first of the week for LaSalle and DeKalb, Illinois, where she will visit at the home of her parents and with other relatives.

Prof. F. W. Bohning who spent the Thanksgiving vacation at the home of his parents Mr. and Mrs. George Bohning, returned Sunday to his school duties at Rock Rapids.

Wanted to trade—Five year old mare for a gentle single driver.—O. D. Jenison, Phone 3217 3tfc

The annual meeting of the Pleasant township Farm Bureau was held last week at the center school house. A splendid meeting was enjoyed and a large crowd was present. The old officials of the organization were reelected for another term. A program by the schools of the township of which Miss Grace Gartz is chairman, was given and was very good. The proposition of a short course this winter was discussed and a meeting of the committee on this matter will be held in the near future. O. D. Jenison gave a talk on the Near East relief, of which he is chairman in the township. Refreshments of coffee, cake, cookies, doughnuts and sandwiches were served. Over ten dollars was taken in from this.

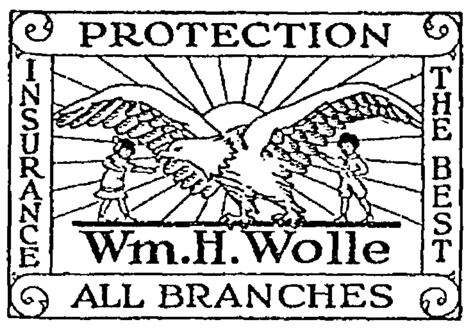
Active Representative wanted by large wholesale house of high standing. Unlimited earning possibilities with opportunity to build permanent trade selling complete line of stapes in constant use. A connection with a real future. State age and full details.—John Sexton & Co, Chicago, Ill.

Henry Johnson recently returned from his fam in North Dakota where he had been looking after his interests. He reports that they had a pretty good crop up there this year and that wheat went from ten to 20 bushels to the acre. Just before he returned he sold a load at 77 cents a bushel. The farmers however are stung when it comes to threshing, having their choice of paying 12 cents a bushel or $13 a day.

Miss Minnie Smith spent the week end with friends at Clarion.



Miss Veronica Finn, who is teaching school near Goodell, was a caller in town last Saturday. She is holding a program at her school on Friday of this week.

Attorney J. M. Jensen has been at the county seat pretty much lately with business at the district court and arranging to stat in as the county attorney.

Indications point to the Chistmas trade being much better than last year. The merchants have laid in a new and varied line of goods for the holiday season and by trading with them you will find better bargains than ever before.

The Case and The Girl

by

Randall Parrish

COPYRIGHT 1922 by ALFRED A. KNOPF INC

She sprang forward, and came down, sinking to her knees, and clinging fast, as the raft bobbed up and down under her sudden weight, dipping until the water rolled completely over it.

CHAPTER XIV

The Coming of Dawn.

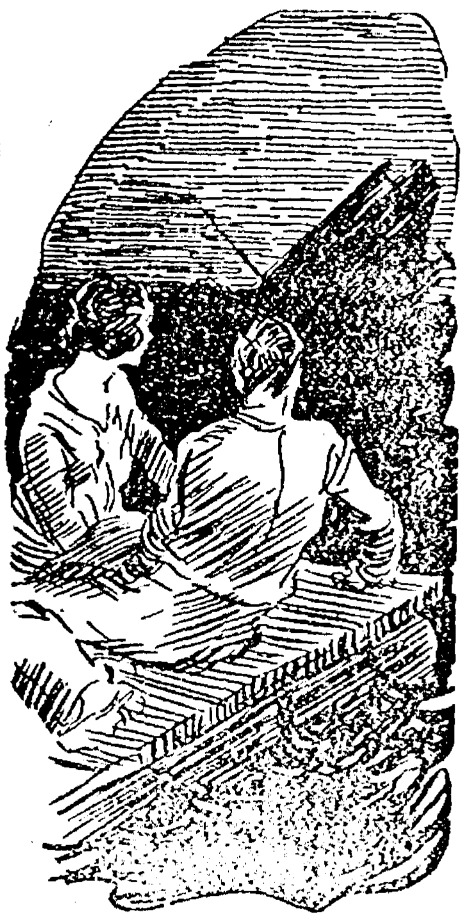
West leaned far out, and could perceive little except a bare, shapeless outline.

"Did you make it? Are you all right?"

"Yes, I'm safe enough. But—but Captain West, I want you to come."

"I'm coming. Watch out now—good! Here goes."

He made the plunge, coming up to the surface close beside the raft, the edge of which he quickly grasped with his hands. He swam steadily, urging the unwieldy raft away from the menacing side of the vessel, driven by the necessity of escaping the inevitable suction when she went down. Gradually the distance widened, until there extended a considerable waste of water between the two. Satisfied that they were far enough away for safety, he clambered cautiously upon the platform, the girl as carefully making room for him on the few dry planks.



She Went Down Bow First.

There was nothing to say, nothing to do; for the moment at least they were safe, and perhaps morning would bring rescue. Suddenly West straightened up, aroused by a new interest—surely that last wave went entirely over the yacht's rail; he could see the white gleam of spray as it broke; and yes, there was another! Then, almost without warning, the end came. She went down bow first, the stern lifting until West could discern the dark outlines of the screw, and then dropped like a stone, vanishing almost instantly.

"That is the last of the Seminole," West said, feeling the necessity of strengthening her. "But it is nothing to frighten you. We are safe enough here. But you must keep your nerve; we may be afloat for hours yet before we are picked up."

"You are sure we will be?"

"The probability is altogether in our favor," he insisted, as much to encourage himself as her. "This is Lake Michigan in summer time, and boats are plying everywhere. We shall surely be sighted by something when daylight returns."

She was silent a moment, with head again bent forward.

"What do you suppose became of the men who deserted the yacht?" she asked, her voice natural and quiet.

"Ashore, perhaps, by this time. They were certain they had done a good job, and eager to get away safely. Hogan never deemed it possible for us to get away alive. As it was, the escape was almost a miracle."

"A miracle!" softly. "Perhaps so, yet I know who accomplished it. I owe my life to you, Captain West," she paused doubtfully, and then went on impulsively. "Won't you explain to me now what it all means? How you came to be here? and—and why those men sought in this way to kill me?"

"You do not know?"

"Only in the vaguest way; is it my fortune? I have been held prisoner; lied to, and yet nothing has been made clear."

"It is a devilish conspiracy that has been plotted for a long while. There must be a dozen involved in it, one way or another, but, as near as I can learn, the chief devil, the brains of the gang, is the fellow named Hobart. [illegible]ve you known him—long?"

"No," she said doubtfully, "not unless his other name was Jim. There was a fellow they called Jim. He was my jailor after that woman locked me into a room."

"Where was this?"

"Why surely you must know. In that cottage where we stopped with Percival Coolidge."

He drew a deep breath, more thoroughly puzzled than ever. What could be her purpose to make so bold an effort to deceive? His heart sank, but he determined to go on, and learn how far she would carry this strange tale. Perhaps out of the welter he could discern some truth.

"The fellow's name is Jim, all right, Jim Hobart. The woman passes as his wife. You knew nothing of all this?"

"No; I only saw the man twice; he was very rough then, and swore when I questioned him."

"And the woman?"

"She would not talk, either; only once she told me that Percival Coolidge had committed suicide. That made me wonder, for I believed he had something to do with my being held there. What did he say when he returned to the auto without me? What explanation did he make for my absence?"

"Explanation! He needed none; you came out of the cottage with him."

"I? What do you mean?"

"But I saw you with my own eyes, talked with you, and all three of us drove back to 'Fairlawn' together. My G—d, Miss Natalie, have you lost your mind? Do you even deny dismissing me from your service?"

She gazed at him through the gloom, utterly unable to comprehend.

"I must have, if what you say is true," she admitted, "For I certainly have no such recollection."

He stared off into the black night, his lips pressed closely together. Could this be false? Could she sit there calmly, in the midst of such peril as surrounded them, and still deliberately endeavor to deceive?

"And you knew nothing of the death of Percival Coolidge, except what was told you by that woman?"

"She brought me a newspaper which I read; that was all I knew."

"And in that house on Wray street where I met you again last night. And you talked with me; tried to get me to quit following you. You surely haven't forgotten that already?"

She dropped her face wearily into her hands, and her voice sounded listless.

"I—I almost believe you are the crazy one, Captain West. I swear I have never knowingly met, or spoken to you since we drove to that cottage on Sunday. I cannot believe what you say."

"Yet it is true, every word true"; he asserted stoutly. "Why else should I be here? You returned with us to 'Fairlawn,' and we chatted together pleasantly all the way. Later you seemed to change, and discharged me rather rudely. Then Percival Coolidge was killed—shot down by an assassin. You were at the inquest, and testified. The next day you discharged Sexton, and later he learned, and reported to me, that some one called you on the phone from Wray street, and wanted you to come over there at once. I found you there, and this fellow Hobart with you."

"But, Captain West, I never saw you; I never left the room in the third story where I was locked in, except when they took me away in a machine to the yacht.

"You dropped a note in the alley, enclosed in a silver knife?"

"Yes, I did. Did you find it?"

"Sexton did, and that was what brought me here."

"But it is all so strange," she exclaimed despairingly. "How could I have done all these things, been in all these places, and yet know nothing about it? Could I have been drugged or influenced in some way by those people?"

"I do not believe you were either hypnotized or drugged. Good G—d; why did I not think of this solution before? I must have been blind; that was not you; I can recall a hundred little things now to convince me."

"What is it you mean?"

"Another woman played your part; a woman most wonderfully like you, even to the voice. There is no other solution of the problem. And that reveals the plan of robbery—to get you out of the way, and then have her take the fortune."

She sat silent, motionless, apparently unable at once to grasp all the meaning in his words. Then she pointed away into the distance.

"See, there is light over there," she exclaimed eagerly. "That must be the east, and it is morning."

He lifted his head, and looked where she pointed. A dull, gray light topped the waters, and the sky above held a faint tinge of crimson. The wan glow accented the loneliness, and for the moment left him depressed. Nothing appeared within range of vision to break the drear monotony of gray sea and sky. Neither felt any desire to speak; they could only stare out silently across the desolation of waters, feeling their helplessness and peril.

Her head sank forward into her hands, as though she would thus shut out the whole weird picture, and West, aroused by the slight movement, glanced quickly aside. His hand sought her own, where it gripped for support, and closed over it warmly.

"It cannot be as bad as it seems," he insisted, trying to say the words cheerfully. "I know these waters, and they are never long deserted. Luck will change, surely; perhaps within the hour we shall be picked up, and can laugh at all this experience.

She lifted her head, and their eyes met frankly.

"I am not afraid," she protested. "Not physically, at least. Truly I have not felt fear since you joined me, Captain West."

"But you are very tired?"

"Perhaps so, yet I have not thought about that. There are other things; you do not believe in me."

"Why say that?" he asked in astonishment. "There is no question of the kind between us now."

"Truly, is there not? What was it you believed of me—that—that I was part of this conspiracy?"

Some criticisin has been made of the fire company boys for going to the country to fight fires. They claim it leaves the town unprotected during their absence. While some of the boys were out in the country trying to save something for a man who, like his fellow farmers, had little or no fire protection, enough of the company were in town to men the hose left, and that was all of it. Only the chemical truck was taken out. In case fire had broken out in town during the absence of the boys in the country there were plenty of them left, and plenty of equipment to use to have protected the town until a phone call could have brought the truck and the rest of the crew back in ten minutes. It looks like pretty small criticism of the fire company for volunteering to help. The boys ask nothing for going—they are glad it they can be of assistance. The man who criticises would be mighty glad to have them present if he had a fire.

Our basket ball teams played their first games with Meservey, Monday evening. A good sized crowd was present. The Belmond teams did not receive much opposition. The score for the girls game was 27 to 1 and the boys 30 to 5 in favor of Belmond. Meservey did not make a single field basket, their points being made on free throws.

We have some good basket ball teams again this year and those who enjoy the sport should plan to see our games.

The most exciting games of the season will be the alumni games. These will be played December 22 when the greatest number of Alumni will be here. Everyone will want to see these games.

The orchestra will play at the public declamatory, December, 20. Plan to hear it.

Supt. Rankin from Garner and Mr. Friis of Clarion High School were here to judge the declamatory try-outs December 6.

This week everyone has been interested in the intelligence tests that have been given in all the grades by Dr. Lee Byrne of the State University of Iowa.

ATTORNEY GENERAL SAYS LOTTERIES DONE

Insists That They Are Illegal And Prosecution Will Start If They Are Held.

The following is taken from the Clarion News and will be of interest to Belmond people as it pertains to the lottery question now being widely discussed. The News said last week.

Attorney General Gibson in a phone conversation with the News editor Wednesday afternoon stated that he had given all county attorneys in the state notice that business lotteries were illegal and the giving of coupons chances on lotteries where prizes of any nature are to be awarded by lottery was ground for prosecution and it is very likely that unless business men halt the lotteries they have advertised they will be prosecuted as individuals.

Mr. Gibson was emphatic in his opinion that it was not necessary for an individual to file information charging the merchants will an illegal act. All that a county attorney needed he said was knowledge that such illegal action was being taken.

County Attorney Rogers stated Wednesday that he had not fully studied the law regarding the matter but he was of the opinion that an information charging the violation must be filed before he could legally act. He stated that he had had notice from the attorney general's office regarding the lotteries as recently conducted in the county being clearly illegal and did not doubt but that prosecution of all merchants participating in them could be successfully instituted.

The opinion generally held here is that lotteries with the idea of inducing extra business are a failure. They demoralize the legitimate business of a community and if continued will educate the people to a point where they will only buy or pay accounts when capital inducements are held out for them.

If the lotteries are to leave a series of court actions in their wake, it is improbable that any real benefit can be derived from them Numerous towns in this section are promoting trade lotteries at this time and it may be put down for a fact that if Mr. Gibson's orders stand as the attorney general declares they shall prosecution will be at least attemped.

ELIASON—GINAPP

Miss Clara Eliason of near Olaf, and Mr. Henry Ginapp of Sheffield, were united in marriage on Thursday, December 7, at the home of the bride's brother, Olaf Eliason, the Rev. Tresdahl of Kanawha officiating. The ceremony took place at noon and was witnessed by about 50 relatives and friends. Afterwards the couple left on a short wedding trip to Chicago. Upon their return they will be home on the groom's farm near Sheffield.

The bride has made her home with her brother Olaf, her parents being dead. She is a very charming young lady with many friends. Mr. Ginapp is a succeceful young farmer of Sheffield.

The many friends, with whom the Independent joins, extend them their best wishes for a happy and prosperous life.

FOREST CITY TO HAVE COMMERCIAL CLUB

Forest City is starting the organization of a Community Club, and is making big plans to have a real live-wire organization. This week has been set aside by Mayor Moen as a "Think It over" week for Forest Citizens. The week is to be fittingly closed by a big banquet at the college on Friday evening to which the commuity is united. A member ship of four or five hundred is anticipated by the Summit. This club is to be really a Commercial club with as many of the community as possible members. The fee is $5.00 An active campaign is laid out for soliciting members.

TOWN OF LATIMER IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Business Section Practically Is Wiped Out By Blaze On Tuesday Evening.

A disasterous fire, starting either in the roof or wall between the two restaurants in Latimer, practically wiped out the business section of that place Tuesday evening. The two restaurants, pool hall, post office, and harness shop were destroyed.

The damages will run into several thousands, with the insurance unknown at this writing.

The blaze was first noticed at about 6:30 Tuesday evening, between the two restaurants. The fire company of Latimer fought the blaze as best they could, and by the time the Hampton fire campany which was sent for, arrived, had the fire pretty well under control. Latimer has no chemical protection, and the fire protection of course is limited. Telephone linesmen from Belmond went over to repair any damage that might be caused to the lines, and to look after the telephone office if need arose.

BAND GIVES FREE CONCERTS

The Hampton band is starting a series of free concerts the first of which was given Sunday afternoon in the Winsdor theatre for the purpose of raising funds to supply the band boys with uniforms. No admission is charged to the concerts, but a collection or free will offering is taken, the public giving whatever they wish. The money thus received will go for uniforms. A splendid program was given and as Hampton now has a crack home band the uniforms will no doubt be soon forthcoming, while the public receives a winter entertainment.

FIRE AT LEINBACH HOME

About six o'clock Saturday evening, the chimney on the Leinbach home in east Belmond was discovered on fire, and smoke pouring out of a chimney hole in an upstairs bedroom. The hole had been covered with asbestas covering, but the soot in the chimney burned with such intense fury that this was destroyed The alarm was turned in and the fire company was promtly on the scene Chemicals were poured into the burning chimney and the blaze soon checked, altho it burned more or less in the chimney for an hour, flames shooting 15 feet high. The damage was slight.

FORMER MINISTER SPEAKS BY RADIO

Local People Have Pleasure Of Hearing Rev. Chapler On Thanksiving Day.

Radio fans in Belmond who were listening in Thanksgiving Day had the pleasure of hearing a Thanksgiving sermon and prayer by a former Methodist minister of Belmond, Rev. C. E. Chapler who is now in charge of the church at Fort Worth Texas. Rev. Chapler's address was heard very plainly over the Battery station-Independent set, together with the pipe organ and choir as it was broadcasted by the Star-Telegram of Fort Worth on Thanksgiving Day.

Some very fine concerts are being heard among them being two Spanish soprano solos from Havana Cuba heard last Saturday evening. Los Angeles the same evening said California had been having very heavy rains which was "unusual weather" for that time of year. For two hours Atlanta Georgia put on a burlesque broadcasting program which was the equal of any dollar vaudeville you ever heard. Ask Matt Barry what he knows about Adam as heard over Independent-Battery Station Radio recently. It was one of the richest ever heard. The Independent and the Belmond Storage Battery Co. urge you to listen in on their set any evening;you are more than welcome to hear the world talk sing and play.

SHEFFIELD'S NEW BANK READY

Plans have been completed for the new bank at Sheffield to take the place of the one recently closed, and it is expected to open the bank about the first of January. according to R. G. Wolf and Lavino Jones, two men who have been instrumental in the organizing. The new bank is to have a capital of $40,000, and a surplus of $10,000 and will be located in the building formerly occupied by the old Sheffield bank. There will be over 75 stockholders, most of whom are business men and farmers of that vicinity. Wolf is to be president and Jones cashier. The former is a Hampton man for five years assistant cashier of the Citizens National there. Jones is a former Hamptonite and was assistant cashier of the Franklin Co. State Bank for 14 years.

Mrs. M. C. Barry left Tuesday of this week for Iowa City where she will spend Christmas with her home folks. Matt will leave Christmas Eve to spend the holidays with her.

HOOCH MAKERS WILL TAKE THEIR MEDICINE

Local Bootleggers Enter Plea Of Guilty And Will Receive Sentence Today.

The Belmond bootleggers and hooch makers, Mrs. Neuhring and son Otto, and Prince, all faced Judge Wright yesterday in district court and entered pleas of guitly. They will receive their sentence today, it is reported The two Neuhrings were arrested recently when a raid was made on their home in Belmond by sheriff Lang. They were bound over to the grand jury, indicted by that body, and represented by W. E. Bullard appeared before the court, it is understood, and asked for postponement of trial until the next term to prepare their defense. Later they evidently considered their case more fully, and the plea of guilty was the result Prince was bound to the grand jury as the result of a raid by Constable McAlpine, who found his still on the stove going full blast. Possibly these convictions will put a crimp in the hooch business locally for a time. John Groh, residing west of town, up on the same charge, also plead guilty, as did the Eagle Grove man accused of arson during the recent railroad strike. Wednesday in district court seems to have been all around a rather "guilty" affair.

CLARION TO PAVE

The city Council of Clarion has taken active steps toward arranging to pave the main part of the town. In all about 50 blocks are scheduled to be paved. An engineer has been employed and is now on the job laying out plans. It is understood that the present session of court will chop off a mile on the east and one on the west of the city limits, turning it back to the county, and the county will then proceed to gravel the extra two miles of road. This will make a vast improvement to the county seat, as the roads over there have been a nightmare for years, and the standing joke of every motorist in the county.

CARS SKID ON ICY PAVEMENT

The firm coating of ice on the pavement last week was the cause of making all auto drivers go slowly and with caution. Cars skidded very easily particularly at corners until gravel was sprinkled to give the tires a chance to grip in turning corners. One or two narrow shaves occured and one accident in which the Hawley milk wagon was hit by a skidding car and quite badly wrecked. Boys skated on Main street and every pedestrian was taking care to "watch your step."

IOWA TOWNSHIP FARM BUREAU TO MEET

A business meeting of the Iowa Township Farm Bureau will be held at the Pink Treese school house tonight, Thursday, December 14. Rev. Wilkinson of the Belmond Methodist Church will address the meeting, and it is hoped that a good attendance will be present.

THANKS

The Independent is indebted to the Herald-Press for some type this week, when our linotype broke down during the last minute rush.

Mrs. J. M. Jensen returned Monday from Mason City, where she recently underwent an operation at the hospital. Her many friends will be pleased to hear that she is coming along very nicely and rapidly recovering from the operation.

Miss Josie Gealow arrived home Monday morning from Washington, D. C. to spend the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Gealow. She is employed as assistant auditor in the income tax department of the government offices and says they are just finishing the work on the 1917 returns.

Dr. Lee Byrne To Deliver Address

Second Meeting Of Club To Be Good One With Address By Fine Speaker.

JUDGE WRIGHT SPEAKS

The first meeting of the season of the Good Fellowship club was held last Thursday evening in the basement of the lidrary, and despite the icy walks and the lack of lights a large crowd was out. The hall was lighted by gas lamps, and some 60 men braved the slippery sidewalks to be present. The program opened with two vocal selections with piano accompaniment by Miss Hill and Miss Rhorback, which were very much enjoyed and appreciated. Judge R. M. Wright was then introduced, and he read to the audience an exceedingly interesting paper on the law, going back to the Magna Charta and pointing out the improvements and changes which had been made. His address was timelly, and gave his listeners a better understanding of the principles of justice as administered by the courts. After the address by Judge Wright, the usual good eats and social hour was enjoyed. The Judge was accompanied by Rube Goslin and attorney Hill of Clarion.

The next meeting will be tonight at the library, and the speaker will be Dr. Lee Byrne. The doctor is from the university of Iowa. His subject will be scientific Tendencies in Education. Come out and enjoy the meeting, the program and the good eats.

HOLD UP AT HAMPTON

Last Sunday morning at about 2 o'clock the Night Agent at the Rock Island depot in Hampton had the pleasure of being greeted by "hold up your hands!" accompanied by a fine view down the barrel of a revolver. The agent was alone in the depot when a stranger entered and made the above remark. The agent was releived of his gold watch. He was then ordered to lie face down on the floor while the banbit tapped the ticket till, which contained about $20 Warning the agent to look closely at the splinters in the floor for 15 minutes, the robber departed. He was partly drunk and rather ugly, and the agent promptly obeyed all orders from him. The same fellow visited the Great Western depot earlier in the evening and announced that he had come to rob the joint but after looking it over said he "hadn't the heart." The G. W. agent thought it was a joke, especialy as the fellow said he guessed he would rob the Rock Island instead which he proceeded to do. He has not been caught.

TO GIVE UNIQUE CANTATA

Something decidedly different is being planned by the schools of Garner and Clear Lake in the way of a Christmas Cantata "Ruth." The idea is being worked out by the music teachers of the two schools and one rehearsal has already been held by the joint schools. This musical treat will be staged by the schools in each of the two towns during the week proceeding Christmas. A chorus of close to 100 voices will support the four leading soloists. It is a very unusual idea and is attracting much attention in the two towns.

SANDS MEMORIAL CHURCH

Just three more Sundays in this year and we want to make these the best of all the year.

The young men who attended the older boys conference at Mason City gave us some excellent reports last Sunday night. We regret that not more were out to hear them.

The Ladies Aid will meet Thursday afternoon and all the ladies are urged to be present as it is the time for the annual election of officers.

The Sunday school is getting ready for their Christmas program which will be given Christmas Eve.

CLIPPINGS

Will there be another wolf hunt in the vicinity of Pilot Knob this winter?—is a question that has been asked many times in the past months. At this time it is impossible to say one way or the other, but the chances are that there will be. One condition that was not attending last winter when the hunt was put on was the ownership of the land in that vicinity. Then it was privately owned; now it belongs to the state, and without special permission a hunt could not be staged, because all state owned land is the game preserve. A hunt this winter will doubless bring better results than last year, especially if certain rules could be enforced. One thing is sure if a wolf hunt is put on this winter the section will be patrolled with officers who will have authority to keep trespassers off the territory before the drive

Sunday evening we were over near Hutchins and at the side of the paving we saw five dead hogs, weighing probably 100 pounds each. They had evidently been killled by an auto, as shortly before we had passed along there and had not seen them.—Garner Signal.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Annual Meeting January 3rd

The annual meeting of the Wrigh county Farm bureau has been set for Wednesday, January 3rrd and will be held in the court room as usual. Last year seemed to be the record bearker as far as attendance was concerned, but plans are being made for a lively meetng which will, no doubt be the most interesting meeting ever held.

A program committee consisting of Mrs. Merle Peck, (Grant township) Mrs. M. L. Clark (Lake township), G. D. Denger, (Vernon township and the county agent was appointed at the last board of directors meeting and this committee is making every affort to see that an interesting program is arranged. J. F. Coupe, assistance secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, has been secured for the speaker of the day. It will be remembered that Mr. Coupe spoke at the annual farm bureau picnic at the fair grounds two years ago. He is an interesting and forceful speaker and will, no doubt, bring a great message to the farmers of Wright county.

January 3rd will no doubt be a red-letter day in 1923 for the county farm bureau. At this time all members of the organization have opportunity to hear one of the best speakers in the state, who will tell in an interesting way what has been accomplished by the farm bureau as a state and national organization durng the past year. The directors from the various townships will be voted in at this meeting. The program which is being worked out by the committee will be published in the local papers in order that all members may know the interesting things which will be included in the program.

Wright County at the International

The Wright county junior livestock judging team succeeded in landing first place at the International Live Stock Exposition as the best judges of beef cattle, second place as the best team on all classes of live stock, and Everett Denby, a member of the Wright county team, has the distinction of being the second best junior live stock judge in the United States. The boys were required to judge six classes of live stock and give reasons on three classes. The basis of award was fifty points on the correct placing of each class and fifty points on reasons for placing. The livestock which the boys worked over consisted of one class each of fat Hereford steers, Shorthorn heifers Percheron mares, Percheron geldings, Poland China barrows, and Duroc Jersey sows.

Iowa had the largest delegation of boys and girls in attendance at the International, there being 130 boys and girls from various parts of the state who made the trip on a special train which left Ames on Sunday, December 3. In all there were about 500 boys and girls from the different states within the union who had the pleasure of taking in the livestock exposition and being entertained by the various commercial organization of the city of Chicago. The first day of the show was spent by the boys and girls in visiting the International Live Stock show and in observing the various club exhibits and demonstrations. In the evening the youngsters were entertained by the Chicago theater, one of the newest and best equipped theaters of Chicago. On the second day of their stay in the city the club members were taken into the packing plants of Swift, Armour, and Morse Companies, each plant serving lunch to the boys and girls at one p. m. From here they were taken for a trip through Tigarland, Bird Paradise and the Tropical Gardens at Lincoln Park. They were entertained for a six o' clock dinner at the Wilson & Company packing house dining room, The third day was spent in visiting the Field Museum, the Chicago Board of Trade, the offices of the American Farm Federation, Marshall Field department store. Sears Roebuck & Company and Montgomery Ward & Company. They were entertained for luncheon at the Central Y. M. C. A. building as guests of the Chicago Board of Trade and for a six o'clock dinner they were entertained by Sears, Roebuck & Company and Montgomery Ward & Company. On the last day of their trip they started out by visiting the McCormick harvester plant of which organization they were guests for luncheon at noon. From here they were taken on a tour of the cold storage warehouses of Chicago this trip being arranged by the national poultry, butter and egg association. A six o'clock banquet was given them by the cold storage ware house men of Chicago in the Tiger and South Sea rooms, Hotel Sherman.

The week of December 3rd to 9th marked the occasion of the 4th annual boys' and girls' club tour and besides the launching of the first National boys' and girls' club exposition. These club activities were arranged and fostered by the National committee on boys' and girls' club work—first for the proposition of providing educational entertainment for the winning club members who were in Chicago and second and the most important in order that our citizens may witness the value of boys and girls club work and know of the great good which will come to the country as a whole when this work is made available to all our farm boys and girls. Boys' and girls' club work is the most important phase of extension work carried on by the Unitd States department of agriculture and the agriculturarl colleges. There were six hundred thousand club members this year. In 1921 club members produced over seven million dollars worth of products at a cost of four million five hundred thousand dollars which cost includes leadership Banks loaned the club members two million dollars this year and will no doubt, increase the amount next season. Various agencies provided 734,000 dollars in prizes for 1922 winners to aid and promote club work. Statistics show that 2,100 former club members are now attending college.

Special Course at Ames for Boys

Wright county farm boys are offered a non-collegiate course in agriculture by the state college at Ames from January 2 to March 23 the time when farm folks can best get away for a little polishing up in the fundamentals of farming.

Many young men find it possible to get away from the farm only during the winter months, especially with the present scarcity and high price of farm labor. The course which will be offered will allow the student considerabe choice among the following subjects: Beef and dual propose cattle sheep, horses, farm dairying, agricultural chemistry, agricultural arthimetic, farm management, farm mechanics, animal feeding, soils and business English.

Each of these subjects will be, as nearly as possible, complete in itself. At the same time, should the student find it possible to return a year later, or at some other period, he will receive full credit for the work taken and can take additional or advanced work.

One special phase of this work will be conference with successful farmrs managers of shipping associations and men of his character. George Godfrey of Algona will be the first leader and speaker at these farm boy conferences early in January.

Questions concerning the course and other arrangements are invited. All letters should be addressed to the registrar, Iowa State College.

Brood Sows Need Protein

That tankage or some other form of protein feed will more than pay for its cost in producing good litters of pigs from young sows has been shown in a recent experiment conducted by John M. Evvard and C. C. Culbertson of the animal husbandry section of the Iowa agricultural experiment station. Not only are the litters better from sows that have had a protein balanced ration but the sows show better condition than do those fed only a corn ration.

Test, conducted by the animal husbandry men showed that young sows fed a corn ration, carrying their first litters, produced litters whose average weight was 13.2 pounds or an average of 1.74 pounds per pig. Of the group of pigs, 58 per cent were classed as strong and 16 per cent were medium and the same number were weak. These sows ate 3.65 pounds of corn daily and gained one-third of a pound each, not enough to make up the requirements for their own body and the developing offspring.

Similar young sows, sisters of those just mentioned, were fed the same kind of corn but with it about two-fifths of a pound of six per cent tankage daily.

Although these sows ate only 2.75 pounds of corn each, they were thriftier and gained about twice as much per day as the other group. The litters produced weighed on the average 19.6 pounds and pigs averaged 2.2 pounds and were classed ninety-three per cent strong, with 5 medium and only 2 per cent weak.

Where alfalfa was fed the sows, with corn before farrowing, the litters weighed on an average of 17.4 pounds with an average of 2.29 pounds per pig and 98 per cent of the offspring were strong with 2 per cent medium and no weak. About a pound of alfalfa p er sow was either consumed or wasted per day.

OLAF

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Baxter and Mrs. S. O. Windecker drove to Mason City last Wednesday afternoon on a business mission.

Geo. Cook's boys are the proud owners of a new Ford touring car.

Our blacksmith, Jake Hess, is kept very busy, since the ice came, shoeing horses.

Corn husking has been delayed by the heavy coating of ice which gathered on the stalks during last week's sleet storm.

A three-day meeting was held Friday, Saurday, and Sunday at St. Olaf Church.

At twelve o'clock Thursday, in the presence of about 40 relatives Miss Clara Eliason was united to Henry Ginapp, in the holy bonds of matrimony, Rev. Tresdahl of Kanawha officiating. The Misses Nora Eleason and Martha Eckhardt acted as bridemaids and Olaf Eleason and John Eckhardt as best men. After congratulations the guests were seated to tables loaded with all the good things which go with a wedding feast. Mrs. Ginapp was born and raised in this community, and all speak praises for her. Mr. Ginapp is a stranger to the writer but we hear him well spoken of, he being a well-to-do farmer living near Sheffield where they will make their home. We with many others extend our congratulations.

Crushers of Value

We don't always associate "crushers" with feed grinders because we'd probably be put in jail if we did. But the Cob Crusher of the McCormick-Deering Feed Grinder does some very necessary work. As the ears of corn reach the bottom of the hopper the cobs are broken into small bits and fed with the shelled corn to the grinding plates. Thus the effective work of the cob crushers makes the work of the grinding plates easier. It's one reason why McCormick-Deering Feed Grinders will grind corn on the cob, shelled corn and grain, as fine or as coarse as desired. Besides having efficient cob crushers, grinding plates that are self-sharpening and self-cleaning, there are many other features about the McCormick-Deering that you will want to know about. Find your way down to our store and let us demonstrate.

Is It Practical

This year more then ever we are all thinkng of the practical gifts.

Take care of economies and profits will take care of themselves.

"Gosh Hang the Durn Thing!"

Wait a minute now! Before you go swearing around at that farm machine because it went on the blinkety-blink just when you needed it most, stop to think if it isn't your own fault. Just because it worked all right when you bought it is no indication that it will do so always. Farm machines as well as everything else need inspection and repairing. While your machines are in the shed now is the time to replace worn and broken parts with genuine IHC repairs. Save your cussings and get your machines ready for the season's work before the season starts. We sell genuine repairs for genuine machines.

A new stove or range, Pyrex ware Silverware, sleds, skates, tools, skis, kitchen ware, thermos ware electric grills, irons and washing machines, We have just received a nice line of the above goods and some of the best of all will be on exhibit at our store from now until Christmas at very fair prices. Better come in and look them over.

For Shelling Seed Corn

The McCormick-Deering line of hand shellers is especially adapted for shelling seed corn. Most farmers are particular in the selection of choice ears for seed. The matter of shelling these ears without breaking the kernels can best be answered by a McCormick-Deering Corn Sheller. The McCormick-Deering is made in two styles, the allsteel hand sheller, and the wood and steel sheller. The interior construction of both these machines is identical. Both will do a clean job of shelling without breaking kernels or cobs. If you are looking for a sheller to shell your seed corn, or to handle any of the light shelling jobs around the place, come in and see us because we beleive it's the McCormick-Deering you want.

A Hardware Store is not as often that of as a gift center as are some other stores, but we wish to list below a few suggestions:

Women are said to be increasing in height. Do you suppose it is from standng up for their rights?

NEAR EAST RELIEF

The Near East Relief was chartered by special act of Congress Aug. 6, 1919. It bears the same relationship to the goverment as the Red Cross. It must report all money, grain and clothing secured to Congress, who audit its books regularly.

The Near East Relief territory extends from the Aegean Sea (Greece) to the Caspian Sea, 1,250 miles or equal the distance from Des moines to New York City; and from the Black sea to Jerusalem, 1,200 miles or equal the distance from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

With generous free service rendered the Near East Relief, ninety-five cents of every dollar collected is expended in actual relief.

Within this territory it feeds, clothes and educates 110,000 orphan children located in 124 orphanages. In addition to this since the burning of Smyrna, there has been added 500,000 homeless refugees and children who must be cared for this winter. It has 38 hospitals; 56 clinics; 20 food relief stations where soup is given out once in one two or three days, as the supply will justify; 20 clothing distributing stations; 10 rescue homes and 25 refugee camps.

In the orphanages boys are taught carpentering, blacksmithing, shoemaking, electrical work, tin and coppersmithing various lines of engineering agricultural work in fact every line needed. Girls are taugh domestic science, dressmaking, milliery home economics tatting, lace and rug making.

There are over 200 American workers in the Near East territory, who are teaching American methods, customs and ideals, while caring for these children. The American Flag and Patriotic Songs are their best and dearest friends. These orphans look to America their only source a Land of Plenty for their help and supply.

There are twice the number outside of the orphanages, who exist in ruined houses without windows and heat, not enough clothing to cover their bodies and barefooted in weather below zero. Their only food is grass leaves bark of trees twigs earth or what they can beg, which is but little. They also look to America for help which seldom comes. Yet America wastes more each year than would feed and clothe these unfortunates who are orphans of massacred Christain parents. Only 6 per cent of the children are yet in Turkish Territory.

To clothe, feed and educate a child it costs 17 cents a day (less than the cost of a breakfast). $5.00 a month or $60.00 a year. Many families or organizations are adopting and supporting one or more of these orphans. What will you do?

Iowa's quota is $500,000 a year. How near will we come to our quato? Our answer depends on your help.

The above statement by the Near East Relief Committee concerning the awful condition of the people within the given radius should be sufficient to take the heart of all Kind people, especially of Belmond and Pleasant township take to heart the appeal and meet committees appointed to solicit for their cause with smiling faces and open hearts and hands.

Let us not forget what the Lord says, "He that hath pity on the poor giveth unto the Lord.

Rev. J. M. Jensen
Committee on Publicity.

MESERVEY SCHOOL NOTES

Theodore Dirks was absent from school Thursday.

Iena Pals and Margaret Gerdes were absent from school Tuesday. This was their first absence for this year.

Mr. K. C. Ruigh spoke to the Practical Law class Wednesday afternoon on the subject "Negotiable Instruments." The explanations proved a great aid to the class and were thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Clyde Smith was absent from school Monday.

Invitations to come and visit school proved successful this week. This was American Education week and our aim has been to try to get the community and the school into a little closer touch.

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. A. J. Nissen, Mrs. A. E. Muller, Mrs. G. Raecker and Mrs. H. K. Pals visited some of the High school classes. On Friday the following people visited High school: Mrs F. C. Sprau, Mrs. E. G. Thomas, Mrs. O. Strassburg, Mrrs. C. I. Ralston, Mrs. W. Butz and Mrs. H. Rief and Miss Rozell Sprau.

This week was the usual time for the regular six week's examinations but the drudgery was somewhat lessened by the announcement of a high school party for Friday evening.

Christmas Seals have been received by the scool and are now for sale in all of the rooms. The children are trying to sell as many possible in order that we may sell our entire quota. Governor Kendall has promised that for every two dollars' worth of seals sold he will send a certificate signed with his name.

The High school party was held Friday evening. Those present consisted of the members of the Board of Education and their wives, the teachers, the high school students and the eighth grade pupils. The guests were entertained in carnival style. The "Chamber of Horrors" was indeed a frightful place for a timid and nervous person to enter. Very educative and interestng was the "Dime Museum." For one who had never seen the seven wonders it almost seemed unreal. The fortune teller was a great attraction of the evening. Outside the door the guests waited in line for their turn to come. Some sallied forth with frowns and others smilngly according to their future as it had been revealed to them. Madame X entertained all present in the assembly. Thru her clever revelations the past, present and future were made known. Refreshments were served after which several games were played. The guests then departed declaring the faculty first rate entertainets.

The school has been trying in a small way to observe "American Education Week," which was nationally observed during the week Dec. 4-8. The purpose of this is to bring a little more vividly to the minds of the American people the vast importance of the schools. Monday was American Citizenship day. A paper on "The Duties of Citizenship" was read to the high school. On Tuesday a debate on the question: "Resolved that the Japanese people in this country be allowed to become citizens" was held in the Sophomore English class. American Education Week should help one to realize that children are educated not only in the schools but also in the homes and in the churches, and that the children of today will be the citizens of tomorrow. As future citizens they must be taught that it is a citizens' duty to vote, and that it is also his duty to study and think in order that his vote may be cast wisely. Other things which have been brought out this week are that illiteracy is a blot on our nation. All children should finish the grammar school work and should, if it is in any way possible, graduate from high school, for they will be far better fitted to occupy their places in the community than they would otherwise be. Still another fact which has been stressed this week is the importance of making the use of the English language universal in the United States . To be able to speak clearly, concisely and forcefully is indeed an asset to any individual and it is the purpose of English classes to make this possible to all the students. Some of the slogans for the students were: "A goodly Nation Cannot Fail," "Visit the Schools Today" and "Patriotism is the Basis of a Happy Nation." The people of the community responded heartily to the efforts of the school and many of them came to visit the school. The school is always glad to have its programs well attended but it is especially glad to have the people show their interest in the work by coming to visit regular classes.

FIFTH AND SIXTH GRADE NOTES

Those receiving "perfect deportment" stars the past week are: Harri[illegible] Sprau, Harland Blewitt, Wayne Waddingham, Arlene Nissen, Nellie Frey, Emma Boelman, Esther Van Osten, Neva Muller and Mildred Janssen.

Bert Fry was absent from sixth grade duties Thursday. Marie Pals was absent from school Friday.

Everyone has been writing examinations this week. A few have received perfect grades.

Parts for a little play entitled "On Judea's Plain," which is to be given at the community program, Friday, December 22nd, have been given out to members of the fifth and sixth grades.

The girls of the fifth and sixth grades are busy outside of school hours, on some embroidery work for Christmas gifts.

Meservey was represented at the Older Boys Conference by the following: Merwin Wickerscheim, Donald Muller, Ralph Paul, Orvis Schlesselman and Oliver Sprau with J. G. Herbster and Ferdinand Lempke in charge of the group. This conference was held at Mason City, December 1—2—3. Its purpose was to bring together for inspiration, instruction and information, boys from fifteen to twenty years of age that they may become active in the doing of worthwhile deeds in the church, the school, the home and the community.

It gives them a vision and an inspiration and an impetus toward true service and noble effort which is valuable in every day life.

The principal speakers on the program were:

W. P. McCormick, pastor of one of the leading churches in Des Moines
Robt. B. Wallace of Council Bluffs, a prominent business man.
Otis C. McCreery, left half-back on the University of Minnesota football team.
C. W. Kirkpatrick of Des Moines, Conference Manager.
B. B. Hadley, General Secretary of Cedar Rapids Y. M. C. A.

The Case and The Girl

By Randall Parrish

COPYRIGHT 1922 by ALFRED A KNOPF inc.

"I do not know what I believed, if actually believed anything, Miss talie," he explained rather lamely. cannot make the situation altoher clear even to myself. Under circumstances, you cannot connn me justly."

'Condemn! I do not. How could I? u must have kept faith in me, nevereless, or you would never be here ow. That is what seems marvelous to e—that you actually cared enough o believe."

"I realize now that I have," he said gravely. "Through it all I have kept a very large measure of faith in you."

"Why should that faith have survived?" she questioned persistently, as though doubt would not wholly leave her mind. "Surely there was never a madder story told than the one I told you, and I couldn't have proven an item of it."

"Yet it has shown itself true," he interrupted.

"You actually believe, then, that there is another woman—a counterfeit of myself?"

"It is the only theory feasible; you have convinced me of that. Will you believe what I say?"

"Implicitly."

"Perhaps it sounds like a fairy tale," he spoke frankly, his eyes seeking her own, all their surroundings forgotten in the eagerness of the moment, "but I will tell you the exact truth. Before this misunderstanding occurred you had confided in me, trusted me, although I was a stranger and I believed absolutely in your story. I had that basis to rest on. Then I got hold of various odds and ends of evidence which convinced me that something was wrong—that you were actually being conspired against. I even gained a suspicion that Percival Coolidge was the actual leader of the conspiracy. You could never have been made prisoner in that cottage without his connivance; he must have lured you there for that particular purpose, so that this other girl could take your place without danger of discovery. The reason for Percival's participation is only a guess, but my theory is the fellow had so juggled your fortune, and the time for final accounting was so near, he had to take a desperate chance in order to save himself.

"My own theory is that when Hobart learned what Percival Coolidge proposed doing, his own criminal tendencies told him that here was some easy money. The girl was undoubtedly wholly under his control; some denizen of the underworld probably. She had already played her part sufficiently well to convince Hobart of success. Why then, shouldn't he have this money instead of Percival? There was no reason except that Percival was in the way. That was why he was killed."

"And," she questioned breathlessly, "the man meant to murder me also?"

"Not at that time, in my judgment," West answered thoughtfully. "Such an additional crime was not a part of the original plan. Once the money, and other property, were delivered to the fake Natalie, the cashing in and get away would be easy; even the identity of the thieves would be concealed."

"But they did try to kill me."

"Yes, later, by the sinking of the yacht. Probably I am largely responsible for that. My appearance in Wray street must have been quite a shock, and when I succeeded in escaping from their trap there, Hobart very evidently lost his head completely. The knowledge that I was free, perhaps in communication with the police, led to your night trip to the Seminole, and the secret sinking of the yacht. He had gone too far by then to hesitate at another murder."

"I—I think I understand now," she admitted, "how all this occurred; but why—why were you so persistent? There—there must have been a reason more impelling than a vague suspicion?'

"There was—the most compelling impulse in the world."

"You mean faith in me?"

"Even more than that; love for you. Natalie, I love you, have loved you all the time, without fully realizing exactly what it meant. There have been times when I have doubted you, when I could not wholly escape the evidence that you were also concerned personally in this fraud. I have endeavored to withdraw from the case, to forget, and blot everything from memory. But something stronger than will prevented; I could not desert you; could not believe you were wilfully wrong. You understand what I mean."

"Yes," the words barely reaching him. "It was the other girl; she undermined your faith."

"That is the truth; yet how could it be, do you suppose? My very love should have enabled me to detect the difference."

She touched his arm with her hand, and under the slight pressure he looked aside at her.

"You know now," she said softly, "and I know. All this is past and gone between us. We are here alone, the sport of the waves, and I have no reason to be other than frank. I believe in you, Matthew West; in your honesty and manhood. You say you love me?"

"With all my heart and soul; it seems to me now I have always loved you—you came to me, the lady of my dreams."

Her eyes were wet with unshed tears, yet she smiled back into his face, her voice trembling as she answered:

"And I," she said slowly, "have had no thought but of you since our morning in the garden together. How far away that seems."

"You mean you love me?"

"Yes; I love you; there is no word stronger, but I would speak it—is that not enough?"

He held her in his arms, in spite of the trembling raft, tossed by the swell of the sea, and crushed her against him in the ardent strain of passion. An instant she held her head back, her eyes gazing straight into his; then, with sigh of content, yielded, and their lips met, and clung.

CHAPTER XV

Escape From the Raft.

The raft drifted aimlessly on, the waves lapping its sides, and tossing it about as though in wanton play. The girl lay quiet, her face upturned, unconscious now of her dread surroundings; and the man swayed above her, his head bent upon his breast, both sleeping the sleep of sheer exhaustion.

It was the startled cry of Natalie that roused West, and brought his drooping head upright. She was sitting up and pointing excitedly behind him.

"Oh, see there! Look where I point —isn't that land?"

The raft rocked as he swung his body hastily about, and gazed intently in the direction indicated. He rubbed his eyes, scarcely able to credit his sight, half believing it a mirage. Yet the view remained unchanged; it was land, a bit of the west shore, a short promontory running out into the lake toward which the raft, impelled by some hidden current, was steadily drifting. His arm clasped the girl in sudden ecstasy.

"Yes, it's land, thank God!" he exclaimed thoughtfully. "We are floating ashore, Natalie—saved in spite of ourselves. Why, we could not have been so far out in the lake, after all. I ought to have thought of that before; those villains would never have deserted the yacht in mid-lake, and taken to the boat. They must have known they could make shore easily."

"You don't suppose they landed here, do you?"

"Not very likely; even if they did they are not here now. Not one of them has a thought but that we went down in the Seminole. Now they'll pull off their graft, and pull it quick. They are not loitering around here, Natalie, waiting for ghosts to appear; they are back in town hours ago."

"But what can we do?"

"Get ashore first, of course, and discover the quickest way to return to the city. I figure we have a big advantage. We know their real game now, and they are so sure we are both dead, they'll operate in the open—walk right into a trap. By this time McAdams must have discovered some clue as to the whereabouts of Hobart. With him under arrest, and our story told, some of these fellows will confess, and it will all be over with.

"It is twilight already—the sun has gone down behind the bluff, but it will require an hour yet for this raft to drift into shallow water. You swim, you told me?'

"Yes, very well indeed."

"Shall we risk it then together? It is not far to the end of the point yonder."

She looked where he pointed and smiled, glancing back into his questioning eyes.

"Why, that involves no danger at all. I will do anything to get off this raft."

The two slipped silently over the edge of the dipping raft, and struck out for the nearest point of land. The distance was greater than it had seemed, the twilight deceiving their eyes, while their clothing had a tendency to retard progress. Weakened by lack of food, and buffeted by cross currents, both were decidedly exhausted by the time their lowering feet finally touched bottom.

"Oh," Natalie exclaimed breathlessly, "That was glorious, but I hardly had enough strength left to make it. Why, it is almost dark already. I cannot see the old raft at all. I—I wish it would come ashore; it gave you to me, Matt."

"And you are not sorry, even now, safe here on shore?'

"Sorry! Why I am the happiest girl in all the world this minute. I am here with you, and you love me—what more can I ask? Is that silly, dear?"

He laughed, and kissed her, neither giving a thought to their dripping garments, or a regret for the hardships they had passed through.

"Yes, I love you, Natalie, dear," he answered. "So it is not silly at all. But we must seek shelter and food. Are you strong enough now to climb the bluff?"

She nodded her readiness to try, too happy for words, and hand in hand they toiled their way upward through the gloom.

CHAPTER XVI

The House in the Bluffs.

The cleft in the bluff was both narrow and steep, but it gave them passage. At the upper end Natalie's reserve strength suddenly deserted her, and she sank down on the grass, laboring for breath, feeling unable to advance a step farther. The days and nights of excitement, coupled with lack of food and sleep, had left her physically weakened; now suddenly, even her will and courage both gave way.

"No, it is nothing," she explained in a whisper. "I am just completely tired out, I guess. You go on, Matt, and find some place of shelter. I'll just sit where I am now until you come back—only—only don't go very far away."

She held out her hand, and endeavored to smile.

"Desert me! Of course you are not, dear. I am bidding you go. I shall not mind being left here alone. I am so tired."

West felt the importance of gaining a view inland before the closing down of night obscured everything, and therefore reluctantly left her alone there while he made his way to the top of the ridge. It was a wild, broken country revealed to his gaze, a land of ridges and ravines, rugged and picturesque, but exhibiting no evidence of roads, or inhabitants. Then his eyes caught a thin spiral of smoke rising from out a narrow valley almost directly beneath where he stood, the depths of which were totally concealed from sight. As he stared at this, uncertain of its reality, a single spark of light winked out at him through the darkness. There was certainly a habitation of some kind hidden away down there. If he could only leave Natalie there in safe hands, in the security of a home, however humble, food would give him strength to push on alone. West turned and hastened back through the woods, clambering down the slope of the ridge in darkness to the spot where he had left the girl. For the moment he could not distinguish her presence in the gloom, and, fearing he might have gone astray, called her name aloud.

"Yes," she answered. "I am here; to your right. I am standing up. Have you discovered anything?"

"There is a house of some kind over yonder in a hollow just beyond the ridge. We will have to stumble along through the dark. Do you think you can make it?"

"Of course, I can," and she placed her hand confidingly in his. "I am all right now; really I am; I guess all I needed was to get my breath."

He grasped her arm, helping her to clamber up the steep bank, suddenly becoming aware that the sleeve felt dry.

"Why, Natalie, your clothes seem to have all dried off already; mine are soaked through," he exclaimed in surprise.

She laughed, a faint tinge of mockery in the sound.

"No mystery whatever. This light stuff dries quickly, exposed to the air. Did you think you had hold of the wrong girl?"

The tone of her voice stung slightly, causing him to make a sober answer.

"That would, of course, be improbable, but I have been so completely deceived, even by daylight, that I dare not affirm that it would prove impossible. Your counterfeit is certainly a wizard."

"She must be. But as she is miles away from here, you might let the suspicion rest. Is this where we go down?"

She led the way, the action awakening no question in his mind. If he thought at all about her thus assuming the initiative, the suspicion was dismissed with the idea that probably her eyes were more keen to discover the best path. In this she was certainly successful, and he contented himself by following her closely, but vaguely he felt that in some almost imperceptible manner she had changed her mood. He could not base his thoughts on a single word, or action, yet he felt the difference—this was not the Natalie of the raft. She was too irritable; too sharp of speech. But then, no doubt, she was tired, worn out, her nerves broken. So he drove the thought from him, clinging close to her arm, and vaguely wondering how she was able to trace the path so easily. By this time even West could recognize that they were proceeding along a well-used path, and he was not surprised when she announced the presence of the house before them, pointing out the dim shadow through the gloom.

"That is no hut," he exclaimed in surprise. "It looks more like a mansion."

"And why not?" pleasantly enough. 'I have always heard these bluffs were filled with summer homes. Unfortunately this one appears to be de-

The Woman's Home Missionary meeting of the M. E Church met Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Georgia Rowen. A good program was given. Reports from the convention at Webster City was given by Mrs. Tomkinson and Mrs. Liming. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Rowen and Mrs. R. H. Keith.

A business meeting of the League was held Friday evening at the home of Mrs. George Liming. The election of officers for the ensuing six months was held. They are as follows:

President	A. O. Pelley.
First Vice Pres.	Angie Baines.
Second Vice Pres.	Katherine Harsen.
Third Vice Pres.	Amy Azeltine
Fourth Vice Pres.	Lillian Azeltine.
Secretary	W. R. McCallum.
Treasurer	Mrs. A. O. Pelley.
Organist	Bernice Hansen.

Plans were also made for the League to carol the streets on Christmas night. An offering will be taken at this time for the Near East Relief Fund.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Tresidder and daughter, spent Sunday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Tresidder.

The D. H. Keith family, of Goldfield were Sunday guests at the home of his brother R. H. Keith and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Bingham and Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Peyton attended the sale at the Peter Mathiason home last Friday.

"The Little Minister" by James Barrie will be given in the picture palace next Thursday, December 14. This is one of the best films in the picture world to day, and the Rowan people will do well to see it. Though this is a high priced picture and one that rarely comes to the smaller towns the prices will be as usual. Mr. Brooks is giving the proceeds to the Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist Church.

The election of officers for the American Legion has been postponed until the end of December. The local post of the American Legion plan on holding a Christmas supper together with the Auxiliary on the Friday before Christmas.

The young people's society of the M. E. Church plan to start out at ten o'clock on Christmas eve and render carols in the town. They intend to sing all the favorite Christmas carols and songs, and to take up an offering along the way, and give the proceeds to the Near East Relief Fund. This will be a worthy subject and one which should appeal to all.

The pastor and friends of the church extend a hearty invitation to all who have no church relatives or affiliation not only for inspiration but real instruction. We plan to relate the gospel to all the problems of your daily life.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

"Go-to-church" Sunday was a real event; reminding us of the days when family pews were the customs. The special service was deferred until a future date we hope next Sunday on account of the non-arrival of the furniture but the congregation enjoyed listening to "The Worlds Crises," by the pastor and also "The Day Star" as sung by Miss Lavonne Ballou. "The Index" was the junior sermon topic which interested many younger people.

There was a pleasant addition to the Sunday School when the Bluebird class with Mrs. O. E Ballou teacher, marched to the platform and became a choir for the Sunday School.

A special Christmas program is being prepared under the leadership of Miss Frances Farren with Mrs. Fred Brooks head of decorating committee.

Three Fires Here Monday And Tuesday

Firemen Respond To Three Calls Monday And Tuesday And Arrive Promptly.

PROPERTY LOSS IS SMALL

Belmond has been plentifully supplied with fires the past few days, three having broken out within 24 hours Monday and Tuesday. The first blaze occured at The Hat Shoppe Monday morning, when a defective chimney started a small blaze near the roof. The fire company was on the scene promptly and by the use of the chemicals soon subdued the blaze with very little damage, and none whatever to the millinery stock.

Monday afternoon fire was discovered at the Wm. Purdy residence. The fire company responded again and arrived at the house in jig time. Owing to the wishes of the family, they did not use the axes to get at the fire between the walls, and shortly after the company had gone back the fire broke out again. Using their axes, this time they chopped into the wall and soon had the blaze subdued.

Tuesday morning a fire started at the home of Mrs. Will Starnes in north Belmond, from a defective chimney, and this was quickly put out by the fire company with the chemicals.

Much credit is due the fire boys for their work in fighting these fires as they subdued all three with the use of chemicals, thereby saving a great deal of damage from water. They were on the job in astonishingly short order and knew their business when they got there. Belmond may well be proud of its fire fighting company

BUYS ASH GROVE DAIRY

A deal was concluded last Friday whereby the Ash Grove Dairy changes hands, the owner and proprietor being James Kurtz ,one of Belmond's most progressive farmers Mr. Kurtz purchased all equipment except the wagons and cattle, and began immediate delivery to the customers of the old firm. The Ash Grove Dairy conducted by M. H. Luick Jr. had developed many friends and customers during their business life who will be given the same good service and high quality product by the new firm, which will be known as the Kurtz Dairy. Mr. Kurtz, like Mr. Luick, has a fine herd of tutercular tested dairy cows.

BIG SHIPMENT OF CORN

The canning factory at Hampton recently made a large shipment of sweet corn to Wilmington, California the shipment being 38,000 cans of this delectible food. The shipment was sent by way of the Panama Canal to save on shipping costs, going to St. Loius by rail thence to New Orleans by boat where it was transfered to a freighter for the long ocean voyage thru the Gulf of Mexico, the Canal and up the Pacific coast to San Diego, where it was unloaded and shipped inland by rail. If it's cheaper to send freight by this route, with the many changes and transfering enroute, than it is by rail overland, then there certainly is something wrong with the railroad freight rates in this country.

Try some of our Roasted peanuts. They are this year's crop and dandies. The pop corn is the same. Leave orders for Christmas any amount, and we will supply you. We also will have a fine line of Bar Candies,gum and Cracker Jack to select from.—Wm. Dempsey, opposite the Case Hotel.

CREDITORS OF SHEFFIELD BANK MEET AT HAMPTON

The Creditors of the Sheffield Bank met at Hampton last week Saturday to file their claims against the bank. This institution was better know as the Carhart bank as it was owned and managed by the family of that name. The bank went defunct and was voluntarilly closed by the Carhart Bros. on. August 21. The reason given out was that the bank was unable to make collections At the time it was quite generally believed the bank would re-open, but it appears that the bank is hope lessly insolvent. A new bank has been organized at Sheffield to take its place.

LEE COUNTY MAN CLAIMS HUSKING HONORS

Louis Curly of Lee county claims the corn husking championship of Iowa, as the result of his winning in competition with the winners of three district contests at the Ankeny fair recently. His average was 15 bushels an hour under conditions said to have been unfavorable, the corn running 170 ears to the bushel. Curley won a $50 prize offered by a farm magazine and $10 offered by the fair association. In addition he took the $50 prize for the best husking average for nine and one-half hours, making 21½ bushels an hour in a certified contest in Lee county. He may or may not be the champion corn husker but if he picks that much no one will gainsay the fact that he is some husker.

SKATING RINK FOR CLARION

The commercial Club of Clarion is building a fine up town skating rink for the youth of the county seat, and the board of directors have authorized the construction of the rink. Workmen are now on the job getting it in shape, at the east end of main street. The rink is half a block in size and will accomodate a large number of skaters when flooded and frozen over.

BELMOND SCHOOLS COST $39,170 TO RUN A YEAR

Annual Report Of County Superintendent Gives Total Enrollment As 460.

From the annual report of the county superintendent of schools, Miss Blanche Bock, it is learned that the Belmond schools cost $39,107.03 to run during the past year, and that the total enrollment was 460. In the entire county there was an enrollment of 6,187, 3,101 of whom were boys and 3,086 girls. Two hundred and fifty-nine teachers were employed, and of this total only 17 were men. Non-resident pupils totaled 331 and they paid a tuition of $21,927.96. Eagle Grove's expense in running her schools was $71,423.-90, and Clarion spent $57,382.14. And at that they all received their money's worth.

CHICKEN THIEVES USE GAS

The slick way that chicken thieves have of picking the choicest and fattest hens from the roost has been more or less debated, and was recently solved at Sleepy Eye, Minnesota, in the way that had been expected. The crooks use gas. At Sleepy Eye eight hogs were stolen and it was found they had been stupefied by gas. Even the dog had been rendered harmless by this method. By injecting the gas into the hen house the chickens are rendered partially unconscious, and it is an easy task to pick the best ones without a squawk to give the alarm.

There are millions of good citizens in this country, but the bad ones make most of the noise.

$2,000 CASH AND 109 TROPHIES OFFERED

Many Premiums Are Offered In Contest For Best Corn At State Corn Show.

Wright county farmers will have a chance to win a large valuable silver trophy. This trophy is awarded each year by the Security Savings Bank of Eagle Grove for the best 10 ears of corn from this county, shown at the state show, which show will be held, for Iowa farmers only, at Ames during the farmers short course, January 29 to February 3.

The trophy offered by the Security Savings Bank is awarded for only one year and is passed along from winner to winner, each having his name engraved on the cup. It has been won by Marquis Nelson, Geo. Madison. These men are barred from further competition for this cup. All other exhibitors from Wright county who make entry in this class will compete.

In addition to competing for the county trophy, the entries of corn are eligible to compete in the state classes for which a $2000 cash premium list has been arranged. The 20th annual State Corn Show, the largest of its kind in the world, will be held the later part of January. It is under the auspices of the Iowa Corn and Small Grain Growers' Association, an organization of Iowa farmers who are vitally interested in the development of good seed corn for the state.

The state corn show with its 15,000 ears of corn on the tables and its numerous good samples of small grain and clovers will be one of the features of the annual farmers short course. This year the show will be held in the new Armory, which has an acre of floor space without a pillar. Each department of the college will have an interesting exhibit at the show.

One of the most interesting exhibits will be the one showing the results of the third year's corn yield test. It includes entries of 70 leading varieties or strains of corn. It will be well worth your time to study the results which will be graphically illustrated.

Premium lists and full information of the state corn show, which is open to Iowa farmers only, may be obtained by writing Joe L. Robinson Secretary, Iowa Corn and Small Grain Growers' Association Ames, Iowa. Enter your corn or grain and take home a large silver cup and cash premium from Ames.

Miss Jennie Gealow came home from Des Moines, where she is attending college last Friday to spend the holidays with the home folks.

BONUS TAX LEVY TO BE SPREAD IN WRIGHT

Auditor Receives Instructions To Spread Levy In This County For Bonds.

Auditor Walker has been instructed to spread the tax levy for the soldier's bonus in Wright county, the amount being fixed by the State Execution council at two mills which will be spread upon the taxable property for 1922 and collected in the usual manner next spring. The bonus bonds are to run twenty years and it is estimated that the above levy will bring in one-tweni-eth of the amount and interest each year. Based on the average taxable value of a 160 acre Wright county farm, $77.60, the bonus tax will amount to a trifle less than four cents per acre, or about $6.25 per quarter section. The bonds are now being advertised in the Des Moines papers, the sale of the same to take place January 9th. They will be in denomination of $1000 only and darw four and one-half per cent interest. Bond men say they should sell at a pemium. It is estimated that the payment of the bonus will begin in February.

Another new case for the Febuay term of court is that of Chas. Culmer of Woolstock vs. John Jones and Mary Culmer. The last mentioned defendant is the wife of the plaintiff. For cause of action plaintiff states that John Jones began paying attention to his wife about one year ago and that his wife's conduct with said Jones had become so flagrant that in June of this year this plaintiff ceased to live with his wife and in Septemebr filed an action against Jones for damages in the sum of $5,000, which suit is still pending. The plaintiff now alleges that his wife and Jones have conspired and entered into plans for the sale of pesonal property consisting of horses, cows, hogs, etc. Wherefore, plaintiff asks a temporary injunction restraining them from disposing of the above property, which petition was granted Mon day by Judge Wright.

A general assignment for the benefit of his creditors was made Tuesday by E. R. Lockwood of Clarion who is engaged in the racket store and notion business A. L. Tracy has been named as the assignee.

The case of Earl Ewing was given to the jury at four o'clock, Tuesday afternoon. Defendant was charged with bootlegging. Five hours later a verdict of guilty was returned. Sentence will be passed Monday, December 18. Officers found six quarts of booze in a Ford car driven by Holmes and Ewing. Holmes trial comes later.

FORMER BELMOND BOY TANGLED IN RED TAPE

The following article is taken from the Des Moines Register of last Saturday, and will be of interest to many Belmond people who are friends or know of the young man mentioned:

A striking instance of government red tape, delay and inefficiency came to the attention of Senator Cummins this week George R. Pond of Belmond Ia., a skilled aviator, sought a place as air pilot in the postal service. He was directed by the postoffice department to go to Chicago and be tested. He went to Chicago and was obliged to spend twenty days waiting about there. Finally, he was given a ten minute test and turned down by the official in charge. Satisfied that Pond had not been given a square deal, Senator Cummins insisted the postoffice department give him a fair trial. He will be tested in New York in a short time.

FORM BIG COMMERCIAL CLUB

The big meeting scheduled for last week at Forest City for the purpose of forming a Chamber of Commerce or Commercial Club, went over with a bang and at the banquet held at the college last Friday night, a club of 150 members was organized. The Summit reports a very enthusiastic gathering with lots of pep, and many plans being made for future activities for the new organization.

THORNTON NOW SERVED BY IOWA FALLS CO.

The Iowa Falls Electric Co. last week added another town to their list when they connected Thornton up with the "juice." That lively little burg is now using electricity for light and power and reports say the citizens are highly pleased with the change. This makes a total of 29 towns that this company is now serving with electricity.

BOOTLEGGERS GET $800 FINE OR JAIL SENTENCE

Mrs. Neuhring And Son Otto, And Leo Prince, Draw Big Fines In Court.

Mrs. Neuhring and son Otto Neuhring together with Leo Prince who constituted Belmond's quota of hootch makers and bootleggers in district court, each received their medicine Monday when Judge Wright gave them their choice of paying eight hundred dollars, or spending about two hundred and forty days in the county bastile.

The three mentioned were up before the judge on Monday afternoon and the judge was not at all backward in giving them what they had coming. It is understood that the two Neuhrings will pay their fine and costs, but that Prince will lay his out while someone else supports his family All three plead guilty before the court last week after giving the matter some serious consideration, to maintaining a liquor nusance.

In connecton with the Neuhring case, the editor of the Independent received a visit from one of the Neuhring boys last week, after the paper was out and was strongly informed that the Neuhrings had not entered any plea of guilty as the Independent had stated; that they "never made no booze or sold" and they wanted that piece straightened out and corrected, because it was injuring their reputation. All of which the Independent takes pleasure in doing by the first two paragraphs of this article.

Years are much like kings. As one dies there is always another ready to takes its place.

New County Attorney Starts Housecleaning

Four Men Arrested For Being Drunk—Two Have Trials And Get Limit.

30 DAYS IN COUNTY JAIL

Guy Bates and Amos "Jack" Smith were arrested Tuesday afternoon and hailed before Justice L. O. Skovlin on the charge of intoxication, on information filed by Atty. J. M. Jensen Two other men, Fred Lynch and Bob Coulson, were also charged with the same offense and warrants issued for their arrest.

Lynch and Coulson were arrested and brought before Skovlin yesterday afternoon. Both men plead not guilty and were released without bond to appear at their trial to be held on December 30.

Appearing before Justice Skovlin, Bates and Smith both plead not guilty Tuesday afternoon and demanded a jury trial. Constable W. E. McAlpin rounded up the jurors, both men and women, and the first case, that of Bates, was brought to trial in jig time before Justice Skovlin, with Jensen as prosecuting attorney. The jury on this case was composed of Andrew Bullis, Theo. Wright, Ray P. Morris, Mrs. Gus Johnson, Mrs. F. E Snyder, and Mrs. H. L. Gowdy The jury found Bates guilty of intoxication, and Justice Skovlin promtly gave him the limit, 30 days in the county jail with the suspension of sentence if he would tell where he got the booze. This he refused to do, and took an appeal to the district court. He was released on bonds, his bonds being furnished by Jack Finn and S. S. Packard, and settlement of his case will be made in district court probably next term.

The next case was Amos Smith. The jury on his case was composed of T. D. Rankins, Hal Nourse, Clyde Jennings, Pat Barry, Hans Hanson, and Wm. Voiles. He was found guilty of being drunk, was given the limit by Justice Skovlin, and was taken yesterday morning to Clarion by Constable McAlpin to begin serving his 30 days in the county jail.

These cases were state cases, and it is understood that the city officials may, at the expiration of the sentences of these men, rearrest them on the same charge, give them another trial, and if found guilty impose a fine of $100 or another term in jail, if the city officials see fit to do so. It is to be hoped and expected that they will. The booze ring in Belmond has got to be cleaned out. Every lawabiding citizen and self-respecting person in town will give Atty. Jensen and Justice Skovlin their fullest support and commendation for their good work in these cases, and will back up every jurymen and woman to the last ditch. Jensen deserves unlimited credit for filing information on the cases, and Skovlin for giving the guilty parties the limit of the law. Now that these men have started the ball rolling, let it continue to roll, and a general and thoro clean-up made in Belmond of these things which have been a stench in the nostrils of the public too long. The new county attorney as part of his duties, will have just such affairs to look after, and he is making the right start by beginning in his own home town. For the guilty parties in this case, it will doubtless be a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year and it is to be hoped that the term in jail will bring them to a sober realization that the public demands and is going to have, decency and law enforcement.

SCHOOL NOTES

The public declamatory program will be given Wednesday, December 20 at eight o'clock. At this program the High school orchestra will play and there will be other good musical numbers.

Monday afternoon was held the Junior-Senior debate. The state question was debated: "Resolved that the present state highway law be repealed and an act substituted in lieu thereof providing for the primary roads of the state" The Juniors supported the affirmative and the Seniors the negative. The Junior team were Katherine Thiltgen, Everill Thompson and Alfred Wilkinson. The Senior team, Minnie Madison, Valda Robinson and Winston Thiltgen. The Juniors won by a two to one decision. The Judges also picked the team to represent our high school in the State debate series. This team is Minnie Madison, Alfred Wilkinson and Winston Thiltgen. We are paired with Clarion for our first inter-school debate.

Mr. Varland, Cato Griesy and Clarence Hildebrand were the judges for the debate.

Friday afternoon at 2:30 Division 1 of the Literary Society will give a Christmas program. Among other things a very pretty Christmas play will be given. Everyone is cordially invited. The entire program is as follows:

Piano Solo—Marie Stevens
Christmas Story—Jurgen Tebben.
Accordian Solo—John Henn.
Reading—Lucile Harrison.
Chorus:
Herman Mennenga, Gladys Qualley Racine Wig, Elizabeth Kessler, Leslie Swenson, Tillie Henn, Claude Johnson, Wava Holm, Howard Nelson Fay Jenison, Eugene McLaughlin, Leola Jenison.
Play: The man who didn't believe in Christmas. Benjamin Mennenga, William Tyrrell Coetta Foster Faye Jenison, Gerald Barry, Kathleen Barry Cecil Finn, Marshall Nourse, Dale Jenison Shirley Brooks, Clar Rierson, Esther Amblie, Glenn Rierson, Roger Leinbach, Reint Kessler Laura Brooks, Lewis Parsons.

Friday evening will be held the Alumni vs High school basket ball games. These games promise to be among the best of the season. Everyone should plan to attend.

David Luick, William Vestweber and Ted Johnson visited high school and attended the debate Monday. We are always glad to have the Alumni visit us.

Morey Nelson and Clifford Johnson visited high school Friday.

Dr. McBurney was up to hear the debate Monday.

The Christmas vacation begins Friday night December 22 and lasts until January 8.

The basket ball games with Sheffield last Friday night were very exciting and interesting to watch. Belmond was fortunate enough to win both; the girls game 10 to 11 and the boys' by the score of 28 to 20 Former Superintendent Fyler was over from Sheffield with the basket ball teams.

A CHRISTMAS SERMON

By Rev. J. M. Jensen

Luke 21:10: "And the angel said unto them: 'Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people.

Christmas Tide is the happy season of the year. What a stir we notice among all at that time. Young and old, even little children, are excited. Their feelings are different then from any other time of the year. Why is it? Oh, the story is easily told. Christmas is the time when all are remembered. We give and receive tokens of good will. But let us not make Christmas merely a giving and receiving affair. Surely it is a beautiful custom to remember others at this time.

And oh, how good it feels to know that one has friends who have not forgotten. Let us think just a little about the great cause of giving and receiving. What is it? Fear not says the angel, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be unto all people.

The great cause for joy at this time is God's gift to man. It is the Gift of Gifts. It is not for one or for a few, but "to all people." Has it any value? It must have or God would not have sent it. Fear not. What has man to fear. He has to true. And that transgression means gainst God, who is holy, just and true. And that transgressed means death. He that sinneth shall die. Is it unpleasant, unhappy to realize the unhappy judgement: But in the Christmas gospel the angel says "Fear not." Sin will always produce sorrow. Hear this you that have sinned against God. God does not want to destory; God wants you and me to live. Therefore He sent His Son. Come to Him. Fall down before Him. Confess your sin and put your trust in Him. and you have the joy the angel brought to the shepherds on that eventful Christmas Eve. God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should Not perish, but have everlasting life.

Do you see the cause for joy? Do you see it must be a precious message to you. Believe it and you have all the message offers, life everlasting. May you have a most blessed Christmas.

BELMOND WINS TWO GAMES FROM SHEFFIELD

The basket ball teams of the Sheffield and Belmond high schools, both boys' and girls', met in battle on the local floor last Friday evening and Belmond emerged with the bacon. The games were both lively affairs. The girls' game being particularly good with the close score of 11 to 10 Belmond boys' had a little better edge on their opponents and won by a score of 28 to 20. They were fine games, cleanly played and the spectators received the worth of their money. Former Supt. Fyler brought the Sheffield teams over, he being head of that school this year. The next game is tomorrow night when the Alumni and high school meet.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Belmond Planning Short Course

Business men and farmers of Belmond and surrounding community have decided to hold a mid-winter short course or, as was known a few years ago, an institute. There being considerable pure bred live stock in that community it has been thought that some sort of an exhibit should be arranged in order that the best could be shown and the county farm products bought out for comparison.

A committee consisting of A. C. Hinman, Belmond township, O. D. Jenison, Pleasant township, E. G. Reed, Grant township, D. E. Lobdell Iowa township, and Cato C. Greisy, city of Belmond met in the Belmond Savings bank on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of planning and organizing the 1923 winter short course for Belmond and community. According to the plans of this committee a superintendent will be appointed for each department of the short course and those who enter in the various departments will look to these superintendents for instructions and suggestions for entering the different farm products.

Belmond held a most successful two-day short course two years ago and the committee hopes to outline a two day exhibit that will be chuck full of instruction and entertainment. While the people of Belmond and surrounding territory are somewhat limited in the matter of facilities for housing the live stock, they do have the community spirit which means considerable in organizing a community affair of this kind. Any who have not been thinking in terms of a short course are urged to reflect back to the experience of two years ago, then begin preparing their exhibits for the mid-winter short course which is being planned by the committee for some time during the latter part of January.

Pure Bred Gilt Club

The county agent expects to spend considerable time during the next two or three months in organizing what will be known as a pure bred gilt club.

Each boy and girl who enrolls in this club will be expected to select a pure bred female pig from any of the breeds from a March farrow, and feed and care for this gilt according to instructions and suggestions that will be sent out from the county agent's office. Members of the club will show their gilts in some sort of a county exhibit after whch they will be taken to the state fair at Des Moines.

Boys and girls who are interested in this pure bred gilt club should either write or call on the county agent as soon as possible and enrollments will be taken and instructions sent out from this office.

Townships Hold Business Socials

The farmers of the Norway township farm bureau succeeded in mixing business and pleasure when they held their regular meeting, Wednesday evening Dec. 13th, for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year.

A most interesting program, planned by Miss Lucy Roge, the local teacher, was given at the new school house in district No. 7. The program consisted of songs, reading, dialogs, and a few special numbers were given after which the election took place, resulting in the election of John Engh as director, Mrs. L. E. Evans for vice directo r,and W. E. Buck, secretary-treasurer. This was followed by a lively box social which netted the township treasury a neat sum, which will be used to carry on the social activities of the organization.

The farmers of Grant township farm bureau met at the center shool Friday evening for the election of officers for the coming year, and to enjoy the interesting program which was arranged for the occasion by Miss Lela Woodin, the local teacher. Miss Woodin was in charge of the meeting and opened the program with a Christmas song by the pupils of her school. This was followed by a few dialogs, a number of recitations and musical numbers. Although neither of the directors of the township farm bureau were present, the meeting progressed very nicely and everyone seemed to enjoy the splendid program which was given.

The school program was followed by the election of officers which resulted in the election of Alf Huntley as director, Mrs. Harry Woodley as vice director, and Mrs John Fenninger as secretary and treasurer. The farmers of Grant township have made a practice of holding regular monthly meetings in their farm bureau organization and the new officers will no doubt continue in this practice.

Goldfield Short Course Proves A Great Success

The Goldfield short course which was held on Thursday and Friday of last week was bigger and better than ever before. The attendance at this mid winter exhibit was estimated at between 1500 and 2000 people who came from a territory within a radius of 15 to 20 miles in every direction from Goldfield. The stormy condition of the weather on Thursday did not seem to halt the people who were determined to exhibit their farm products in this short course which is becoming to be an annual event in Goldfield.

Goldfield people were indeed very fortunate in securing some of the talent which assisted in judging the live stock and grain exhibits and in awarding the prizes to the exhibitors. Mark G. Thornburg of Emmetsburg, a former professor of animal husbandry at Ames gave great satisfaction in judging the live stock exhibits, and all exhibitors in this section are agreed that Mr. Thornburg knew his job in judging the various classes of live stock. Prof. P. E. Heitzman from the extension department, judged the grain exhibits and everyone seemed satisfied with the decisions that were made in this department. A big show of corn was brought out also some oats and other small grains. Some splendid samples of hay and other forage were also shown. The poultry exhibit was especially large for a short course of this size and one would judge from the splendid exhibits in this department that the poultry industry is becoming more popular in Wright county.

One of the features of the pou[illegible]try exhibit was the club departmen[illegible] in which enrties were made by abou[illegible] eighteen boys and girls who are members of the Wright Co[illegible] Poultry club. Great interest was [illegible]en in this part of the poultry exhibit and some keen competition among the poultry club members was brought out at this show. Special prizes were offered in the poultry club exhibit by the county farm bureau and the prizes were awarded as follows:

First Prize trio and sweepstakes, Alta Duerst, Goldfield.
Second prize trio, Earl Mickelson, Clarion.
Third prize trio, H attie Metson, Eagle Grove.
First prize cockerel, Edson Hanson, Goldfield.
First prize pullet, Gerald Kennedy, Goldfield.

The exhibit of canned goods, fancy work, cooking, etc in the ladies' department proved to be one of the most interesting departments of the short course. Jess Kerkes, former domestic science teacher, who now lives at Ames judged the exhibits in the ladies' department and according to Mr. Kerkes the exhibits in this department were very much above the average. The success of the exhibits in the ladies' department is due in a large measure to the efforts put forth by Geo. M. Nelson, who had the work in charge.

The Goldfield short course which has become an annual affair in that community is looked forward to by the citizens of Goldfield, and the farmers of the surrounding territory as a red letter day, when all people of the community get together for an exhibit of the fruits of their labor and for a general good time for everyone. This annual affair seems to be growing in popularity and the territory is broadening each year to such an extent that the officers of the short course association are beginning to concern themselves as to the facilities for taking care of all of the agrcultural exhibits, particularly along the live stock line.

The success of this short course was due in a large measure to the untiring efforts put forth by Magnus Hanson, chairman, and W. M. Coons, secretary and other officers and committee members who succeeded in gettng the people to work together on a project which was for the good of all. The success was due in no small measure to the splendid cooperation which was given by the business men of Goldfield not only financially, but also in the liberal way in which they threw open the doors of their business establishments for the exhibition of the agricultural products.

We heard a funny joke the other day. You know that this year's license tags for cars are yellow. A farmer saw a Garner man drive into Klemme the other day and saw the yellow tag on the car. Said he to another farmer, "Well, I'll b[illegible] damned if they don't [illegible] in at Garner [illegible] the cars!"

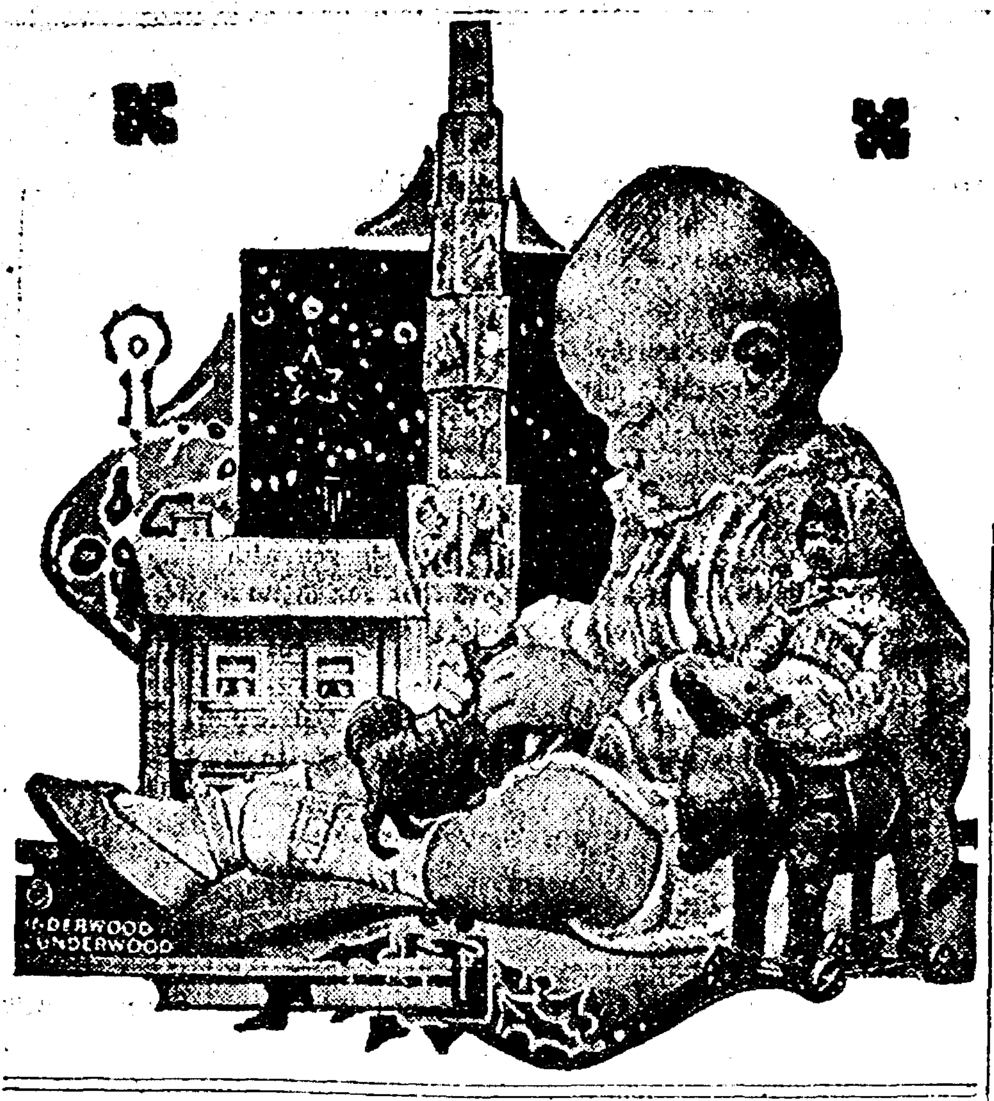
I'd Like to See Old Santa



Jacques' Christmas

By
Eleanor E. King

A BLIZZARD was brewing. Little cutting pieces of snow were being blown in whirls around corners and down the street. Huddled down in his coat stood a newsboy of some eight or nine years. His face was drawn with the cold and he beat his hands against his sides to keep them warm.

Last-minute Christmas shoppers, hurrying along to get their various errands done, gave no thought to the little fellow who pestered them with his papers. He ought to have known better when they had so many things to think about.

"Yeh, all the news—the latest news. Won't cha buy one, mister? I only have a couple more." He looked up pleadingly into the face of a passerby.

"Sorry, sonny," smiled the man," "got one here now that I probably won't ever get a chance to read—so busy," and he hurried along his way.

The rush of pedestrians subsided, [illegible] The boy singled out a yo[illegible] "She loo[illegible] little voice started chanting, "Frere Jacques, Frere Jacques—you're late tonight."

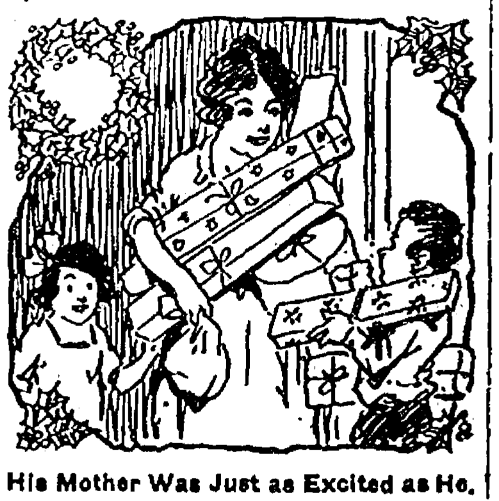
"Yes, Marthe. Today I was talking to Santa on the corner, and he said he was awfully busy. He doubted if he would get all around this year."

"Oh!" said Marthe in a disappointed tone.

Jacques' mother was sewing busily upon a garment she was intent upon finishing. Tomorrow was Christmas,



His Mother Was Just as Excited as He.

and no sewing was going to be left over to bother her.

Marthe's bedtime came, and Jacques fixed his presents in preparation for the morrow. He had found a Christmas tree branch in the street, and this he made into a little tree under which he placed his gifts.

and kissed her doll, keeping up a constant chatter to it in French. The orange and a few other presents that she had found under the tree she put on the shelf, so that she could admire them while she rocked her doll.

Jacques had had his surprise, too—"Give and it shall be given unto you"—for his two packets under the tree had grown to be six or seven,

"Mother," he said, "I think I will have to try my new mittens and see exactly how warm they are." So saying, he slipped into his coat and pushed on the door. What ailed it? Was it frozen shut, stuck, or what was the matter?

With his mother's help the door was opened. To their surprise they found that a huge pile of packages had been the cause of their trouble.

Jacques gave a cry of delight as he pounced upon the bundles. His mother was just as excited as he, as she helped carry in the stuff.

Then followed one of the happiest hours the family had ever known—whole two-dozen oranges and all sorts of wholesome food. Jacques' mother fairly wept with joy.

Santa remembered us after all, mother," said little Jacques, "and he left this note on one of my presents. Look, mother, it says:—

"'I hope you will always be as thoughtful of your sister, Jacques. A Merry Christmas and a Bright and Happy New Year.

QUALITY MARK

COMFORT and convenience in housekeeping are esteemed more highly today than ever before. This is especially true of kitchen work. Every device that can make cooking easy and its results certain is incorporated in the

Hotpoint HUGHES ELECTRIC RANGE

One of these advantages is the instant application of heat. There is no striking of matches or carrying of fuel—no long waiting for the fire to "burn up". It is ready at the turn of a switch.

The Hotpoint Hughes is the range of comfort. All the heat goes into the cooking—not into the room. There is no open flame—no fumes and no soot to stain utensils or walls.

TO PAY BONUS IN FEBRUARY

Announcement was made last week the first notice of the sale of the soldier's bous issue of $22,000,000 would be published, barring of course unexpected delay. Indications point to the first payment of individual claims of ex-service men and women of Iowa for the state bonus about the first of February. Some unforeseen cause may bring about a delay but it is not thought that payment will be postponed for any length of time after February 1.

In announcing the publication of the bond issue State Treasurer W. J. Burbank stated that the bonds would bear 4½ per cent interest. The sale of the bonds is expected to be completed between January 5th and January 20th. Under the law the sale must be advertised twenty days. General Harry E. Wilkins secretary of the bous board, expects to have completed the task of transcribing the war department records with which to check application for the bonus within seven or more working days. At the close of the work on last Saturday noon over sixty-seven thousand individual's records had been copied. The office staff is completing aproximately seven thousand records a day and something like forty-three thousand remain to be copied.

An announcement was made this week by State Anditor Haynes, who is chairman of the board, that the application blanks will be sent out as soon as all the records have been copied. Members of the board have expressed the opinion that possibly seventy-five thousand or more of the application will be filled out and returned within first three days.

Chairman Haynes also stated that all soldiers in the state will have an even chance to get their applications in among the first to be considered. Application blanks to the more distant parts of the state will be mailed a day in advance of their delivery to Legion posts, postmasters and clerks of court in the central Iowa counties.

SOMETHING WRONG

The lottery jigs are up. No more can the merchants of a town hang up a new Ford or a shiny Buick for the purpose of stimulating trade.

The attorney general has specifically ordered the Humboldt county attorney to prosecute Renwick merchants for offering a Ford car as a grand prize. The Humboldt county attorney is in a dilemma for Humboldt closed a trade lottery a few weeks ago. Also the Legion Posts at Bode and Livermore pulled off similar stunts and the law doesn't allow us to say anything about what's doing in a small town between here and Humboldt right now.

Why pick on Renwick where not a single lawyer resides to advise us, and where there is little use for one, while county seats and larger towns around us with dead loads of attorneys right on the ground get away with it.

Humboldt gave away a Ford. Clarion gave away a Buick. Eagle Grove gave away a Ford. Algona gave a Ford last Saturday and other prizes on other days of the week and carried an announcement of the fact in the newspaper. Individual merchants have given away merchandise in a like manner for years. Eagle Grove Hampton and other towns are at it right now. While at the recent Humboldt county fair a sack of flour and a kitchen range were given away.

The newspapers have been given a new warning by the postal authorities advising them that advertising directly or indirectly announcing lotteries is contrary to law and postal regulations, and yet an announcement of a turkey shoot appeared in a Des Moines paper last week and another in the Britt paper.

Why pick on Renwick?—Renwick Times.

WHY ONE BOY LEFT THE FARM

I left my dad, his farm, his plow;
Because my calf became his cow;
I left my dad—'twas wrong of course,
Because my colt became his horse,
I left my dad to sow and reap
Because my lamb became his sheep
I dropped my hoe and struck my fork,
Because my pig became his pork.
The garden truck I made to grow
Was his to sell and mine to hoe.

Why Another One Didn't—

With dad and me it's half and half,
The cow I own was once his calf;
No town for mine, I will not bolt;
Because my horse was once his colt;
I'm going to stick right where I am,
Because my sheep was once his lamb;
I'll stay with dad—he gets my vote,
Because my hog was once his shote;
It's "fifty-fifty" with dad and me—
A profit sharing company.

MESERVEY SCHOOL NOTES

3rd. and 4th. Grades.

Tillie Rieckens has been absent from school most of the week.

Wednesday our room enjoyed visits from Mrs. Wm. Prilipp and son Marvin, Mrs. H. Frey, Mrs. A Wendel, Mrs. J. Hartfelder, Mrs. Dan Wenzell, and Mrs. H. Blewitt, Byron Blewitt and Rusell Wenzell, also were visitors.

Those receiving prizes for having made the most "hundreds" in spelling during the past six weeks were Leona Prilipp, Naomi Schlesselman, Lydle Fischer, and Merle Zieman.

We have decorated our room for Christmas. Come and see how nicely it looks.

Last Monday morning the water pipes in our room burst causing a lot of excitement. They were quickly repaired by the janitor, however, and school duties were resumed as usual.

Sample tubes of tooth paste were received from the Lambert Pharmacal Co. We have given them to the children and hope the parents will cooperate with us and see that the paste is rightly used by the children.

The 3rd and 4th grades are going to give the playlet. "Christmas Eve with Mother Goose" and the "Snowball song" at the Community Program.

5th and 6th Grades

We have been having jolly times in the newly fallen snow. More than one has had a good face washing.

Mildred Janssen attended her mother to the city Monday and therefore was absent from school duties.

"Everything For Sale"
FRIDAY AND MONDAY
at the
STAR THEATRE

How Much Does A Girl Owe To Her Family?

For her education and being launched in society, just how deeply in debt is a girl to her family?

That is the problem which is threshed out by Hector Turnbull in his latest photoplay, "Everything For Sale," in which May McAvoy the latest addition to the Readart constellation, will be seen here next Friday 22 and Monday 25 at the Star Theatre.

The family in this story believed that the girl owed them her whole future, and was morally obliged to marry the richest man they could secure for her.

The Turnbull play is a scathing arraignment of the heartless creed of modern society, which offers its girls on the auction block of marriage to the highest bidder.

ENGINEER WOULD ELIMINATE TAX ON ABUTTING FARMS

(From the Jefferson Bee)

Mr. F. R. White, Chief Engineer of the Iowa State Highway Commission has written to the Bee, the following statement of his views as to the future of Iowa Highways. He present in easily understandable form the program which he thinks ought to be carried out, and it will be noted that he favors the abolition of the 25 per cent paving and graveling assessment against adjacent lands. Mr. White says:

"Viewing our road problem from the standpoint of the State as a whole, the following points present themselves: About two-thirds of the mileage of the primary road system of Iowa is now constructed to finished grade. In two more years, this grading and draining work will practically all have been completed, while during the past four years, 329 miles have been paved and 483 miles have been surfaced with gravel, yet the surfacing work has so far been more or less incidental to the grading and draining program. With only about two more years required to complete the grading and draining work, we should now determine our policy with reference to future highway improvements.

There are just three courses open; first the work might be stopped, no more funds collected, and no further progress made in the development of our highway system; second, we might proceed to the grading and draining of the secondary roads and leave the primary roads without any surfacing on them; and third, we can adopt a definite policy of surfacing our primarry roads in a manner commensurate with the traffic which they carry.

The first of these possible courses is unthinkable. There are now approximately five hundred thousand motor vehicles in this state, representing an investment probably of close to five hundred million dollars. We must have highways over which these vehicles can be operated; otherwise the investment in the vehicles is of no value to us, and we would thereby lose far more than the cost of paving the primary roads.

The second possible course would be a very unwise and uneconomical policy for the state to pursue. The traffic on the highways is becoming more intense every year. From traffic counts which we have, it appears that the traffic has more than doubled in the past three years. Considering the heavy traffic which these primary roads are called upon to carry it would be an enormous waste of funds to fail to surface them in a proper manner so that they can be used at all seasons of the year and with the minimum amount of expense and inconvenience.

The third course seems to be the only logical or reasonable one to pursue. The state should proceed to the surfacing of primary roads in a manner suited to the traffic which each road carries. This means that a considerable protion of the primary road system should be paved. On some of the lesser traveled portions, a gravel surface will carry the traffic for several years, and on these portions, it should be logical to construct a gravel road. But on main thoroughfares, such as the Lincoln Highway and other similar roads a paved surface is the only thing that will adeguately serve.

A great many people honestly think that we cannot afford to pave the primary road system. I have gone into the matter carefully, and from the data which I have, I am confident that we cannot longer afford not to pave at least the main portions of the primary road system. During the past four years, the College at Ames and the Highway Commission have co-operated in an investigation of the amount of gasoline consumed on different types of road surfaces. The data collected shows that on the ordinary earth road such as we might expect to have on the primary road system, we get fourteen ton miles per gallon of gas. On a gravel road we get thirty-one ton miles per gallon of gas. With gasoline costing twenty-four cents per gallon the fuel on a dirt road costs 1.71 cents per ton mile on a gravel road it costs 1.15 cents per ton mile, and on paved road it costs 0.777 cents per ton mile. From this you will note that the difference in the cost of the fuel on a dirt road as compared with a paved road, is 0.94 of a cent per ton mile. A Ford touring car with its ordinary load of passengers, weighs approximately one ton. Accordingly, it cost the owner of an ordinary Ford touring car approximately .94 of a cent per mile more for the fuel consumed in traveling over a dirt road, than it would in traveling over a paved road. With the heavier types of cars the cost in fuel consumed is correspondingly larger.

We have in this state aproximately five hundred thousand motor vehicles. If we get an average of four thousand ton miles per vehicles each year (and that seems to be a conservative estimate) then we have approximately two million ton miles of traffic annually over our highways. Our figures show that approximately eighty per cent of this traffic or one million, six hundred millon ton miles annually is on the primary road system. Since the saving in gasoline between a dirt road and a paved road is approximately one cent per ton per mile, then by paving the primary roads, we can save approximately sixteen million dollars annually in gasoline consumption

The primary road fund in the state as you know, amounts to about nine million dollars annually. If we would add to this fund, the sixteen now spent for extra gas in driving over dirt roads, it would made a fund sufficient to completely pay for the paving of the primary road system in a period of eight years, without the issuance of bonds or any other form of inbebtedness. From this you will note that we are now paying for paved roads in this state through the excess gasoline which we burn and we are not getting the paved roads.

As a check on this estimate of savings, we have counted the traffic on roads in various parts of the state during the past year. One counting station was located on the Sioux City-LeMars Road just north of Sioux City. This is a dirt road The traffic on this road is such that the saving in gasoline, due to paving would pay all the interest costs and would pay for the paved road in a period of about eight years.

Another counting station was located on the gravel road just north of Spencer. The traffic on this road is such that the saving in gasoline due to the paving of this road, would pay all the interest costs and pay for the pavement in a period of ten years.

Another counting station was located on the Lincoln Highway east of Ames. This is a gravel road. The saving in gasoline due to the paving of this road, would pay for the pavement in a period of fifteen years.

The above savings are based on fuel consumption only. They do not take into consideration the saving that may be made in the depreciation of motor equipment, by adequately surfacing the highways. Automobile men who are in a position to know, tell me that the average life of a motor vehicle in this state is five years. If this is true, then we must buy one hundred thousand new motor vehicles in this state each year in order to keep our motor equipment up to its present numerical stength of five hundred thousand. These new vehicles, at an average of eight hundred dollars each, will cost eighty million dollars annually. If through the paving of our roads, we can prolong the life of our motor vehicles one year, (and that seems entirely reasonable and practical) then we would save one-fifth of our annual bill for new vehicles or sixteen million dollars annually.

With these figures in mind, the question ceases to be of whether we can afford to pave our primary roads, and becomes a question as to how much longer we can afford not to pave them.

Under the present law, twenty-five per cent of the cost of paving is assessed against adjacent farm property. I feel that this assesment should be done away with. Since it can be clearly shown that through the paving of our primary roads we can effect savings to the motor owner far in excess of the cost of paving, I feel that the cost of the paving should be borne by the road user.

Yours very truly,
F. R. White, Chief Engineer."

MERCHANT PRINCE CALLED BY DEATH

Philadelphia, Dec. 12—John Wanamaker, founder of the stores bearing his name in New York and Philadelphia, and former postmaster general, who has been ill for several weeks, died here today. He was 84 years old. Within the last few days however, he took a turn for the better and the end came suddenly, after a relapse. A bulletin issued at Wanamaker's residence, shortly after 8 o'clock, read: "Mr. Wanamaker died peacefully at 8 a. m."

Wanamaker was taken ill about two months ago while staying at his summer estate near Jenkinton. He was brought to his home in Philadelphia so as to be nearer medicial attention. Though the malady was diagnosed as a severe cold, his advanced age and its long duration made it serious.

Wanamaker, one of the merchant pioneers of America, was born July 11, 1838, in the county of Philadelphia, a little more than 17 years before its consolidation into the city. His father, John Nelson Wanamaker, was a brick layer and his grandfather was a farmer. Their ancestors came to America at the time of the landing of William Penn.

Wanamaker attended public school until he was 14 years old. Anxious to engage in business he obtained a position in a retail clothing store at $1.50 a week from which he saved $100. This was the foundation of his fortune. Upon the outbreak of the civil war, he sought to enlist in the army but was refused on account of his physical condition.

On April 11, 1861, the day Fort Sumter was cannonaded, he opened a small clothing store. War paralyzed trade but by remarkable business tact, he brought his business through the turbulent times and at the close of the war was a wealthy man. As years advanced he became more prominent and widened his mercantile operations.

Outside of business he engaged in religious and social work. He organized the famous Bethany Sunday school with 27 members and it now numbers more than 3,000.

Wanamaker was the founder of the first penny savings bank. He was active in the Y. M. C. A. during the war. He was decorated with the Legion of Honor by the French government.

He nominated Fairbanks for vice president at the republican convention in 1916 and in 1921 celebrated 60 years of business life.

serted."

"But there must be some one about here," West insisted. "For this was the house I saw from the ridge, and there was a light burning then in one of the windows, and there was a wisp of smoke rising from a chimney."

She stepped boldly forward, and placed her hand on the knob of the door.

"Why," she whispered, excitedly. "It is unlocked; see, I can open it. Perhaps something is wrong here. What shall we do?"

"Knock first; then if there is no response, we can feel our way about inside. My matches are all wet."

She rapped sharply on the wood; waited for some reply, and then called out. Not a word reached them from within. West, his teeth clinched, stepped in through the open door, determined to learn the secret of that mysterious interior. With hands outstretched he felt his way forward, by sense of touch alone assuring himself that he traversed a hall, carpeted, his extended arms barely reaching from wall to wall. He encountered no furniture, and must have advanced some two yards, before his groping disclosed the presence of a closed door on the left. He had located the knob, when the outer door suddenly closed, as though blown shut by a draught of wind, and, at the same instant, his eyes were blinded by a dazzling outburst of light.

This came with such startling, unexpected brilliancy that West staggered back as though struck. For the instant he was positively blind; then he dimly perceived a man standing before him—a man who, little by little, became more clearly defined, recognizable, suddenly exhibiting the features of Jim Hobart, sarcastically grinning into his face.

"You are evidently a cat of nine lives, West," he said sneeringly. "But this ought to be the last of them."

For a moment West lost all control over himself. He was too completely dazed for either words or action; could only stare into that mocking countenance confronting him, endeavoring to sense what had really occurred. He was undoubtedly trapped again, but how had the trick been accomplished? What devilish freak of luck had thus thrown them once more into the merciless hands of this ruffian? He even ventured to turn his head, and glance at the girl. She stood leaning back against the closed door as though on guard, her uncovered hair ruffled, a scornful, defiant look in her eyes, the smile on her lips revealing the gleam of white teeth. In spite of a wonderful resemblance, a mysterious counterfeit in both features and expression, West knew now this was not Natalie Coolidge. He had permitted himself to be tricked again by the jade; the smart of the wound angered him beyond control.

"You are not Miss Coolidge," he insisted hotly. "Then who are you?"

She laughed, evidently enjoying the scene.

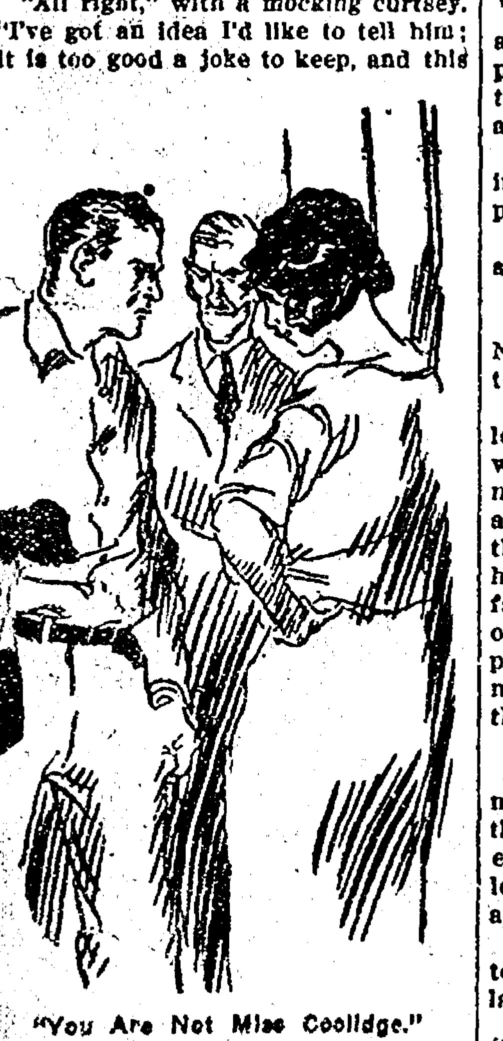
"Oh, so even Captain West has at last penetrated the disguise. No, I am not the lady you mention, if you must know."

"Then who are you?"

She glanced toward Hobart, as though questioning, and the man answered the look gruffly.

"Tell him if you want to, Del," he said, with an oath. "It will never do the guy any good. He's played his last hand in this game; he'll never get away from me again. Spit it out."

"All right," with a mocking curtsey. "I've got an idea I'd like to tell him; it is too good a joke to keep, and this fellow has certainly been an easy mark. Lord, but I could have had you making love to me, if I'd only have said the word—out there on the hills in the dark, hey! You sure are plumb nutty after this Natalie Coolidge. That's the straight goods, isn't it, Mister Captain West?"



"You Are Not Miss Coolidge."

"I care very much for Miss Coolidge, if that is what you mean."

"Sure you do; and you've put up a game fight for her too, my boy. I'd like it in you if I wasn't on the other side. But you see we can't be easy on you just because of that. Sentiment and romance is one thing, while business is another. You and I don't belong in the same worlds—see? You can't rightly blame me because I was born different, can you?"

"Perhaps not; what would you make me believe?"

"I thought I'd put it that way so you'd understand, that's all. There's a difference in people, ain't there. I'm just as good looking as this Natalie Coolidge, ain't I? Sure I am; you can't even tell us apart when we are dressed up alike. I could come in here, and have you make love to me inside of twenty minutes. But we ain't a bit alike, for all that. She's a lady, and I'm a crook—that's the difference. She's been brought up with all the money she wants, while I've had to hustle for every penny since I was a kid. I was brought up a thief, and I don't know anything else. I never did care much, but in this Coolidge matter, I've got just as much right to all that kale as she has—so naturally I'm going after it."

"As much right, you say? Why, who are you?"

She stood up straight, and looked at him, her eyes burning.

"Me!" scornfully, "why I am Della Hobart—'Diamond Del,' they call me."

"Yes, but that is not what you mean; that gives you no such right as you claim. You are Hobart's daughter, then?"

"I didn't say so, Mister Captain West. I told you my moniker, that's all. Jim here brought me up, but he ain't no father to me, and his wife ain't my mother. It took me a while to find that out, but I got the thing straight at last. I saw then just what those two were driving at; first I didn't take no particular interest in the scheme; then I got to thinking until finally I hated that soft, downy thing; d—n her, she'd robbed me, and I had a right to my share even if I had to steal it."

"What soft, downy thing?"

"Natalie Coolidge! Bah, I went out to see her once. Jim took me and we hid in the garden; and when I came back I was raving mad. Lord, why should that little idiot have everything while half the time I was hungry?"

"You mean you envied her?"

"Envied, h—l! Didn't I have a right! Wasn't she my twin sister? Didn't she have it all, and I nothing?"

He gasped for breath at this sudden revelation. Then he laughed, convinced it could not be possible.

"Who told you that?"

"Why, don't you believe it? Has she never said a word about it to you?"

"Certainly not. I am sure she possesses no knowledge of ever having had a sister. Moreover, I do not believe it is true. If you had proof of such relationship, why didn't you go to her, and openly claim your share?"

"Go to her! me? Do you hear that Jim? Isn't he the cute little fixer? Why, of course, she knew it; there was nothing doing on the divide. It's all straight enough, only we couldn't prove it by law; anyhow that is what they told me—so we got at it from another direction."

She seemed so convinced, so earnest in her statement that West in perplexity turned to glance at Hobart.

"Do you make this claim also?" he asked.

"What claim?"

"That this girl is a twin sister to Natalie Coolidge? Why, it is preposterous."

"Is it? D—d if I think so. Now look here, West; I don't know just what the Coolidge girl has been told; maybe she never even heard she had a twin sister. If they ever told her that she had, then they must have told her also that the sister died in infancy. Anyhow, that's how it stands on the records. There were just two people who knew different—do you get me? One of them is dead, but one of them is still alive."

"Which one is dead?"

"Percival Coolidge; he knew too much and got gay; he planned to cop the whole boodle. The fact is he started the whole scheme, soon as he learned who Del was, and planned it all out."

"But if this girl was really entitled to a part of it, why not claim it by law?"

"We talked about that, but the chance didn't look good. Everything showed the second child died; hospital records, doctor's certificate; there wasn't a link in the chain we could break."

"But who was the other witness—the living one?"

"The nurse; she made the exchange of the dead baby for the living one. It was easily done, as the child was really sick."

"But for what object—revenge?"

"She was poor, and yielded to temptation. Percival Coolidge paid her to make the exchange. I have never been able to learn what his original purpose was, but she thinks he believed the stolen child was a boy, and that later, through him, the Coolidge money might be controlled. However, the woman lost her nerve, and disappeared with the infant. She brought it up as her own in the West, where she married again. I am her second husband, and that is how I learned the truth."

"The woman on the yacht?"

"Yes, you saw her. The child was brought up in our life; I figured on this coup for years, and finally when all was ready, we came back East again. I had a plan, but I wasn't quite sure it would work until I could see the two girls together. After that it was like taking candy from a kid. H—l, you are the only one who has even piped off the game."

West looked closely at the man, who was thus coolly boasting of his exploits, and then at the silent girl, whose eyes sullenly gave back their challenge. What did it all mean? Why were they calmly telling him these things? Was it merely the egotism of crime, pride of achievement? or did Hobart hope in some way to thus win his assistance, or at least his silence?

"Why do you tell all this to me, Hobart?" he asked shortly. "You do not expect me to play with you in the game, do you?"

"You!" the fellow laughed coarsely. "We don't care what you do, you young fool. Del started this talking, and I let her go on. Then, when she stopped, I thought you might as well learn the rest of it. The fact is, West, we're fixed now so whatever you know won't hurt us any. We have as good as got the swag; and, to make it absolutely safe, we've got both you and the girl. I'll say this for you, old man, you've sure put up a game fight. I don't know how the h—l you ever got out of that yacht alive, or ever happened to drift in here. It was nothing but bull luck that gave us a glimpse of you tossing round on that raft—but after that it was dead easy. Del here is some actorine."

"You say you've got the swag?"

"All but in our hands; nobody can get it away from us. The court order was issued today; the entire estate placed, in accordance with the terms of the will, in the possession of Natalie Coolidge. Once the proper receipt is signed, all moneys can be checked out by her. That about settles it, doesn't it? Tomorrow Del and I will go down to the city, and turn the trick, and after that there is nothing left but the get-away."

It was a cold-blooded proposition, but neither face exhibited any regret; both were intoxicated by success; untroubled by any scruples of conscience. West felt the utter uselessness of an attempt to appeal to either.

"Where is Natalie Coolidge?" he asked, his own determination hardening. "What do you propose doing with her?"

Hobart's teeth exhibited themselves in a sarcastic grin.

"That is our business, but you can bet she'll not interfere."

"And a similar answer, I presume, will apply also to my case?"

"It will. Don't make the mistake, West, of believing we are d—n fools. I don't know just why I've blowed all this to you, but it ain't going to help you any, you can be sure of that. In fact our knowing how the thing was worked is liable to make things a blame sight harder in your case. We won't do no more talking; so go on in through that door."

The fellow's demeanor had entirely changed; he was no longer pretending to geniality, and his words were almost brutal. Apparently, all at once, it had dawned sharply upon him that they had made a mistake—had boasted far too freely. Any slip now, after what had been said, would wreck the ship. West faced him watchfully, fully aware of the desperate situation, instinctively feeling that this might be his last chance.

"In there, you say?" indicating the closed door.

"Yes; move!"

He did; with one swift leap forward, the whole impetus of his body behind the blow, West drove his fist straight into the face confronting him. The fellow reeled, clutched feebly at the smooth wall for support, dropped helplessly forward, and fell headlong, with face hidden in outstretched arms. The assailant sprang back, and turned, in a mad determination to crash his way out through the locked door behind, but as suddenly stopped startled by the vision of a leveled revolver pointed at his head.

"Not a move," the girl said icily. "Take one step, and I'll kill you."

Hobart lifted his head groggily, and pushed himself half-way up on his knees.

"Don't shoot, unless he makes you, Del," he ordered grimly. "We don't want that kind of row here." He dragged himself painfully to the side door, and pressed it open.

"Hey you!" he cried. "Come on out here. Now then, rough-house this guy!"

CHAPTER XVII

McAdams Blows In.

It was a real fight; they all knew that when it was finished. But it was three to one, with Hobart blocking the only open door, and egging them on, and the excited girl, backed into a corner out of the way, the revolver still gripped in her hand, ready for any emergency. The narrowness of the hall alone afforded West a chance, as the walls protected him, and compelled direct attack from the front. Yet this advantage only served to delay the ending. He recognized two of the fellows—"Red" Hogan and Mark—while the third man was a wiry little barroom scrapper, who smashed fiercely in through his guard, and finally got a grip on his throat which could not be wrenched loose. The others pounded him unmercifully, driving his head back against the wall. Hogan smashed him twice, crashing through his weak attempt at defense, and with the second vicious drive, West went down for the count, lying motionless on the floor, scarcely conscious that he was still living.

"It's a knockout all right," Hogan declared. "That guy is good for an hour in dreamland. What's the dope?"

"We got' to keep him here, that's all; and there's goin' to be no get-away this time!"

"Do you want him croaked?"

"No, I don't—not now. What the h—l's the use? It would only make things harder. We're ready to make our get-away, ain't we? After tomorrow all h—l can't get onto our trail. This guy's life wouldn't help us none, so far as I can see."

"Getting squeamish, ain't you?"

"No, I'm not. I've got as much reason to hate the fellow as you have, 'Red.' He certainly swiped me one. Before we had the swag copped, I was willing enough to put him out of the running. That was business. You sure did a fine job then, d—n you; now I don't think it is your time to howl. Listen here, will you? From all I learn, this bird amounts to something; he ain't just a dago to be bumped off, and nobody care what's become of him. This guy has got friends. It won't help us any to be hunted after for murder on top of this other job. If we cop the kale, that's all we're after. Is that right, Del?"

The girl seemed to come forward and face them defiantly.

"Sure it's right. I never was for the strong-arm stuff, Hogan. This is my graft, anyhow, and not one of you stiffs gets a penny of it unless I split with you. This fellow isn't going to be slugged—that's flat. It is only because he's fell in love with the Coolidge girl that he is here, and once we've skipped out, I don't wish the guy any bad luck."

"You ought to have caught him yourself, Del," some one said. "The bird never would have known the difference."

She laughed, quickly restored to good humor.

"You're about right there, Dave," she answered. "That was another mistake; the only chance I ever had of marrying in high social circles. But h—l, I'll be a lady tomorrow, so let's let the poor devil go. Wrap him up, and lay him away out in the garage. The walls are two-foot solid stone; he'll stay buried there, all right."

Hogan growled in derision, yet it was evident that she and Hobart would have their way. Some one brought a rope, which was deftly wound about him, West continuing to feign unconsciousness. He secretly hoped this condition might result in some carelessness on their part, in either speech or action. Anyway it would undoubtedly save him from further brutal treatment. He had no reason to suspect that his ruse was questioned. The fellows spoke freely while making him secure, but he gained very little information from their conversation—not a hint as to where Natalie was confined, or how long it was proposed to hold them prisoners. Then "Red" and Dave lugged his limp body through several rooms, out upon a back porch, finally dragging him down the steps and along a cement driveway, letting him lie there a moment in the dark, while one of them unlocked the door. The next instant he was carelessly thrown inside, and the door forced back into place. He could hear Hogan swear outside, and then the sound of both men's feet on the drive as they departed.

With a struggle West managed to sit up, but could scarcely attempt more, as his arms were bound closely to his sides. The darkness about him was intense, and, with the disappearance of the two men up the steps, all outside sounds had ceased. He knew he had been flung into the garage and was resting there on the hard cement floor. He could neither feel nor see any machine, nor was there probably the slightest prospect of his getting out unaided.

What was that? He listened, for an instant doubtful if he had really heard anything. Then he actually heard a sound. He doubted no longer, yet made no effort to move, even holding his breath in suspense. There was movement of some kind back there—a cautious movement; seemingly the slow advance of something across the floor, a dog perhaps. West's heart throbbed with apprehension; suppose it was a dog, he had no means of protection from the brute. Cold sweat tingled on his flesh; there was nothing he could do, no place where he could go. The thing was moving nearer; yet surely it could not be a dog; no dog would ever creep like that. He could bear the strain no longer; it was beyond endurance.

"What's moving back there?" he asked in a hoarse whisper.

There was a moment of utter silence; then, a man's voice said in low, cautious tone.

"The fellow ain't dead, Mac; anyhow he seems able to talk yet."

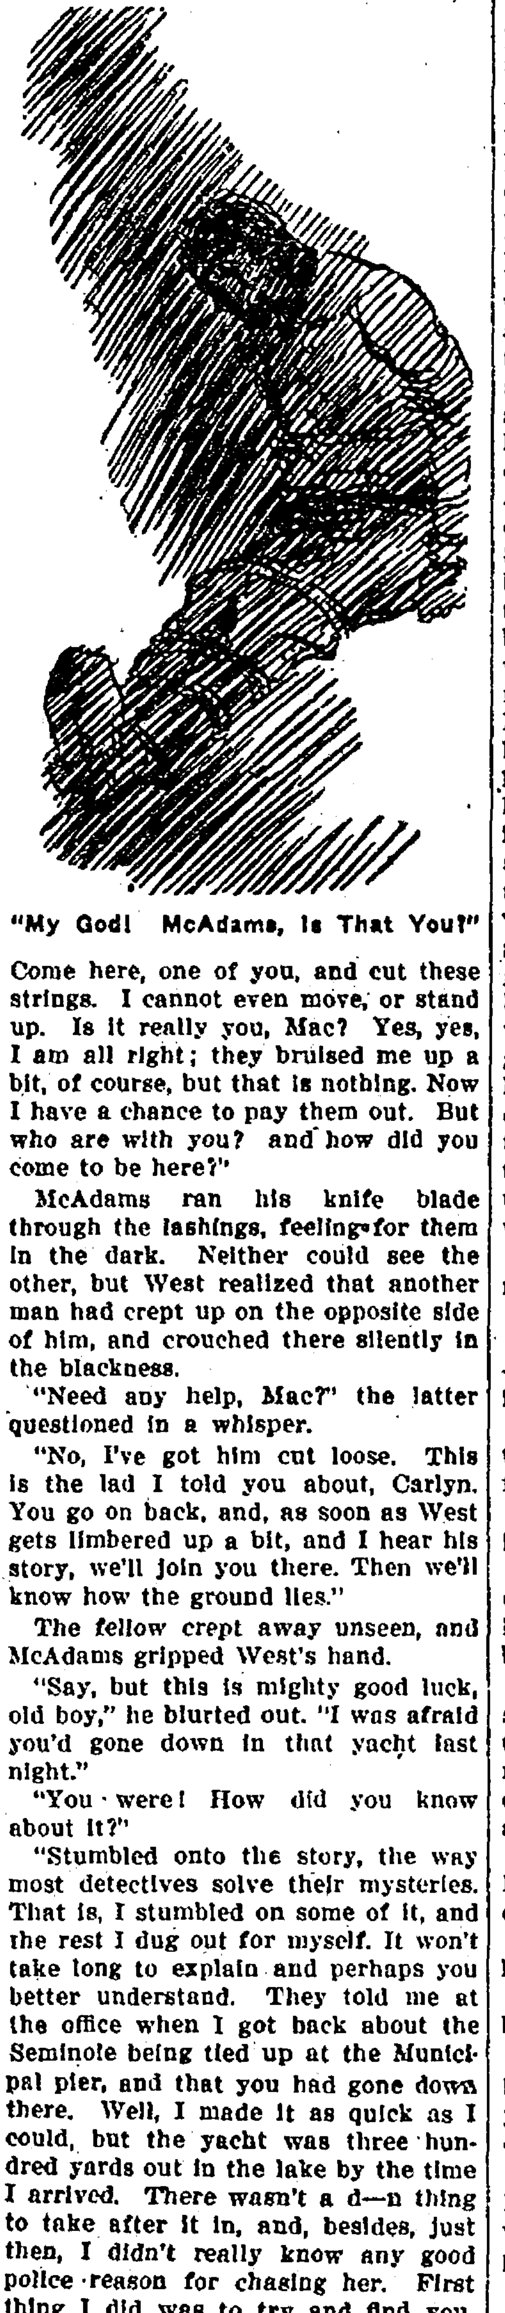
"All right, we'll find out what he's got to say—go on along."

West sat up, his heart bounding with sudden remembrance.

"My G—d! McAdams, is that you?"

"You have the name—who's speaking?"

"Matt West. Good G—d, but this is like a miracle. I'd played my last card. Come here, one of you, and cut these strings. I cannot even move, or stand up. Is it really you, Mac? Yes, yes, I am all right; they bruised me up a bit, of course, but that is nothing. Now I have a chance to pay them out. But who are with you? and how did you come to be here?"



"My God! McAdams, Is That You!"

McAdams ran his knife blade through the lashings, feeling for them in the dark. Neither could see the other, but West realized that another man had crept up on the opposite side of him, and crouched there silently in the blackness.

"Need any help, Mac?" the latter questioned in a whisper.

"No, I've got him cut loose. This is the lad I told you about, Carlyn. You go on back, and, as soon as West gets limbered up a bit, and I hear his story, we'll join you there. Then we'll know how the ground lies."

The fellow crept away unseen, and McAdams gripped West's hand.

"Say, but this is mighty good luck, old boy," he blurted out. "I was afraid you'd gone down in that yacht last night."

"You were! How did you know about it?"

"Stumbled onto the story, the way most detectives solve their mysteries. That is, I stumbled on some of it, and the rest I dug out for myself. It won't take long to explain and perhaps you better understand. They told me at the office when I got back about the Seminole being tied up at the Municipal pier, and that you had gone down there. Well, I made it as quick as I could, but the yacht was three hundred yards out in the lake by the time I arrived. There wasn't a d—n thing to take after it in, and, besides, just then, I didn't really know any good police reason for chasing her. First thing I did was to try and find you, so we could get our heads together. But you wasn't there, and so I naturally jumped to the conclusion you must have got aboard someway. Say, I combed that pier, believe me, West, and finally I ran across a kid who put me wise. He saw you go across the deck, and into the cabin with two other guys. They came out again, but you didn't. I pumped him until I got a pretty good description of both those fellows, and I decided one of them must be 'Red' Hogan, about the toughest gunman in Chicago.

"It was Hogan."

"I made sure of that afterward. Then I got busy. If you was in the hands of that guy, and his gang, the chances was dead against you. But there wasn't a darn thing I could do, except to hunt up Hobart, wire every town along the North shore to keep an eye out for the yacht, and pick up a thread or two around town. I got a bit, at that, to wise me up. We found Hobart hid away in a cheap hotel out on Broadway, and put a trailer on him. The girl had disappeared; she'd been to a bank, and then to the Coolidge lawyer and signed some papers; after that we lost all trace of her for awhile. Your man Sexton, out at Fairlawn, reported that she hadn't returned there. Then I got desperate and decided I'd blow the whole thing to the Coolidge lawyer, and get him to take a hand. I was afraid they were all ready for the get-away—see? I couldn't round 'em up alone; besides I'm a Chicago police officer, and have to keep more or less on my own beat."

"And you told the lawyer?"

"Everything I knew, and some I guessed at. I thought the old guy would throw a fit, but he didn't. He came through game after the first shock. But say, that dame had sold him out all right. He never had an inkling anything was wrong; no more did the banks. We went over and talked to the president of one of them —a smooth guy with white mutton chops—and the girl had signed up the preliminary papers already, and, tomorrow the whole boodle was going to drop softly into her lap. Say, I felt better when I learned they hadn't copped the swag yet. But just the same I needed help."

"And you got it?"

"Sure; those two duffers coughed up money in a stream. Called in a detective agency, and gave me three operatives to work under me. Got the chief on the wire, and made him give me a free hand. Then I had a cinch."

CHAPTER XVIII

A Bridge of Love.

He paused, listening, but all remained quiet without, and he resumed his story.

"There is not much else to it, West. A little after one o'clock the shadow phoned in from the Union depot that Hobart had just purchased two tickets for Patacne. We hustled over, but were too late to catch that train, but learned the girl had accompanied him on the trip. We caught another rattler two hours later, and got off at Patacne, which is about three miles west of here. It is not much of a job to gather up gossip in a small burg, and, inside of ten minutes, I had extracted all I needed from the station agent. It seems this outfit was the summer sensation out here. We hoofed it for reasons of our own, and came around by way of the lake shore, aiming to keep out of sight until after dark. That is how we discovered that Seminole boat hauled up on the beach, but with no yacht in sight. One of the fellows with me said Hogan did a boat-sinking job before and got away with it, and that is how I figured that maybe you was at the bottom of Lake Michigan—see? Well, we crept up here through the woods, but nothing happened. Didn't look as if the place had a soul within a hundred miles of it—no smoke, no light; not a d—n sound. We laid out and waited, not sure what we were up against. Finally we jimmied open the back door of this garage, just to find out whether those guys had a car out here, or not. They had, but we no more than located it when those two fellows came dragging you out of the back door of the house, and flung you in here like a bag of old linen. We lay still, and let them go back, but we hadn't any notion it was really you; so we crawled up to find out. That's the story. Now what do you think we better do?"

West moved his arms in an effort to restore circulation.

"How many with you?"

"Four altogether—hard boiled, too —five with you. Is there any fight left in you, old man?"

"I'll say there is; I'd certainly like to get in one clip at 'Red' before the fracas is over."

"That sounds vicious. Now, who is inside?"

"I saw five, and there may be others. If the crew of the Seminole are here also, that would make quite a bunch."

"I don't think they are, Captain. The station agent said several men bought tickets to Chicago early this afternoon. It is the real gang we've got cornered. Do you know just who they are?"

"Those I saw were Hobart, 'Red' Hogan, the girl, a big fellow they called Mark who was on the yacht—"

"Mark Sennett; he's Hogan's sidekick, and tough as they make 'em."

"And a wiry little black-haired devil by the name of Dave."

"H—l, is he in this too? That must be 'Dago Dave.' That guy would cut your throat for fifty dollars. Any others?"

"Those were all I saw. No doubt Hobart's wife is in the house somewhere, guarding Natalie Coolidge probably."

"Six altogether, counting the women."

"Yes, and you better count them, for they will fight like tigers. The girl held me up at the point of a gun."

"We've got to get the drop first, that's all. They're yellow, the whole outfit is yellow. Shootin' in the back is their style. Now, you know the lay inside the house; what is our best chance?"

West studied over the situation, his eyes staring into the darkness, and McAdams waited.

"Well, Mac," he said finally. "This is a new job for me, but I'd put a man out in front, and then take the others in through the back door. We'd have to rush it, of course. I know the front door is locked, and it couldn't be broken down quickly. I listened when those fellows went back, and I heard no click, as though they had locked the door behind them. They don't know anybody has been after them except me, and they believe I am done for. They feel so safe out here, they are a bit careless. I'll wager something we can walk straight in on the outfit; how does that strike you?"

"As the only feasible plan. Let's crawl out of here."

The arrangements were quickly perfected; a short, whispered conference in the dark; then one man crept silently away through the night toward the front of the house. McAdams added a few more words of instruction to the others, and, with West slightly in advance, revolvers drawn and ready, the five stole forward in the direction of the rear porch. The windows were either heavily curtained, or covered by outside shades, for no gleam of light was anywhere visible. West mounted the back steps silently, with McAdams close at his heels. A second later the entire bunch of officers were grouped before the door, poised breathless, listening for any sound from within. Nothing broke the impressive silence, and McAdams' hand closed over the knob, which he turned slowly. The door opened quietly into a darkened interior. For an instant he bent forward, peering through the narrow crack, endeavoring to learn what lay hidden beyond, the others quivering behind him. There was scarcely the sound of a breath audible. ANDREW JACOBSON

Friends in Belmond were shocked and grieved Saturday morning when they heard of the sudden death of Andrew Jacobson. Mr. Jacobson had been about the streets the day before apparantly in his usual good health, busy about the many tasks he daily looked after. He had been for some time suffering from a cold and indisposed at times, but his sudden demise was entirely unlooked for.

Mr. Jacobson was about 56 years and six months of age at his death, being born May 19, 1866 in Nerstand Norway. In 1885 he came to America, locating first in Story county and shortly after moving to Wright county where he resided until his death. In 1891 he was united in marriage to Mrs. Anna Johnson, and to this union five children were born, two of whom are dead, and the three living, Mrs. Ole Sharpe. He leaves three stepchildren, 12 grandchildren, one great grandchild and other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the house at 1:30 and at the Trinity church at 2:00, Rev. J. M. Jensen in charge, and interment was made in the Belmond cemetery. Mr. Jacobson was a splendid character and a fine citizen. Always cheerful, always jolly, he will be greatly missed.

VOL. 4 BELMOND, IOWA, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1922 NO. 6

A HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR TO ALL!

State Hospital Given $2,250,000

State Hospital Given Huge Sum By Rockefeller Foundation If State Gives Rest.

MEANS $450,000 EACH YEAR

Iowa City, Ia., Dec. 27—Special—President W. A. Jessup announced this morning that the College of Medicine has been proffered the largest gift ever made to a tax-supported institution in the United States, namely, $2,250,000 to assist in completing the building and equiping of the new hospital and teaching laboratories. These will be erected on the beautiful site purchased at the time the Children's and the Psychopathic hospital units were built. The site is on the west bluff of the Iowa river facing Old Capitol.

This gift comes from the General Education Board and the Rockefeller Foundation jointly, at the request of the Iowa State Board of Education and Governor Kendall.

The Iowa State Board of Education and Governor Kendall brought this matter to the attention of these foundations which, of late, have been appropriating large sums of money for the advancement of medical education public health service, and enlarged hospital facilities thruout the world. Previous gifts have been made chiefly to independent institutions, but now and then to states.

In spite of the fact that more than twenty thousand state patients, mostly children, under the provisions of the Perkins Law, have been cared for and helped at the University Hospital during the last few years present facilities had come to be wholly inadequate and the Board had realized that a new and modern plant has become a necessity.

Dr. Abraham Flexner of the General Education Board and Dr. George E. Vincent of thee Rockefeller Foundation, after acquainting themselves with the needs of the situation by Personal visits to Iowa City, informed President Jessup that they would recommend to their Boards favorable action on the request of the State Board of Education to assist in completing the plant. The estimated cost of the completed job is $4,500,000 and agreeable to these recommendations the two foundations joined in proffering a gift of $2,250,000, providing the state of Iowa shall, over a period of five years, agree to complete the plant. This will require an appropriation of $450,000 a year for the next five years.

The moment the General Assembly accepts the plan the University can begin the work, as the foundation's gift will be instantly available.

Up to this time the Board of Education had been at a loss to know how to meet the hospital needs and at the same time meet the ever increasing demands of instruction in the University and other educational institutions. This gift would seem to solve their problem, for the medical service can go forward at once with only a modest annual appropriation.

COMMUNITY WELFARE CLUB MEETING

The Community Welfare club meets this week Friday afternoon at the library. The program is about Iowa writers and Mrs. J. J. Sharon is the leader.

Mrs. J. S. White is chairman of the serving committee.

The president would like to see all the members at this meeting, the last in 1922. Come and bring some suggestion regarding work the club can do the coming year for the betterment of the community.

BELMOND GIRL HONORED

The following letter speaks for itself, and is pleasing news to Miss Jenison's many friends:

December 20, 1922

My Dear Mr. and Mrs. Jenison:

I am sending this message to congratulate you upon the honor that has come to Virgie in having been chosen for the 1922 Freshman Commission of the Coe Young Women's Christian Association.

It is the greatest honor that can come to a college girl in her freshman year and I am happy to tell you how pleased I am with her work and the spirit she has shown in her college life and work.

Most cordially yours,
Maria Leonard
Dean of women, Coe College

GIVES AWAY CHICKENS

The Hampton pepole and merchants had a big time and a lot of fun Saturday, when a large number of chickens were given away to the crowds The fowls were let loose from the top of one of the business buildings, and as they flew down catchers were keepers the birds becoming their property for a Christmas dinner. Each bird had a slip attached to one leg bearing the name of one of the merchants and this slip was good for another Christmas gift if presented to the merchant. The Hampton merchants put on a number of special bargains that day, and this, together with the free chickens and some additional entertainment provided, brought packed crowds and a big business to the stores.

Saturday morning at 10 the class meets at the church, Sunday morning Sunday school and Bible classes at the usual hour. Sunday afternoon at 2:30 the lay people conduct a service at the church in the Norwegian language. Sunday evening the Young Peoples' League will have charge of the song service. We want to see a full house at all our services. New Years' Day services at 11.

ST. OLAF

Thursday afternoon the South Ladies Aid meets at the home of Mrs. O. J. Lewis. Wednesday afternoon Jan 3 the North Ladies Aid meets at the home of Mrs. Henry Lein. On Wednesday forenoon Jan. 3 the annual business meeting of the church will be held. Please note this and be present. Next Sunday forenoon at 11 English services will be conducted and we would like to see a big attendance. Think of the last day in the year. Why not spend it or a part of it in the house of God?

PAY DEBTS FROM BOOZE

The little town of Milford Kentucky about the same size as Belmond, has managed to free itself from debt thru booze. Advocates of booze in order to derive the taxes are dealt a hard blow by the reverse English used on their theory by the officials of Milford. Mayor Scott, who drops hs title when occasion arises to assume that of J. P. has the welfare of Milford at heart. When a violator of the 18th amendment is brought before him he promtly gives them a good stiff fine and thereby enriches the city treasury. In the past year, in this town of 2000 people, he has imposed fines totalling $88,860 on liquor violators $58,165 of which has been collected exclusive of costs. Money from this source has left the town free of debt. Belmond might copy the example, for while moonshine is made in Kentucky a lot of it is used in Belmond. Why not cut down the taxes?

Ministers Endorse Movement Started To Clean Up Town

Every lover of law, order and liberty rejoices over the good work which has been done by our new prosecuting attorney and squire Skovlin We are glad to know that there are a few men yet who realize the fact that their oath of office is more than a few words and an affirmation.

If the reports which have been going the rounds the past year or more are half true, Belmond is a good place for the county attorney to begin his work. They must be true in part or one young man would not now be minus a foot and the drunks would not have been so frequently seen on our streets.

We are glad that the officers are making the fines more than a mere joke. Perhaps after awhile some people will learn that the laws are for the good of the people and not merely to be treated with contempt.

We commend our officers for what they have already accomplished and promise them our hearty support. Let the good work go on until every bootlegger and every patron of bootleggers gets his just reward.

S. U Leinbach.

All good citizens are pleased that an effort is being made to clean-up our town morally. Uncle Sam says "Give no quarter to the bootlegger." We ought to back all officers trying to enforce the law against liquor—making, selling, and drinking. The man who drinks is guilty of being a menace to society. Law evasion leads to lawlessness, and no one ought to be shielded who defies the law. Why not fight for a clean town so that womanhood and girlhood would be safe from moral danger? A good beginning has been made—let us all boost for a clean New Year and make lawbreakers as scarce as chickens after a ministers' convention.

W. A. Wilkinson

The expression 100 Per Cent Americanism was the watchword during the war. And since the war too, it has been emphasized very much. What is Americanism? Is it a catch expression or does it mean something? Taking the word at its face value, it must mean matters pertaining to America or whatever is distinctly American. Whatever then is for the good of America is Americanism. The word Americanism is closely related to Patriotism. Possibly we might say that Patriotism is the cause, Americanism the effect. Patriotism is love of country. Since we live in America, then Patriotism must be love of and for America. It is only reasonable to suppose then that American Patriotism will breed and foster Americanism. In other words, the person who lays claim to American patriotism will be interested in, accentuate, foster and further everything that will be for the best interest of America. Do we believe in American law and American institutions? If so, we are interested as American citizens in the up-keep of American laws and institutions. We have as American law the 18th Amendment. Who made that law? Did not the people, who decide what laws are to be, make that law also? And is not the law a good one? Let the home say its word. Let the Church say it is not. Let the institutions of correction before filled to overflowing, say that it is not a good law. Are not people and people's children at large the better for such a law? Isn't crime lessened because the demon, Rum, has been outlawed and all kindred institutions with it? Is it not significant that business men will tell you, too, that business has done considerably better since the old time brewery and saloon have been put out of business?

And yet we are told that we have more intemperance now, than when we had the saloon. What a travesty upon the 100 Per Cent Americanism and Patriotism of our people in this much famed America. But who believe this? Nobody but the one who is directly interested in the illegal manufacture and sale of the "stuff," and the ones who are the patrons of the institution, which operates under cover. No 100 Per Cent Patriot will defend such lawless act nor be a partner thereto.

Are we in Belmond 100 Per Cent American? Let your attitude to the booze matter be the answer. Let Belmond's five churches and home and public school answer. How in the name of common sense would a still or more be possible if all the citizens of Belmond were 100 Per Cent American patriots fostering and furthering 100 Per Cent Americanism? The verdict is to be not what has been, but what is to be hereafter. Let us mean what we claim or be mum, because it has been true and is true now that a stream is no better than its fountain. Let us have law enforcement in Belmond, and help those who are doing it.

Rev. J. M. Jensen.

HIGH CLASS STOCK PAYS

Just as another illustration of what the farmers can do, and how much more money he can make with good stock, the Independent gives a few facts regarding the success of Guy Baker. Mr. Baker during the month of November, milked nine Holstein cows. These nine cows brought him in a total for the month of $178.-81 for cream. Averaged $16.50 apiece clear, besides their feed. Two of them gave 51 pounds apiece. of butterfat in the month, and he received an average of 54 cents a pound for the butter fat. The average test of his cows was 3,8 of milk This is not so extra high, but the fact that his cows gave 15 to 20 quarts at a milking is mighty good. The feed for the cows during the month averaged $9.25 apiece. He figures that his nine high grade cows made him over $95 for the month and he has the skim-milk and the calves besides. The Independent will be glad to have figures and facts from other farmers on what they are getting from their cows.

COURT HOUSE NOTES

Monday was hootch day in the district court and when all were arraigned J. A. Rogers was able to point with satisfaction to the tangible results of his last term of court as county attorney. There facing Judge Wright sat five liquor violators four men and one woman. In about ten minutes the judge had cleaned the slate and $1,600 was added to the school fund, which with the Groh fine of $800 collected a few days previously made the grand total of $2,400 with $1400 standing against three men now serving time in the county jail. The first man up was Earl Ewing of Clarion. He drew sixty days in the county jail and a fine of $300. If the fine is not paid an additional ninety days is to be added to the jail sentence. His partner, Ed Holmes was treated in the same manner. Both were convicted of bootlegging last week.

Leo Prince of Belmond came next and the judge says: "$800 and costs or 240 days in the county jail." Prince chose the latter method of liquidation. Another Belmond man was Otto Neuhrng who fared the same fate. Then came his mother Mrs. Wm Neuhring, mother of ten children. The audience was silent. The judge hesitated a few minutes and seemed distressed to learn the relationship of the two defendants, both of whom had plead guilty to the charge of bootlegging. The defendant was born in Germany fifty-seven years ago but had been a resident of these good United States for thirty-two years After a brief conference with County Attorney Rogers the court came to the conclusion that the mother was equally guilty with the son and passed sentence accordingly. Both fines were paid as above stated. The Neuhrings are well to do owning farm lands worth approximately $100000 and why they should be engaged in such a despised business is hard to understand. A son in Hancock manufactured the moonshine. Son No 2 would visit his brother and bring home a consignment which he divided with the mother who resided on a separate farm. The stuff retailed at $1.75 per pint. Their fines and costs amounted to nearly $1800. At the above price it would be necessary to peddle over one thousand pints to break even with the assessments imposed. It is the general opinion that both Attorney Rogers and Judge Wright did a good job in cleaning up the liquor violators.

Julius Puls and Albert Zeithler who plead guilty to an attempt to burn the Frank Fisher home in Eagle Grove received their sentences Thursday the former three years at Fort Madison and the latter three years at Anamosa. In passing sentence Judge Wright regretted the fact that the law was not more drastic for his opinion ten years was none to severe a penalty for such a henious crime. The two main reasons for punishing criminals is, first for the protection of society and to keep others from committing crime; second to prevent criminals from committing a second offense and thereby effecting a reformation. The defendants were accompanied to the state institutions by Deputy Denger and Supervisor Kitley of Eagle Grove, who had a desire to visit the penitentiaries. While at Fort Madison he saw Olander, the Fort Dodge murderer, who is to hang in a few weeks.

John Groh, who plead guilty to the charge of making hootch was fined $800 by Judge Wright which with the costs made the total amount $909.45. The same was paid by the defendant's father. If the court was permitted to impose a jail sentence of not less than a year this popular pastime would go out of fashion in a very short while.

Judge Wright has ordered Sheriff Lang to destory all moonshine whiskey which he had captured from bootleggers during the past few months. The vessels containing the liquor consist of six jugs, seven fruit jars ten pint and quart bottles and a large stone jar, totaling several gallons in all. The order also included the wash boiler still. Monitor.

Two More Go Before Justice Of The Peace And Get Limit In Fines.

ONE IS ARRESTED TWICE

On information filed by Guy Bates James Kenefick was arrested last Wednesday, on the charge of allowing minors to play in his place of business. Marshal Herb Harberts served the papers, issued by Mayor Morse. The town had an array of eight witnesses to prove the charge, who, however, were unnecessary as Kenefick admitted the violation, entering a plea of guilty and being assesed a fine of $10 and costs, amounting in all to about $21. Bates swore that his son, a minor, had played pool in Kenefick's hall.

Guy Bates was arrested the second time, Thursday, on information filed by James Kenefick before Mayor Morse, charging him with disorderly conduct. The case was tried before the mayor, with an interested audience present, and after much argument and oratory, the mayor gave Bates a fine of five dollars and costs.

The cases of Bob Coulson and Fred Lynch, to be tried Saturday next, were settled Tuesday night when the two appeared before Justice Skovlin and entered pleas of guilty. In consideration of the plea, they were given the limit in fines, $25, and costs, instead of a jail sentence as was given those who plead not guilty last week.

SHOE SALESMAN NO JOB FOR BALD HEADED MAN

Is a bald head an advantage or a disadvantage? There are ardent champions for both sides of the question, but one man in Centerville is convinced that there are times at least when a bald head is a decided disadvantage. The man is a clerk in a prominent shoe store in that city and he belongs to the super-bald. A few days ago he was fitting a pair of shoes on a rather near-sighted woman from Lancaster, who was not paying any particular attention to the operation but was looking about here and there over the store. Happening to glance in the direction of the clerk, she mistook his bald head for her bare knee and suddenly grabbing her skirt she promptly covered what she supposed was the exposed part of her anatomy. Timely assistance on the part of fellow clerks saved the bald one from death by suffocation.—Advertiser, (Fayette, Mo.)

LEINBACH-MCGOWAN

Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock December 27, occured the marriage of Miss Sara Beatrice Leinbach, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. S. U. Leinbach of Belmond, to Mr. Orr Beaumont McGowan, of West Union, Rev. Leinbach performing the ceremony in the presence of some thirty-two relatives and friends.

Following the ceremony, a sumptuous wedding supper was served, and the happy couple took the evening Rock Island for Cedar Rapids and other points for a short honeymoon trip before proceeding to West Union, where they will make their future home, and where they will be at home to their friends after Jan. 10th.

The bride is well known to Belmond people, where she has attended school and resided for a number of years. She has made a host of good friends here who unite in wishing her the best of happiness in her new life.

Mr. McGowan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. McGowan of Achevden. Iowa. and is employed in a bank at West Union.

The Independent takes pleasure in joining with the many friends of this couple in extending best wishes for a long and prosperous life.

The less a man is influenced by his past the more he can influence his future.

CLIPPINGS

There have been a few cases of diphtheria reported in this community and at other points in the county during the past ten days. The cases are said to be of a very mild form, and it is evident that it is not the old type of diphtheria, in most of the cases at least. Physicians state that prompt precautions should be taken when any throat trouble appears so that the spread of the disease can be confined to the list which is now under quarantine.—Hampton Chronicle.

Congressman Sweet will have the naming of the next postmaster here, with the local help of the republican leadership, and it is very likely that a nomination will be presented to the senate at the national capital either immediately before or after the first of the year.—News.

Paul Pritchard and family were in a serious auto accident at Tulsa, Oklahoma recently. Just how it happened Paul did not tell in writing his parents, but he did say that he had one finger broken and one shoulder [illegible]. His wife suffered the fracture of three ribs, and one leg was seriously hurt. She had been thrown about 30 feet and her head badly cut. The baby was thrown out but was picked up in the street unhurt.—Garner Signal.

Times.—The Eagle Grove Rotary Club is having the lots west of the Porter Garage cleared off prepartory to flooding them for a skating rink for this winter. All of the corner of Iowa Avenue will be used.

The skating rink will be free to everyone. The use of the ground has been donated by the owners and the city will furnish the water to flood it free of charge. It will be lighted by the Northern Iowa Gas & Electric company. The rink will be under the supervision of the Rotary club and a man will be in charge of the pond day and night while it is being used.

Dr. H. E. Meyer who had his Cadillac coupe stolen at Mason City a few months ago, has never been able to secure any trace of his car. Neither has the insurance company which carried the insurance on the car or any clue to the party or parties who stole it. It will be remembered that the car was stolen while standing alongside of the Hanford hotel at Mason City.

The insurance company, having been unable to locate the car within the specified time, has notified Dr. Meyer that it will pay the face value of his automobile theft policy, $1250.—Hampton Chronicle.

At last the Oaks Hotel has disappeared. The work of taking it to pieces has been in progress for nearly two months. This hotel was built in 1876, and at that time was called the Park House, so we are informed by old residents here. It is certainly a building with a history.—Clear Lake Reporter.

Fire visited Forest City's business district Tuesday mornng and completely destroyed the three frame buildings on the west side of the street, and south of the alley at the Oddfellow building and where the old Independent office was for years The buildings were occupied by the Cross barber shop, the Ford millinery store, and Moen's variety store. The fire originated in the center of the three buildings, which was the millinery store and was well under way when discovered. It was first seen by Walter Olsen from the rear of the Nelson hotel, and he immediately turned in the alarm.—Summit.

GOODELL NEWS

Last Wednesday evening Mrs. T. R. Burgess invited a number of young people and older ones to her home when she gave a shower for Miss Thelma Carpenter. Miss Carpenter was the recipient of many valuable and useful articles.

Mrs. Fay Boller has been visiting in Gilman, the past week.

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Trumbell is seriously sick at this time. Mrs. James Trumbell of Mason City is staying at the home of her son Harry during the sickness of the child.

Mr. Wesenberg of Cedar Rapids visited a few days last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Wesenberg.

Thursday morning the five Goodell young people that are attending Coe College came home for the Christmas vacation.

Miss Ethel McNutt of Fort Dodge is home for Christmas.

Saturday Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Bachman and Mrs. Lewis Reimer were in Mason City shopping.

Author Lowenberg is home from the Iowa State College for the holidays.

Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Kieninberger came up from Garwin, and moved into Mrs. Mary McNutt's house. The work of hauling gravel has closed up for this winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Tony Boller also returned to Goodell from Garwin last Thursday.

The grade school program given in the U. B. church last Thursday was well attended. The children indeed, did fine. The exercises show much carefull training on the part of Misses Johnson, Sandberg and Butts.

L. G. Avery and John Ellsworth were in Garner on Saurday.

A. C. Carpenter was in Garner Saturday on business.

Miss Ina Ahrenkiel attended the Mayland-Hughes wedding at Garner on Saturday at four o'clock.

H. R. Allaben is spending the holidays with his parents.

Mayland-Hughes

The marriage of Miss Dulcie Hughes, Garner, to Mr. A. J. Monroe Mayland of Minneapolis.

The wedding was at the bride's home. Only the parents of Miss Hughes and Mayland, and his sister, Mrs. Church of Clear Lake, Miss Ahrenkiel and Mrs. H. T. Miller of Goodell and Ethel and Edward Hughes were present at the ceremony.

Mr. Mayland is a young business man, in the employment of the International Harvester Company.

Miss Hughes has been one of the successful teachers of Hancock county. At present she is teaching in the school of Garner. Following the dinner they left for Klemme where they took the train, going south for a short wedding trip.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. T. Miller of Goodell.

We wish them a long and happy and useful life.

The cantata given at the U. B. church on Christmas was attended by a very large crowd. More than 300 were present to listen and to enjoy the splendid program. Those that directed the training and those that took part are to be commended for the excellent program.

On New Year's day at 12:30 will be the New Year's dinner in the basement of the church. Everybody is invited. Bring your dinner and enjoy a social time. There will be a program.

The first Sunday of the New Year will be Communion Sunday.

IOWA PRESS ASSOCIATION

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

An old saying a trite greeting, but none the less sincere and true. It means a lot, this little greeting; and when a fellowman says it to you, and smiles, you cheer up, and smile back at him, and say "the same to you!" And you mean it too, just as he does. You feel kindly toward him, toward all the world; you want him to have good things in store to be prosperous and successful; you want him to have "A Happy New Year."

The old year now drawing to a close hasn't been such a bad one at that. It brought the beginning of better times, of better markets and better prices. We have had peace and plenty; we have gained in knowledge; our civilization has advanced a step nearer the goal. If 1923 fulfills the prospects as seen today, it will be for all a better time. With this hope and all sincerity we wish you truly "A Happy New Year."

"ON WITH THE DANCE"

The clean-up campaign started last week by several of Belmond's peace officials should be carried thru to a finish, until this little city is thoroly cleaned of every evidence of booze and its advocates. There should be no let-up on the part of either these officials or of the public; they should push the campaign to the utmost. Now that the ball has been started to rolling, let it continue to roll until it has crushed to earth every lawbreaker and every offense that has existed too long in our community.

The action taken last week has met with emphatic approval from nearly every citizen of the community, except, of course, those toward whom the action has been aimed and those who sympathize with them. The great majority of our people are heartily in accord with the movement to clean up the town. Those toward whom action has been taken, and those who are on their side of the fence, have used and are using, the most strenuous efforts of their tongues to defile and decry the men and the movement, but the shoe always pinches when placed on their own foot and no recognition should be accorded their ravings. Let the campaign proceed—"on with the dance." Every knock from some quarters can only be a boost, and any man of honor will be glad to have the booze bullies against him.

The Independent this week prints the views of some of the Belmond ministers relative to the booze business in Belmond. They very emphatically show where they and their churches stand, and give their most hearty endorsement to the men who have started to clean up.

Business men on Main street, solid, substantial citizens, have given the mop-up movement their approval.

The public is back of them. Let these men therefore carry on. Booze must go. It is a relic of the dark ages and has no place in this enlightened 20th century. No man is going to go snooping around in private cellars to see whether the owner takes a nip now and then in his own home, but when that man gets drunk and disorderly on the public streets he is a nuisance and a pest, and as such should be dealt with. The aim of this campaign is not so much to get the man who gets drunk and disorderly, as it is to get the man who sells the stuff to them, that human polecat the bootlegger. He is lining his pockets with gold at the expense of public health and morals. To stop the trouble shut off the supplies. And to this end the campaign is being conducted. If the public will back it up, a general and thoro house-cleaning can be made.

Two horses owned by L. G. Hill of near Clarion wandered out onto the ice at Elm Lake Thursday night and after going out to the center of the lake plunged thru, and the remainder of the night the horses spent in the icy waters, swimming and trodding ground with the water up to their very heads. They were discovered the next morning and Mr. Hill went down to see about them. He had to summon neighbors and all worked hard to cut a trench from the shore to the middle of the lake, and the horses were headed that way and driven to the bank.

After getting them onto the bank Mr. Hill took them to the barn and blanketed them and then drove them outside He drove them around the lot almost two hours, working up a good sweat, and then returned them to the barn and it's a fact that they were none the worse off for their all-night stay in the icy waters of Elm Lake.—News.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Annual Meeting, January 3rd

Plans have been completed and a most interesting program worked out for the annual meeting of the Wright County Farm Bureau, which will be held in Clarion in the court room on Wednesday, January 3rd.

The program committee has succeeded in securing J. F. Coupe, assistant secretary of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation as the principal speaker of the day and has arranged a program filled with music and other special numbers in addition to the election of officers and other official business. For those who have not kept in close touch with the farm bureau during the past year the annual meeting will furnish an opportunity to get a summary of the activities which have been carried on by the organization.

It is hoped that road and weather conditions will be favorable so that people from the outlying districts can make the drive to this meeting The Wright County Farm bureau has been very fortunate in having an active organization in each township within the county and when these representatives come together at the annual meeting a conference will be held which will be of great interest to every farm bureau member.

Short Course at Woolstock

Tentative plans have been made for a mid-winter short course to be held at Woolstock some time during the latter part of January or the fore part of February at which time the farmers and business men of that community will get together for a mid-winter exhibits of their agricultural products.

It has been suggested that the business men of Woolstock take care of about fifty per cent of the expenses of the short course and the balance be carried by the townships immediately surrounding Woolstock.

Three township of Wright county including Troy, Woolstock and Wall Lake and about two townships of Hamilton county adjacent to Woolstock will be asked to contribute toward this agricultural exhibit not only in the showing of their products but in a financial way.

Since Woolstock has not had a short course for about eight years or more it has been suggested that such an agricultural exhibit should be organized in the community. Woolstock has plenty of fine live stock and a splendid spirit of cooperation in the community and there is no doubt but what they will hold a most successful short course this winter. The people of Woolstock and surrounding community will find that there is no activity that could be held which would create more enthusiasm and interest in the production of good stock and farm crops in the community, and bring about a closer feeling of co-operation and community helpfulness, than a mid-winter short course of this kind.

Bradfute Heads American Farm Bureau Federation

O. E. Bradfute, of Ohio is the new president of the American Farm Bureau Federation. He was elected unanimously by the convention at the Thursday afternoon session. President J. R. Howard positively declined to permit his name to be presented, and E. B. Cornwall of Vermont placed Mr. Bradfute in nomination. Seconding speeches were made by Mrs. W. C. Martin of Texas and George McKerrow of Wisconsin. E. H. Cunningham of Iowa moved that the nominations be closed, and Mr. Bradfute was elected president by acclamation. President Bradfute mounted the platform and spoke briefly and feelingly of the honor conferred on him by the world's greatest farmers' organization. He said "I pledge myself to give American agriculture the best efforts of my life, as God will give me strength".

The United States of America was no more fortunate in choosing George Washington as its first president than was the American Farm Bureau Federation in choosing J. R. Howard as its first leader. Mr. Howard has headed the national farm bureau movement during thirty-seven months — the trying months when the organization assumed form and direction. Mr. Howard's career is an epic in American agriculture. He leaves the high office of president full of honors and with the heartfelt regard of millions of farmers. The folks on the farm will grip Jim Howard's hand in parting and will quote James Whitcomb Riley: "Goodbye, Jim Take keer of yerse'f."

Resigns Presidency of Grain Growers

At a meeting of the board of directors of the U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., held in conjunction with the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation, in Chicago December 15th, E. H. Cunningham resigned as president. O. E. Bradfute, newly elected president of the farm bureau federation, was elected to fill the vacancy. Mr. Cunningham retains the presidency of the U. S. Grain Growers Sales company.

Extension Policies

C. W. Pugsley assistant secretary of agriculture, referred to education as the keystone of the arch which supports any government organized on the theory that it is responsive to the desires of its citizens. "It would be a grave mistake," declared Mr. Pugsley. "for any county to get the idea that it could carry on its agricultural and home economics work without the closest sort cooperation with the state agricultural college."

He stressed "the need for better informed managers and executives of cooperative enterprises of the United States." The time will come he predicted, when colleges of agriculture will give a complete college course designed from start to finish to prepare managers for cooperative executive work. Farm organization should use their influence in creating a demand for such courses. Mr Pugsley believes that farmers have the right to demand the services of extension agents who can supply vaulable information. "The more closely a farm organization keeps to the source of agricultural information, the more likely, they are to succeed."

CURING PORK SIMPLE JOB

Farm butchering, especially pork, is a simple process, according to M. D. Helser of the animal husbandry department at Iowa State College.

"There is nothing mysterious about curing pork," says Mr. Helser, "and anyone who can follow directions can supply himself and his neighbor with a high class product of pork. The hog yields a greater percentage of edible meat than any other animal. There is no other animal that equals the hog for fat storing tendencies and pork is one of the easiest meats to cure. There is no other meat from which so many products can be made"

In a bulletin just republished by the Iowa Agricultural Experiment station, Mr. Helser gives complete instructions as to preparing animals for slaughter. cutting up the carcass and the preparation of the various parts for curing.

Animals to be slaughtered, he says should be in medium condition. Muscles of a thin hog are tough and lack the flavor of juciness of the fatter animal. However, overfat hogs are oily and do not produce good pork. One of the common faults of country killed pork is that it is too fat as many people think the fatter the hog the better the pork.

Hogs in medium condition, weighing between 200 and 250 pounds, are the best to slaughter, as these have been found to be the most satisfactory.

This circular No. 61 can be secured by addressing the bulletin editor at Ames.

H. C. Meyer, insurance agent and adjuster, was called to the farm of Fred Benson south of Britt Saturday morning to adjust a loss occasioned Thanksgiving day when a straw stack blew over on a cow and the animal was smothered. The wind blew at a terrific rate of speed. No other losses have been reported.—Britt News Tribune.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

(Editor's note owing to lack of time in which to get the type set, some of the school notes were forced out this week.)

The boys basket ball team played Latimer last Tuesday at Latimer. The game was a very close one, the score being six to four. It was by far the best game that the local team has played.

On January 15 will be given the first of the "free movie program" During the program the audience will be entertained by a radio concert through the kindness of Mr. Jones. After the movies a basket social will be held for the benefit of the high school.

In addition to the "community program" given monthly a "free movie" will be given every two weeks during the winter by the High school and Legion. The films are those disthributed by the State University are of very high class.

Friday afternoon the high school had a grab bag. It was thoroughly enjoyed by all, especially some of the "grabs" taken out.

Every member of the sixth grade received a perfect spelling grade Wednesday.

The following pupils have received perfects deportment stars the past week: Jennie Riekens, Marvin Nissen, Harland Blewitt, Wayne Waddingham, Ive Bier, Edna Koemen, Nellie Frey, Fredona Lemke, Emma Boelman, Esther Van Osten, Harry Lauen, Herman Meints, Lydia Pannkuk, Edna Koehler Marit Pals, Alma Dorenkamp.

Christmas poems were written for language work in both fifth and sixth grades Friday morning. The best poem was written by Lydia Pannkuk.

Third and Fourth Grades

Frederick Sunthen, Wilbert Frey Norman Muller, Ethel Bier, Harold Pals and Ivadel Wickersheim in the third grade and Phyllis Agler, Marvin Lauen and Lu Vern Butz have had perfect lesson in spelling for last two weeks.

Thursday th third grade had a reading contest. Lyle Fischer was winner of the boys and Vana Weaver was winner of the girls.

The 3rd and 4th grades had a Christmas party Friday afternoon.

Grammar Room

Louie Pals entered the 8th grade Monday, making a total enrollment of 11 in this grade.

The Grammar room had a "grab bag" Friday afternoon.

Primary Room

Friday afternoon we had a Christmas party. A large Christmas tree and a real Santa Claus were the main attractions.

The perfect spellers for this week were Lois, Esther, Viola, Julia, Barbara and Bernice.

A MILLION RABBITS

Seven Clarion sportsman indulged in a rabbit hunt the first of the week and bagged 112 cotton tails after a few hours tramp. On one stretch of drainage ditch a mile in length they captured an even eighty rabbits. As Wright county has upwards of two hundred drain ditches, it is reasonable to safely estimate on the same basis as above that no fewer than a million rabbits more or less may be found in this county.—Monitor.

The teacher asked the class to write about frogs. Little Waldo did his best.

NATIONAL SWINDLERS PLAN RAID ON PEOPLE'S CASH

During December and January the United States government is to pay back to the people of this country millions of dollars in redemption of War Savings Stamps bought five years ago. Several thousand dollars of the general sum will come into Wright county.

These millions represent a considerable part of the savings of our people, and as savings should be carefully guarded. The money paid by the government should be immediately reinvested where it will start working again to bring in dividends to the investor.

And for the very reason that most of the holders of War Savings Stamps will re-invest their money in some other dividend paying position, their money is in danger.

For, already dishonest promoters are at work getting ready to harvest their corp of suckers from among those to whom the government is making payments. All sorts of fake stocks and bonds promising big returns will soon flood the market, and worthless although pretty paper will be foistered upon an unsuspecting public.

So be careful how you re-invest your money. Don't expect to find a safe investment that will pay you extra large interest returns, for you can't get something for nothing in this old world, you know. Better take less interest and keep your capital than take promises of getting rich quick and lose your all If you are in doubt about the value of making an investment ask your banker and take his advise. For we are sure he will advise you right.

Death comes to us all, but with some people it pauses a long time at the door.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Azeltine announce the marriage of their daughter, Celia, to Mr James R. Groom, of Hampton, on Sunday, December 24, 1922.

MOELLERING--BROOKS

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brooks was the scene of a pretty wedding on Tuesday evening, when their oldest daughter, Thelma Leone, was united in marriage to Mr. Chester William Moellering. The house was prettily and seasonably decorated in red and green. The bridal couple stood under a large bell. The bride was becomingly gowned in henna silk crinkled net, and carried a boquet of carnations. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Harold Tomkinson, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends. After a delicious supper had been served the happy couple left by auto for Clarion where they took the train on a wedding trip, followed by the best wishes of their many friends.

DUFFY—KETCHUM

Monday evening December 25th, at a very quiet home wedding occured the marriage of Miss Mildred Duffy to Shirley Ketchum at 7:00.p.m. The only guests present were the parents and sisters of the bride, the parents of the groom and Rev. and Mrs. C. T. Halbert. The bride was dressed in a beautiful gown of white georgette and satin trimmed in lace. her only ornament being a string of pearls, a gift from her mother. The groom was dressed in the conventional black. Rev C. T. Halbert, of the Congregational church officiated with a very beautiful ring ceremony.

After the ceremony a delicious three course luncheon was served by the bride's two younger sisters, Cleo and Dolly. The happy couple left by auto for Forrest City where they will spend a few days visiting at the home of friends. They expect to go to housekeeping immediately after their return. Both young people have a host of friends here. The bride is the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Duffy and has lived all her life in this community. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herb Ketchum and is an industrious young man. Their many friends wish to extend congratulations to this young couple and to wish them long life and happiness and prosperity together.

Our Aid Society meets with Mrs. William Muhlenbruch January 3rd at one o'clock the ladies are invited.

Plan to attend these services.

C. J. Barth, Pastor.

M. E. CHURCH

Last Saturday evening we held our Christmas exercises. Every one present enjoyed the evening. The children all delivered their parts well. A reading given by Mrs. A. C. Lieuwen, (the other wise man), contained a great lesson for each individual. Rdv Wilkinson told the story of Christs Birth in a way that the children as well as the older folks listened with attentive ears. Singing was rendered by the choir.

Santa arrived in time to greet us, Xmas packages were distributed, and all went home well pleased with the evening program.

Next Sunday evening December 31st a series of Revival services will begin at 7:30. Rev. Metcalf the Evangilist, and Mr. Peterson who will lead the singing will be with us. Let us not fail to be there.

SUCCESS

It's doing your job the best you can,
And being just to your fellow man;
It's making money, but holding friends,
And staying true to your aims and ends;
It's figuring how and learning why
And looking forward and thinking high,
And dreaming a little and doing much;
It's keeping always in closest touch,
With what is finest in word and deed
It's being thorough yet making speed;
It's daring blithely the field of chance
While making labor a brave romance;
It's going onward despite defeat
And fighting staunchly but keeping sweet;
It's being clean and it's playing fair;
It's laughing lightly at Dame Despair;
Its looking up at the stars above,
And drinking deeply of life and love;
It's struggling on with a will to win,
It's taking loss with a cheerful grin;
It's sharing sorrow and work and mirth,
And making better this good old earth:
It's serving, striving through strain and stress,
It's doing your noblest—that's success. —Selected.

The Case and The Girl

by

Randall Parrish

COPYRIGHT 1922 by ALFRED A. KNOPF Inc.

tective hesitated; such luck, such carelessness on the part of criminals seemed almost uncanny; he half suspected some trap. Then he became convinced that this was only the result of recklessness—the fellows felt so safe in this hidden hole in the woods as to neglect all precaution. He stepped cautiously inside, leaving the door ajar for the others to follow. Then, they paused—straight ahead a double swinging door divided the kitchen in which they were from another room beyond. Through the center crack shone a single bar of light, barely visible, and forth through that same orifice came the sound of a voice speaking. McAdams flung up his hand in signal, and then crept silently forward.

It was apparently a quarrel among thieves over the spoils, each fearful lest the other was double-crossing. Hobart and "Red" Hogan were doing most of the talking, although occasionally others chimed in, and once there was a woman's voice added to the debate. Seemingly the whole gang were present; a strong odor of tobacco smoke stole through the crack in the door, and both Hobart and Hogan swore angrily. Who was to remain out there on guard while Hobart and the girl returned to Chicago for the money was evidently the question, Hogan wishing to accompany them to make sure of his share. The woman sided with Hobart, the other men apparently ranged up with "Red," and some very plain talking was indulged in.

McAdams listened grimly, the light through the crack showing his lips curled in a smile of appreciation. He lowered his head, and with one eye at the slight opening gained a glimpse of the lighted room beyond. A moment, motionless, he stared in on the scene; then straightened up, and, with revolver in hand, signaled to the others to close in closer. They stood there for a tense instant, poised and eager; then the doors were flung crashing back, and they leaped recklessly forward, out of the darkness into the light. It was a furious fight—sharp, merciless, uncompromising. The thieves, startled, desperate, were hurled back by the first rush against the further wall, tables and chairs overturned, the shrieking woman pushed headlong into one corner, and one of the fellows downed by the crashing butt of a revolver. But the others rallied, maddened, desperate, rats caught in a trap, fighting as animals fight. Hobart fired, catching an assailant in the arm; Hogan snatched up a chair and struck viciously at West, who leaped straight forward, breaking the full force of the blow, and driving his own fist into the man's face. It was all over within a minute's fierce fighting—the surprise turning the trick. Hobart went down cursing, the gun kicked out of his hand, his arm broken; Hogan, struggling still, but pinned to the floor by three men, was given a blow to the chin which left him unconscious, while the other two threw up their hands and yelled for mercy. McAdams wiped his streaming face, and looked around.

It was a shambles, the floor spotted with blood, the table overturned and broken, a blanket over one of the windows torn down, a smashed chair in one corner. The detective who had been shot was still lying in front of the door, "Red" lay motionless, a ghastly cut over his eye, and Hobart, his arm dangling, sat propped up against the wall, cursing, malevolent, but helpless. On the other side stood Sennett and "Dago Dave," their hands high above their heads; each looking into the leveled barrel of a gun. The woman had got to her knees, still dazed from the blow which had felled her. The ex-service man smiled grimly, well satisfied.

"Some surprise party, eh, Jim?" he asked pleasantly. "This rather puts a crimp in your little game, I would say, old boy. Going to cop the whole boodle tomorrow, was you?"

"Who the h—l are you?"

"Well, if I answer your questions, perhaps you will answer mine. I am McAdams of the City Hall station, Chicago, and I know exactly what I am here after. So the best thing you guys can do, is cough up. Who's that girl who has been working with you?"

Hobart glared sullenly, but made no response.

"You'll not answer?"

"Oh, go to h—l!"

"All right, old top. She is in this house somewhere, and can't get out. Somers, look around a bit; try behind those curtains over there."

The officer stepped forward, but at the same instant the draperies parted, and two girls stood beside each other in the opening, framed against the brighter glare of light beyond—two girls, looking so alike, except for dress and the arrangement of their hair, as to be almost indistinguishable—Natalie white faced, frightened, gazing with wide-open eyes on the strange scene before her; the other smiling and audacious, her glance full of defiance. It was the voice of the latter which broke the silence.

"Am I the one you want, Mr. Bob McAdams?" she asked clearly. "Very well, I am here."

McAdams stared at them both, gulping in startled surprise at the vision confronting him, unable to find words. Then his eyes fixed themselves on the face of the speaker.

"What!" he burst forth. "You, Del? Great Scott! your name was Hobart, wasn't it? Why, I never once connected you two together. Is—is this guy your father?"

"I don't know about that," she returned indifferently. "It is a matter of argument I believe. However, Bob, what's the odds now? I am the one you're after, Mister Fly-Cop; and here I am."

She walked forward, almost proudly, her eyes shining, and gazing fearlessly into his. He stepped back, one hand extended.

"No, Del, this must be a mistake. I—I can't believe it of you, you—you are not a crook."

"Oh, yes I am," she insisted, but with a tremor in the low voice. "I've never been anything else, Bobby boy—thanks, thanks to that thing down there."

Natalie still remained poised uncertainly in the doorway, scarcely realizing what was occurring before her; she saw suddenly a familiar face, and held out her hands.

"Oh, Matt, what is it?" she cried. "Is—is it all over?"

"Yes, all over dear; these are police officers."

"And that—that girl? She looks so much like me. Who is she? Do you know?"

West clasped her hands tightly, his voice sunk to a whisper.

"She is your sister, Natalie," he asserted soberly, "your twin sister."

Her unbelieving eyes swept to his face.

"My sister; my twin sister? But I had none."

"Yes, but you did," he insisted gently. "You never knew it, but Percival Coolidge did. This was his devilish scheme, plotted years ago when you were born. Now here is the end of it—the girl is your sister. There is no doubt of that."

"No doubt, you say! My sister!" Her head lifted, and there was a flame of color in her cheeks. "My sister!" she repeated, as though she would thus make it seem more true. "Then I will go to her, Matthew West."

She loosened the clasp of her fingers and walked forward, her eyes misted with tears. Straight across the room she went, her hands outstretched to where the other shrank back from her in embarrassment—between them still the gulf which love must bridge.

"Blind Man's Eyes"

A breath-holding story of mystery, of intrigue, of Big Business; of a man who could see as others could not. The story of a master mind, deadly in its ability to sift the wheat from the chaff.

You may have read good stories ---stories of seemingly unsolvable mystery---but until you have read "Blind Man's Eyes" you have not read the best. It is a serial, yet it savors of the incomparable O. Henry's short stories; until the last chapter you will be unable to guess the riddle.

Without hesitation, the editor pronounces it one of the best he ever read.

MEAT IS NEEDED

"More meat in the sandwich"—that's what this country really needs says Sen. Capper of Kansas. By "more meat in the sandwich" Capper means that farmers should send more meat to market, and less grain. Consumers pay more for meat than for bread. The farmer prospers more by feeding his corn to his hogs and then selling the pork. "Not only that, but the wise farmer will quit raising lard hogs and will raise more bacon pigs," says Capper. "There are too many substitutes for lard on the market to make lard hogs profitable these days."

"The Hog of the Hour"

I raise them, you praise them; I sell them, you tell 'em---double-immuned Spotted Polands. Choice sows and bred gilts. Everything next to champion and grand champion stuff. I do not breed to a fad or fancy; I procure the best individuals and breed them better. My herd will show for itself. Registered in the National Spotted Poland China Association. I invite your inspection.

I also have a Shorthorn bull, Duchess' Lad No. 808360, recorded in American Shorthorn Breeders' Association.

ORIGINAL NOTICE

In the District Court, of Wright County, Iowa.
February Term, 1923.

Nellie Luick,
Plaintiff
vs.
Christian Sorensen,
Sena Sorensen,
W. S. Hagen,
Defendant

To W. S. Hagen, Defendant:

You are hereby notified that there is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the above named County and State, the petition of Nellie Luick, claiming of you the sum of One Thousand Three Hundred and fifty, ($1,350.00) Dollars, on your certain joint promisory note, made executed and delivered by you to Nellie Luick, the plaintiff aforesaid, on the 11th day of May, 1920, for the sum of One Thousand Two Hundred and fifty, (1,250.00), Dollars, payable on or before the 24th day of May, 1922, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from November 1922; also asking for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage, dated May 11, 1920, upon lot four (4) in block one, (1), in the original town of Belmond, Iowa; also asking for the allowance of a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed with the costs.

No personal judgement is asked against the defendant, W. S. Hagen.

For further particulars, see petition now on file.

Now unless you appear thereto and defend, on or before noon of the second day of the next term of said Court, to be held at Clarion, in said County, commencing on the 5th day of February, 1923, default will be entered against you, and judgment rendered thereon, in accordance with the prayer of said petition.
